the law. The son of Chancellor Johnson the first, the brother of Chancellor Johnson the second, he was born in Annapolis, May 21, 1796, educated at St. John's College, and taught law in his father's office. In 1817 he came to Baltimore to challenge the stalwart elders whose history we have already sketched. He never hesitated to throw down the gauntlet to any one. His success was immediate and continuous, nor did his loss of popularity in consequence of the Bank of Maryland troubles affect his standing at the bar. He was Attorney-General of the United States in 1849, United States senator in 1863, minister to England in 1868, and besides these received many other important appointments at the hands of his State and the Federal government.

The last of the lawyers whom we shall attempt to mention in connection with this period as fertile in legal ability of the first order will be William Schley.

Mr. Schley, of Frederick, was one of the most competent and successful barristers and pleaders of his time. He knew the law well, both the common law, the statutes, and the rulings; he was an excellent judge of human nature, full of sound practical common sense, and no man could be plainer or more logical than he in statement and argument. In many respects he resembled Luther Martin, and he had the faculty in a remarkable degree, both before judge and before jury, of following up, pursuing, and hunting down with pertinacity and the unerring instinct of a slen-hound the point of all others which was the material, vital, and hinging-point of the case upon which he was engaged.

In 1851 the issue raised by the "glorious nineteen" was finally settled. Governor Philip Francis Thomas, in his message to the General Assembly when it met in January, 1850, speaking of the long-deferred question of constitutional reform, very plainly told them that "unless the wishes of the people in this behalf are gratified, the sanction of the Legislature will not much longer be invoked." A "Reform Bill" calling a Constitutional Convention was accordingly adopted; the Convention met in November, and adopted the new constitution of May, 1851.

This instrument did away with the Court of Chancery, made judges and court officers elective by the people, abolished imprisonment for debt, and radically changed the whole court apparatus of the State, simplifying practice and processes, deeds, and instruments, and paving the way for codifying the statutes. The State was divided into eight judicial districts for county courts; there was a Court of Appeals with four judges, and for Baltimore City there were established a Court of Common Pleas, a Superior Court, and a Criminal Court, to which was afterwards added a City Circuit Court. The office of attorney-general was abolished. Under this new system John C. Legrand was elected chief judge of the Court of Appeals, with John Bowie Eccleston, William Hallam Tuck, and John Thompson Mason, associates.

One of the most accomplished and most beloved members of the Frederick and Baltimore bar was Charles H. Pitts, who died in 1864. Mr. Pitts was endowed with those qualities which give usefulness and honor to his calling, thoroughly grounded in the principles of his profession, and quick and able in their perception and application. He was distinguished for his taste and judgment as an advocate, was eloquent, witty, and forcible, full of manliness, honor, and loyalty to duty and to friendship. Mr. Pitts was a native of Frederick, but made Baltimore his home from the time that he came to the bar. The profession had no greater favorite than Mr. Pitts.

Henry Winter Davis, despite the political estrangements to which his radical opinions and his boldness in expressing them gave rise, is acknowledged on all hands to have been one of the brightest and most conspicuous ornaments of the bar of Maryland. He was but forty-nine years old when his death occurred, in December, 1865, yet he had reached a prominent and commanding position in national affairs. Born in Annapolis in 1817, he was educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and the University of Virginia, with the idea of becoming a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He, however, passed the bar in Alexandria, Va., and after practicing there a while came to Baltimore in 1830. He was always fond of polemics, however, and shone in ecclesiastical controversy. He was in every way a ripe scholar, full of various attainments carefully elaborated, and must have attained success as a writer if his oratorical powers had not swept him away. As an orator he scarcely had his equal, and he was as impressive on the stump as he was in legislative halls. As elector on the Scott ticket in 1852, he canvassed the State as it had never been canvassed before. Then he joined the Know-Nothing movement, and represented Baltimore in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth, and Thirty-sixth Congresses, and again in the Thirty-eighth, having been defeated for the Thirty-seventh by Hon. Henry May. Mr. Davis was a master of elo-
His mind was a store-house of immense reading, which his memory kept ready parcelled for his service; he was highly imaginative, had great power of invective, and his wit and sarcasm were mordant to the last degree. He was one of the ablest debaters who ever went to Congress, and a man of superb genius, imposing presence, and possessing the faculty of command in a distinguished degree.

The bar of Western Maryland to-day, as reflected in its living and active members, both those upon the shady side of the hill and those younger men who are gallantly climbing towards the summit, is not unworthy in any respect of the distinguished ancestry whose faint outline has been painted in the preceding pages. The profession holds out the same high rewards to honorable industry, cultivated talents, probity, and integrity, and our contemporaries toil with an inherited zeal and compete with an arder transmitted through unbroken generations for the same sort of distinction as that which compensated Chase and Martin, Pinkney and McMahon. Those who lightly pretend to believe the bar has degenerated are not familiar with its past or have neglected to measure the stature of its present.

In making comparisons between the lawyers of the past and present, it must not be forgotten that much more is demanded of advocates nowadays than was the case a hundred or even fifty years ago. The rules and forms of practice have been greatly simplified, statutes codified, reports made more complete and comprehensive, and the profession wears much more the aspect of a science than formerly. But at the same time the sphere of the advocate has both widened and deepened enormously. Precedents and rules have multiplied on all sides, and the juris-consultus must nowadays be ready at a moment’s warning to thread the intricate labyrinths of a dozen branches of science which had no existence in the times of Martin and Pinkney. Then expert testimony was almost unknown, now it is called in the majority of important issues. Patent law, railroad law, telegraph law, all open new and most arduous fields to the profession, and compel it to specialize itself more and more every day. Business law is assuming a thousand new shapes, each more complicated than the other, nor can the vast body of decisions, rapidly as it accumulates, keep pace with the ever-swelling volume of new issues daily coming up for adjudication. A lawyer who would embrace the whole scope of his profession nowadays must travel very far beyond Coke and Blackstone, Chitty and Greenleaf, Kent and the code. He must be an accountant, a civil engineer, an architect, a mechanician, a chemist, a physician, he must know the vocabulary and technology of all the arts and professions, he must be a theologian and a metaphysician, with the experience of a custom-house appraiser and the skill in affairs of an editor. And after all, with all these stores in his possession, so great is the competition that he may scarcely be able to hew out a living in his profession.

At an early period in the history of Maryland jurisprudence, the bar of Frederick County, then embracing the whole of Western Maryland, numbered among its members some of the most distinguished lawyers in the State. It furnished the fifth Chief Justice of the United States, Roger Brooke Taney; the first Governor of Maryland, Thomas Johnson; the second United States senator from the Western Shore, Richard Potts, who was also one of the early judges of the Court of Appeals; and two Attorney-Generals of the United States, Roger B. Taney and John Nelson. Among the other prominent members may be mentioned Alexander Contee Hanson, John Hanson Thomas, Francis Scott Key, author of the “Star-Spangled Banner,” Francis Thomas, Governor of Maryland, John Thomson Mason, William Schley, Charles H. Pitts, Robert J. Brent, Madison Nelson, Wm. P. Maulsby, John Ritchie, Enoch Louis Lowe, Governor of Maryland, John A. Lynch, James McSherry, a historian of Maryland, Bradley T. Johnson, and Miltou G. Urner. Alexander Contee Hanson, the younger, who figured during the anti-Federalist riots in Baltimore upon the declaration of war with Great Britain in 1812, was a son of Alexander Contee Hanson, Chancellor of Maryland. His grandfather, John Hanson, who removed to Frederick County from Charles County in 1773, was one of the most conspicuous Revolutionary leaders of Maryland, and was elected President of the Continental Congress. William Cost Johnson, the famous lawyer, politician, and duelist, was also a member of the Frederick bar.

In the olden days there were visiting lawyers, men distinguished for ability and eloquence, and regarded as patriarchs in the legal profession of Maryland, who met at various courts to measure weapons with each other. There were giants in those days in the country court-houses, and many of them who attended the first and later courts at Frederick became the country’s pride in legal lore and political reputation. The first mention of the appearance of any attorney at the Frederick courts is that of William Cumming, in 1749, and the next name found in the court minutes is that of Daniel Dunlap, in the same year. Of the latter it has been well said, “For many years before the downfall of the proprietary government he stood confessedly without a rival in this colony as a lawyer, a scholar, and an orator." Thomas Johnson, the first Governor of the State, who settled at Frederick after his first gubernatorial term expired, was in the front rank of Maryland lawyers, but retired from practice about 1795. John Thomson Mason, another eminent barrister, quit practicing about 1800, at which date the brilliant Arthur Shaaf removed to Annapolis, though often appearing afterwards in the Frederick courts. Roger Brooke Taney came to the Frederick bar in March, 1801, shortly after which his brother-in-law, the gifted poet and attorney, Francis Scott Key, left Frederick and settled in Georgetown, D. C. William Ross came from Lancaster, Pa., in 1805, married in Frederick, and began practicing at its bar.

John Nelson, afterwards Attorney-General of the United States, and one of the ablest of American lawyers, was a contemporary of Mr. Taney and John Hanson Thomas, the latter the deep lawyer and politician, who died universally regretted in May, 1815. Joseph M. Palmer, whose name appears so often in the reports of cases in the Court of Appeals of Maryland, came in 1817 from the Connecticut to the Frederick bar. James Dixon came from Pennsylvania. He was of humble birth, little education, and had no friendly influences to help him forward in his profession. He studied law under Mr. Taney, who, when made attorney-general of the State in 1827, appointed Mr. Dixon as his deputy for Frederick. Mr. Dixon was one of the ablest criminal lawyers in the land, and in the height of his fame often ascribed his success to the kindness of Mr. Taney. The oldest living member of the bar from the date of admission is the venerable Judge Richard H. Marshall, admitted in 1822, and who for long years adorned the bench as associate judge.

We append biographical sketches of the more prominent members of the Frederick bar.

Thomas Johnson, first Governor of Maryland, was the grandson of Thomas Johnson, who came to this country about 1660 from Poole, near Yarmouth, England. The Johnsons were descended from Sir Thomas Johnson, of Great Yarmouth, who was of an old and distinguished family. The Johnsons had been members of Parliament and bailiffs or mayors of Yarmouth since 1585. Thomas Johnson, the immigrant, was a lawyer, and falling in love with Mary Baker, a chancyard wench, eloped with her to America, thus committing a penal offense against the crown. They came over in a vessel commanded by Capt. Roger Baker, and settled at the mouth of Leonard's Creek, Calvert Co., Md. A keen desire to see his native land once more prompted him to brave the dangers of apprehension by the British authorities, and accordingly he embarked in a vessel for England. The ship was captured by the Spaniards, but after being detained some time, Johnson succeeded in making his escape to Canada in a destitute condition. From Canada he traveled on foot to his home in Calvert County, only to find on arriving there that his house had been burned by the Indians. Exhaustion caused by anxiety, fatigue, and privations had injured him so seriously that he did not long survive. His wife died soon afterwards, and they were buried side by side on the farm. They left an only son, Thomas Johnson, who married Doroce Sedgwick, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth Sedgwick, and had a number of children, of whom Thomas, James, Baker, and Joshua (whose daughter married John Quincy Adams) became distinguished men and ardent Revolutionary patriots. Thomas Johnson was born in Calvert County, Nov. 4, 1732, married Ann Jennings, of Annapolis, and died Oct. 26, 1819, aged eighty-seven, at the residence of his son-in-law, John Graham, in Frederick Town. Governor Johnson had eight children, viz: 1. Thomas Johnson, who was first married to Mary Hesselins, who died sine prole. His second wife was Elizabeth Russell, of Baltimore, by whom he had children, viz: Mary Ann (who married Hugh W. Evans, of Baltimore), Elvira (never married), and Fanny (married to Col. John McPherson).

3. Rebecca, who died in infancy.
4. Elizabeth, who died young.
5. Rebecca, married to Thomas, son of James Johnson.
6. James, who died young.
7. Joshua, who married Miss Harriet Beall.
8. Doroce, never married.

Thomas Johnson was to a certain extent a self-made man, as the only advantages of education obtained by him were of a plain and unpretentious character. He spent some time at a common school, after which he was sent to Annapolis to study law under the talented John Beale Bordley. At the commencement of the controversy with Great Britain he was still a young man, but had already risen to eminence in his profession. He was among the first to antagonize the British government, and soon became the trusted associate of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Paca, Chase, Matthew Tilghman, and the other leading patriots of Maryland.

Mr. Johnson was sent as one of the delegates from Maryland to the first Continental Congress of 1774, and nominated George Washington as commander-in-chief of the army. The fact having been denied in a publication in the Baltimore Clipper, James Johnson, Thus is the fact clearly established both by Mr. Johnson's repeated declarations to his nephew, James Johnson, and the testimony of Mr. Adams's biographer, that Governor Johnson did nominate Gen. Washington, with only this difference, that he did it of his own choice after Mr. Adams had silently declined his proposition, and not at his instigation. That Mr. Adams deserved great credit for his foresight in differing with his colleagues no one will deny, but if any merit is attached to the mere nomination, it belongs to Governor Johnson.

In a letter from "Civi Debutur" to the National Intelligencer, dated Sept. 17, 1833, we find the following:

"The deservedly high estimation in which Governor Johnson was held by Gen. Washington is well known by the writer, and it is well assured that no prominent public man of these 'heart-stirring times' enjoyed more of the confidence, esteem, and affection of the 'pater patria' than did Thomas Johnson, first Governor of Maryland.

"On public occasions, and after periods of separation from him, Gen. Washington has been often seen to single out this individual from the crowd, and, approaching him with open arms, press him to his bosom. This fact certainly shows the intimate relation that existed between them."

The same correspondent having the honor of Mr. Johnson's acquaintance, and being much in his company during the last three years of his life, received the following communication written with his own hand, though he was quite blind at the time:

"...I inclose you one of Gen. Washington's letters to me, of which I have several others, in the like style of confidence and friendship. You are welcome to keep this, its length being convenient for your designed purpose, and the possession of the others fully answering any purpose with me.

"But you must consider this favor as laying you under the obligation of calling on me now and then and improving our acquaintance, which I consider and esteem happily commenced."

"With true regard,

"Your obedient servant,"

"Th. Johnson."

"I believe, however, that I took it from some publication published in Boston, made by authority of Mr. Adams himself. I was well satisfied of the truth of the statement when I made it."

"With great respect, I am, dear sir,

"Your obedient servant,"

"William Cranch."

We add the following corroborative statement from the biography of Mr. Adams: "The eyes of all the New England States were turned upon Gen. Ward, then at the head of the army of Massachusetts. At a meeting of them, when that officer was proposed, Mr. Adams alone objected, and urged the appointment of George Washington, of Virginia. He was resisted, and left the meeting with the declaration that on the next day Washington should be nominated. He was accordingly nominated, at the instigation of Mr. Adams, by Governor Johnson, of Maryland, and chosen without an opposing vote."

Copy of the letter inclosed in the above communication, written in Gen. Washington's own hand:

"PHILADELPHIA, July 14, 1791.

"Dear Sir,—Without preface or apology for proposing the following question to you at this time, permit me to ask you with frankness, and in the fulness of my friendship, whether you will accept an appointment in the Supreme Jurisdiction of the United States?

"Mr. Rutledge's resignation has occasioned a vacancy therein, which I should be glad to see filled by you.

"Your answer to this question by the post (which is the most certain mode of conveying letters), as soon as you can make it convenient, will very much oblige, dear sir,

"Your most obedient

"And affectionate h'ble serv't,

"The Hon. THOS. JOHNSON.""

While some doubts existed about the ratification of the Federal Constitution, Washington, who was instrumental in its formation and very anxious for its success, wrote the following letter:

"Mount Vernon, April 20, 1788.

"Dear Sir,—As well from report as from the ideas expressed in your letter to me in December last, I am led to conclude that you are disposed (circumstances as our public affairs are at present) to ratify the Constitution which has been submitted by the General Convention to the people, and under this impression I take the liberty of expressing a single sentiment on the occasion. It is, that an adjournment (if attempted) of your convention to a later period than the decision of the question in this State will be tantamount to the rejection of the Constitution. I have good grounds for this opinion, and am told it is the blow which the leading characters of the opposition in the two States have aimed against it, if it shall be found that a direct attack is not likely to succeed in yours. If this be true, it cannot be too much deprecated and guarded against. The postponement in New Hampshire, although made without any reference to the convention of this State, and altogether free from the local circumstances of its own, is ascribed by the opposition here to complaisance towards Virginia, and great use is made of it. An event similar to this in Maryland would have the worst tendency imaginable, for, in the event there would have considerable influence upon South Carolina, the only other State which is to precede Virginia, and submits the question almost wholly to the determination of the latter. The pride of the State is already touched upon this string, and it will be strained much higher if there is an opening for it. The sentiments of Kentucky are not yet known here. Independent of these, the parties with us, from the known or presumed opinion of the members, are pretty equally balanced. The one in favor of the Constitution preponderates at present, but a small matter cast into the opposite scale may make it heaviest.

"If in suggesting this matter I have exceeded the proper limit, my motive must excuse me. I have but one public wish remaining. It is that in peace and retirement I may see this country rescued from the danger which is pending, and arise to respectability, maugre the intrigues of its public and private enemies.

"With very great esteem and regard,

"I am, dear sir,

"Your most obedient humble servant,

"To Thomas Johnson, Esq.""

Mr. Johnson was re-elected to Congress at every successive election until Feb. 13, 1777, when he was chosen first Governor of Maryland. Besides representing his constituency in Congress, he filled other important public trusts. In December, 1774, he was appointed by the Convention of Deputies from the different counties one of the Committee of Correspondence for the province, and was chosen by the Convention of 1775 as one of the Council of Safety for Maryland. In December of that year he was appointed with others as a committee to "devise the best ways and means to promote the manufacture of saltpetre." On the 6th of January following he was elected by the convention a brigadier-general, and took command of the famous "Flying Camp." He did not serve very long, however, for on the 4th of July, 1776, the convention passed a resolution withdrawing his commission, on the ground that his services in Congress could not be spared, and that his place could be supplied "with less inconvenience in the military than in the civil department." His presence was also desired in the State Convention, and was deemed of so much importance that Col. Richardson, a delegate from Caroline, resigned his seat, conveyed to him a farm in Caroline County, and had Gen. Johnson elected in his place. With William Paca, George Plater, and James Holliday, he was of that committee which invited Governor Eden to vacate his seat and leave the province. In June, 1776, he was at Annapolis urging the convention to authorize the Maryland delegates to Congress to unite with the other members in declaring the United Colonies free and independent States. He voted in Congress for the Declaration of Independence, but did not sign that instrument owing to his absence at the bedside of a sick member of his family. On the 13th of February, 1777, he was elected by the Legislature of Maryland first Governor of the State, receiving forty out of fifty-two votes. He was inaugurated on the 21st of March at the State-House in Annapolis. There was a procession from the "Assembly House" in the following order: the high-sheriff, president of the Senate, senators, Governor, Council, sergeant-at-arms, bearing the mace, Speaker of the House of Delegates, delegates, mayor of the city, and recorder, aldermen, Common Council, military officers, visiting strangers, citizens. Silence being commanded, the high-sheriff then proclaimed that Thomas Johnson, Jr., was the elected Governor of the State of Maryland. Three volleys were then fired by the soldiery, who were paraded in front of the State-House, followed by a salute of thirteen cannon,—one for each of the United States,—after which the procession returned, the Governor and his Council taking positions immediately after the high-sheriff, the rest of the cortege being in the same order as before. All then repaired to the Coffee-House, where an entertainment was provided" and toasts were drunk. The whole concluded with a brilliant ball and illumination in the evening. Governor Johnson fulfilled the duties of his office during a trying period with remarkable fidelity and success, and retired with the love and esteem of the people. He removed from Annapolis to Frederick Town (he had several brothers living in the county), and was elected to represent Frederick County in the House of Delegates. When Mr. Johnson was eligible, once more he was re-elected Governor, but declined the office. In the State Convention which adopted the Constitution of the United States, he was pitted against Martin, the Chases, Mercer, and other opponents of the Constitution, and with his associates succeeded in procuring its in jeopardy. On the death of Mr. Harrison, chief judge of the General Court of Maryland, Mr. Johnson was chosen to succeed him, and was appointed one of the associate justices of the United States Supreme Court by Washington in 1791, in place of John Rutledge. He retained this position until 1793, when ill health compelled him to resign. Subsequently Gen. Washington asked him to accept the Secretarieship of State, but he declined. He consented, however, to serve with Dr. Stuart and Daniel Carroll as one of the commissioners for laying off the city of Washington, and for selecting the sites of the Capitol, President's house, and other public buildings.

Mr. Johnson's was a singularly vigorous and well-balanced mind, and his character exhibited the rare combination of ardent impulses with strong good sense and remarkable power of self-control. His honesty inspired universal respect and confidence, and his counsel was always sought by the people and by his associates as being the wisest and safest that could be obtained. Upon his retirement from public life he returned to Frederick, and resided until his death with his daughter, the wife of the accomplished and wealthy John Graham. In 1800 he performed the last public act of his life, in pronouncing a eulogy upon his beloved friend and chieftain, Washington, on the occasion of a large funeral procession in his honor in the old German Reformed church of Frederick. Mr. Johnson was about the middle stature, slender in person, with keen, penetrating eyes, and a highly intellectual countenance. He was irascible in temper, and rather unpopular in manners, but had a warm, generous heart, and was a sincere friend and a kind husband and father. He was very temperate in his habits, and thus preserved a constitution naturally weak to extreme old age. Mr. Johnson was a lawyer of great learning and ability, and had a large and very lucrative practice. "It is said," says Col. George A. Hanson, in a biographical sketch of Mr. Johnson, "that when John Adams was asked why so many Southern men occupied leading positions and possessed great influence during the struggle for independence, he replied that 'if it had not been for such men as Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Chase, and Thomas Johnson there never would have been any revolution.' Although Governor Johnson was a native of Calvert County, he was a resident of Frederick County for more than forty years, and was actively engaged with his brothers, James, Baker, and Roger Johnson, in the operation of iron-furnaces on the Bush and Catoctin Creeks. Mr. Johnson's remains, attended by his family, his numerous relatives, the court and bar of the county, the orphans' court, the mayor, aldermen, and common councilmen of the city, the clergy, physicians, and a very numerous assemblage of citizens from all parts of the country, were interred in the family vault in the Episcopal burial-ground at Frederick.

Richard Potts was born in July, 1753, in Upper Marlborough, Prince George's Co., Md. He was the seventh child of William Potts (born 1718, died 1761), who emigrated from Barbadoes to the colony of Maryland about the year 1740, and after his settlement married Sarah, daughter of Philip Lee. The father returned with his family in 1757 to Barbadoes, where he died in 1761. Richard Potts, not long after his father's death, returned to Maryland and resided in Annapolis for some years. He must have received in that city the education required in those days prior to entrance upon the study of a learned profession. He read law, probably with Judge Samuel Chase, in Annapolis, and then removed to Frederick, which place he made his home during the remainder of his life. The exact date of his removal cannot now be ascertained, but the oldest letter directed to him at that place in the possession of his family is dated Dec. 27, 1775.

At an early age he was made, March 5, 1776, clerk to the Committee of Observation for Frederick County. A contemporary authority says, "When the Maryland militia, in the gloomy and ill-boding winter of '77, marched for the purpose of reinforcing Gen. Washington, Mr. Potts, who never held back in times of danger, served in the expedition as aide to the illustrious patriot, Thomas Johnson, who commanded the Virginia detachment in the Flying Camp."
After his return he was appointed, May 20, 1777, clerk of the Frederick County Court. This office he held until the end of 1778, when he resigned and commenced the practice of law in Frederick, Montgomery, and Washington Counties, whereby he acquired considerable reputation and a handsome property. During the sessions of the Legislature in 1779 and 1780 he served as a member of the Maryland House of Delegates, and afterwards during the sessions of 1787 and 1788.

He served in 1781 as a delegate from the State of Maryland in the Continental Congress, taking his seat on the 12th of June.

On the 1st of November, 1784, he was appointed by Hon. Luther Martin attorney-general of the State, to act as State's attorney for the counties of Frederick, Montgomery, and Washington. On the 3d of December, 1787, he was chosen as a State senator in place of Thomas Stone, but, declining the position, Thomas Johnson, of Frederick County, was selected in his stead, May 24, 1788. In 1788 he was elected a member of the State Convention, which met on April 21, 1788, in Annapolis, to consider the proposed Federal Constitution, to which it gave its assent, April 28, 1788. He was commissioned attorney of the United States in and for the Maryland District by President Washington, in a commission still in the family, dated New York, Sept. 26, 1789; and on the 8th of January, 1791, he was appointed chief judge of the Fifth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Frederick, Montgomery, and Washington, although not commissioned until Jan. 17, 1791.1 On his resignation of this office afterwards, William Craik was appointed in his place, Jan. 16, 1793.

On the 6th of December, 1792, he was elected United States senator to take the place of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, but did not take his seat in the Senate until Jan. 10, 1793. This office he held until October, 1796, when he resigned, and John Eager Howard was chosen as his successor, and qualified Nov. 30, 1796. Judge Potts was chosen November, 1792, one of the electors for the State of Maryland at the election of Gen. Washington for the second term to the Presidency of the United States.

A letter is still extant from Edward Randolph, dated July 24, 1794, to Mr. Potts, stating that the President had resolved to appoint him as one of the commissioners for the Federal City, with a salary of sixteen hundred dollars per year. This appointment he declined.

On the resignation of Hon. William Craik as chief judge of the Fifth Judicial District, he was appointed, Oct. 15, 1796, the second time to that office, and was named a justice of the Court of Appeals of the State, Oct. 10, 1801, when William Craik was reappointed to fill his position as chief judge. This position in the Court of Appeals he held until the revision of the judiciary in 1804. In testimony of its appreciation of his legal attainments and acknowledged professional abilities, he received from Princeton College the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1805.

Mr. Potts married, on April 15, 1779, Elizabeth Hughes, of Hagerstown, Md., sister of Capt. James Hughes, who bandaged Andir's eyes. They had nine children. His second wife was Eleanor Murdoch, of Frederick (married Dec. 19, 1799), by whom he had four children.

He died Nov. 26, 1808, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, and was interred in the old graveyard belonging to All-Saints' Parish. Subsequently his remains were removed to Mount Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, where they now rest along with those of his two wives and many of his kindred.

One of his sons, Richard Potts (born 1786, died 1865), was a prominent member of the Frederick County bar, and was one of the leading residents of his native city. He served as Senator from Frederick County in the State Senate from 1838 to 1844. There are now only two children of Judge Potts living, a son and a daughter, both being citizens of Frederick.

A contemporary obituary notice, printed in the Frederick Town Herald, Dec. 3, 1808, said to have been written by the distinguished John Hanson Thomas, thus speaks of Judge Richard Potts:

1 A copy of this commission is herewith given. The seal employed is the same as that furnished to the colony in 1818, and which has been ordered by a recent resolution of the General Assembly to be hereafter employed as the Great Seal of the State.

"The State of Maryland to Richard Potts, of Frederick County, Esq., Greeting:

"Be it known that, reposing great trust and confidence in your integrity and sound Judgment in the Law, you are appointed and assigned Chief Justice of the County Courts of the Fifth District, as described by the Act entitled 'An act for the better administration of Justice in the several counties of this State,' to do equal Right and Justice, according to Law, in every case in which you shall act as Chief Justice of the said District, freely without sale, fully without denial, and speedily without delay; to execute the same office of Chief Justice justly, honestly, and faithfully, according to Law; and you are to hold and exercise the said office of Chief Justice during your good behavior in said office.

"Given under the seal of the State of Maryland this seventh day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one."

"J. E. Howard.

"Witness the Honorable Alexander Contee Hanson, Esquire, Chancellor.

"A. C. Hanson, Chair."
Roger Brooke Taney. This distinguished jurist and statesman was born March 17, 1777, in Calvert County, Md. His father, Michael Taney, owned a good landed estate and a number of slaves. His plantation was situated on the banks of the Patuxent River, about twenty miles from its mouth, where the river is more than two miles wide and navigable for vessels of the largest size. The British fleet anchored opposite the house during the war of 1812, in the expedition against Washington City. Michael Taney's paternal forefathers were among the early emigrants to Maryland, and had owned and lived upon this beautiful estate for many generations before he was born. There are no records showing the precise time of their arrival or the country from which they came. They were devoted and zealous Roman Catholics. Michael Taney was sent to the English Jesuits' College at St. Omer's, and removed with it to Bruges, when it was expelled from France. He finished his education and returned home some years before the commencement of the American Revolution, and his father being dead, he took possession of his estate and married Monica Brooke about 1770. She was the daughter of Roger Brooke, who owned a large landed estate on Battle Creek, directly opposite the Taney plantation. Roger Brooke was descended from Robert Brooke, born at London, England, 3d June, 1602. Robert Brooke left England and arrived in Maryland the 29th day of June, 1650, in the forty-eighth year of his age, with his wife and ten children. He was the first settler on the Patuxent, and located himself about twenty miles up the river, at Dela-brooke, and had one son, born there in 1651, called Basil, who died the same day. In 1652 he removed to Brooke Place, "being right against Dela-brooke," and on the 28th of November, 1655, two children, Eliza and Henry, twins, were born. Robert Brooke died on the 20th day of July following, and was buried at Brooke Place Manor. His wife, Mary Brooke, died on the 29th of November, 1663.

Soon after his arrival Robert Brooke was appointed by Lord Baltimore commander of Charles County, and was chosen by the commissioners appointed by Cromwell for the reducing of the plantations Governor of Maryland.

Roger Brooke Taney was the third child and second son of a family of four sons and three daughters. When eight years old he went with his elder brother and sister three miles to a school kept in a log cabin by an ignorant old man. Afterward with his elder brother he attended the grammar-school of the county, ten miles distant, kept by a Scotchman named Hunter, but in the course of three months this teacher's mind became disordered and he was found drowned in the Patuxent River. His father then employed a family tutor, an educated Irishman, who died before his year was out with consumption. The second tutor was an American, who remained a year, when happily David English, a graduate of Princeton and a thorough teacher, was secured, under whom young Taney was fitted for college. He entered Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., when little more than fifteen years of age. He graduated in the fall of 1795, and received the highest honors of that institution, being chosen to deliver the valedictory. In the spring of 1796 he went to Annapolis, to read law in the office of Jeremiah Townley Chase, then one of the judges of the General Court of Maryland.

At that time Annapolis was considered as the place of all others in the State where a man should study law if he expected to attain eminence in his profession. While reading law young Taney had for a brother student William Carmichael, of Queen Anne County, with whom he roomed for a year. At Annapolis he saw and heard those great legal lights, Luther Martin, Philip Barton Key, John Thomson Mason, John Johnson, Arthur Shaaf, and James Winchester,—Pinkney being abroad, a commissioner under the British treaty. In the spring of 1799, Mr. Taney was admitted to the bar. His first case was in the Mayor's Court of Annapolis, presided over by Gabriel Duval, then a judge of the General Court, in defending a man indicted for an assault and battery. In this case he secured a verdict of acquittal for his client. He then returned to his home in Calvert County and began the practice of his profession, and in the fall of 1799 was elected by the Federalist party, to which he and his family were attached, a delegate to the General Assembly. He took part in the legislative discussions, and the experience gained proved of great advantage to him in his future life. In 1800 he was a candidate for re-election, but the State and his county going largely against the Federalists, he suffered defeat with the others on his ticket. He then determined to make Frederick his home, from the fact that its bar was a young one, most of its members being but a few years older than himself. Besides, he had at Annapolis formed friendships with some young men near his own age who resided in Frederick, and he felt that he should not be lonely there or destitute of friends. Another inducement in selecting Frederick as his permanent location was, that next to Annapolis and Baltimore, it was with a view to profit the best point of practice in the State. The two lawyers who had been for years at the head of the profession in Frederick were John Thomson Mason and Arthur Shaaf, and the former had recently retired from practice, and the latter had removed to Annapolis. In March, 1801, Mr. Taney took up his residence in Frederick. Soon afterwards he appeared in court and made his first speech, a volunteer effort of great ability, Mr. Shaaf, who still practiced there, having invited him to take part in one of his cases in order to give him an opportunity of appearing before the public. From his first appearance at Frederick Mr. Taney was a diligent student. Law was his chief study, but he devoted much time to history and general literature. In 1803 he became a candidate on the Federal ticket for the House of Delegates. He canvassed the county and made a deep impression by his speeches, but at this early period in Mr. Jefferson's administration the county was very decidedly Republican, and he was defeated. Though it was only in the fifth year of his residence in Frederick, Mr. Taney had already acquired such a position at the bar, and his practice was so lucrative, that he was about to be married. Francis Scott Key, afterwards the author of the "Star-Spangled Banner," had been a fellow-student and friend at Annapolis. Mr. Key and a sister were the only children of their parents. Mr. Taney had met Miss Key in Annapolis, and her beauty and bright mind, united with womanly graces of the most attractive character, had won his heart. Mr. Key was practicing law in Frederick when Mr. Taney went there, but afterwards moved to Georgetown, D. C. John Ross Key, the father of Miss Key, was a lieutenant in the First Artillery, which went to Boston from Maryland at the outbreak of the Revolutionary war, and owned a large estate in Frederick County, where Miss Key was born and was now living with her parents. The mansion was of brick, and consisted of a spacious structure with wings and long porches. It was situated in the midst of a large lawn, shaded by trees, with an extensive terraced garden adorned with shrubbery and flowers. Near by flowed Pipe Creek through a dense woods. A copious spring, where young people loved to retire and sit under the sheltering oaks in summer, was at the foot of the hill, and a meadow of waving grass spread out towards the Catoctin Mountain, which could be seen at sunset curtained in clouds of crimson and gold. It was at this happy home that Mr. Taney was married, on the 7th of January, 1806, to Anne Phoebe Charlton Key. For years afterwards Mr. Taney and Mr. Key and their families met annually at this parental home to enjoy the pleasures of a family reunion. At evening, when the labors of the farm were over, the negroes were summoned to prayers with the family, which were usually conducted by Francis Scott Key when he was there, and by his mother when he was away. After prayers, almost every night, as was common on plantations in Maryland, music and dancing might be heard at the quarters of the negroes. No man was ever more happily married than Mr. Taney, and his home-life shed a benign influence over his studies and contemplative pursuits, and nurtured that bland suavity of manner which so distinguished him.

Mr. Taney was for years a director in the Frederick County Bank, and hardly ever missed a meeting of the board of directors. He was also for twenty years a visitor of the Frederick Academy, a State institution of great note, and for a long time was president of the Board of Visitors (trustees). Although, during his life in Frederick, Mr. Taney was strict in his religious observances, he was nevertheless fond of social relaxations. It was common for gentlemen to dine together on the Fourth of July under the shade of the beech-trees on the banks of the Monocacy River, which flowed between wooded banks two miles from Frederick. As Mr. Taney was, like all Southern Marylanders, a good horseman, he took much pleasure in horse-back excursions when professional duties required him to go into the country to try cases before juries upon view. In these excursions, the picturesque aspects of the Catoctin Mountain had become so familiar to him that when in after-years he would speak of them, his descriptions were so accurate that they seemed as if frescoed on his memory. In the summer he would sometimes retire, with his family, a few miles from Frederick to Arcadia, the country-seat of the eminent lawyer, Arthur Shaaf, a bachelor, and a cousin of Mrs. Taney, to recruit his exhausted energies and refresh his overtasked mind. In his love of nature Mrs. Taney participated with the romantic ardor of a woman, who, like her brother, was inspired by its beauties with "thoughts that voluntary move harmonious members." In 1811, Gen. Wilkinson, then commander-in-chief of the United States army, was tried on a series of charges before a military court convened at Frederick. He was a Marylander by birth, and knew the professional reputation of Mr. Taney, whom he selected, with John Hanson Thomas, as his counsel. Gen. Wilkinson labored under much public odium. He was suspected of having been an accomplice of Aaron Burr in his supposed treasonable enterprise, and in order to cover his supposed guilt to have turned State’s evidence against Burr upon his trial at Richmond. So bitter was the feeling against him that his counsel shared in his unpopularity. Mr. Taney, however, did not shrink from the task, but labored for several months with singular zeal and ability against Walter Jones, of Washington City, the judge-advocate, the subtest and most casuistic of lawyers, and Gen. Wilkinson was acquitted and his sword returned to him. Both Mr. Taney and Mr. Thomas had shared the general suspicion of Wilkinson’s treachery to Burr, and, because of their conviction of the injustice done him in entertaining this opinion, refused to receive a fee for their professional services, communicating the fact to him, and begging him to acquiesce in their course, as it would gratify their feelings.

Mr. Taney was of the Federal party, and shared in the opposition to a declaration of war in 1812, but as soon as war was declared he gave his support to the government, and so did most of the Federalists in Maryland. Mr. Taney, and the Federalists in Frederick County who followed his lead in supporting the government, were nicknamed by the other wing of his party "Coodies," and he, because of his great influence, was called King Coody. John Hanson Thomas, an able lawyer of the Frederick bar, was the leader of the other wing of the Federal party. Such was the bitterness of feeling between the two wings, and such the estrangement between Mr. Thomas and Mr. Taney, that it was not until Mr. Thomas was on his deathbed, some three years subsequently, that he forgave him for his course. He then sent for Mr. Taney, who hastened to his bedside, and gave him a greeting so generous and so tender that their reconciliation was consecrated by mutual tears. Mr. Thomas died in May, 1815, and few followed him to the grave in deeper sorrow, or with more sincere admiration for his high qualities, than Mr. Taney. While the division in the Federal party produced by the war was at its height Mr. Taney was nominated for Congress, and, notwithstanding the great strength of the Republican party in the congressional district, he was defeated by only three hundred majority. In 1816 he was elected to the State Senate. That period was marked by some of the most important legislation in regard to the courts of law, of equity, and of the Orphans’ Courts. Many of the statutes were drawn by him, and all the others received his close attention. His defense of Rev. Jacob Gruber in the Frederick court in 1819, indicted for inciting slaves to insurrection, attracted national attention, and is elsewhere detailed at length. Such was Mr. Taney’s reputation at this period that he argued appeals from every county on the Western Shore of Maryland, as may be seen in the reports of cases. As Mr. Martin and Mr. Pinkney—by the retirement of the former and death of the latter—had left a favorable opening at the Baltimore bar, the high reputation of Mr. Taney at once suggested that he might now place himself at the head of the leading bar in the State. With all his love of Frederick, therefore, he could not resist the demands of duty and professional ambition, and he decided to remove to Baltimore. His mother, whom he loved with singular devotion, had left her home in Calvert County during the war of 1812, and had taken refuge from the British under her son’s roof, and continued to live with him until her death in 1814. Before his departure from Frederick Mr. Taney made an arrangement with a particular friend, William Murdock Beall, a much younger man than himself, for his own burial by the side of his mother, no matter when and where his death should occur.

In the little Catholic chapel Mr. Taney for many years could be seen every morning, in sunshine and in rain, during his residence in Frederick, at his religious devotions. He moved to Baltimore in 1823, and at once became the leading and most distinguished lawyer at its bar. Mr. William Wirt, who was several years older than Mr. Taney, did not take up his residence in Baltimore until 1829. Although Mr. Taney had been born and educated a Federalist, he warmly supported the war of 1812, and considered the conduct of the Federal party generally,—especially that of the Eastern Federalists,—in opposing that war by factional methods, as greatly reprehensible. He further considered that the war disrupted that party, and that its dissolution was brought about by its own unpatriotic course. Therefore, in the Presidential campaign of 1824, he appeared as a staunch supporter of the election of Gen. Jackson. He was now employed in most of the important cases in the Court of Appeals of Maryland, embracing every variety of legal controversy. In 1827, upon the unanimous recommendation of the Baltimore bar, Mr. Taney was appointed attorney-general of the State. As attorney-general he had the selection of deputy attorneys in the several judicial districts, and in the one embracing Frederick he appointed James Dixon, who years before had read law in his office at Frederick.

On June 21, 1831, President Jackson appointed Mr. Taney to be Attorney-General of the United States, in place of Mr. Berrien, who had resigned. Mr. Taney accepted this position in the cabinet, and became Gen. Jackson's most intimate and confidential friend.

On Sept. 23, 1833, Gen. Jackson peremptorily removed from office his Secretary of the Treasury, William J. Duane, for refusing to remove the deposits of the government from the United States Bank, and on the same day appointed to this great financial position Mr. Taney, who assumed the position on September 24th, and on the 26th gave the order for the removal of the deposits, to take effect October 1st. Under the pretense that the loss of the deposits compelled it, the bank called in its loans and discounts to such an extent as to make the whole country groan under the pressure of the most fearful financial embarrassment,—producing hard times and ruin everywhere. History records the fact that this action of Gen. Jackson and Mr. Taney was sustained by the people. Mr. Taney had been appointed to the Treasury during the recess of Congress, and when it assembled, the President, near the close of its session, on June 23, 1834, sent to the Senate Mr. Taney's nomination as Secretary of the Treasury for confirmation. Next day he was rejected, and it was the first time in the history of our government that a cabinet minister had been rejected by the Senate. That body, however, with its Whig majority and its personal animosity towards the President, refused to confirm Mr. Taney, who the next day resigned his commission and returned to the Baltimore bar. He was the recipient in Baltimore and many other cities of public dinners and large demonstrations of the people, who sustained the course taken by him and President Jackson. But the grandest demonstration indorsing his official action took place at Frederick on August 6th, where he was received by Hon. Francis Thomas, in behalf of the thousands assembled, and tendered a public dinner by his old neighbors and friends, among whom for twenty-two years he had been daily associated in the business affairs of life. After Mr. Taney closed his speech in reply to the reception address of Mr. Thomas, he repaired with the committee to the court-house yard, where under the trees seventeen tables were spread with a sumptuous feast, of which many hundreds of citizens and guests partook.

Here, after the toasts were over, Mr. Taney made an elaborate speech, reviewing with the most masterly exposition all the topics involved in the politics of that trying time. He is said to have considered this compliment, tendered before the old court-house, whose bar he had so long adorned, as one of the most gratifying events of his life. Personal friendship entered largely into the compliment, giving to its political signification the higher tribute to his character as a man. In January, 1835, Gabriel Duvall, of Maryland, one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a special friend of Mr. Taney, resigned the commission given him as judge by President Madison in 1811.

Judge Duvall, though strongly opposed to Gen. Jackson and his policy, resigned when he saw there was a likelihood of Mr. Taney being appointed his successor, because, although the latter differed with him politically, he fully appreciated his great legal attainments and purity of character, and held them in the highest esteem. On his resignation on account of his advanced age, Gen. Jackson immediately nominated Mr. Taney to supply the vacancy. The great Chief Justice Marshall was still presiding over the Supreme Court. He had a peculiar dislike to Gen. Jackson and his policy. But so high was his estimate of Mr. Taney, that he privately endeavored to secure the confirmation of his appointment. With that view he wrote the following letter to Benjamin Watkins Leigh, a senator from Virginia, who was opposed to Gen. Jackson's administration:

"My dear Sir,—If you have not made up your mind on the nomination of Mr. Taney, I have received some information in his favor which I would wish to communicate.

"Yours, J. MARSHALL."
At the last moment of the session the nomination of Mr. Taney was brought up in the Whig Senate so violently opposed to Gen. Jackson and his policy, and was indefinitely postponed, which was equivalent to a rejection. Chief Justice Marshall died in the summer of 1835. On the succeeding 28th of December President Jackson nominated Mr. Taney to fill his place in the Supreme Court. Since his nomination as associate judge the political complexion of the Senate had changed, but yet his nomination was strongly antagonized by the Whigs, few of whom were aware that Chief Justice Marshall had endeavored to help Mr. Taney to a seat by his side as an associate justice. On March 15, 1836, his nomination was confirmed by a majority of fourteen votes. His opinions from April term, 1836, to April term, 1861, as a judge at the Circuit Courts, were reported by his son-in-law, the late James Mason Campbell, of the Baltimore bar. At the beginning of a Circuit term in Maryland, when the list of jurors was called, he attended to every name, and if a juror from Frederick County, where he had lived so long, was called, he always asked the marshal to tell the juror to come to him after adjournment. He generally found him to be the son or relative of some one of his old professional acquaintances and friends, and made the kindest inquiries concerning his family. Chief Justice Taney had the great blessing of a wife of rare loveliness of person and heart, who was to him "the gust of joy and the balm of woe." On the forty-sixth anniversary of their marriage he wrote her from Washington City a letter of pathetic tenderness, pledging to her again a love as true and sincere as that offered on their wedding day. A great affliction soon followed which made Judge Taney peculiarly a man of sorrows. He had repaired, as was his custom, to Old Point Comfort with his family in the summer of 1855. The yellow fever suddenly made its appearance, and on September 29th carried off Mrs. Taney, and the next day took away the youngest child, Alice, a lovely girl.

On the 6th of March, 1857, the famous Dred Scott decision was made by the Supreme Court, wherein Judge Taney delivered the opinion, indorsed by himself and five of the associate judges, with dissenting opinions by Justices McLean and Curtis. That decision was that it was not competent for the Congress of the United States, directly or indirectly, to exclude slavery from the Territories of the Union. The opinion of Judge Taney, and a supplement which he afterwards prepared, because of the clamor against him, to justify his opinion before the publicists of the world, and before the judgment of future ages, constitute one of the most comprehensive and best-reasoned politico-judicial opinions ever pronounced by any tribunal. No such question could have arisen before any other judicature in the world, and it sprung out of our peculiar polity and form of government. Just previous to the death of Judge Taney a new epoch began in the political history of the land. Civil war ensued, and darkness spread over the country, torn by strife and discord. In the John Merryman and other habeas corpus cases Judge Taney nobly illustrated and maintained the peculiar functions of his court, and the principles and letter of the Constitution, amidst the clang of arms and the tread of soldierly. His body-servant, Madison, was drafted, and, although he was subject to heart disease and might have been excused, Judge Taney bought for him a substitute for one hundred dollars, while the government, in violation of law, was withholding three per cent. of his judicial salary. In his professional life Judge Taney was compelled to walk over the hottest plowshares that could be put beneath the feet of a public man by his countrymen, but he passed through the ordeal unscathed, though doubtless wounded to the quick. He was a man of iron will, determined purpose, undaunted courage, and of heroic type of character, yet he possessed the most delicate qualities of kindness and courtesy, as his private and public life bore witness, in his intercourse with all. His letters to his wife, running through a period of nearly fifty years, show the inner life of a man possessed of Spartan courage united with extraordinary mildness and simplicity of temperament. He was a devout Catholic, his wife a devout Protestant, but so sure was each that the other was a Christian that no doubt ever suggested itself to either that they would meet in heaven. He died Oct. 12, 1864, in the full possession of his intellectual faculties, and to the last retained the keenest interest in public affairs. In the summer of 1870, Judge Richard H. Marshall, of Frederick City, and Gen. James H. Coale, of Liberty, both distinguished members of the Frederick bar, caused a marble slab to be erected over the grave of Judge Taney, which occupies a secluded spot in the old Catholic graveyard immediately in the rear of the Novitiate, between East Second and Third Streets, of Frederick City. The slab is of Italian marble, highly polished, about three and a half feet in width and six in length, set in brownstone. It is neat and unpretentious, and bears the following inscription:

"I. H. S.

"Roger Brooke Taney,

"Fifth Chief Justice of the United States of America, born in Calvert County, Md., March 17th, 1777, died in the city of Washington, October 12th, 1864, aged 87 years, 6 months and 25
FRANCIS S. KEY.
days. He was a profound and able lawyer, an upright and fearless Judge, a pious and exemplary Christian. At his own request he was buried in this secluded spot near the grave of his mother.

"May he rest in peace."

Philip Barton Key. This distinguished statesman, the brother of John Ross Key, of Frederick County, was born in Cecil County, Md., in 1761. He was liberally educated, and entered the English army, in which he held a commission as captain. When the Revolutionary war broke out he refused to bear arms against the colonies, and was given a small command at Pensacola, Fla. He afterwards studied law, and on the conclusion of peace with Great Britain returned to Maryland, and settled in Annapolis, where he soon took high rank as a lawyer. He represented Annapolis in the State Legislature, and was a representative in Congress from Maryland from 1807 to 1813. He died at Georgetown, D. C., July 28, 1815. The following obituary of Mr. Key appeared in the Federal Gazette at the time of his death:

"Seldom has a more general and unaffected sorrow pervaded a community than has shown itself on the occasion of this mournful bereavement. The kind affability, active humanity, and warm friendship, so conspicuous in his deportment, had bound the hearts of all to him, and his memory will be conserved no less by those amiable traits than by the splendor of his uncommon intellectual requirements and capacity. The fame of his character as an advocate and senator is spread everywhere, but the affection of his neighbors constitute the only honorable and unmournful monument of the value of the man and the Christian. Mr. Key was a native of Cecil County, Md. He was grounded in the knowledge of the law under the direction of Judge Duvall, now of the Supreme Court of the United States, who entertained for him the highest regard through life. Such were the fruits of these studies and the efficacy of his own genius that he rose to the summit of his profession, through the labors of which he secured a fortune to his family. In eloquence his high powers were attested by the general applause of his hearers and the success of his forensic contentions. His legal attainments were profound and comprehensive. Like Sir William Blackstone, in his younger years he cultivated a talent for poetry, which was displaced by the austerer occupation to which his profession afterwards devoted him. We have seen a handsome specimen of his proficency in that elegant art. He served many years as a member of the Legislature of Maryland, and lately a member of Congress. In these capacities he acted with distinction to the good of his country, and with the approbation of his constituents. In the trying period which preceded and followed the declaration of the late war he was a member of the latter body, where his masterly exertions were never wanting to avoid the needless provocations to hostility, to preserve our commerce and peace, and for the re-establishment of that blessing as soon as it could be regained.

"We believe his pen adorns a portion of that able and elegant paper which in the commencement of the war was issued by the minority explanatory of its motives and their conduct. A more candid, dignified, and convincing piece of eloquence, a like evidence of the intelligent patriotism and unchangeable principles of its signers, is nowhere to be found. To the many marks of the confidence reposed in him by his country may be added the appointment of chief justice of one of the circuits of the United States, which he received from the nomination of President Adams. But the system having been prematurely doomed to its destruction by its enemies, he was allowed but a short time for the display of the rare qualities which in a high degree fitted and accomplished him for the most arduous and venerable exercise of the human faculties, the impartial administration of justice."

Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star-Spangled Banner," and a distinguished lawyer, was born at the residence of his father, John Ross Key, near Pipe Creek, in Frederick County, a short distance from Emmitsburg, on the 1st of August, 1779, and died in Baltimore while on a visit to his son-in-law, Charles Howard, on Wednesday, the 11th of January, 1843. His father was a Revolutionary officer, who died in Frederick County, Oct. 12, 1821. Francis S. Key was educated at St. John's College, Annapolis, and studied law in that city in the office of his uncle, Philip Barton Key. In 1801 he commenced the practice of law at Frederick, but in a few years removed to Washington City, D. C., where he was chosen United States District Attorney. Mr. Key was a gentleman of the highest order of talent, of ardent feelings, and benevolent mind; the intimate friend and counselor of the Hon. John Randolph of Roanoke in his last days, and of Gen. Andrew Jackson during his Presidential term. He was also an early and zealous supporter of the African Colonization Society. His chief title to fame, however, rests on his patriotic and soul-stirring poem, "The Star-Spangled Banner," written to commemorate a Maryland triumph, but so thoroughly impregnated with the true spirit of patriotism that it has become a national lyric. The circumstances under which it was composed are as follows:

"On the retreat of the British army from Washington through Marlborough," says Mr. Gleig, who was with them, "though there appeared to be no disposition on the part of the American general to follow our steps and to harass the retreat, the inhabitants of that village, at the instigation of a medical practitioner called Beanes, had risen in arms as soon as we were defeated, and falling upon such individuals as strayed from the column, put some of them to death and made others prisoners. A soldier whom they had taken, and who had escaped, gave this information to the troopers just as they were about to return to head-quarters; upon which they immediately wheeled about, and galloping into the village, pulled the doctor out of his bed (for it was early in the morning), and compelled him, by threat of instant death, to liberate his prisoners, and mounting him before one of the party, rode into the camp in triumph."

Dr. Beanes was the leading physician in Upper Marlborough, and an accomplished scholar and a popular gentleman. It is said his house, which was one of the best in Upper Marlborough, was selected by Admiral Cockburn and some of the principal officers of the army as their headquarters when the British troops encamped there on their march to Washington. As the British officers had shown him much courtesy and protected his property, they were greatly incensed at his actions. Mr. Taney says the British "entered Dr. Beanes' house about midnight, compelled him to rise from his bed, and hurried him off to their camp, hardly allowing him time to put his clothes on; he was treated with great harshness and closely guarded; and as soon as his friends were apprised of his situation they hastened to the headquarters of the English army to solicit his release, but it was peremptorily refused, and they were not even permitted to see him, and he had been carried as a prisoner on board the fleet." Alarmed for the safety of Dr. Beanes, a number of his friends hastened to Georgetown to procure the assistance of Francis S. Key, who was then serving as a volunteer in Maj. Peter's artillery. Mr. Key promptly undertook to obtain the release of his friend, and immediately obtained the President's permission to visit the British fleet, Mr. John S. Skinner, the government's agent for the exchange of prisoners in Baltimore, who was well known as such to the officers of the fleet, being directed to accompany him. As soon as the necessary arrangements were made they embarked at Baltimore and sailed for the British fleet, which was then at the mouth of the Potomac, preparing for the expedition against Baltimore. Mr. Taney says that Mr. Key "was courteously received by Admiral Cochrane and the officers of the army as well as of the navy. But when he made known his business his application was received so coldly that he feared it would fail."

Gen. Ross and Admiral Cockburn, who accompanied the expedition to Washington, particularly the latter, spoke of Dr. Beanes in very harsh terms, and seemed at first not disposed to release him. It, however, happened, fortunately, that Mr. Skinner carried letters from the wounded British officers left at Bladensburg, and in these letters to their friends on board the fleet they all spoke of the humanity and kindness with which they had been treated after they had fallen into our hands. After a good deal of conversation and strong representations from Mr. Key as to the character and standing of Dr. Beanes, and of the deep interest which the community in which he lived took in his fate, Gen. Ross said that Dr. Beanes deserved much harsher punishment than he had received; but that he felt himself bound to make a return for the kindness which had been shown to his wounded officers whom he had been compelled to leave at Bladensburg, and upon that ground, and that only, he would release him. But Mr. Key was at the same time informed that neither he nor any one else would be permitted to leave the fleet for some days, and must be detained until the attack on Baltimore, which was then about to be made, was over. On the other hand, he was assured they would make him and Mr. Skinner as comfortable as possible during their detention. Admiral Cochrane, with whom they dined on the day of their arrival, apologized for not accommodating them in his own ship, saying that it was crowded already with the officers of the army, but that they would be well taken care of on the frigate 'Surprise,' commanded by his son, Sir Thomas Cochrane. To this frigate they were accordingly transferred."

"Mr. Key," says Mr. Taney, "had an interview with Dr. Beanes before Gen. Ross consented to release him. I do not recollect whether he was on board the admiral's ship or the 'Surprise,' but believe it was the former. He found him in the forward part of the ship, among the sailors. He had not had a change of clothes from the time he was seized; was constantly treated with indignity by those around him, and no officer would speak to him. He was treated as a culprit, and not as a prisoner of war. This harsh and humiliating treatment continued until he was placed on board of the cartel. . . ."

"Mr. Key and Mr. Skinner continued on board the 'Surprise,' where they were very kindly treated by Sir Thomas Cochrane, until the fleet reached the Patapesc and preparations were made for landing the troops. Admiral Cochrane then shifted his flag to the frigate, in order that he might be able to move farther up the river and superintend in person the attack by water on the fort; and Mr. Key and Mr. Skinner were then sent on board their own vessel, with a guard of sailors and marines, to prevent them from landing. They were permitted to take Dr. Beanes with them, and they thought themselves fortunate in being anchored in a position which enabled them to see distinctly the flag of Fort McHenry from the deck of the vessel. He (Mr. Key) proceeded then, with much animation, to describe the scene on the night of the bombardment. He and Mr. Skinner remained on deck during the night, watching every shell from the moment it was fired until it fell, listening with breathless interest to hear if an explosion followed. While the bombardment continued it was sufficient proof that the fort had not surrendered. But it suddenly ceased some time before day, and as they had no communication with any of the enemy's ships, they did not know whether the fort had surrendered or the attack had been abandoned. They paced the deck for the residue of the night in painful suspense, watching with intense anxiety for the return of day, and looking every few minutes at their watches to see how long they would have to wait for it; and as soon as it dawned, and before it was light enough to see objects a distance, their glasses were turned to the fort, uncertain whether they should see the Stars and Stripes or the flag of the enemy. At length light came, and they saw that 'our flag was still there,' and as the day advanced they discovered, from the movements of the boats between the shore and the fleet, that the troops had been roughly handled, and that many wounded men were carried to the ships. At last he was informed that the attack on Baltimore had failed, and that the British army was re-embarking, and that he and Mr. Skinner and Dr. Beanes would be permitted to leave them and go where they pleased as soon as the troops were on board and the fleet ready to sail.

"He then told me that, under the excitement of the time, he had written the song, and handed me a printed copy of 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' When I read it and expressed my astonishment, I asked him how he found time, in the scenes he had been passing through, to compose such a song. He said he commenced it on the deck of their vessel, in the fervor of the moment, when he saw the enemy hastily retreating to their ships, and looked at the flag he had watched for so anxiously as the morning opened; that he had written some lines of brief notes, that would aid him in calling them to mind, upon the back of a letter which he happened to have in his pocket, and for some of the lines, as he proceeded, he was obliged to rely altogether upon his memory, and that he finished it in the boat on his way to the shore, and wrote it out as it now stands at the hotel on the night he reached Baltimore, and immediately after he arrived. He said that on the next morning he took it to Capt. Joshua N. Nicholson, commander of the Baltimore Fencibles and chief justice of the Baltimore Court, and one of the judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, to ask him what he thought of it; that he was so much pleased with it that he immediately sent it to a printer and directed copies to be struck off in hand-bill form; and that he, Mr. Key, believed it to have been favorably received by the Baltimore public."

The song was first set in type by Mr. Samuel Sands, who was then an apprentice-boy at the office of the Baltimore American, on the east side of Harrison Street near Baltimore, and who afterwards became the proprietor and editor of the American Farmer. It was set to the tune of "Anacreon in Heaven." It is said it was first sung in camp, afterwards nightly in the Holliday Street Theatre. Mr. Key was the father of eleven children. One of his sons, Philip Barton Key, was killed in Washington by Gen. Sickles, and another, Daniel S. Key, was slain in a duel near Bladensburg by Mr. Sherburne, a New Hampshire man. Both were midshipmen in the United States navy. On the ground Sherburne said, "Mr. Key, I have no desire to kill you." "No matter," said Key; "I came to kill you." "Very well," replied Sherburne; "then I will kill you," which he did at the first fire.

While studying law at Annapolis Mr. Key became the intimate friend of Roger Brooke Taney, afterwards chief justice, who, as previously stated, married Mr. Key's only sister. Besides the "Star-Spangled Banner," Mr. Key wrote a number of other verses, but it is doubtful whether he ever intended them for publication, as they appear to have been hastily composed on the impulse of some passing fancy. Mr. Key was a contemporary of Edward Coote Pinkney, and contributed to the same periodicals for which Edgar Allen Poe wrote. He was a thorough gentleman, and a man of cultivated tastes, but literature was not the serious business of his life, his time being mainly occupied with the practice of his profession. In her "Biographical Sketches of Distinguished Marylanders," Esmeralda Boyle relates the following characteristic anecdote of Mr. Key:

"Mr. Key was on intimate terms of friendship with Mr. Randolph (John Randolph of Roanoke), who, being confined to his room by illness upon one occasion, was engaged in conversation with Mr. Key, who had called upon him at the hotel. Not long after Mr. Key entered the room, an officer of high rank in the British navy, deeming himself on intimate terms with Mr. Randolph, merely knocked at the door, then opening it, entered unannounced. Turning hastily around, Randolph cried out in a rude manner, 'Busy, my lord, busy! Always apply to my servant before you enter my lodgings.' "Beg pardon," said the officer, who immediately withdrew. Mr. Key said, 'Mr. Randolph, how can you treat a gentleman in this way? He meant nothing wrong.' "Neither do hogs mean wrong when they enter my cornfields, but I always turn them out," was the answer of John Randolph." An old friend of Mr. Key said of him, “Everybody who knew Frank Key loved him, and there was not a more agreeable companion to be found.” Mr. Key was a member of the Episcopal Church, and for many years taught a Sunday-school class at Rock Creek Church. His wife was Mary Taylor Lloyd, daughter of Col. Edward Lloyd, of Talbot County, Md., a charming lady, who contributed greatly to the attractiveness of their hospitable home. During the Nullification troubles in South Carolina he was sent in an unofficial capacity to that State, and it is said contributed not a little by his personal efforts to the peaceful settlement which was finally obtained. Mr. Key conducted the prosecution of the would-be assassin of Gen. Jackson in 1835, and acted with great circumspection and a due regard for the rights of the prisoner. The man was adjudged insane and sent to an asylum. Of Mr. Key’s appearance in an important case in the United States Supreme Court, ex-Governor Foote, of Mississippi, in his “Reminiscences,” says, “I was very much entertained with the whole argument, but I was particularly with the speech of Mr. Key and that of Mr. Berrien. Mr. Key was tall, erect, and of admirable physical proportions. There dwelt usually upon his handsome and winning features a soft and touching pensiveness of expression, almost bordering on sadness, but which in moments of special excitement, or when anything occurred to awaken the dormant heroism of his nature or to call into action the higher power of vigorous and well-cultivated intellect, gave place to a bright ethereality of aspect and noble audacity of tone which pleased while it dazzled the beholder. His voice was capable of being in the highest degree touching and persuasive. His whole gesteclation was natural, graceful, and impressive, and was completely free from everything like affectation or rhetorical grimace as any public speaker I have known. . . . On this occasion he greatly surpassed the expectations of his most admiring friends. The subject was particularly suited to his thoughts, and was one which had long enlisted in a special manner the generous sensibilities of his soul. It seemed to me that he said all that the case demanded, and yet no more than was needful to be said, and he closed with a thrilling and even an electrifying picture of the horrors connected with the African slave-trade which would have done honor to either a Pitt or a Wilberforce in their palriest days.” One of the most convincing proofs of Mr. Key’s great benevolence and kindness of heart is found in the fact that he manumitted all his slaves and was one of the founders of the African Colonization Society. While visiting his daughter, Mrs. Charles Howard, in Baltimore, Mr. Key was seized with pneumonia, and died suddenly in January, 1843. The United States Supreme Court adjourned in his honor on being acquainted with his death, and next day the Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. Logan, of South Carolina, presented resolutions of condolence passed by the bar, and made an address testifying to Mr. Key’s great intellectual attainments, and to his admirable qualities of heart and mind. Similar action was taken by the bar of Frederick and of Baltimore City and County, and his remains were borne to the grave universally regretted and beloved. Mr. Key was buried at Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, but subsequently the remains were removed to Frederick, where they lie beside those of his wife in the cemetery of Mount Olivet. His grave is marked by a simple slab. A bill appropriating five thousand dollars for a monument was introduced into the State Legislature, but failed for want of funds. A handsome monument has, however, been erected in San Francisco through the munificence of the late James Lick.

Alexander Contee Hanson. This distinguished jurist was the son of John Hanson (elected President of the Continental Congress Nov. 6, 1781) and Jane Contee, and was born in Frederick County, Oct. 22, 1749. In early life he was assistant private secretary to Gen. Washington, and was one of the first judges of the General Court of Maryland. Upon the formation of the General Court in 1777, Charles Carroll, barrister, was appointed chief justice, and Benjamin Rumsey and Solomon Wright judges. They declined to accept, and William Paco, chief judge, and Henry Hooper and Alexander Contee Hanson, associate judges, were appointed, Feb. 12, 1778, to fill the vacancies. Upon the death of John Rogers, chancellor of the State, Robert Hanson Harrison was appointed, Oct. 1, 1789, to fill the vacancy, but declined, and Alexander Contee Hanson was appointed, Oct. 3, 1789, to the office, which he held until his death, at Annapolis, Jan. 16, 1806. He was elected for President in 1789, and again in 1792. Under the direction of Mr. Hanson and Samuel Chase the laws of Maryland passed from Nov. 26, 1763, to the close of the session of the Assembly of 1784 were published. In 1789 he was appointed to digest the testamentary laws of the State. He was also the author of a number of celebrated political pamphlets. He married Rebecca Howard, of Annapolis, and had three children,—Charles Wallace Hanson, who was appointed associate judge of the Sixth Judicial District, composed of Baltimore and Harford Counties, in the place of Zebulon Hollingsworth, removed; Alexander Contee Hanson; and a daughter, who married Thomas Peabody Grosvenor, of New York.
Judge Hanson sat at the trial of the seven Tories convicted in Frederick Court during the Revolution, and sentenced them to death. Mr. Hanson's son, Alexander Contee Hanson, Jr., was one of the prominent leaders of the anti-war section of the Federalist party during the war of 1812. He was born in Maryland, and died at Belmont, Frederick Co., April 23, 1819. In 1815-16 he was a member of Congress, and in 1816-19 United States senator from Maryland. At the beginning of the war Mr. Hanson was associated with Jacob Wagner in the publication in Baltimore of a staunch Federalist paper, the Federal Republican, which bitterly antagonized the war with Great Britain. Its course infuriated the war-party in Baltimore, and the office of the paper was mobbed, and the types, presses, paper, etc., destroyed. The house itself, a frame building, was demolished. Soon afterwards the paper, which in the mean time had been published in Georgetown, reappeared in Baltimore from a house on South Charles Street which Mr. Hanson occupied with his friends, among whom were Gen. James M. Lingan, Otho Spingg, Richard J. Crabb, Henry C. Gaither, Charles J. Kilgour, Dr. P. Warfield, J. E. Hall, Gen. Henry Lee, Ephraim Gaither, and John Howard Payne, the actor. An attack was made by the mob, and the occupants of the house fired upon it from the windows, killing a Dr. Gale. The mob brought a field-piece to bear, but by this time a military force had arrived, and Hanson and his friends surrendered to the officer in command. They were taken to the jail, which that night was broken into by the mob. Gen. Lingan was killed, and eleven others dreadfully beaten. Gen. Lee and Mr. Hanson were treated with peculiar brutality, and were seriously hurt. The violence of the mob caused a reaction in Mr. Hanson's favor, and largely contributed to his subsequent political success. Mr. Hanson was a man of exceptional ability and rare personal courage. While in Congress he fought a duel with Capt. Gordon, of the United States navy, and badly wounded him, hitting him exactly where he said he would.

John Hanson Thomas. This eminent lawyer, the son of Dr. Philip Thomas and Jane Contee Hanson, was born in Frederick Town. He was married Oct. 5, 1809, to Mary Isham Colston, a niece of Chief Justice Marshall. In 1808 he was elected to the House of Delegates by the Federalists. By his eloquence and brilliant talents he rose to great distinction in the politics of the State. He was elected a member of Congress, and had been selected by his party for a seat in the United States Senate, but dying on May 2, 1815, before the election, the Federalists honored his cousin, Alexander Contee Hanson, with a seat in that body. His father, Dr. Philip Thomas, the son of James Thomas and Elizabeth Bclingium, of Kent County, was born near Chestertown, June 11, 1747, and commenced the practice of medicine in Frederick Town, Aug. 1, 1769. He was a sterling patriot, and did much to aid the cause of the Revolution. The doctor died April 25, 1815.

John Hanson Thomas was regarded as the most brilliant man of his day in the State, at the bar and on the stump. The late Dr. John Hanson Thomas, of Baltimore, was his son.

Francis Thomas was born in Frederick County, Md., Feb. 3, 1799, and was nearly seventy-seven years old when accidentally killed. He was educated at St. John's College, Annapolis, was admitted to the bar about the year 1820, and acquired a large practice in the counties of Western Maryland. He was at one time the possessor of a comfortable fortune, the most of which he had acquired by the practice of his profession. He was member of the House of Delegates of Maryland in 1822, 1827, 1829, serving the last term as Speaker. He was president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal in 1839 and 1840. Ex-Governor Thomas was the second Governor of Maryland elected by the people. He succeeded William Grason in 1841, held the office three years, and was succeeded by Thomas G. Pratt. He was a representative in the 22d, 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th, 37th, 38th, 39th, and 40th Congresses. While in Congress he applied to the Legislature of Maryland for a divorce from his wife, who was a Miss Sally McDowell, a daughter of Governor McDowell, of Virginia, and a lady of rare accomplishments. He failed to obtain a divorce in Maryland, but Mrs. Thomas was subsequently divorced from her husband by the Legislature of Virginia. She afterwards married Rev. Mr. Miller, a Presbyterian clergyman of Philadelphia. Governor Thomas was a Democrat prior to 1861, and frequently stumped the State, either as a candidate or in behalf of the State and national ticket. He possessed extraordinary popularity as a political orator, and took a prominent part in the reform movement of 1849 and 1850. He was elected to the Constitutional Convention of 1850, and was a leading member of that body. He was re-elected to Congress in 1861, and remained in that body four terms, acting with the Republican party. After the election of President Grant in 1870, he was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Cumberland District, and held that office until 1872, when he was appointed minister to Peru, which position he resigned in 1875, when he retired from public life, and engaged in the practice of law at Cumberland and in wool-growing upon his farm in Garrett County.

Governor Thomas' life was in many respects an eventful one, and his talent and vigor in political life were recognized in all parts of the State. Among the incidents in the stormy portion of his career was his duel fought with the late William Price, a distinguished lawyer of Maryland, growing out of a heated public discussion at Hagerstown. Neither of the combatants were wounded, Governor Thomas' ball glancing from the toe of Mr. Price's boot. The duel was fought at Bath, Berkeley Co., Va., and created a great deal of excitement at the time. He also had a personal encounter with Governor McDowell, of Virginia, in 1843, but owing to the interposition of friends no duel was fought. Governor Thomas was accidentally killed Saturday afternoon (January 23d), 1876, on the railway track, about one mile east of Frankville Station, Baltimore andOhio Railroad, while engaged in superintending improvements for breeding fine sheep procured by him in Peru, and brought to this country on his return. While standing on the track he saw a freight-train approaching from the east, and stepped to the south track to avoid it. At the same moment a "helper" engine came upon him from the west, "tender" foremost, the approach of which he had not noticed and did not hear. There is a short curve at this point, and the engineer said that as his engine rounded the curve he saw Governor Thomas walking on the track with his arms folded behind him and his head bent in a meditative mood. It was too late to give an alarm or check the speed of the engine, and in a moment it struck him in the back, knocking him twenty feet to a pile of railroad bars beside the road. The locomotive was stopped as soon as possible and assistance summoned, but life was extinct. The body was not mutilated, a severe contusion on the back of his head and several bruises near the spinal column being the only apparent injuries. The remains were taken to Frankville on a hand-car and thence to his house.

A telegram was received from John Sifford, of Frederick City, stating that he had been an intimate friend of the deceased, and had been by him requested to have his body interred in the family burying-ground, Petersville, Frederick Co. This request was made before the Governor had started on his mission to Peru, and Mr. Sifford was also authorized to procure a monument to be erected at the grave. Accordingly, his remains were taken to Petersville and there interred.

In the Legislature, in Congress, and in the gubernatorial chair, Mr. Thomas made a deep and lasting impression. As a political orator he had few equals, and his eloquence was so ringing and clear as to obtain for him the title of "Silver-tongued." After having been Governor of the State he retired in 1844, and, brooding over his domestic calamity, led the life of a recluse for many years, until the outbreak of the late civil war, when he emerged from his retirement, and, taking an active part in behalf of the Union cause, was sent to Congress, where he had years before distinguished himself as a Democratic member of the House.

Ex-Governor Thomas was in many respects one of the most extraordinary men ever sent by his State to the Federal Congress. He was a leading supporter of Jackson throughout the stormy congressional contest concerning the United States Bank, and by his commanding gifts of eloquence and fascinating personal address acquired, in a service of ten years in Congress, a national reputation as a debater of uncommon force. From his retirement on leaving the Governor's chair he emerged in 1851, as a member of the Constitutional Convention, and at the commencement of hostilities in 1861 he threw himself with ardor into the work of encouraging enlistments and organizing regiments for the Union cause. Leaving to younger men, like Col. Maulsby, the duty of leading these regiments into the field, he accepted in 1861 the "Union" nomination to Congress, and after an interval of twenty years again found himself a member of the House of Representatives. His course throughout the war was that of an earnest, though not extreme, supporter of the government. Indeed, he inclined more to the views of Border State Union men like Crisfield and Webster than to the more advanced opinions of Henry Winter Davis and his followers. With the shrewd instinct of an experienced political leader, he never allowed himself to get too far in advance of his constituency, and was very formidable on the stump, from the fact that he could always appeal to his own record for moderation and conservatism as an effective argument in favor of the reasonableness of his views.

Judge John Alexander Lynch was born on the 3d day of October, A.D. 1825, near the village of Jefferson, in Frederick County, Md., and now resides in Frederick City, in Frederick County. His father, William Lynch, was born on the 15th of February, A.D. 1788, near the village of Jefferson, and died near the place of his birth on the 7th of August, 1857. He three times represented Frederick County in the Legislature of Maryland. John A. Lynch's mother was Eliza Boteler, who was born in Washington County, Md., near the village of Weverton, on the 10th of February, A.D. 1797, and died near the village of Jefferson on the 14th of January, 1832. His grandfathers on both sides were soldiers in the Revolutionary war.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

John A. Lyne first married Isabella C. Beckett, in Frederick City, on the 17th of November, 1856. They have had no children. He was educated at a country school near the place of his birth, and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. He did not graduate, but the degree of A.M. was subsequently conferred upon him by that institution. He was obliged to leave college in March, 1847, on account of failing health, and went to the State of Alabama, where he remained (teaching school a part of the time) until the month of August, 1849, when he returned to Frederick County with restored health, and commenced the study of the law in Frederick City, in the office of Mountjoy B. Luckett, Esq. He was admitted to the bar in November, 1851, and commenced the practice of law in Frederick City, where he has since continued to reside. He was elected State's attorney for Frederick County in November, 1855, and was re-elected in November, 1859, having performed the duties of that office for two terms. He was elected without opposition associate judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit of the State in November, 1867, which office he now holds. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church.

He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having joined that institution in August, 1849, and is a member of the Grand Lodge of Maryland. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a Knight Templar, and is now Eminent Commander of the commandery in Frederick City. He has never engaged in any business but such as was connected with the profession of the law. He is a Democrat, and previous to his election as judge took an active part in politics in his native county, but never was an aspirant or candidate for any political office. He has always been fond of his profession, and has given to it his almost entire attention. He has written no work for publication, only an occasional address, and numerous legal opinions in the performance of his duties as judge. Devoting himself thus exclusively to the law, it is not strange that he should have won so distinguished a position at the bar and such high honors upon the bench. As both lawyer and judge he has gained an enviable reputation among the people of Western Maryland and of the whole State, and without courting popular favor has secured, by his high character and talents, the esteem and admiration of his fellow-citizens of all parties. Though elected as a Democrat, he knows no party upon the bench, and recognizes in his decisions only the principles of the law. Just, firm, able, and conscientious, it is to be hoped that it may be long before the bench of Maryland shall be deprived of his valuable and able services.

John Nelson was born in Frederick in 1794, and died at his residence in Mount Vernon Place, Baltimore, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 18, 1860, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Nelson studied law and was admitted to the bar of Frederick, and when twenty-five years of age, as soon as he was eligible, was elected congressman from his native district. In Congress he was regarded as an exceptionally brilliant and promising young man. On resuming the active practice of his profession he decided to remove to Baltimore, where he continued to reside, with the exception of a comparatively brief residence in Washington, until his death. He rose steadily in the estimation of the bar and the general public as a lawyer of uncommon ability, and in 1843, when Vice-President Tyler succeeded Gen. Harrison as President, he made Mr. Nelson attorney-general. In announcing the nomination the Richmond Whig said, "We never heard of Mr. Nelson before," whereupon the Baltimore Sun rejoined, "We were very near saying this confession argues yourself unknown. Mr. Nelson is one of the most distinguished members of the Maryland bar. His name has never been bandied about by pot-house politicians, and hence it is not so well known as many others who might be named. The only public position Mr. Nelson has ever held, we believe, was the post of minister to Naples, to which he was appointed by President Jackson. There he performed the duties of his mission with satisfaction to himself and to his government. Mr. Nelson is in this city highly esteemed, both as a citizen and a lawyer, and his friends have full faith that the attorney-generalship will never be disgraced by his person."

Mr. Nelson retired from the cabinet in March, 1845, and returned to Baltimore, where he was a leading member of the bar until his death. On the announcement of his death a special meeting of the bar of Baltimore was held in the Superior Court room. The Baltimore Clipper of Jan. 21, 1860, gives the following account of the meeting:

"The specially called meeting of the Baltimore bar to do honor to the memory of the late Hon. John Nelson met yesterday (January 20th) at one o'clock, pursuant to the announcement, in the Superior Court room, which was densely crowded with members of the legal profession in Baltimore, including many of its brightest ornaments.

"Shortly after the hour named Judge R. X. Martin was, upon motion of Jonathan Mererith, Esq., called to preside, and Reverdy Johnson, Jr., elected secretary.

"Upon motion of Mr. Meade Addison, United States district attorney, the president appointed Messrs. Reverdy Johnson,
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Jonathan Meredith, J. V. L. McMahon, Nathaniel Williams, and Grafton Dulany, Esqs., a committee of five to draw up suitable resolutions. The committee retired to the Law Library, and after a few minutes' absence returned, when Jonathan Meredith arose, and spoke as follows:

"The Baltimore bar, Mr. Chairman, has seldom sustained a heavier loss than we are now assembled to deplore in the death of a distinguished brother.

"With great natural endowments, a luminous and vigorous intellect, a mastery of law as a science, the fruits of early and patient labor, a power of analysis to disentangle the most complicated problems, the closest reasoning, and an eloquence natural and persuasive, with all these great gifts Mr. Nelson has long stood in the foremost rank of the Baltimore bar.

"But his legal reputation had a much wider range than his native State; before the most august tribunal of our country, in the Supreme Court of the United States, elevated to the high office of attorney-general, he stood side by side with the distinguished leaders of that bar, and won by his forensic efforts and the faithful discharge of his official duties the respect and confidence of the court.

"This, sir, is but a tribute to his memory as a lawyer. His worth as a man, his courteous and gentlemanlike bearing to all who met him, his freedom from arrogant pretensions, his equality of temper, his natural kindness in society,—charms which attracted so many to his companionship and made them friends,—remembrance of these will long be cherished, no less than his professional eminence.

"To record our sorrow for his death and our heartfelt sympathies for those whom it has bereft, I move you, sir, that the resolutions of your committee, which will be read by the secretary, be entered on the minutes of the several courts of this city.

"The usual resolutions of respect and condolence were then read and adopted.

"Hon. Reverdy Johnson then delivered the following eulogium:

"Mr. Chairman, the affecting event which has brought us together has filled us with a sorrow that makes it almost impossible for me to participate, except as a silent auditor, in the business of our meeting.

"It has come upon me with such comparative suddenness that I am unable to meet it even with a becoming fortitude. And although every hour is telling us that it is wasting his presence to make us complete, yet days and weeks and months shall pass before I shall be able to realize the death of John Nelson. It seems to me as if but yesterday that he met us in this chamber, and, as was ever his wont, with a genial smile and friendly grasp, gave us assurance that with us he was ever happy. And then he must have seen (and that in some measure should console us), from the manner in which his salutations were returned, that with him our hours too always passed pleasantly, and that we valued him not less for his social qualities than for his professional eminence.

"But he is gone, never in this world to be seen by us more. His friendly grasp, as warm as his heart was kind, is now cold as the winter's ice. His tongue and brain are now more imitable matter. They will soon be but the dust from which they sprang. The spirit, which was alone immortal, and which gave them the power to persuade and convince, as we so well knew they had, has gone by the summons of its God to the native sky, there to account for its conduct on earth. Nor, at the moment of its departure, did our brother evidence the slightest fear of the result. With a sincere faith in our revealed religion, from a conviction of its truth, the happy result of careful reading and deep meditation, as I have every reason to know he entertained, he met his inevitable hour with the fullest confidence in heaven. In this thought there is much, very much to reconcile us to our bereavement, and yet that is so severe that time can alone enable us to sustain it unavowed.

"Of Mr. Nelson's professional character it would be difficult to speak in terms of exaggeration. His mind was admirably fitted for the bar. It was naturally acute, discriminating, methodical, and logical, and these capacities were improved almost to perfection by the most careful cultivation, by study and practice. Some of his brethren who knew him less intimately may have supposed that his great efforts at the bar—and when the occasion required they were ever great—were rather the result of peculiar and extraordinary natural endowment than of much general professional reading or careful preparation. If this be so, they are, as I know, in error. From the first he was a diligent student, and for his cases he exhausted all the necessary learning within his reach, and stretched his power of thought to the utmost capacity. He knew—as who does not who has observed much of our profession—that excellence at all, much more the highest excellence, is not to be obtained without giving days and nights to study.

"I would not be understood by this that all is accomplished by reading: that much of it is absolutely necessary, but to be valuable it must be accomplished by close, concentrated thought, and of this our brother was eminently competent. A career now of forty-four years' duration, and the opportunity of seeing the great men of the American bar and a few of the bar of England, enabled me to compare, as I have often done when hearing him, Mr. Nelson with others, and with this result: I have heard more eloquence, more brilliant imagery, more power of amplification, and more influence of learning, but I do not think that in force of analysis, clearness of arrangement, perspicuity of statement, simplicity of language, cleanness of logic, and concentration of thought I have ever seen him match, if at all, excelled. When his case demanded an effort, as when the facts were numerous and complicated and the legal questions many and abstruse, I have ever felt, when his arguments were concluded, that the entire argument was exhausted.

"As a colleague he was invaluable, and whoever measured conclusions with him without feeling that as an adversary he was ever formidable? Whilst guarding with skill his own defenses, he knew with equal skill how to assail those of his opponent, and kept him, whoever he may have been, to the utmost of his capacity. But his talents were not alone suited for the bar.

"At the early age of twenty-five, the first moment of his being eligible in the district of his nativity and earlier residence, he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the United States. The body at that time contained men of great ability, and, as I have heard from several of them, young as he was, Mr. Nelson was at once appreciated as a young man of great promise, an estimate which was more confirmed at the termination of his services. In the Senate of our State, at a subsequent period, his power was yet more evident; he stood first among the first. His superior was not known.

"In the service of his country abroad afterwards, during the administration of Gen. Jackson, he proved himself the equal of the ablest of our diplomats, and received on his return, as he well merited, the honor due to a successful treaty, accomplished by the overwhelming power with which he maintained the rights of our people.

"His mission ended, he made this city his home and the theatre of his subsequent professional life. He was for a short period called from us by President Tyler to assume the duties of Attorney-General of the United States, and although immediately succeeding the accomplished and elegant Legarde, he was at once recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States and by his brethren of that bar as the equal of any of his predecessors. The archives of the office contain enduring evidence of his learning and unsurpassed comprehension. I do not know that in the many opinions given by him a single error was discovered. They constitute now a resource which can be resorted to with confidence to ascertain the law on all the questions he was called upon to consider. How he discharged his duties afterwards in our courts this auditory need not be remitted. His voice, even now, seems to me to fill the hall with its energy, and his mind to explain with the clearness of light the abstruse inquiry.

"What a void in our ranks must be caused by the death of such a brother! Can we ever find one every way fitted to supply it? On reflection I do not at all despond. There are young brethren around me full of talent, industry, and noble ambition. Let them study as Nelson studied; let them have their knowledge as accurate as his; let them attain a perfect comprehension of the principles of our science, and rely mainly on those in their examination of adjudged cases, and although the keenness of our bereavement may long be felt, we shall in a few years see the vacant place filled, and the fame of our bar restored to its recent brightness.

"But, Mr. Chairman, there is a higher lesson taught us by our loss than his example teaches to the aspirant of professional honor.

"During the pendency of the case now on trial we have had to mourn the deaths of four of our members. The judge who presided in this court and three of our brethren within that period have died. What a lesson does this teach! The frequency of the event would almost tell us that the only business of life is to look about us and die. But such is not the voice that really speaks from the tomb. That voice tells us that the true business of life is to live that we may be prepared to die; that there are brighter rewards in store for us in a world where, happiness pure and immortal awaits us if we are true to our duty to man and to heaven. Let these recent warnings, therefore, excite us to a holy ambition, which will secure us more, inconceivably more, than all the honors that this world are worth.

"I forbear, Mr. Chairman, to intrude within the sacred circle of the bereaved home, where men can offer no word of consolation. The blow that has crushed its inmates to the earth can only be borne by communion with God.'

"Several times during the course of his remarks Mr. Johnson was so deeply moved as to be scarcely able to proceed, and at their conclusion he quickly seated himself and covered his face with his hands to conceal the tears which were trickling down his cheeks.

"Judge Martin responded as follows:

"Before submitting for the adoption of the bar the resolutions that have just been read, expressive of affection and respect for the memory of our lamented friend and brother, the late John Nelson, I have only to remark that I cordially concur in all that has been said by my brothers who have addressed you in commendation of his character, his public services, and professional ability.

"He was a most accomplished and able lawyer, profoundly versed with the principles of jurisprudence in all its branches, and in discharging the arduous duties of the bench I have been often sided and enlightened by his accurate reasoning, his lucid reasoning, and his strong argumentative powers.

"I unite with you all, gentlemen, in deploring an event which has deprived each of us of an attached personal friend, and the profession of one of its brightest ornaments; and, as an enduring memorial of affection and respect for our lamented brother, I shall at the proper time direct these proceedings of the bench and bar to be entered upon the records of the Superior Court.'

"Upon motion of Mr. Meredith, the meeting adjourned upon the conclusion of his honor the judge's remarks."

That Mr. Nelson's reputation was not merely local is shown by the proceedings of the judges and the bar of the United States Supreme Court in relation to his death. The meeting was held in Washington on the 19th of January, 1860, Hon. J. J. Crittenden presiding. Hon. James A. Bayard submitted a series of resolutions, which were adopted, in honor of Mr. Nelson. On the following day they were laid before the United States Supreme Court by Attorney-General Black, who embraced the occasion to deliver a brief but eloquent eulogy of the deceased, in the course of which he remarked:

"It was here that he won what he valued more than anything else, the character of a great lawyer. You can testify to the industry with which he prepared his cases, to his large intellectual resources, to his extensive learning, to his uniform politeness with the court, and to his never-failing frankness in his intercourse with the bar. From July, 1843, until March, 1845, he was in the public service of the United States as their attorney-general. I know whereof I affirm when I say that he left behind him on the records of that department enduring evidence that he was not only a man of great ability, but a most upright, honest, and virtuous officer."

Mr. Justice McLean also testified in warm terms to the high estimation in which Mr. Nelson's attainments and personal qualities were held by the court.

Mr. Nelson was buried at Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, and was followed to the grave by the judges of the Baltimore courts and by the leading members of the bar and many prominent citizens.

Hon. Madison Nelson, judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and a half-brother of Hon. John Nelson, was also born in Frederick, and died there Jan. 1, 1870, aged about seventy years.

Judge Nelson and the Hon. John Nelson were both sons of Gen. Roger Nelson, an officer of the Revolutionary army, who achieved distinction at the battles of Camden and Eutaw Springs.

Madison Nelson studied law, was admitted in Frederick, and soon became one of the leading lawyers of Western Maryland. He was elected judge of the Circuit Court for Frederick County in opposition to the Democratic party, but when the new constitution went into effect he was nominated by the Democrats and Conservatives as chief judge of the judicial district composed of Frederick and Montgomery Counties. He was elected, and became, by virtue of his office as chief judge, a member of the Court of Appeals. After his election, however, his health grew feeble, and for some time before his death he was unable to attend the sessions of the court. He was a man of decided talents, and had a quick, sagacious, and penetrating mind.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Hon. Frederick J. Nelson, born in 1833, a distinguished member of the Frederick bar and a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1867, is a son of the late Judge Nelson.

William Schley, one of the shining lights of the Baltimore bar, was born in Frederick City, Oct. 31, 1799, and died March 20, 1872, in his seventy-third year. The Schleys were among the earliest settlers of Frederick, having arrived there in 1735. The builder of the first house in Frederick, John Thomas Schley, was the grandfather of William.

William Schley graduated at Princeton College in 1821, with first honors in every department of study. He was admitted to the bar in 1824, and practiced with success in Frederick till 1837, when he removed to Baltimore and rapidly rose to distinction. In 1824 Mr. Schley married a daughter of Gen. Samuel Ringgold, of "Fountain Rock" Manor, Washington County, and sister of Maj. Samuel Ringgold, who was killed in the Mexican war, at Palo Alto. This lady died in 1870.

In 1836, Mr. Schley was elected to the Senate of Maryland, and as chairman of the Committee on the Constitution took a leading part in the debates of the interesting reform agitation of that time, which involved him in a personal dispute with William Cost Johnson, to whom Mr. Schley sent a challenge. The parties met at Alexandria, Va., Feb. 13, 1837, and exchanged one shot, in which each was wounded. Mr. Schley was accompanied to the field by Daniel, of St. Thomas, Jenifer, of Maryland, and Governor Pickens, of South Carolina. Mr. Johnson's seconds were Governor Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, and Governor Campbell, of South Carolina. The parties were reconciled on the ground and remained firm friends ever after. The affair received the name at the time of the "Pattern Duel," from the extreme punctilio which was observed.

Mr. Schley was in politics a Whig. He was defeated by one vote in the caucus nomination for the United States Senate in 1838. He took an active part in the political campaign of 1850, when Mr. Fillmore was a candidate, and in 1864, when Gen. McClellan was a candidate. Mr. Schley was on terms of friendly and confidential intercourse with Clay, Webster, Crittenden, Gen. Scott, Chief Justice Taney, and many others of the more distinguished men of the last half-century. His life and energies were given with earnestness to the profession of the law, in which he continued actively engaged up to his last sickness. His professional reputation, which was of the very highest character within his State, extended beyond those limits, and no man was more frequently consulted by clients from abroad or from other States. In personal or social intercourse he was distinguished by that peculiar courtesy and gracefulness of manner which is recognized by the appellation of "the old school."

Mr. Schley's death resulted from confluent small-pox, which he is supposed to have contracted while traveling to Baltimore in a railroad train. He had never been vaccinated, and when the nature of his disease was ascertained he was with his own acquiescence removed to the Marine Hospital, where he died. He was attended by Dr. E. Lloyd Howard, and by his affectionate and devoted daughter, Mrs. Wm. Woodville, who nursed him with assiduous tenderness and care throughout his illness. On the night of his death, when Dr. Howard, exhausted, lay down to rest in an adjoining room, Mrs. Woodville remained at his bedside, and was alone with him when he died. A meeting of the bar of Baltimore was held, at which resolutions in honor of Mr. Schley's memory were adopted, and addresses highly eulogistic of his character delivered. Personally, Mr. Schley was a generous, warm-hearted man, and his legal attainments and mental abilities were of the highest order. Unfortunately, in early life, from a mistaken sense of duty, he assumed the indebtedness of his father-in-law, Gen. Samuel Ringgold, and was forced to struggle through life beneath a crushing burden.

The peculiar qualities of Mr. Schley's character were accurately described in the remarks of Judge Giles at the meeting of the bar:

"Before taking a vote upon the resolutions submitted," said the judge, "I would express the deep sorrow I felt on learning this morning (March 29th) of Mr. Schley's death. Thirty-seven years since, at Annapolis, I made his acquaintance. He was then a senator of Maryland from the county of Frederick. During the winter of 1857 he resigned and moved to this city. During the many years since that time he has been in full practice as a leading member of our bar, and no more patient, hard-working, and willing member could be found in the profession. He was an accomplished scholar, an able advocate, and a learned jurist. In very long service on the bench in the District and Circuit Courts of the United States, he has tried very many causes before me, and I always felt I was a learner at his feet. He was courteous and kind to all, and I shall long miss him as a friend whom I shall see here no more. The last few years of his life have been of much sorrow. Death had broken up his family circle, and taken from him those who once adorned it, but he bore it all with a smiling countenance, and toiled on. His passage from the strife and active scenes of this life to the solitude and quiet of the grave has been under circumstances the most painful; but through the dark cloud there breaks a ray of glory from a daughter's love. But a few days since I stood with him at this bar to pay our last tribute to the patriarch of our profession. Little did I dream that his name would be called from the master of death. But he has bowed to that decree, from which there is no appeal, and has gone on that journey from which there is no return."
FREDERICK COUNTY.

409

William Cost Johnson. This famous lawyer and politician was born in Jefferson District, Frederick Co., in 1806. He received an academic education, studied law, and was admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court in 1831. He was a member of Congress from 1833 to 1835, and again from 1837 to 1843. He also served in the State Legislature before entering and after leaving Congress, and was a member of the Maryland Constitutional Convention of 1851. He was elected president of the Young Men's Convention which met in Washington to nominate Henry Clay for President. Whilst in Congress he was chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and was also a member of the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Johnson was an ardent Whig, and a political debater of uncommon ability. He was a man of great energy of character, and of indomitable will and courage. He fought several duels, among them one with William Schley, which has already been described. An anecdote is related of Mr. Johnson which serves to forcibly illustrate his firmness of character, while also throwing a strong light on the customs of his time. On one occasion the House of Representatives was sitting in committee of the whole. Hon. R. M. T. Hunter was Speaker, but the chair was temporarily occupied during his absence by Joseph L. Tillinghast, of Rhode Island.

"Tillinghast," we are told, "was a good sort of a fellow, but nowhere as a chairman. And in about half an hour the House, which had not much to do, and was bent upon 'tarts,' got into such a state of uproar that poor Tillinghast, being at his wits' end, sent for the Speaker. When the Speaker came he was for a moment at loss what to do; but casting his eyes around the turbulent benches he observed a young member named Johnson, a Representative from Maryland, whose determination, tact, and knowledge of the forms of the House had been proven on several occasions. Johnson accepting the instructions, took the chair, rapping smartly with the gavel ... There was silence for a moment, the House being curious to see what the new-comer would do or say. What he said was, 'The House will please be in order.' An invitation which was received with a roar of laughter."

Among his other claims to distinction Mr. Johnson was well known as a quick, sharp hand with the pistol, and not unaccustomed to the duel. For a moment he stood glaring at the disorderly mob, then he rapped loudly with the gavel, and, silence being temporarily restored, he spoke to the following effect:

"Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, in compliance with the request of your regular presiding officer, I have taken the chair to preside over your deliberations. It is my sworn duty to preserve order with a view to the speedy dispatch of the business of the country. I devoutly trust you will appreciate the responsibility devolved upon me as well as yourselves, and that we shall proceed with decorum and regularity. You will find me neither tyrannical nor unreasonable, and if you respond to advances in a spirit of unity and conciliation, we shall get along pleasantly and to the benefit of our constituents. On the other hand, if you are inclined to insist in the course of unbridled license that has prevailed here for some time past, I give you fair intimation I will not endure it for one moment. When I call a member to order, he must take his seat quietly until the committee has formally determined upon the propriety of his conduct, and I will make it a personal thing with any member who is unruly or makes unnecessarily disturbance hereafter. I will show neither favor nor partiality, and if the dearest friend I have on this floor, be he Whig or anti-Whig, violates the rules of this House and refuses to respect the decision of the presiding officer, I will send him a hostile message the moment the committee arises."

This belligerent announcement is said to have had the desired effect, and the House came to order without more ado. Mr. Johnson was an earnest opponent of slavery, and made an eloquent speech in the House proposing its abolition by a system of graduations.

Milton George Urner. Early in the history of this country the Urner family emigrated to America from the canton of Uri, in Switzerland, and made a settlement in Chester County, Pa., where many of the name still reside. Samuel of that name, who was born in Chester County, Dec. 25, 1797, came to Frederick County when a lad, in company with his father, Jonas, who located upon a farm near Sam's Creek, then in Frederick but now in Carroll County. Jonas was, like his ancestors, a farmer, and died on the Sam's Creek farm. Of his ten children two are living,—Mrs. Hannah Cunningham, in Tiffin, Ohio, and Sarah Price, in Pennsylvania. His son Samuel, already spoken of, following in the footsteps of his forefathers, devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, and upon a farm in Liberty District, where he spent the greater portion of his life, died in August, 1872, in his seventy-fifth year. He was twice married,—first, to Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Snader, of Frederick County, and, second, to Susannah, daughter of Amos Norris, likewise of Frederick County. By his first marriage he had two sons, both of whom are living, and by his second five children, of whom but two are living. His second wife, the mother of the subject of this sketch, died in March, 1853. Samuel Urner was a man of sound judgment and of more than ordinary intelligence and mental vigor. He lived a simple, unpretentious life, and enforced a wholesome parental discipline with religious care. Being a very industrious man himself, he enjoined habits of industry upon his children. Susannah Urner was a woman of intelligence and earnest piety. She was widely known for her zealous activity in matters of benevolence and religion. She was a lady of rare domestic virtues, great force of character, and untiring devotion to the interests of her family and friends. One of the children of his second marriage was Milton G., who was born in Liberty District, Frederick Co., July 29, 1839. His early life was passed upon his father's farm, and his early education acquired first in the district school, later at Freeland Seminary, Montgomery Co., Pa., and still later at Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport, Pa. He spent the years 1856 and 1857 at the latter institution, but by reason of ill health was compelled to relinquish his studies there while his course was yet uncompleted. In 1861 he began the study of the law in the office of Hon. Grayson Eichelberger, of Frederick City, and in October, 1863, was admitted to the Frederick County bar,—meanwhile having taught school during the winters of 1859, '60, '61, and 1862. In 1863 he entered upon the career of law practitioner, and in December, 1878, associated with him as law-partner Edward S. Eichelberger, the son of his old preceptor. In 1871, Mr. Urner was elected State's attorney for Frederick County on the Republican ticket by a majority of about five hundred. After a four years' service in that office he returned to the cares of his extensive law practice. In 1876 he was candidate for Presidential elector at large on the Republican ticket, and in 1878 he was elected to Congress from the Sixth District of Maryland as the Republican candidate, over George Peter, Democrat, and Horace Resley, Greenbacker, and still occupies his seat as a member of that body. During the last session he served on the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and on the Committee on Mines and Mining. With public enterprises Mr. Urner has been prominently associated. He originated and projected in 1880 the Frederick Mechanical and Mercantile Library, is now a director of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank, a trustee of the Frederick Female Seminary, a trustee of the Frederick public schools, and for a long time has been actively and prominently engaged in the promotion of the interests of four of Frederick's building associations. He is a leading member of the Frederick Methodist Episcopal Church, one of its stewards, a member of its board of trustees, and superintendent of its Sunday-school. In May, 1880, he was a delegate to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference that assembled at Cincinnati.

Jan. 10, 1866, Mr. Urner married Laura A., daughter of Dr. Richard T. Hammond, of Frederick County, still living at Woodboro', and a descendant of the Hammonds of England who settled first in this country at Annapolis, and later became among the early settlers in Frederick County. Mrs. Urner has won considerable local fame as a poetess, and is a lady of refined accomplishments. Of Mr. and Mrs. Urner's eight children four are living.

Gen. Bradley T. Johnson is the son of Charles Worthington Johnson and Eleanor Murdock Tyler, and grandson of Col. Baker Johnson. He married Janie Claudia Saunders, daughter of Hon. R. M. Saunders, of North Carolina, and Anna Hayes, his wife, daughter of Hon. William Johnson, of South Carolina, justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Hon. R. M. Saunders was member of Congress, judge of North Carolina, and United States minister to Spain in the administration of President Polk. Gen. Johnson graduated at Princeton in the class of '49, finished his law course at Harvard in 1851; the same year was married, and elected State's attorney for Frederick County. In 1857 he was Democratic candidate for comptroller of the treasury, and a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Charleston and Baltimore in 1860. In 1859, '60, and '61 he was chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee.

On the 8th of May, 1861, he left Frederick in command of the first organized company that entered the Confederate service from Maryland,—all Frederick men, sixty in number, who marched around to the Point of Rocks. He was mustered into the Confederate army May 21, 1861, as captain Company A, First Maryland Regiment; major June 16, 1861; lieutenant-colonel July 21, 1861; and colonel of the regiment March 18, 1862. His regiment was thanked in general orders by Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, June 22, 1861, for soldierly conduct, exemplary discipline, and faithful and exact obedience to orders.

He commanded the Second Brigade, Jackson's division, at the second battle of Manassas, Aug. 26, 29, 1862, and the affairs at Chantilly and Germantown, and during the first Maryland campaign. On Sept. 6, 1862, he entered his native town at the head of his brigade, and was assigned to command the city by Gen. Jackson during the stay of the Confederate army there. He detailed Lieut. Lewis Randolph, First Battalion Regulars, to duty as provost-marshal, which duty he performed with exactness and order.

In that campaign Col. Johnson served and commanded without a commission, his regiment, the First Maryland, having been disbanded for the purpose of reorganization Aug. 18, 1862. This is probably the only case on either side during the war in which a commander actually directed troops in the field and in action without a commission as officer. But Gen. Jackson had such an opinion of Col. Johnson that he assigned him to the command of his Second Brigade with the consent and approbation of every officer in it, although at the time he was not legally in the military service.
FREDERICK COUNTY. 411

On Dec. 16, 1862, he was commissioned colonel of cavalry, and June 22, 1862, colonel First Regiment Maryland line. On joining the army, then before Gettysburg, he was assigned on the last day of the battle to command his old brigade, the Second, of Jackson's division. He continued in command during the retreat from Gettysburg, and at the affair at Martinsburg, until December, when he was transferred to the Maryland line, then first concentrated into one command. It consisted of the Second Maryland Infantry, First Maryland Cavalry, Second Maryland Artillery, and subsequently of the First and Fourth Maryland Artillery also. He was stationed with his command at Hanover Junction to protect Gen. Lee's communications and guard his flank in the winter of 1863-64.

On Feb. 4, 1864, while absent on duty, he was unanimously elected colonel and commander of the Maryland line. On June 28, 1864, he was promoted brigadier-general of cavalry, in recognition of his extraordinary service in defeating with a detachment of sixty of his cavalry the junction of Kilpatrick and Dahlgren before Richmond, and thus frustrating their attack and effort to burn that city. Gen. Johnson was in active and arduous service in the field all through the war. In 1861 he was in the battle of Manassas and the affairs at Mason's Hill, Munson's Hill, and Upton's Hill.

In 1862 he commanded his regiment in the engagements at Rappahannock Station, Front Royal, Winchester, Harper's Ferry, Harrisonburg, Cross Keys, and Port Republic, in Jackson's celebrated Valley campaign, and at Cold Harbor, Malvern Hills, and Westover. He commanded the Second Brigade in the second battle of Manassas and the engagements at Groveton, Chantilly, and Warrenton Springs.

In 1863 he commanded the same brigade at Gettysburg, Martinsburg, Hainesville, Chester Gap, Culpeper, Brandy Station, and Centreville.

In 1864 he commanded the Maryland line at Pollan's Farm and Trevillian's Station, and Johnson's cavalry brigade in the affairs at Leetown, Frederick, Beltsville, Winchester, and Middletown. He was in command of his brigade with McCausland at the burning of Chambersburg; at the battles of Winchester, Sept. 19, 1864; at Fisher's Hill, Sept. 21; at Cedar Creek, Oct. 8; and at Woodstock, Oct. 19, 1864.

In Early's raid into Maryland and around Washington in 1864 he commanded the advance in the invasion and the rear-guard in the retreat.

From the 3d of July to the 1st of November, 1864, he fought every day, with a few exceptions of occasional rest, and continued in active service until May 1, 1865, when he surrendered, while in command of the post at Salisbury, N. C.

Maj.-Gen. Ewell, in his official report of the Valley campaign, said,—

"The history of the Maryland regiment, gallantly commanded by Col. Bradley T. Johnson, during the campaign of the Valley would be the history of every action from Front Royal to Cross Keys. On the 6th, near Harrisonburg, the Fifty-eighth Virginia Regiment was engaged with the Pennsylvania 'Bucktails,' the fighting being close and bloody. Col. Johnson came up with his regiment in the hottest period, and by a dashing charge in flank drove the enemy off with heavy loss, and capturing Lieut.-Col. Kane, commanding. In commemoration of this gallant conduct I ordered one of the captured bucktails to be appended as a trophy to their flag.

"The action is worthy of acknowledgment from a higher source, more particularly as they avenged the death of the gallant Ashby, who fell at the same time. Four color-bearers were shot down in succession, but each time the colors were caught before reaching the ground, and were finally borne by Corp. Daniel Shanks to the close of the action. At Cross Keys they were opposed to three of the enemy's regiments in succession."

At the close of the war Gen. Johnson engaged in the practice of the law in Richmond, Va., where he achieved success. He served as member and president of the City Council, and senator from the city of Richmond in the Virginia Legislature. During his term in the Senate he introduced and procured to be passed a law establishing a railroad commission for the State of Virginia, another law organizing a non-partisan police for the city of Richmond, and one providing for a new, complete, and just registration of voters.

He was the author of the report to the Senate on the public debt of the State, and the report of the joint Committee on Federal Relations on the Rives case, and the relations of the States to the Federal Government under the amended Constitution of the United States. This report received the sanction of a unanimous vote of both committees and of both Houses. In 1879 he returned to his native State, and is now settled in the practice of the law in Baltimore.
Joseph M. Palmer was a native of Connecticut, but came to Frederick in 1819, and was kindly received, especially by Hon. John Buchanan and Roger B. Taney. He soon acquired a lucrative practice, and was sent to the Legislature from Frederick County. In course of time he gained a wide-spread reputation as a lawyer of eminent abilities, and at the time of his death, which occurred Feb. 22, 1870, at Frederick, was the oldest lawyer at the bar of Frederick County, and the senior member of the profession in Western Maryland.

Hon. Richard H. Marshall was born in Charles County, Md., in 1800, and after his educational training had been completed was sent by his father to Frederick to study law, under the supervision of Roger B. Taney. He entered Mr. Taney's office in February, 1820, and continued under his instruction for nearly three years. At the fall term of the Frederick County Court in 1822 he was admitted as a member of the bar. He then returned to Charles County and opened an office in Port Tobacco. In the spring of 1823, Mr. Taney determined to remove to Baltimore, but before leaving Frederick he advised Mr. Marshall to locate himself in Frederick, which then offered a fine opening for a young lawyer. Mr. Marshall decided to take Mr. Taney's advice, and accordingly settled in Frederick in the latter part of 1823. He gradually progressed in public confidence until his practice became a lucrative one. In 1842 he was appointed associate judge by the Governor, and had for his colleagues Chief Judge John Buchanan and his brother, Judge Thomas Buchanan, both accomplished gentlemen and able jurists. After their death Judge Marshall was associated with Judge Robert N. Martin and Judge Daniel Weisel, of Washington County. When the election of judges was substituted for their appointment by the Governor, Judge Marshall retired to private life, and resumed the practice of the law. When the war broke out he found himself unable to accede to the principles asserted by the Republican party, or to continue the practice of his profession in a manner satisfactory to himself; he therefore decided to retire from the bar. Since then he has not resumed his practice, but has led the life of a private gentleman, ever taking, however, a keen interest in public affairs, and especially in the interest of the community among whom he resides. Judge Marshall is eighty-one years of age, and in his peaceful retirement enjoys the confidence and respect of all classes of his fellow-citizens.

Charles H. Pitts was born in Frederick Co., Md., and educated as a lawyer. He passed the bar in Frederick City, and at the suggestion of a prominent lawyer removed to Baltimore, where he soon acquired a large practice.

In the exciting times which prevailed prior to the breaking out of the late civil war the people insisted upon his becoming their representative, and he, along with a number of prominent citizens, was sent to the Legislature which assembled in Frederick City in 1861. As a consequence he was arrested by the military authorities and cast into prison at Fort Warren. Mr. Pitts died Aug. 14, 1864, after an exceptionally brilliant legal career. At a meeting of the bar held in his honor, S. Teackle Wallis paid the following beautiful tribute to his memory:

"I have no intention, even if it were appropriate, and I could command myself, to analyze the admirable gifts which gave to our lamented brother his rare success. All around me knew him well and witnessed the triumphs of forensic eloquence and talent with which his cases were crowded. I need not say then in this presence that they were triumphs fairly won,—the achievements of professional ability and knowledge, directed by courage, sagacity, and skill. Prominent among his endeavors was a downright sturdy common sense which could not easily be cheated or misled, and which found for him the straightest path to the solution of all questions, and taught him the directest method of leading to conviction the minds of other men. Thus he was always practical and foreboding,—never beguiled for a moment from the duty and the end before him, even by the seductions of his playful fancy and abounding wit and humor. In the moral qualities, which are so large an element in all enlarged professional distinction, he had no superior, for he was brave and true, with a high manly sense of right, and that deep scorn which true men feel for wrong. The traits of his professional intercourse were so attractive to us all that they will linger with us as the memory of a fascination, and those who shared his confidence and knew him in his private and domestic hours will feel that a light has been extinguished with his life, which was among the brightest and gladdest that ever cheered them."

James McSherry, the author of the well-known "History of Maryland," was born in the village of Liberty Town, Frederick Co., on the 29th July, 1819, and died in Frederick City, July 13, 1869. His father, James McSherry, was native of Adams County, Pa., and was born on the 28th July, 1776. His mother's maiden name was Ann Ridgely Sappington, who was the daughter of Dr. Francis Brown Sappington, a very prominent physician of Frederick County.

The paternal ancestors of James McSherry were from Ireland, from whence Patrick McSherry, born 1725, emigrated to this country with his wife, who was Catharine Gartland, of Armagh. They had twelve children, of whom James McSherry, the father of the subject of this sketch, was the eleventh. Patrick McSherry died in 1795. His son James was a very prominent man in Pennsylvania. In 1807 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates from Adams County, and was re-elected for five years, until 1813, in which year he was elected to the Senate by the people of York and Adams Counties, and served until 1817. While a senator, and exempted from military service, when Baltimore was menaced by a foreign foe, he enlisted as a private in Capt. McClevis' company of horse at Gettysburg, and remained in service until the company was disbanded. In 1821 he was elected to Congress, and in 1824 was again elected to the Legislature, and served for six successive years, and again during the sessions of 1834, 1835, and 1836. In 1837 he was elected to the Constitutional Convention. He died February, 1849.

James McSherry, the subject of this sketch, married, Sept. 30, 1841, Eliza Spurrier. By this marriage there were five children. The eldest, James McSherry, is a leading attorney of Frederick City, and receiver of Mount St. Mary's College; the second, Dr. William S. McSherry, died in 1876; the third, Dr. Eliza McSherry, is a dentist, and the two daughters are married. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's College, where he was graduated in June, 1838. He then read law with Gen. James M. Coale in Frederick, and was admitted to the bar in 1840, and practiced in Gettysburg with the late Hon. Thaddens Stevens, but at the close of 1841 returned to Frederick, and continued there until his death.

His tastes were much inclined to literary pursuits, and he became a contributor to the United States Catholic Magazine. In 1846 he published "Père Jean, or the Jesuit Missionary," which in 1860 was republished under the name of "Father Laval." He was also a contributor to the Metropolitan Magazine, published in Baltimore.

But he is better known by his "History of Maryland," published in 1848, in which the principal events of Maryland history are compressed into a popular form, such as would interest and instruct the general reader. The settlement of the colony, its rise and progress, troubles and revolutions, and its periods of peace and prosperity are all told in simple narrative, at once attractive and instructive. Only those battles of the Revolution in which the sons of Maryland were engaged are dwelt upon by the historian. He avoided the strife of politics; and the contentions of parties in that period of the country's history embracing the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, when the foundations of political parties were laid, have no place in this history. Yet, being the second history of Maryland, and treating its subjects with fullness and fairness, it will always retain a prominent place in the libraries of her sons.

In 1851 he published "Willtoft, or the Days of James the First," which was republished in 1858 in Frankfort-on-the-Main. In 1850–51 he lectured frequently in New York and Philadelphia for the benefit of Catholic churches, and in 1858 he delivered the address at the semi-centennial celebration of Mount St. Mary's College. There is a strong Catholic sentiment pervading all his writings, as both himself and ancestors were devotedly attached to that church. He was a strictly religious man, an excellent citizen, discharging every duty with fidelity and zeal.

His son, James McSherry, is the receiver of Mount St. Mary's College, and a lawyer of high standing at the Frederick bar. Like his father, his tastes are literary, and he has been a frequent contributor to the daily and monthly press of the State.

For a number of years Hon. John Ritchie has been one of the leading lawyers of Western Maryland. He was born in Frederick in 1832. His great-grandfather was a Scotch immigrant (probably from the Cumberland Valley), who settled in Frederick County at an early period. His great-uncle was clerk of the Frederick County Court for thirty years, and other members of the family held the responsible positions of sheriff, register, etc. His father was Dr. John Ritchie, a well-known and talented physician of Frederick. Dr. Ritchie married twice, the children by the first marriage being John and Albert.
Ritchie, and a son, William, and a daughter by the second. John Ritchie, after receiving an academic education, completed his law education at Harvard University. He then returned to Frederick and began the practice of law with William P. Maulsby, then residing in Frederick, and who afterwards was a member of the Court of Appeals. He soon gained a lucrative practice, and was acknowledged as one of the best speakers in the forum as well as on the stump. His first appearance on the field of public activity was as captain of a militia company in Frederick, and which was the first militia organization that offered its services to President Buchanan for the suppression of the John Brown raid at Harper's Ferry. The services of the company, "The Junior Invincibles," were accepted by the President, and the company marched to Harper's Ferry. In 1860, Mr. Ritchie was an elector on the Breckenridge Presidential ticket. Some years afterwards he was elected State's attorney for Frederick County, and at the end of his four years' term was re-elected. In 1870 he was elected to Congress from the Sixth District by a majority of over eighteen hundred. Mr. Ritchie was the Democratic candidate, and the district was generally expected to give a Republican majority. He was re-nominated in 1872, but was defeated. Mr. Ritchie has held no political position since then, but has been a prominent figure in Democratic State politics. In the Democratic State Convention of July, 1875, he was the leader of the section of the party which favored the nomination of Hon. William T. Hamilton for Governor, and in 1879 nominated Mr. Hamilton for the same position in an eloquent speech. Mr. Hamilton was elected Governor, and on the 16th of March, 1881, he appointed Mr. Ritchie chief judge of the Sixth Judicial District of Maryland, comprising the counties of Frederick and Montgomery. Judge Ritchie is by virtue of his office a member of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Ritchie has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for the United States Senate and president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. He is a lawyer of great ability and an eloquent orator. His brother, Albert Ritchie, is a well-known lawyer of Baltimore. Judge Ritchie's wife is a daughter of ex-Judge W. P. Maulsby.

Enoch Louis Lowe was born Aug. 10, 1829, in Frederick County, and entered St. John's College in 1829. He went to Europe and entered Clongøre's College, Ireland, and afterwards Stonyhurst, England, where he received medals for proficiency. He left Stonyhurst in 1839, and after a continental tour returned to Maryland. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar of Frederick County in 1842. In 1845 he was elected a member of the Maryland House of Delegates, and in May, 1850, was nominated for Governor before he was thirty years of age. He was elected Oct. 2, 1850, and served as Governor until 1854. He was a member of the Democratic National Convention in 1856, and was appointed minister to China in 1857, but declined the mission. He voted for Breckenridge and Lane in 1860, and in 1861, at the breaking out of the war, went South, and remained there until 1865, when he returned to Maryland. He removed to Brooklyn in 1866 and resumed the practice of the law. Governor Lowe is a finished orator and a lawyer of uncommon talents. He married Esther Winder Polk, daughter of Col. James Polk, of Somerset, a cousin of ex-President Polk.

Robert J. Brent, a prominent member of the Baltimore bar, was born in Louisiana in 1811, his father, a Marylander, having adopted that State as his home. The elder Brent was a member of Congress from Louisiana at the time of his son's birth, and subsequently removed to Washington, where he engaged in the practice of the law, having for his associates such men as Clay, Webster, and Calhoun. His son Robert studied law in his office, as also in the office of the late Gen. Walter Jones, of that city. In 1834, Mr. Brent was admitted to the bar, and practiced for a short space in the courts of the District, but subsequently moved to Frederick, and later to Hagerstown, where he married Miss Lawrence, a member of the well-known Hager family. Mr. Brent afterwards removed to Baltimore City, where he at once established himself as a lawyer of great attainments and wonderful energy. Mr. Brent interested himself to some extent in politics, and though a Whig at the beginning of his career, subsequently espoused the principles of the Democracy. He was elected a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1851, and while serving as a member was appointed by Governor E. Louis Lowe State's attorney for Baltimore City, to succeed George R. Richardson. Mr. Brent took no active part in politics afterwards save to represent his congressional district in the famous Charleston Convention of 1860, where he figured as a sturdy supporter of Stephen A. Douglas. He devoted himself to his profession with an ardor which has characterized few lawyers, and his practice rapidly extended to all the courts of the State, and at his death, which occurred Feb. 4, 1872, he was regarded as one of the leaders of the Maryland bar. At a meeting of the Baltimore bar, held shortly after his death, Hon. Reverdy Johnson offered a series of resolutions, from which the following is extracted:

"In the decease of Mr. Brent the bar has lost a sound and thoroughly educated lawyer, whose intimate acquaintance with his profession was only equaled by the extraordinary energy and activity of his practices, and the intelligence, earnestness, and force with which he pursued it." Mr. Brent was eminently social in disposition, and it was a marvel to his friends how he accomplished so much work and at the same time devoted so many hours to their pleasure. He was passionately fond of yachting, and was as well known to the pilots and mariners of the Chesapeake Bay as to his associates at the bar.

John Hammond McElfresh, son of Henry McElfresh and Ariana Hammond, was born May 27, 1796, near New Market, Frederick Co. The first of his paternal ancestors in America was David McElfresh, a house-carpenter, who came over from Scotland early in the eighteenth century and settled on the river Severn, Anne Arundel County, Md. His son, John H. (likewise a carpenter), removed early in life to Frederick County, near New Market, and turning his attention to farming became wealthy. He married Rachel Hammond. The fourth of their eight children was Henry, father to John Hammond McElfresh. Henry McElfresh was conspicuous for his mental accomplishments, and especially for his acquaintance with Biblical history, concerning which it was of common remark that few ministers of his day were more conversant with the Bible than he. His son, John Hammond, was the fourth of thirteen children, and in his youth even possessed a mind that made him a subject of more than ordinary notice. Under such village pedagogues as Griffith, Whittaker, and Comerford, he bravely fought his way through trigonometry and surveying at the age of thirteen, and at fourteen conquered Greek and Latin. He finished his school education in the classical department of Frederick College, under John V. Weylie, and in 1813 began the study of medicine with Dr. L. T. Hammond, of Anne Arundel County. In the winter of 1816–17 he attended a course of lectures at the University of Maryland, and Feb. 28, 1817, graduated from that institution as a doctor of medicine. He practiced in Frederick until 1822, when he elected to abandon medicine for the profession of the law, having previously (1829) been chosen register of the town and a trustee of Frederick Academy.

After studying law three years with John Nelson, of Frederick, he was admitted to the bar in 1825. He took immediate rank as an eloquent pleader, and as an ardent advocate of the cause of the poor exhibited much sympathetic energy. In 1830 he was elected to the House of Delegates, and exerted himself with persistent effort during his term on behalf of the passage of a law providing for the abolishing of imprisonment for debt. The final success of the measure was largely due to his labors in the cause. In 1831, Governor Martin appointed him on his staff with the rank of colonel. In November, 1836, he was elected a member of the State Reform Convention, while as an incident in his strictly home career it may be mentioned that he was one of the members of Frederick’s first fire company. As an orator Col. McElfresh was an acknowledged model, and as a scholar won high approval. His law practice was extensive and greatly successful, and called him into the courts not only of Frederick, but of Washington and Montgomery Counties, and the Court of Appeals of the State. His memory was so remarkably retentive that upon one occasion he repeated Milton’s Paradise Lost entire, an affidavit from one of his auditors to that effect being now in the possession of one of his descendants. He was a lover of the poets, and frequently entertained his friends with glowing recitations from his favorite authors.

March 27, 1820, he married Teresa, daughter of Francis Mantz and Anna Mary Burkhardt. Francis Mantz was one of Frederick County’s wealthiest citizens, and stood high in public esteem. The bulk of his great fortune descended eventually to his daughter Teresa. While yet in the full flush of manhood and the height of a useful career, Col. McElfresh died, Aug. 4, 1841, aged forty-five. One of his sons (Henry) died at Annapolis while serving as a member of the Legislature. One of his daughters married Hon. Jacob M. Kunkel. The only surviving daughter of Col. McElfresh is Ariana, wife of Col. Charles E. Trail, of Frederick.

Samuel Tyler. This distinguished author and philosopher was born in Prince George’s County, Oct. 22, 1809. He was admitted to the Maryland bar in 1831, and established himself at Frederick. In 1836 he became a contributor to the Princeton Review, in which he published some of his most valuable productions. In 1844 he published a “Discourse on the Baconian Philosophy,” which gained him the friendship of Sir William Hamilton, the eminent Scottish philosopher. His other works are “Burns as a Poet and as a Man,” “The Progress of Philosophy in the Past and in the Future,” and the “Life of Judge Taney”—the latter a work of standard authority and high literary and legal excellence. He is also the author of a report on the subject of law reform in the State of Maryland.

George W. Sands. This gentleman has published a volume of poems called “Mazelli and other Poems,” which were dedicated to Samuel Tyler. Born in Frederick, he removed to Howard County, where he became a leading lawyer. He was elected State's attorney of that county, and subsequently was appointed collector of internal revenue.

Charles C. Smetzer, son of Col. Henry R. Smetzer, late of Middletown District, and grandson of Sgt. Lawrence Everhart of Revolutionary fame, read law with ex-Governor Lowe. He subsequently removed to Iowa, and in 1858 was elected judge of the court in Clay County.

J. H. C. Jones. This eminent lawyer was born in Frederick City, and was the son of Rev. Joseph H. Jones, the eloquent Baptist preacher, and a brother of Hon. Spencer C. Jones, clerk of the Maryland Court of Appeals. He was in 1870 appointed circuit judge of the district composed of King and Queen and Middlesex Counties, Va.

The following is a list of members of the Frederick bar, with the dates of their admission or of licenses granted them to practice:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1749</td>
<td>William Cumming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1752</td>
<td>Daniel Dunlap, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1752</td>
<td>Henry Darnall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1760</td>
<td>Edward Dorsey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1755</td>
<td>Stephen Borden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1755</td>
<td>Richard Chase</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1760</td>
<td>Lloyd Buchanan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1760</td>
<td>Eastburn Bullitt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1760</td>
<td>Thomas Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1765</td>
<td>James Smith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1765</td>
<td>James Tilghman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1768</td>
<td>Townly Rigby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1768</td>
<td>Thomas Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1768</td>
<td>Robert Smith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1773</td>
<td>David Ross</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1773</td>
<td>John McWardell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1776</td>
<td>Henry Ritgely</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1776</td>
<td>Edward Nickolls</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1776</td>
<td>Joshua Dorsey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1779</td>
<td>John Ferguson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1779</td>
<td>Richard Potts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1779</td>
<td>John Gardner Hamilton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1780</td>
<td>Basil Howard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1781</td>
<td>Abraham Shriver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1781</td>
<td>George Price</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1781</td>
<td>Arthur Shafer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1790</td>
<td>John Thomson Mason</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1792</td>
<td>William Chaggett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1792</td>
<td>James Cookery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1795</td>
<td>James Johnston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1797</td>
<td>Richard Brooke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1798</td>
<td>John Hanson Thomas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1798</td>
<td>William Cranke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1798</td>
<td>Francis Scott Key</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1799</td>
<td>John Buchanan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1801</td>
<td>Roger Brooke Taney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1802</td>
<td>Upton Lawrence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1805</td>
<td>William Ross</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1805</td>
<td>R. S. Pigeon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1806</td>
<td>Will T. T. Mason</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1806</td>
<td>Upton Scott Erid</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1810</td>
<td>Ohio Lawrence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1812</td>
<td>John S. Shriver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1813</td>
<td>John Nelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1815</td>
<td>James Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1815</td>
<td>Dennis Hagan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1815</td>
<td>James Somervile</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1818</td>
<td>John Kilgore</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1818</td>
<td>John Andrews</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1818</td>
<td>Thomas C. Worthington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1818</td>
<td>Joseph M. Palmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1818</td>
<td>Benjamin Jones</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Perry A. Rie—       1818  Milton G. Urner—       1863
John F. Tebohn—    1849  Francis Breagle—  1865
Luther M. Reynolds— 1850  Charles V. S. Lowy—  1866
Ross Johnson—      1859  Adolphus Fackera, Jr.—  1866
John A. Dabney—    1862  William C. Chagnon—  1866
Hunter Brooke—     1861  Charles Webster—  1867
Frederick J. Nelson— 1851  John R. H. Wood—  1867
John J. Harding—   1851  John L. Carlisle—  1867
John E. Smith—     1852  B. F. M. Hurry—  1867
William L. Schley— 1857  I. F. McCrery—  1867
Ephraim Cummack—  1852  George A. Pearre—  1868
Z. S. Claggert—    1832  Cyrus W. Poole—  1868
George K. Shellum— 1835  John C. Motter—  1868
J. W. Price—       1853  Isaac E. Pearson, Jr.—  1868
George A. Hanson—  1853  Valerius Chiswell—  1869
John F. Banghman—  1853  Robert Stokes—  1870
John Johnson—      1853  John R. Tyler—  1870
Charles Lee Ammon— 1854  H. G. Sleeper—  1870
William P. Manbsby— 1864  Charles H. Mauisby—  1870
John Ritchie—      1864  Carlton Sfater—  1870
Charles H. Huffman— 1874  Joseph F. Ryan—  1871
George W. Sands—   1844  William H. Hinks—  1872
R. J. Semans—      1855  William B. Lerrie—  1872
W. H. Willey—      1855  W. Otis Tyler—  1872
A. K. Syester—     1856  Noah Bowles—  1873
Thomas M. Monroe—  1856  Charles H. Wood—  1874
John H. Falkner—   1856  William Ritchie—  1874
A. K. Vaninial—    1857  William Wilcoxen—  1876
George Schley—     1858  Robert H. MacGill—  1877
Charles W. Ross—   1858  Benjamin H. Richmond—  1877
Andrew H. Dill—    1858  Charles M. Gilpin—  1878
Edward O’Miryen—  1859  Frank Pamela—  1878
John P. Poe—       1860  Edward S. Eichelberger—  1878
Spencer C. Jones—  1860  Clayton O. Keedy—  1878
John W. Hedges—   1860  Silas M. Morgan—  1879
Calvin C. Raymond— 1861  Charles Light Wilson—  1879
William T. Hamilton—  1861  Frank C. Norwood—  1880
James H. Grove—    1862  Zachary T. Brown—  1879
James W. Peirce—   1862  Charles W. Tiller—  1879
James Murdock—     1863  Charles F. Markell—  1881

Present members of the bar not in the foregoing list:

CHAPTER XXI
EARLY COURT PROCEEDINGS.

First Court—Refereements for Juries—Judges and Constables —Notable Trials and Executions—Court-houses and Jails—Early Marriages and Wills.

The laws in force in this State consist of the emanations from three distinct systems: the usages and laws of England,—the mother-country, the usages and laws of the provincial or ante-Revolutionary government of Maryland, and the laws of the present State government. And these, too, are subject to certain modifications and restrictions, flowing from the 1 Some of the above were admitted in other counties and obtained leave to practice in the Frederick courts, while others were admitted in Frederick but resided elsewhere.

The first court in Frederick County was the "County Seat," consisting of justices of the peace appointed and commissioned by the Governor and his Council. These justices, in addition to their judicial functions proper, performed all the duties now imposed upon the present county commissioners. They were allowed eighty pounds of tobacco per day during their attendance at court. The act creating the county provided that the County Court should begin and be held on the third Tuesday of the months of March, June, August, and November yearly, and assizes therein to begin and be held upon the Mondays following after the assizes in Prince George's County.

The following is a copy of the order of the Lord Proprietary creating the first court in the county:

"Anno Dom 1748.

This day to wit the Thirteenth day of December, Anno Dom 1748, Nathaniel Wickham, Junior, produced the following Commission of the peace and Delinquent Potestate which was publicly read in these words: To wit, Maryland c--Charles Absolute Lord and Proprietary of Maryland and Avon, Lord Baron of Baltimore &c., To Benjamin Tasker, George Plater, Edmund Jennings, Charles Hammond, Samuel Chanberlin, Philip Thomas, Daniel Dulany, Edward Lloyd, Benjamin Young, Benjamin Tasker Junior, Richard Lee, and Benjamin Calvert, Esquires, Nathaniel Wickham, Junior, Thomas Owen, Thomas Cresap, Thomas Betsy, Joseph Chaplain, Henry Munday, Thomas Prather, George Gordon, Joseph Ogle, William Griffith, John Rawlings, of Frederick County Gentlemen, Greeting, know ye that we have assigned you and every one of you jointly and severally our justices to keep our peace within our County of Frederick and to do equal law and right to all the king's subjects rich and poor according to the Laws, customs and Directions of the Acts of Assembly of this Province so far as they Provide and where they are silent according to the Laws Statutes and reasonable Customs of England as used and practiced within this Province for the conservation of the Peace and quiet Rule and Government of the King's Subjects within our said County and to Chastise and punish all or any Person or persons offending against the said Acts, Laws, Statutes and Customs or any of them according to the Directions thereof and to call before you or any of you all those who in our County aforesaid shall threaten to do any bodily Harm to any of the king's subjects, or to Burn their Houses or otherwise break our peace and misbehave themselves to find sufficient Security of the Peace and good Behavior to us and the said Subjects and if they shall refuse to find such security that then you cause them to be committed into safe Custody until they shall be delivered by due course of Law from thence: Also we have assigned you and every three or more of you of whom we will you the said Benjamin Tasker, George Plater, Edmund Jennings, Charles Hammond, Samuel Chanberlin, Philip Thomas, Daniel Dulany, Edward Lloyd, Benjamin Young, Benjamin Tasker Junior, Richard Lee, and Benedict Calvert Esquires, Nathaniel Wickham Junior, Thomas Owen, Thomas Cresap, Thomas Betsy, Joseph Chaplain, Henry Munday, or one of you always to be one our Justices to Enquire by the you send the Prisoners with their Indictments and the whole Matters depending before you to our own Justices of Assize, nisi prius and Gaol Delivery at the next Court of Oyer & Terminer to be held for our said County be it wheresoever and wheresoever to be held there to be Tried. And we Command you and every one of you Diligently to Intend the Keeping of the Penal Acts of Assembly Laws Customs and Statutes aforesaid and all and every of you the Premises and that at your County Courts you make Inquisition and hear and determine as aforesaid doing therein what to Justice appertains according to the Laws Customs and Directions of the Acts of the Assembly aforesaid so far as they provide and where they are Silent according to the Laws Statutes and reasonable Customs of England as used and practiced within this Province. And further we do constitute Ordain and appoint you the said Benjamin Tasker, George Plater, Edmund Jennings, Charles Hammond, Samuel Chamberlain, Philip Thomas, Daniel Dulany, Edward Lloyd, Benjamin Young, Benjamin Tasker Junior, Richard Lee and Benedict Calvert, Esquires, Nathaniel Wickham Junior, Thomas Owens, Thomas Cresap, Thomas Beatty, Joseph Chaplin, Henry Munday, Thomas Pratther, George Gordon, Joseph Ogle, William Griffiths, John Rawlings or any three or more of you as aforesaid to issue out Writs Precepts Process and Attachments and hold plea of all Actions Popular and of all Actions personal of what sort soever wherein the demand doth not exceed the sum of one hundred Pounds Sterling or Thirty thousand pounds of tobacco and all Actions Personal now depending before you and after Judgment Execution to Award in all such Cases and Actions aforesaid according to the Laws, Customs and Directions of the Acts of Assembly aforesaid so far forth as they provide and where they are Silent according to the Laws Statutes and reasonable Customs of England as used and practiced within this Province in which said Actions so to be tried we do constitute ordain and appoint the said Benjamin Tasker, George Plater, Edmund Jennings, Charles Hammond, Samuel Chamberlain, Philip Thomas, Daniel Dulany, Edward Lloyd, Benjamin Young, Benjamin Tasker Junior, Richard Lee, and Benedict Calvert, Esquires, Nathaniel Wickham Junior, Thomas Owens, Thomas Cresap, Thomas Beatty, Joseph Chaplin, Henry Munday, Thomas Pratther, George Gordon, Joseph Ogle, William Griffith, John Rawlings and none others to be Judges. Also by these presents we do command the Sheriff of our said County of Frederick to give his Attendance and cause to come before you or any three of you as aforesaid such and so many Good and Lawful men of this Balliwick out of each and every hundred thereby whom the Truth of the Matter in the Premises may be the better Known and Enquired of. Lastly you shall cause to be brought before you at your said Court all Writs Precepts Process and Indictments to your Courts and Jurisdiction belonging that the same may be Inspected and by due Course of Law Determined.

"Witness our trusty and well Beloved Samuel Ogle, Esquire, Lieutenant General and Chief Governor of our said Province of Maryland this Twelfth day of December in the Thirty fourth year of our Dominion, &c. Anno Dom. 1748."

Whereupon Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., Thomas Beatty, Henry Munday, Thomas Pratther, and William Griffiths, gentlemen, qualified themselves as justices for the county by taking the several oaths appointed by the act of Assembly to be taken to the government, together with the oath of judge, signing the oath of abjuration, and repeating and signing the test. The court as thus formed was then called, with the above justices present and sitting. John Darnall, clerk of the county; John Thomas, sheriff; and James Dickson, under-sheriff, exhibited their commissions, and, having qualified, took their respective official seats. The court then adjourned to March 21, 1749.

In accordance with the act of Assembly entitled "An act for amending the staple of tobacco, for preventing frauds in His Majesty's customs," a court was held March 10, 1749. Justices present Daniel Dulany, chief justice, Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., Henry Munday, Thomas Owen, and George Gordon. John Rawlings and George Gordon, both justices, were then appointed to inspect the weights and scales belonging to the warehouse at Rock Creek. The first regular session of the County Court convened March 21, 1749, with Daniel Dulany, chief justice, and the following justices of the peace: Henry Munday, John Rawlings, Thomas Beatty, Joseph Chaplin, Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., William Griffith, Thomas Pratther, Thomas Cresap, and George Gordon. The following grand jury appeared and were charged as to their presentments:

The following bills of indictments were returned:
Staffel Barnard, assault and battery on the wife of George William Lawrence; James Kendal, for remarking two sows and putting a wrong mark on "ten shotes," the property of Van Swearingen; Peter Williams, perjury; John House, Sr., assault and battery on Mary Devilbess; Thomas Appleton, for altering the mark of two hogs, the property of William Garth; John Nichols and Stephen Richards, felony. The court appointed Alexander Jones as "court-cryer." George Thompson, for swearin in court, was committed to the sheriff's custody until he paid his fine. A summons was issued for Peter Hoggins to testify before the grand jury. George Grouse appearing to be a very "antient and infrim person" was set lary free for the future; also Nathan Gregg, Robert Owen, and Baltazer Miller. Basil Beall was sworn in as bailiff to the grand jury. The first petition for a road was presented by Joseph Wood and others, who prayed that a road be "laid out" from Frederick Town by Abraham Miller's mill, and from thence by Ambrose's mill to ye temporary line, and Joseph Ogle and Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., were appointed to lay out said road. The first petition filed was by Stephen Julian and Darby Ryan, who had been bound to Widow Parr, administratrix of John Parr, deceased, and averred that she being dead, and the effects of said Parr being likely to be made way with, petitioned that some method be taken for their safety, and an attachment was issued for Arthur Parr, returnable the third Tuesday in June following.

The petition of Richard Snowden and other inhabitants on Patuxent River was received, asking for the building of two bridges, one at Richard Greene's ford, and the other at Peter Murphy's ford, and forty-five pounds was appropriated for the building of the same, one-half to be levied the ensuing year, and the other half the year after. Cleburn Simms was granted a license for "ordinary keeping,"—i.e., for keeping a tavern or inn.

The grand jury on being discharged were allowed four hundred pounds of tobacco for their services in the next county levy. Van Swearingen was required to appear at the next court as a witness against Peter Williams in the full and just sum of ten pounds. Simon Harden, an orphan child aged eight or nine years, was bound to Charles Higginbotham until his majority. A contract was entered into with William Luckett to keep a ferry over the mouth of Monocacy, for which he was to be allowed in the next levy twenty-two pounds. Said Luckett obligated himself, when his boat or scow could not pass by reason of low water, to provide a cart to transport tobacco and other things, and it was ordered that he should not take more than four pence for carrying a man and horse over, and three shillings for wagons belonging to non-residents. Thomas Reynolds contracted with the court to keep ferry over the Monocacy opposite the plantation where John Hussey formerly dwelt, and Edward Wyatt was appointed to keep one at the mouth of Conococheague. The court purchased of Daniel Dulany six volumes of the statutes and "Nelson's Justice," in two volumes, for £40 15s., to be paid out of next county levy. George Gordon was ordered to purchase blocks and ropes for the prizes and cranes in the Rock Creek tobacco warehouse. William Griffith was approved and recommended to the Governor as a proper person to be appointed "Ranger." Reverdy Ghislain took the oath as "under" clerk of court. George Gordon was ordered to buy a standard weight for the county.

The court settled the rates of liquors and other "hot-water" accommodations in the county as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>£  s  d</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hot Dyett for a Gentleman with a pint of small beer, in the country</td>
<td>0  1  0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hot Dyett for a Gentleman with a pint of small beer, in towns</td>
<td>0  1  2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rum Pr Sealed Quart and per rota</td>
<td>0  4  0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The justices established the "hundreds" and appointed the following constables:

- Potomac Hundred, lower part: Charles Jones
- Upper Potomac Hundred: James Olfutt, Jr.
- Newfoundland Hundred: William Waters
- Middle part Rock Creek Hundred: John Bean
- Sugarland Hundred: Thomas Fleetch
- Sugar loaf: John Norris
- Linganore: Thomas Manyard
- Manor: John Martin
- Pipe Creek: John Johnson
- Kittletown: John Johnson
- Antietam: Moses Chapline
- Marsh: Nathan Tomblinson
- Salisbury: Robert Downey
- Conococheague: William Ervin
- Linton: Edmund Martin
- Monocacy: Joseph Brooks, Jr.
- "  " upper part: Joseph Brooks, Jr.
- "  " lower part: Joseph Wilson

The first condemnation suit, on attachment, was that of Robert Lemar against Jacob Eades, and the latter's cow and calf, valued at five pounds, and six hundred pounds of inspected tobacco were condemned for plaintiff's benefit. The first case in the court was that of Capt. Robert De Butts versus John Dauphilmire, in which the writ is returned, "Cepi, then agreed." The first trespass suit was that of Henry Lancaster versus John Harper. In the suit of Charles Carroll versus Robert De Butts, administrator of Isaac Bloomfield, was the first judgment rendered (and by confession), for sixty-six pounds debt and two hundred and seventy-one pounds tobacco, charges and costs.

Indictments were found against Van Swearingen, Samuel Swearingen, and Robert Wells, Jr., for refusing to assist a constable (Nathaniel Tomlinson) to carry before a magistrate the body of George Parker, taken with a warrant for debt. The style of all criminal cases were Lord Proprietary versus (prisoner's name).

The following were the constables appointed by the County Court for the years 1750 and 1751:
For the years 1750 and 1751, Joseph Wood, of Israel Creek, and John West were "press-masters." The courts were held in the "Dutch meeting-house" for the first two years, as the court records show that allowances were ordered to be made in the levies for holding it in that building.

By the act of 1748 creating Frederick County, the commissioners therein appointed were authorized to purchase three acres of land in or adjoining Frederick Town, whereon to build a court-house and prison for Frederick County. The land to be surveyed and "laid out in an exact square, and staked, and well bounded: the court-house to be built in the centre of the square, and the county prison on the south side of the same square, within ten feet of the southernmost outline of the three acres aforesaid." In accordance with those provisions the lot was purchased, and on March 21, 1749, the court ordered that the clerk make out advertisements notifying that the magistrates of the county, or the major part thereof, would meet on the 8th of May following to contract with any person or persons to build a court-house, which advertisements the sheriff was ordered to set up in the most convenient places of the county. On Nov. 21, 1749, Joseph Hardman, bricklayer, and John Shellman, carpenter, in court engaged themselves to build the "hull" of a court-house in Frederick Town, and offered Thomas Beatty, Abraham Miller, and Patrick Matthews as their securities, whom the court approved of; and the same court appointed Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., William Griffith, and Henry Munday, or any two of them, to agree with the said Joseph Hardman and John Shellman for the same, and the said gentlemen were desired to lay before the next County Court the bond and articles of agreement for building the "hull" of the court-house aforesaid.

On Nov. 24, 1750, the justices of the county having viewed the court-house lately built in Frederick Town, approved the same, and Joseph Hardman obligated himself "to point the gavel end" and fill up the scaffold-holes. This edifice remained until the building of the second one in 1785.

At March term, 1749, Conrad Cross was fined forty shillings on his confession for selling liquors without a license; the first conviction for this offense. At June term following, Staifel Bernard was fined one shilling for breach of the peace. Mary Ryan, for bastardy, was taken to the whipping-post and there received on her bare body five lashes, well laid on by the sheriff, and her time of servitude with her master, Benjamin Harris, was extended nine months, as payment of costs.

At November court, 1749, "Negro Peter," the slave of James Wardrop, for stealing a hat and axe from Richard Smith, was sentenced to receive thirty lashes at the whipping-post.

The first petit jury impanled was in the case of Lord Proprietary vs. William Roberts, on trial for felony, and were as follows: Robert De Butts, Joseph Doddridge, Moses Chapline, Herbert Wallace, Peter Stull, John Johnson, of Kitttocton, Shadrach Hyatt, Patrick Matthews, Elias Delashmutt, John Purdom, James Spurgeon, and John Jones, who acquitted the prisoner. "Negro George," the slave of Maj. Joseph Ogle and Morris Manyan, for stealing a bushel and a half of rye of the value of fifty pounds of tobacco, the property of said Ogle, received seventy-five lashes. Jacob Beney, for keeping a tipppling-house, was fined forty shillings, as were also eight others at the same term.

At June term, 1750, John Claggett and George Gordon were ordered to have erected a pair of stocks at the mouth of Rock Creek.

Mary Macknane, for purloining a snuff-box of the value of ten pounds, the property of Nicholas Brundrick, was ordered to be set up in the pillory during the space of five minutes, and that afterwards she be set to the whipping-post and there receive on her bare body five lashes, restore to the said Brundrick the snuff-box, and pay him twenty-eight pounds, the fourfold value thereof. Andrew Ringle, for the theft of an axe of Henry Six, was fined and whipped with twenty lashes. At this court it was ordered that a pillory be erected on the court-house lot in Frederick Town, and Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., and Thomas Beatty were appointed to attend to the building of the same.

The August court, 1758, established the rates of liquor and other ordinary accommodations, to wit:

- Hot dyett for a Gent with a pint of beer or cider... £ 4 6
- Same for a Gent's servant with do... £ 0 9
- A cold dyett with do... £ 0 6
- Corn and Oats Pr bushel & so pro rata... £ 0 4
- Stabling & Good Podder or hay for a horse Pr night... £ 0 3
- Do for 24 hours... £ 0 1
- Pasturance for horse 24 hours... £ 0 0
- Lodging in a bed Pr night... £ 0 0
- Galat small beer Pr gallon sealed & so pro rata... £ 0 2
- Peach Brandy Pr gallon sealed & so pro rata... £ 0 1
- Cider Pr Gall sealed & so pro rata... £ 0 1
- Maryland spirits distilled from grain Pr gallon sealed de & so pro rata... £ 0 8
- Rum Pr sealed Quart & so pro rata... £ 0 4
- Bowl of punch, sealed Quart of rum & loaf sugar & so pro rata... £ 0 5
- Ditto with brown sugar... £ 0 4
- A quart of Madeira wine sealed & so pro rata... £ 0 4
- Vidoinia wine sealed Pr quart &... £ 0 3
- Port wine... £ 0 2
- All European wines not here mentioned Pr Sealed Quart & so pro rata... £ 0 5
- English strong beer Pr sealed quart... £ 0 1
- French brandy Pr Quart made into punch with loaf sugar & so pro rata... £ 0 8
- Arrach Pr Quart sealed made into punch with loaf sugar & so pro rata... £ 0 15 0

At the August court, 1759, the following justices were present: the worshipful Joseph Wood, Wm. Luckett, Thomas Norris, Peter Bainbridge, Major Chaplain, Thomas Prather, and D. Lynn. The grand jury sworn were Arthur Nelson, Peter Stilly, John Fletchett, Jeremiah Virgin, James Ramsburg, Van Swearening, Jr., Jon. Hagar, Martin Casner, John Cartwright, Geo. French, Geo. Loy, Garat Davis, Serratt Dickerson, John Shemlan, Michael Miller, Walter S. Greenfield.

John Jacobs was sworn as their bailiff.

At the August court the following constables were appointed:

- Hundreds: Frederic ton town... John Kimball.
- Names: Lower part Kattocten... Samuel Magruder, Jr.
- Upper... Samuel Johnson.
- Lower... Antietam... Henry Esteler.
- Upper... James Walling, Jr.
- Marsh... Van Swearening, Jr.
- Salisbury... Daniel Jones, Jr.
- Conococheague... Neal McPaul.
- Linton... Ralph Matson.
- Old Town... John Nicholls.

The court records show that the justices often adjourned for a half-hour or an hour, and most generally to some tavern, where it is supposed the inner man was refreshed, to enable them to better dispatch business.

At the August term of 1768, Mrs. William Beard produced to the court the best piece of white linen, for which she was allowed 1000 pounds tobacco, as per act of Assembly; for second best, Mrs. Sarah Watson was allowed 1000 pounds; and for third best, Charles Swearening received 900 pounds; for the fourth best piece, David Carlisle got 800 pounds, and also 700 pounds for best sixth piece. For the best piece of brown linen, Catherine Kimball was allowed 900 pounds tobacco; Eleanor McKain for second best, 500 pounds; George Gillespie for third best, 600 pounds; John Swearening for fourth best, 600 pounds; and Thomas Sonth for fifth best, 500 pounds.

The first instance of the reception of a colored man's testimony in Frederick County occurred as late as July 9, 1866, before Justice Mahoney.

Notable Trials and Executions.—The most momentous case which has ever come before a Frederick County court was the trial of the seven Tory leaders, Peter Sneman, Nicholas Andrews, John George Graves, Yost Plecker, Adam Graves, Henry Shell, and Casper Fitchie, for high treason. These men belonged to an association of loyalists, who had banded themselves together for the purpose of co-operating with a strong force of British and Indians in an expedition against Virginia and Maryland. Their place of meeting was discovered, and a descent was made, which resulted in the capture of the persons whose names are given above. A special court was empowered to try them, of which Alexander Contee Hanson was the principal judge. The trial had a most important significance, from the fact that the opinion prevailed among the Tories that the Revolutionary government would not venture to proceed to extreme measures. It was therefore necessary to make a terrible example, and the prisoners on being convicted were sentenced to death, as stated in the Revolutionary chapter of this work.

The Gruber Trial.—Another case before a Frederick County court which attracted national attention was the famous Gruber trial. On August 16, 1818, a camp-meeting was held in Washington County, Md., under the auspices of the clergy and laity of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Rev. Jacob Gruber, who was presiding elder of the district, preached the sermon. It was shown afterwards that the sermon was unpremeditated, and that he preached only after his failure to induce another minister to do so. No substitute could be procured, and, as presiding elder, it was his duty to preach. "Righteousness exaleth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," was the text of his discourse. By sin, he said, the text meant not individual sin alone, but also national sin, and among the national sins which he proceeded to elaborate was that of slavery. His congregation consisted of from three to five thousand whites and several hundred colored people. Towards the close of the sermon he directed himself to his colored hearers, urging them to bear their lot with resignation, to obey their masters, and to seek consolation in religion. The grand jury of the county subsequently indicted Mr. Gruber for wickedly and maliciously inciting slaves to rebellion. At the trial, Mr. Gruber availed himself of his legal privilege, and procured the removal of his case to Frederick County, where he was acquitted.

The following is the bill of indictment found by the grand jury of Washington County upon which the defendant was tried in the Frederick County court, March term, 1819, and acquitted:

"Charge I.—State of Maryland, Washington County, to wit. The jurors for the State of Maryland, for the body of Washington County, upon their oath present: That Jacob Gruber, late of the said county, clerk, being a person of an evil, seditious, and tumultuous disposition, and maliciously intending and endeavoring to disturb the tranquillity, good order, and government of the State of Maryland, and to endanger the persons and property of a great number of the peaceable and quiet citizens of the said State, on the 6th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1818, at the county aforesaid, unlawfully, maliciously, and wickedly intended to instigate and incite divers negro slaves, the property of divers citizens of said State, to mutiny and rebellion, for the disturbance of the peace of the said State, and to the great terror and peril of the peaceable citizens thereof; and the said Jacob Gruber, in prosecution of his said wicked intention and purpose, and for the effecting and the accomplishment thereof, on the said 16th day of August, with force and arms, at the county aforesaid, unlawfully, wickedly, maliciously, and advisedly did endeavor to stir up, provoke, instigate, and incite divers negro slaves, whose names to the jurors aforesaid are yet unknown, the property of divers citizens of said State, and inhabiting in the county aforesaid, with force and arms, unlawfully, seditiously, and wickedly, to commit acts of mutiny and rebellion in the said State, in contempt, and in open violation of the laws, good order, and government of this State, to the evil and pernicious example of all others in like case offending, and against the peace, government, and dignity of the State."

(There were two other charges of a similar character which we omit.)

"Franklin Anderson, "Dist. Atty. 5th Judicial Dist."

"Otho H. Williams, Clerk."

Mr. Anderson, in opening the case, observed that it was well known that slaves were property according to our laws, and that masters were entitled to protection, and any attempt to incite slaves to insubordination and resistance to the lawful commands of their masters ought to be punished. But in the prosecution of the inquiry on this occasion it must not be forgotten that liberty of opinion and speech is the privilege of every citizen, and if Mr. Gruber had no criminal intent in his sermon he committed no offense. It was, he added, the duty and the province of the jury to judge of the intent from the facts disclosed.

Roger Brooke Taney, afterwards chief justice of the United States, opened the case on the part of the Rev. Mr. Gruber.

"The statement," he said, "made by the district attorney had informed the jury of the interesting principles involved in the trial then pending before them. It was, indeed, a prominent and important case, in which the entire community as well as the accused were interested. The prosecution," said Mr. Taney, "is without precedent in the judicial proceedings of Maryland, and as the jury are the judges of the law as well as the fact, it becomes my duty not only to state the evidence we are about to offer, but to show you the grounds upon which we mean to rest the defense. I need not," he continued, "tell you that by the happy and liberal institutions of this State the rights of conscience and the freedom of speech are fully protected. No man can be prosecuted for preaching the articles of his religious creed, unless, indeed, his doctrine is immoral and calculated to disturb the peace and order of society. And all subjects of national policy may at all times be freely and fully discussed in the pulpit or elsewhere without restraint or limitation. Therefore the reverend gentleman, whose cause I am now advocating, cannot be liable to prosecution in any form or proceeding for the sermon mentioned by the district attorney, unless his doctrines were immoral and calculated to disturb the peace and order of society. The sermon, in itself, could in no other way be an offense against the laws. If his doctrines were not immoral, if the principles he maintained were not contrary to the peace and good order of society, he had an undoubted right to preach them and to clothe them in such language, and to enforce them by such facts and arguments, as to him seemed proper. It would be nothing to the purpose to say that he offended, or that he alarmed some or all of his hearers. Their feelings, or their fears, would not alter the character of his doctrine, or take from him a right secured to him by the constitution and laws of the State, ... But the accused merits a defense on very different grounds. The counsel to whom he has confided his cause cannot content themselves with a cold and reluctant acquittal, and abandon Mr. Gruber without defense to all the obloquy and reproach which his enemies have industriously, and most unjustly, heaped upon him. We cannot consent to buy his safety by yielding to passion, prejudice, and avarice the control of future
The counsel associated with Mr. Taney for the defense were Messrs. Martin and Pegman.

The Black-McKaig Trial.—On April 11, 1871, the Circuit Court of Frederick County convened in special session for the trial of Harry Crawford Black, indicted for murder in shooting Col. W. W. McKaig, Jr., Mr. Black was indicted by the grand jury of Allegany County for killing Col. McKaig on Oct. 17, 1870, in Cumberland, for the alleged seduction of his sister, Miss Myra Black. The defendant procured a change of venue to Frederick County. William Pinkney Maulsby, chief justice of the Sixth Judicial District, presided. The two associate justices at this trial were John A. Lynch and William Veirs Bouic. The counsel for the prosecution were Francis Bunge, State's attorney of Frederick County, Isaac D. Jones, attorney-general of Maryland, and Milton Whitney, of Baltimore. The counsel for the defense were Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, A. K. Syester, of Hagerstown, Frederick J. Nelson, Lloyd Lowndes, of Cumberland, and William M. Price, of the same city. The jury were William M. Fega, Joseph W. Etzler, Ephraim Stoner, George W. Foreman, Henry T. Deaver, Robert Lease, Pottinger Dorsey, Benjamine P. Crampton, Jonathan Biser, George H. Fox, Michael Zimmerman, and Daniel T. Whip.

The defendant, Black, was born in Cumberland, May, 1846, and was a relative of the late Hon. J. Dixon Roman and Hon. J. Philip Roman, who when living were recognized as leading men in the political and financial affairs of the State. Col. William W. McKaig, Jr., who fell by Mr. Black's hands, was descended from a long line of wealthy and respectable ancestors. He was the second son of Hon. W. W. McKaig, and nephew of Gen. Thomas J. McKaig. He was born April 5, 1842, was a cavalry captain in the Confederate army, and when killed was largely engaged in manufacturing in Cumberland. He was killed on Baltimore Street, the principal thoroughfare of Cumberland, on the morning of Oct. 17, 1870.

On the tenth day of the trial Mr. Voorhees rose to close the argument for Mr. Black, and paused as though oppressed by a sense of the great responsibility resting on him. All eyes were riveted on him. In a clear, firm voice Mr. Voorhees proceeded to address the jury, dwelling at first upon the remarkable character of the boy at the bar, as developed even in the testimony of adverse witnesses. With great skill he then pointed out the difference in position and circumstances of the families of McKaig and Black, the influence and wealth of the one, the simple integrity and respectability of the other. The speech lasted three and a half hours, and when he closed there was a murmur of applause, which was promptly checked by the court. Chief Judge Maulsby ordered a recess for a few minutes, after which the closing address of Mr. Whitney for the prosecution was delivered, and the case was given to the jury. In an hour the jury reappeared and rendered the verdict of "Not guilty."

The pent-up emotions of the assemblage could no longer be controlled, and a deafening cheer shook the building from dome to foundation, and the entire assembly rushed forward as if to seize Black in their arms and bear him out of the court-room. Releasing himself as soon as possible from the throng, Black joined his mother, who stood weeping within the bar.

The Thomas Murder Trial.—John Thomas murdered Sophia Preston, April 24, 1849, was indicted for murder in the first degree, and tried during the latter part of the year. The jury were E. S. An-man, A. Anderson, Daniel House, H. Boteler, B. S. Lamar, John Tehan, John Myers, Edward Howard, Charles Cole, Jonathan Buranner, Theodore Delaphane, Daniel S. Biser. The attorney for the State was William M. Merrick, and for the prisoner, Governor Francis Thomas, Jacob M. Kunkel, E. L. Lowe, and M. Gallagher. The judges who sat in the case were Messrs. Martin, Marshall, and Weissel. After a hotly-contested trial of nearly a week, the jury found the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment. He was sentenced to be hanged, but his sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

424

Executions and Capital Crimes.—On Dec. 13, 1749, a "dead warrant" was issued for the execution of John Murphy, condemned at a special court for felony and burglary. He was the first person hanged within the limits of Frederick County.

On Thursday, April 22, 1762, just after sunset, as Uriah Wirt, an elderly man of sixty-five years of age, and his son were traveling from Virginia to Frederick Town, in Frederick County, and when they were about seven miles from town, they were attacked by a man on horseback, who demanded their money, and almost at the same instant fired his pistol at the old man. The bullet went in at his shoulder and thence into his breast, inflicting a wound of which he died in about two hours. The murderer, who was named Richard Crosby, made off, but was subsequently taken and confined in Frederick County jail.

On April 29 a special commission was granted for holding a court of Oyer and Terminer at Frederick for the trial of said Richard Crosby alias Den, and on May 6th he was tried and convicted and sentenced to death. He was executed June 10th.

Oct. 8, 1762, Michael Peck was executed for the murder of George Jacob Poe in July preceding.

Oct. 22, 1775, four convicts who some time previously had murdered their master, Archibald Moffan, were, pursuant to their sentence, duly hanged.

Feb. 2, 1792, a man named Curran was committed to jail on a strong suspicion of being the person who had robbed Joseph H. Nicholson and Richard Chew on the highway.

In 1803, negro "Sam" was executed for killing a black woman.

Nov. 3, 1815, Edward C. Owings was murdered by his own slaves, Jonathan, Harry, Niurou, and Solomon, who were hanged Jan. 26, 1816. An immense concourse of people were present from adjoining counties and States.

May 20, 1820, Judge Shriver sentenced the negro Kitty to death for setting fire to the barn and dwelling-house of Mr. Trotzell, near Emmitsburg.

March 2, 1821, the negroes Peter and Kitty (brother and sister) were executed for murdering their mistress, Mrs. William Baker, in August, 1819. They were sentenced by Judge Buchanan, Nov. 14, 1820.

Nov. 3, 1827, at a hunking at Walter Kemp's, a man named Daris stabbed a negro, Sam, who died instantly. Daris was indicted on the 4th, and on the 9th was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

June 24, 1831, John Markley was hanged for the murder, on Dec. 29 and 30, 1830, of six persons, viz.: Mr. Newey, his wife, father-in-law, Mr. Tressler, two children, and an apprentice. This barbarous murder occurred in Harbaugh's Valley, and the prisoner was defended by William Ross and Joseph M. Palmer. The execution took place at the barracks, and was witnessed by over four thousand people.

June 25, 1831, John Lirure was killed in an affair by Thomas Fowler.

Dec. 19, 1834, Joseph O'Connor, for killing Mary Gower, was sentenced to eighteen years in the penitentiary on the jury's verdict of manslaughter.

Nov. 23, 1849, John Thomas was sentenced to be hanged for the murder of Mrs. Sophia Preston on April 24, 1849, but the Governor commuted the sentence to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary.

Jan. 7, 1858.—Philip Hawkins (free colored) was hanged for the murder of James Diggs (free colored), committed in Urbana District, Feb. 17, 1857.

May 28, 1860, Geo. Truman (colored) was hanged for murder of an unknown white man, Jan. 30, 1869.

June 21, 1873, Edward H. Castle (colored) alias Edward H. Dorsey, who murdered his cousin, Solomon Castle, April 7, 1877, was executed in a drenching rain-storm. The murder took place in Liberty District. He was executed in the jail-yard in the presence of three thousand people, who stood in the rain to witness the hanging.

Felix Munsour was hanged at Frederick on the 11th of November, 1881, for the murder of his cousin, James L. Wetsel, near Emmitsburg, on the 5th of August, 1879. He protested his innocence on the scaffold.

Court-House and Jail.—The first courts for a year or so were held in the "Dutch Meeting-House," and subsequently for a while in the upper story of Mrs. Charlton's tavern, on the southwest corner of Market and Patrick Streets, Frederick Town, where now stands Messrs. Stewart & Price's hardware-store.

On the 10th of May, 1750, Daniel Dulany made a deed for lots 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, containing by estimation three acres, to Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., Thomas Beatty, Joseph Ogle, Wm. Griffith, Edward Sprigg, Jr., and John Kinwah, the commissioners appointed by act of Assembly to purchase three acres of ground for building a court-house thereon. The consideration was eighteen pounds. The erection of the building was pushed forward vigorously, and was completed all save the inside, on Nov. 24, 1750. The General Assembly, by an act of Nov. 17, 1753, authorized the County Court to levy two hundred and ten pounds to finish the interior, etc., but it was not completed until about 1756; as Braddock's expedition through the county the previous year retarded the progress of the work, owing to the general's having taken the workmen away to labor for him. The Legislature in 1784 authorized the justices at the March and August courts of 1785 to levy two thousand pounds to build a new court-house,—the second one erected. Its architect was Andrew McCleery, who copied the model of the old court-house of assizes in Dublin, Ireland. The court on April 8, 1785, appointed Jacob Young, Wm. M. Beall, and George Murdock to contract for building it, and drew orders on the collector for payment of expenses. It was ordered to be erected in the centre of the court-house ground, fifty feet back from the old court-house, and in its erection part of the material of the old one was used. The first court-house was a wooden structure of a story and a half, having a kind of gallery or steps to go up, and two jury-boxes. The next, or second, one burned down May 8, 1861. It had been the theatre of many hotly-contested legal battles, and its old walls had resounded with many able and eloquent speeches. On June 17, 1861, the county commissioners resolved to construct a new court-house, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly authorizing them to assess forty thousand dollars for that purpose, or rather borrow that amount for its erection. Thomas Dixon, of Baltimore, was the supervising architect. J. Edward Sifford & Co. contracted on August 8th to do the granite-work, cut-stone work, marble steps, sills, plinths, and floor-tiling for four thousand and fifty dollars, to be completed by Sept. 1, 1862. S. H. & J. F. Adams, of Baltimore, on the same date contracted to build the remainder of the edifice in the same period of time for thirty-three thousand one hundred and ninety dollars. The court-house was finished in the fall of 1862, and is one of the best and most commodious in the State. Its court-room in the matter of acoustics is hardly surpassed by any in the country. The first jail, a rude and not very safe structure, was built about the time the first court-house was erected, and prior to 1753. It stood on a lot just opposite the court-house, and where Judge Richard H. Marshall’s residence is now situated. The whipping-post was on the corner of the court-house lot, immediately opposite to the lot where the Central National Bank is located, and remained there until after the war of 1812. In May, 1804, the jail was broken open and several prisoners escaped. The General Assembly, by act of 1766, authorized the county justices to levy thirty thousand pounds of tobacco to build a stone wall around the jail and a house for the jailer. The next jail was erected on the site of the present county prison, and was rebuilt in 1852, after the fire of September 13th, by James Hopwood. The present jail, with sheriff’s house, was erected in 1875 and 1876, at a cost of seventy-two thousand dollars. Frank E. Davis, of Baltimore, was the architect; David Frazier, general superintendent; David H. Kolb, carpenter; and Haller & Hergasheimer did the masonry and bricklaying. Rountzhan & Bowers furnished the lumber, Flinn & Emmick the steam-heating apparatus, Calvin Page the iron-work, and Ebbert & Son did the plumbing. It is a solid and substantial structure, well ventilated, and a safe receptacle for the most hardened criminals. It is three stories high, and has separate cells for the prisoners.

Early Marriages.—The first law directing the issuing of marriage licenses in Maryland was passed in 1777, the second year of the State constitution. The following is an official list of the licenses issued for the first three years after the passage of the law: 1776.

March 10. William Logan to Margaret Shear.
  " 25. Benjamin Padgett to Ann Green.
  " 28. Samuel Archibald to Catherine Cock.
April 6. Richard Bosenman to Susanna Holtz.
  " 7. John Silver to Ann Springer.
  " 17. Joseph McDonald to Anna Shell.
  " 18. George Seuchtall to Catherine Cline.
  " 21. Richard Wells to Edith Coo.
  " 23. David Miller to Catherine Heffner.
  " 25. Maj. Peter Manta to Catherine Howard.
  " 26. Peter Humber to Rebecca Bann.
May 1. John McElfresh, Jr., to Rachel Dorsey.
  " 5. Benjamin Beale to Ann Davie.
  " 6. Samuel Norris to Catherine Miller.
  " 7. Thomas Haslewood to Sarah Coffin.
  " 8. Moses Farsten to Mary Cavenor.
  " 9. Matthias Campbell to Teney Vough.
  " 11. Lawrence Still to Rebecca Gassaway.
  " 11. James Eddie to Mary Hammond.
  " 20. Zachariah Linton to Mary Maynard.
  " 22. Richard Barrieck to Catharine Heartsook.
  " 23. Jacob Smidley to Elizabeth Cline.
  " 27. Adam Devilbiss to Catharine Barrick.
  " 29. Jacob Shalman to Catharine Beatz.
June 2. Peter Mottie to Philomena Heckathen.
  " 3. Archibald Thomas to Sarah Farnell.
  " 3. Rudolph Hinckes to Sarah Huff.
  " 6. William Bowden to Elizabeth Ryley.
  " 8. Philip Aller to Jane Grimes.
  " 15. Peter Pebble to Mary Cepherton.
  " 25. Abraham Beaver to Ann Laken.
  " 27. John Parkinson to Ann Likel.
  " 27. John Smith to Elizabeth Kiser.
  " 29. John Compton to Sarah Knotts.
July 4. William Heartsook to Catherine Fogle.
  " 10. Joseph Taylor to Eleanor Riley.
  " 12. James Poole to Rachel Shipley.
  " 19. Henry Cline to Mary Juniper.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

18. Andrew Lowe to Mary Peckemough.
23. Thomas Simmons to Mary Adams.
25. Peter Atrv to Elizabeth Heffner.
25. Michael Little to Mary Quiner.
27. George Woods to Mary Lloyd.

Ang. 1. Joseph Butler to Mary Ogle.
8. Samuel Leatherwood to Hannah Buckingham.
8. Guldf Plid to Eve Shively.
12. John Snowden Hook to Elizabeth Ward.
21. Richard Creek to Eve Livingstone.
22. Christobm Griffith to Mary Ann Scott.
24. Thomas Porter to Susanna McDonald.
25. James Cumming to Keriah Coale.
27. William Edward Head to Mary Walker.
31. Henry Curtis to Hannah Fubton.

Sept. 1. John Whitmore to Mary Cox.
5. Benjamin Hill to Sarah Seages.
8. David Gillespie to Christie Berry.
14. Jacob Buzzard to Mary Sger.
18. George Shoup to Charlotte Loy.
18. Henry Shrader to Susanna Horine.
22. Patrick Kyle to Hannah Price.
22. William Dobson to Mary Bay.
23. Peter Kemp to Mary Leeman.
23. James Conner to Elizabeth Spies.
29. Matthew Myler to Elizabeth Fowler.
29. William Anderson to Cavey Brashers.

Oct. 3. Joseph Kennedy to Christiana King.
9. Jacob Miller to Margaret Dentlinger.
9. Adam Sullman to Susanna Isenburgh.
9. Richard Wood to Elizabeth Head.
12. Richard Gassaway to Ann Arnold.
17. Charles Schweirt to Elizabeth Castle.
17. Joseph Braym to Martha Matthews.
19. Christopher Hart to Elizabeth Richards.
29. John Richardson to Mary Noble.

Nor. 4. Thomas White to Sarah Tavin.
4. William Harrison to Mary Davis.
7. Robert Deane to Elizabeth Reynolds.
14. George Read to Margaret Maggg.
16. William Jacobs to Doreas Stokes.
25. Hugh Biggon to Eleanor Fenton.
26. Wm. Messer to Eleanor Smith.
27. John Bonsam to Elizabeth Wedin.

Dec. 3. John Meltayvin to Elizabeth McKinley.
4. George Rodgers to Jane Patten.
12. Simon Colbert to Eleanor Reed.
16. Jacob Harris to Jane Grimes.
19. George Haggerty to Elizabeth Kennedy.
27. David McCollom to Mary Crips.
29. James Calhoun to Catherine McAtee.

1779.

2. Henry Cook to Sarah Whitehead.

Jan. 2. William Forsaid to Mary Lambert.
4. Martin Everheart to Christina Fulbin.
18. Allen Garrett to Mary Barton Philpott.
25. Samuel Flower to Janey Bownley.
29. George Street to Elizabeth Cotton.
29. Wm. Carrill to Elizabeth Fee.

5. Francis Wimpigler to Sarah Ridgeley.
9. Michael Ryne to Eleaner Smith.
9. Wm. Richardson to Nancy Davis.
12. Jacob Neacht to Frances Masten Willson.
15. James Polson to Rachel Durbin.
15. Henry Barkshire to Gressilla Burton.
16. Jacob Smith to Solomon Koentz.
18. Frederick Meyos to Mary Fine.
20. Jacob Caeable to Maty Campbell.
26. James Ball to Rachel Histon.
22. Lindsay Deashum to Sarah Tramoucl.
28. John Greengrass to Catherine Cain.

March 1. Zepheniah Spires to Catherine Walker.
2. John Jacobis to Catherine Wanne.
5. Mathias Ringer to Elizabeth Piank.
6. John Peter Schoolmuyer to Mary Eve Rineheart.
8. John Hendshaw to Elizabeth Knowse.
11. Gabriel Thomas to Mary Rainsbergh.
17. Wm. Mathews to Catherine Burchell.
17. Isane Jones Naylor to Barbara Goodman.
18. George Boyley to Elizabeth Jumb.
20. Jacob Amrum to Elizabeth Clark.
26. Wm. Moore to Catherine Grimes.
26. George Shelbyer to Elizabeth Everett.
26. Peter Snowdagle to Christina Eckman.
29. Wm. Cash to Cassie Nicholls.
29. John Fairis to Sarah McDonannah.
29. Charles King to Elizabeth Risener.
31. Daniel Ball to Catherine Bover.

April 1. Joseph Thompson to Ann Elizabeth Brooke.
2. Christian Yesterday to Elizabeth Huff.
3. Abran Hill to Juley Clabaugh.
3. William Hill to Mary Perkinson.
3. Charles King to Mary Middagh.
5. Thomas Flowers to Mary Murphey.
7. Melchor Tabler to Philopemia Berger.
10. Nicholas Vandelin to Mary Null.
10. John Scott to Mary Strane.
10. John Cook to Susannah Willson.
12. George Cutler to Mary Ashill.
13. Charles Smith to Mary Ringer.
17. John Flecke to Eve Young.
17. Leonard Young to Barbara Crowl.
17. Benjamin Hark to Elizabeth Dannioff.
10. Philip Ebert to Mary Swadner.
23. Christopher Youvell to Elizabeth Dickoutt.

May 1. Henry Burton to Catherine Hill.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

May. 3. Jesse Pritchard to Elizabeth Stoner.
   4. Charles Roads to Abigail Parsley.
   8. Wm. Winston to Elizabeth Blackmore.
   10. Jacob Heamyer to Catherine Steiner.
   11. Michael Fullam to Mary Ropp.
   11. Jacob Prann to Ann Mary Buekey.
   15. Valentine Vaxter to Elizabeth Switter.
   21. Adam Tabler to Philoquama Yesterday.
   21. Thomas Beatty to Jane Waters.
   28. Peter Barkman to Ulliana Crawler.
   31. Alex. Shults to Eleanor Freeman.
   31. Roger Craig to Mary Ford.

June. 1. Abraham Hargate to Mary Pentrim.
   2. Jacob Valentine to Mary Fred.
   3. Peter Berkman to Catherine Litchard.
   3. Thomas Knox to Mary Duffie.
   12. John Anderson to Catherine Lowey.
   12. James Elder to Elizabeth Burn.
   14. Lackey Flannigan to Jane Barnett.
   15. Wm. Wallace to Elizabeth Hopkins.
   15. Philip Yost to Mary Hayes.
   15. Samuel McElown to Agnes Grifey.
   21. Adam Flarrer to Elizabeth Keplar.

July. 4. Adam Boyer to Charlotte Manta.
   17. John Harrison to Betty Clann.
   20. James Carey to Mary Hodge.
   24. Hugh Burn to Sarah Temple.
   25. Jacob Boyer to Catherine Link.

Aug. 3. Josias Harrison to Elizabeth Davis.
   4. John Pickett to Ann Gannan.
   4. Samuel Halse to Margaret Knight.
   10. James Root to Mary Umstatt.
   10. Anthony Bastien to Catherine Fogle.
   11. Valentine Fleage to Christina Censor.
   19. Charles Clabough to Elizabeth Hill.
   19. Jacob Lach to Elizabeth Boyley.
   21. John Dottarar to Catherine Summer.
   23. Daniel Haffard to Elizabeth Cassell.
   23. Jacob Laman to Hannah Peterson.
   26. Frederick Heater to Mary Anne Shroiner.
   27. Edward Robinson to Catherine Methard.
   31. Matthias Furrow to Christina Begghol.

Sept. 11. Matthias Oberfe to Anna Maria Hardman.
   16. Gassway Sallmon to Catherine Davis.
   18. John W. Bournarster to Mary Eve Dowlan.
   18. Adam Markel to Mary Dickensheets.
   23. Henry Ridenhour to Mary Smith.

Oct. 4. John Asquire to Sarah Woolverton.
   6. John Rodgers to Mary Tannehill.
   8. Michael Hefner to Margaret Reed.
   9. Peter Beall to Margaret Weddle.
   22. William Wyer to Catherine Staff.
   23. Jacob Roar to Catherine King.
   26. Philip Isier to Anna Albangh.
   29. Hugh Cochran to Elizabeth Hobstone.

Nov. 1. Joseph Boyer to Mary Hall.
   1. James Campbell to Clara Schanar.
   6. George Stottemeire to Catherine Calon.
   6. Henry Boer to Elizabeth Shellan.
   8. Archibald Cope to Mary Ramsey.
   11. Samuel Bayley to Mary Campbell.
   13. Jacob Miller to Aliona Long.
   15. Thomas Bayman to Mary Smith.
   18. Wm. Bradley to Jane Fulliston.
   19. Charles Robinson to Elizabeth Robinson.
   27. Wm. Plummer to Margaret Jones.

Dec. 3. John Yantsce to Catherine Isemminger.
   12. John Gurnard, Jr., to Esther Manta.
   16. Adam Eucry to Sarah Hips.
   17. Zachariah Barlow to Eleanor Hickman.
   17. Wm. Cooper to Mary Harrison.
   20. Jesse Bennett to Priscilla Knight.
   24. Henry Wilson to Sophia Poole.
   27. Christian Gummert to Margaret Read.
   30. Alex. Marshall to Susanna Pearl.

1780.

Jan. 12. Thomas Hande to Catherine Whitter.
   16. John Bryan to Elizabeth Carrill.
   27. Ormond Hannah to Elizabeth Ducket.
   29. Henry Haring to Catherine Pechenpaugh.
   29. Daniel Thomas to Peggy Donnedly.
   29. William Holland to Catherine Holland.
   29. Gordon Roland to Elizabeth Dawson.
   31. George Rizing to Dorothy Whitehair.

Feb. 3. Thomas Larymore to Sarah Greer.
   5. Patrick Collins to Elizabeth Pepper.
   8. Nicholas Klen to Margaret Smith.
   14. Charles Thomas Phillipott to Elizabeth MacLaby.
   15. Jacob Isaeharger to Margaret Hosplemann.
   20. George Garnett to Elizabeth Messereley.
   23. Christian Runner to Elizabeth Thomas.
   28. Jacob Prime to Margaret McKinley.

March 1. George Rineheart to Priscilla Weaver.
   1. Thomas Cartey to Margaret Nicholls.
   4. Michael Paine to Peggy Cartey.
   6. Thomas Cartey to Mary Roach.
   7. Levin Sparer to Eleanor Charity.
   7. Ninian Beall to Ann Maria Stricker.
   8. Elias Cooperider to Susannah Iseeminger.
   9. Charles Jemison to Mary Molley.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Month</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>March 9</td>
<td>Wm. Hatton to Mary Cartey.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 1</td>
<td>Wm. Guthrie to Eleanor Elder.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 8</td>
<td>Samuel Brandenberger to Madeleine Hargisbymer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 2</td>
<td>Deantn Jacques to Elizabeth Powell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aug. 1</td>
<td>William Dryden to Philopoma Kiesinger.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 9</td>
<td>Henry Barrick to Margaret Keller.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 12</td>
<td>Caleb Barnes to Margaret Walker.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 17</td>
<td>Jonathan Mason Grower to Sarah Mugrove.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dec. 1</td>
<td>J ohosopath Gartrill to Elizabeth Bissell.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The rate or duty on marriage licenses issued by the clerk of the court was twenty-five shillings, and the act passed at the June session of the Assembly, 1780, made the tax payable in hard money. The moneys arising from these licenses were paid into the State treasury by the clerk.

The more important licenses issued subsequently, and up to 1830 inclusive, were the following:

- January, 1788.
- January, 1788.
- December 9, 1792.
- February 2, 1793.
- February 2, 1793.
- April 5, 1801.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

April 6, 1801. John Weast to Lydia Shack.
Sept. 5, 1802. Elijah Betsy to Sarah Wigle.
April 22, 1802. By Rev. Mr. Snyder, Isaac Shriver, merchant, to Polly Leatherman.
Feb. 15, 1803. By Rev. Mr. Waggoner, Mr. Cromwell to Peggy Keophil.
March 29, 1803. John Green to Elizabeth Zeiller, daughter of Henry Zeiller.
April 19, 1803. By the Rev. Mr. Higgins, John Cummings to Annie Louise Spurrier.
May 1, 1803. Peter Green to Kitty Mautz.
May 1, 1803. Mr. Dickson to Elizabeth Baser.
May 1, 1803. By Rev. Mr. Knox, Samuel Austin, of Harper's Ferry, Va., to Martha Cross, of New Jersey.
Nov. 6, 1802. Dr. Henry Carroll to Margaret Candle.
Feb. 15, 1804. By Rev. Dr. Debois, Conrad Shaffer to Mrs. Hagen.
April 24, 1804. By Rev. Mr. Josonsky, Henry Ruth, merchant, to Peggy Meddard.
May 15, 1804. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, John Smith to Miss Brunner, daughter of Elias Brunner.
June 24, 1805. By Rev. Mr. Higginsbottom, Alexander C. Hanson to Priscilla Dorsey.
April 20, 1805. By Rev. Dr. Rattoone, Wm. L. Schmidt to Miss Mariah Furnival.
Nov. 19, 1805. By Rev. George Bower, Alexander C. Magruder, of Annapolis, to Rebecca Thomas, daughter of Dr. P. Thomas, of Baltimore.
Feb. 4, 1806. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, Jacob Howck to Margaret Getzendanner.
April 15, 1806. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, Wm. Thomas to Catharine Houser, daughter of Capt. Houser.
May 29, 1806. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, Henry Steiner to Rachel Murray.
Oct. 27, 1806. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, Dr. John Ott to Annie Ritchie, daughter of Ahner Ritchie, of Georgetown.
Nov. 11, 1806. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, John Cromwell to Catherine Gephart.
Jan. 11, 1807. By Rev. Mr. Wagner, J. Batesman, of Baltimore, to Elizabeth Bierly.
March 17, 1807. By Rev. Mr. Bower, Wm. Potts to Susanah Campbell, daughter of Capt. William Campbell.
April 7, 1807. George Crenger, Sr., late sheriff of Frederick County, to Mary Apier.
May 3, 1807. Jacob Boyer to Miss Mary Knob.
May 14, 1807. William K. Sanderson, of Winchester, to Elizabeth Leatherman.
Dec. 8, 1808. By Rev. L. Browning, John Wireman, merchant, to Elizabeth Campbell.
Nov. 21, 1809. By Rev. Mr. Rawhouser, Rev. Frederick Rawhouser, of Emmitsburg, to Elizabeth Wagner.
Jan. 16, 1810. By Rev. Mr. Sheaffer, Septimus Stevens to Emelia Shryock.
April 12, 1810. By Rev. Mr. Ryland, Dr. George Colgate to Mary M. Cannon.
April 19, 1810. By Rev. Mr. Sheaffer, Frederick Reed to Catherine Zimmerman.
Nov. 27, 1810. By Rev. David Shaeffer, Lewis Smith to Elizabeth Eichelberger.
Dec. 6, 1810. By Rev. Mr. Sheaffer, John M. Beatty to Charlotte Hopkins.
Dec. 6, 1810. John P. Thompson, editor of the Frederick Town Herald, to Mary Barnhold.
March 19, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Davison, David M. Quickley to Elizabeth Hoffmann.
April 2, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Sheaffer, John Titlow to Mary Folger.
April 9, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Bower, Richard Potts to Ann L. Marsrock.
April 23, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Davidson, John McPherson to Miss Catherine Lienhart.
May 2, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Geistwit, Jacob Bueke to Maria Spangler.
May 30, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Martin, David Boyd to Mary Mixell.
June 9, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Martin, Henry Berger to Mrs. Nellie Davis.
June 26, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Bower, George Graft to Mary Charlton.
June 23, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Sheaffer, Gideon Bautz, merchant, to Ann Maria Sower.
July 2, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Dachiells, Samuel Raborg to Henrietta Winemiller.
Aug. 4, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Malerie, George Littlejohn to Elizabeth Geisinger.
Sept. 10, 1811. By Rev. Mr. Martin, John Stallinger to Sophia Haller.
Sept. 17, 1811. Rev. Mr. Browning, Lewis Baltzell, merchant, to Anna Maria James.
Feb. 11, 1812. By Rev. Mr. Schaeffer, John Johnson to Ann Harding.
Feb. 17, 1812. By Rev. Mr. Schaeffer, Henry Jarboe to Eleanor Cramp.
March 16, 1812. The Hon. Outerbridge Horsey, U. S. senator from Delaware, to Eliza Lee, daughter of Thomas Sim Lee.
April 23, 1812. By Rev. Mr. Schaeffer, George Geltz to Rebecca Reese.
Aug. 16, 1812. By Rev. Mr. Helfenstein, Philip Pyser, Jr., to Rachel Brengle.
April 13, 1813. By Rev. Mr. Schaeffer, Morris Jones to Elizabeth Medurt.
April 15, 1813. By Rev. Mr. Schaeffer, Solomon Boon to Martha Merriman.
Nov. 9, 1813. By Rev. Mr. Higgins, Peter Hines, merchant, to Margaret Campbell.
Nov, 30, 1813. By Rev. Mr. Davidson, David Ott to Mary Ritchie, daughter of Col. J. Ritchie.

Dec, 14, 1813. By Rev. Jonathan Helfenstein, John Brengle to Margaret Leas, Dec, 14, 1813. By Rev. Mr. Hubbs, Peter Meyers to Hannah Engle.

Jan, 4, 1814. By Rev. Mr. Schaefler, John Mossberg to Catherine Kurtz.

June 6, 1814. By Rev. Mr. Schaefler, Henry Alexander to Catherine Robb.

Feb, 24, 1814. By Rev. C. Williams, Samuel Taggart to Susanna Miller.

April 26, 1815. By Rev. Mr. Schaefler, Henry Hoffman to Margaret Kemp, daughter of Col. H. Kemp.

April 13, 1819. By Rev. Mr. Blake, Jacob Harbaugh to Mary A. Harbaugh, March 17, 1821. By Rev. Mr. Helfenstein, Col. Stephen Steiner to Elizabeth Bausman.

April 13, 1822. By Rev. Mr. McCain, Wm, Tew to Susan Ritchie.

April 8, 1823. By Rev. Mr. Schaefler, Henry Getzmann to Catharine Kemp; John Berry to Mary Getzmann; and John Snyder to Mary Whipp.

Nov. 25, 1825. By Rev. Mr. Nerins, Wm. T. Johnson to Dorothy, second daughter of Alex. Maitert, of Baltimore.

Nov. 17, 1825. By Rev. Mr. Martin, John Keely to Elizabeth Kenego.

Nov. 18, 1825. By the Most Reverend Archbishop Marechal, Robert Coleman Brien to Ann Elizabeth Tierman.

Dec, 2, 1831. By Rev. Mr. Jackson, Neilson Poe, editor of the Frederick Examiner, to Josephine E. Glemm.

March 15, 1832. By Rev. Mr. Johns, Wm. G. Harrison to Anne E. Ross, daughter of Wm. Ross.

June 5, 1832. By Rev. Mr. Hughes, John Lee to Harriet Carroll, of Baltimore.

Wills.—The following is the first will recorded in Frederick County:

"In the Name of God, Amen. This seventeenth day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred & fifty, I, Theodores Malot, in Frederick County and province of Maryland, plante, being very sick & weak of body but of perfect Mind & memory thanks to God therefor, calling to mind the mortality of my Body & Knowing that it is appointed for all men to dye, Do make & ordain this my last will & testament, that is to say, principally, first of all I give & Recommend my Soul into the hands of God that gave it & my body I recommend to the Earth to be buried in a decent Christian burial at the Discretion of my Executors, nothing doubting but at the general Resurrection I shall receive the same again by the mighty power of God, and as touching such worldly Estate wherewith it hath pleased God to bless me in this World’s Life, I give devise & dispose of the same in the following manner & Form:

"First I order all my funeral Charges & Debits to be paid. I Likewise Constitute make & ordain John Perren & Joseph Prindmore my sole Executors of this my Last will & testament. Item—I give to my Son Peter Malot two Mares & a yearding Colt & a rife Gun by him freely to be possessed. I give to my Son John Malot one shilling & to Theodores Malot one shilling. I give to my well beloved Daughter Mary a two year old heifer. Item—I give to my beloved daughter Elizabeth Malot a three year old heifer, and to my Son Benjamin a two year old Mare, and a smooth Bore Gun. Item—I give to my well beloved wife all my stock of horses & Mares, Cattle, Sheep & Hogs during her Widowhood, and afterwards to be equally divided amongst all my Children. And I do hereby utterly disallow revoke & disannul all and every former Wills & Testaments, Wills, Legacies & Requests & Executors by me in any ways before named will’d & bequeathed, Ratifying & confirming this and no other to be my Last Will & Testament. In Witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand & Seal the Day & year above written.

Theodores Malot. [Seal.]

Joseph X. Lazar, Senior.

David Enoch, Joseph Lazar.

The following was the entry of its proof:

"March 19th 1751 Joseph Lazar Sen’d & David Enoch two of the subscribing Witnesses to the Within Will being duly sworn on the holy Evangelists of Almighty God, deposes & say that they saw the Testator Theodores Malot sign the within Will, and heard him publish and declare the same to be his last Will & Testament, that at the Time of his doing so he was to the best of their apprehensions of sound & disposing mind & memory, and at the same Time, they saw Joseph Lazar Junr subscribe the within will as an Evidence & which they subscribed in the presence & at the Request of the Testator.

John Danall, Deputy Com’y.

The next will recorded was that of John Thompson, dated Sept. 25, 1748, and proven March 19, 1751. The testator devised to his son William the tract of land known as "Thompson’s Pasture," also sixty-one acres at the lower end of "Thompson’s Hop-yard," and one hundred and forty-eight acres at the head of a tract called the "John & Yaconninty," on the Potomac; to his son John one hundred and thirty-five acres, called "The Conjuror Outdone," also one hundred and forty-eight acres out of "John & Yaconninty," and seventy-three acres on the lower end of Derby Island; to his son Cornelius the tract called Cool Springs, also forty-nine acres of "Thompson’s Hop-yard," with a small island of twelve acres lying against it, and one hundred and forty-eight acres of the "John & Yaconninty" tract; and to his daughter Ann the tract of land lying on the Potomac of one hundred and five acres and called the "Duck Folly," also an island in the Potomac of twenty acres. The third will recorded was that of Charles Friend, dated Feb, 27, 1750–51, and proven March 20, 1756. The fourth recorded will was that of Henry Munday, dated June 28, 1750, and proven March 21, 1756. In it occurs this bequest: "I give and bequeath unto Mr. Nughbourgh one of the Moravian ministers my Saddle and my hair to make him a Wigge." As showing who then lived, died, and left property, we give a full list of all persons who made wills from the organization of the county up to 1777, including some proved before the erection of the county, with the dates of their being proven:

Jacob Neff, 1751. John Rawings, 1756.
Margaret Markland, 1751. Isaac Bittings, 1756.
Baltish Fought, 1751. Frederick Ensold, 1755.
Alex. Magruder, Sr., 1751. Francis Foy, 1756.
Susannah Bentley, 1755. Francis Alexander, 1756.
Wm. Norris, 1748. Jacob Stern, 1756.
John Thomas, 1749. Wm. Cooper, 1757.
Charles Scruggs, 1749. Royhall Harris, 1757.
Thomas Ruff, 1749. Patrick Doran, 1757.
Wm. Coler, 1749. Wm. Catty, 1757.
Joseph Adkins, 1749.
John Stull, 1749.
Egward Ofst, 1749.
Solomon Setty, 1749.
Daniel Stull, 1749.
Wm. Forster, 1749.
John White, 1749.
John Davis, 1749.
Daniel Jenkins, 1750.
John Nelson, 1750.
John Haymonnd, 1750.
Wm. West, 1750.
Daniel Matthews, 1750.
Joseph Adkins, 1750.
Cornelius Etting, 1750.
Basil Beall, 1750.
Adam Mirra, 1750.
James Osft, 1750.
Wm. Williams, 1750.
Robert Dowling, 1750.
Goldfried Mong, 1750.
Wm. O. Nail, 1750.
Wm. Barrack, 1750.
Thomas Conn, 1750.
Thomas Conning, 1750.
Wm. Knoll, 1750.
George Winters, 1750.
Alex. Beall, 1750.
Daniel Linn, 1750.
John Vandevel, 1750.
James Osft, 1750.
Wm. Buxton, 1750.
George Pack, 1750.
Abigail Barbour, 1750.
Wm. Norris, 1750.
Martin Adam, 1750.
Thomas Hargis, 1750.
Joseph Judson, 1750.
John Williams, 1750.
Jemima Beall, 1751.
John Neely, 1751.
John Perry, 1751.
Charles Polke, 1751.
John Hook, 1751.
Jacob Julian, 1751.
John Piguana, 1751.
Stephen Balbyou, 1751.
John Harding, 1752.
Samuel Richardson, 1752.
John Hopson, 1752.
Wm. Turner, 1752.
Samuel Durbin, 1752.
Edward Johnsson, 1752.
Robert DeBatta, 1752.
George Krome, 1753.
Moses Chaplin, 1753.
Thomas Davis, 1753.
John Cretsby, 1753.
James Holland, 1753.
Rebecca Eltinge, 1756.
Elwood E. Butter, 1756.
Wm. Walker, 1756.
Joseph Ogie, 1756.
John Tinney, 1756.
John Williams, 1756.
Joseph Syder, 1756.
Joseph Smith, 1756.
William Syder, 1756.
Thomas Gittins, 1756.
Bartholomew Jeserang, 1756.
William Simmes, 1756.
John George, 1756.
Thomas Wilson, 1756.
Nicholas Bakar, 1756.
Samuel Richardson, 1756.
Isaac Delaplaine, 1756.
Garth Davis, 1756.
John Williams, 1756.
Jacob Syderman, 1756.
Peter Buder, 1756.
James Pilly, 1756.
Jacob Staley, 1756.
Jacob Sackett, 1756.
James Var, 1756.
Jemima Beall, 1756.
John Ripeley, 1756.
William Dutcher, 1756.
Michael Raleigh, 1756.
John Steffel, 1756.
John Shephard, 1756.
John Crows, 1756.
David Owen, 1756.
Meredith Davis, 1756.
Jacob Hoffman, 1756.
Adam Milhar, 1756.
Francis Elbridge, 1756.
Jacob Lockman, 1756.
John Ludvig Peak, 1756.
Catherine Jennings, 1756.
Benjamin Adams, 1756.
Benjamin Beall, 1756.
Ludwig Haun, 1756.
John Ritter, 1756.
Alex, McKeeen, 1756.
Elizabeth Harding, 1756.
Wm. Anderson, 1756.
Zackiel Goding, 1756.
Peter Stilly, 1756.
John Croett, 1756.
John Hikkibeand, 1756.
John George Sy, 1756.
John Cigrett, 1756.
John Peters, 1756.
Erhart Boggardner, 1756.
John George, 1756.
John Kinbdl, 1756.
Joseph Richardson, 1756.
Isabella McSheever, 1756.
Stephen Garrett, 1756.
Philip Funes, 1756.
Casper Kweege, 1756.
Duell Payne, 1756.
Robert Pearl, 1756.
Thomas Payn, 1756.
Hugh Tusonnet, 1756.
John Elye, 1756.
John Wils, 1756.
John West, Sr., 1756.
John Holcomb, 1756.
William Ritchet, 1756.
Edward Norcross, 1756.
John Clarkton, 1756.
John Veters, 1756.
David Garrett, 1756.
Frederick Jolladg, 1756.
William Jones, 1756.
Daniel Zacharias, 1756.
Squier Owens, 1756.
Ann Darbon, 1756.
Sarah Smith, 1756.
Zophamah Planner, 1756.
Christian Getzamannaer, 1756.
Leonard Shuebbey, 1756.
John Kuyne, 1756.
David Delaudier, 1756.
Anna Mary Peter, 1756.
Ezrah Rias, 1756.
Elizabeth Talbot, 1756.
Jacq Shinglebeek, 1756.
John Swann, 1756.
Hannah Wein, 1756.
Benjamin Marshall, 1756.
John Baskal, 1756.
Thomas Clark, 1756.
John Truselle, Sr., 1756.
Thomas Winton, 1756.
Hester Beall, 1756.
John McKinley, 1756.
Christian Smith, 1756.
John Johnson, 1756.
John Ritter, 1756.
CHAPTER XXII.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS, INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS, AND AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

Neither the charter granted by Charles I. to Lord Baltimore in 1632, nor the State constitution of 1776, nor its amendments adopted in 1812 or 1815, made any provisions for free schools. By the act of 1694 provision for free schools was made, and a school fund was derived from a tobacco tax, and from a tax of twenty shillings per poll laid upon each Irish Catholic servant and each negro slave imported into the colony. There was also a three pence per hogshead tax on exported tobacco, of which one-half went to schools. The earliest school fund, however, was provided by the act of 1693, entitled an act for the "encouragement of learning," by which all persons residing in the province were forbidden to export any furs or skins therein mentioned except on the payment of certain specified duties, to be appropriated to the maintenance of free schools. As the fur trade was a large and profitable one at this period, the revenue derived from it constituted the school fund for nearly thirty years. By this act every exported bear-skin paid 9d. sterling; beaver, 4d.; otter, 3d.; wild-cats, foxes, minks, fishers, wolves' skins, 1d.; musk-rat, 4d. per dozen; raccoons, 3 farthings per skin; elk-skins, 12d. per skin; deer-skins, 4d. per skin; young bear-skins, 2d. per skin. All non-resident exporters of these furs were to pay double.

Gratuitous teaching was provided in 1728 for poor children, it being ordered that masters receiving twenty pounds a year from the State should teach as many poor children as the visitors should see fit to accept.

In 1754 the following persons were keeping schools in Frederick County, viz.: John Wilkinson, who "took the oaths to government by information of Mr. David Linn," Martin Moran, upon information by Thomas Prather; John Chamberlain, upon information by J. Smith Prather; Henry Levatt, upon information by John Rawlins; Thomas Flint, upon information of John Rawlins. It was enacted by the act of 1763 that the Rev. Mr. Thomas Bacon, rector of All Saints' parish, Col. Thomas Cresap, Nathan Magruder, John Darnall, Thomas Beatty, Col. Joseph Chapline, and Col. Samuel Beall should be the trustees of Frederick County Free School, and that a school-house should be built on an acre of land to be purchased in Frederick Town, and the school was to have an equal dividend with the other schools from the taxes, etc., collected in the province and appropriated to this purpose. In 1768 the visitors or trusttees to the Frederick County school were changed by act of the Assembly, and Jonathan Wilson, Thomas Bowles, George Murdock, Maj. Joseph Wood, Thomas Price, Caspar Shooff, and Charles Beatty were appointed visitors, and they were directed to purchase half an acre of ground in Frederick Town and build the school-house thereon. In 1779, in reply to the "prayer of sundry inhabitants of the State, the Rev. Bartholomew Booth was, by act of the Assembly, permitted to teach and preach the gospel, and also to teach and educate youth in any public or private school, upon taking the oath of fidelity. He had removed from Georgetown to Frederick County; and the children of Benedict Arnold were educated by him. The Rev. Mr. Booth died in 1785, having spent a long life in teaching. He came from Virginia to Maryland. Agreeably to the acts of 1763 and 1769, the half-acre had been purchased and the seminary of learning erected thereon; and by act of 1796 it was declared to be the Frederick County school, and George Murdock, Richard Potts, Philip Thomas, Francis Mantz, John McPherson, and George Baer were appointed visitors with corporate powers, but no person should act as visitor or teacher before he had taken the oath of fidelity. Chapter II. of the acts of 1801 is an additional supplement to the act of 1763 for erecting a public school in Frederick County; the first four sections relate to a lottery for the benefit of the school, and appoint William Luckett, William Hobbs, of Sam., Roger Nelson, Peter Mantz, John Schloy, Joshua Dorsey, Daniel Clarke, Jr., and Robert Cummings visitors. In 1802 it was provided by law that any three of these visitors might be a quorum to transact business. In 1808 a lottery was authorized for the erection of a suitable building for a school-house for the accommodation of the youth of Emmitsburg and its vicinity in Frederick County by raising thereby not exceeding twelve hundred dollars. In 1809 a seminary in Middletown, Frederick Co., was provided for by an act authorizing a lottery, and it was provided that no vacancies were to be filled till the number was reduced to nine.

In 1815 an act was passed authorizing a lottery for building a school-house near Taneytown, in Frederick County. In 1816 it was enacted that nine persons were to be appointed in each county as commissioners of public schools, and the treasurer of the Western Shore was directed to pay to the said commissioners each county's legal proportion upon application. The commissioners were to report annually to the General Assembly, but not to accept any compensation. The treasurer was to pay to the order of the Levy Courts of Frederick, Washington, and Allehad power to repeal, alter, regulate, and modify all such proceedings or any part thereof, from time to time, as occasion required. Whenever a district meeting voted a tax, it was the duty of the trustees to make a tax-list and annex to the same a warrant and deliver it to the tax collector. These trustees employed teachers and paid the salaries, and semi-annually made a report to the school commissioners, specifying the length of time a school had been kept, the amount of moneys received by them and how expended, the number of white children taught, and the number residing in the district between the ages of five and fifteen years, inclusive. No teacher could be employed unless he had been duly examined by the inspectors and received a certificate. The inspectors were compelled at least quarterly to visit and examine all the schools within their respective counties, and the school commissioners to make an annual report to the county clerks.

The law authorized them to hold property as a body politic. All the State funds assigned and appropriated for the support and maintenance of the public schools were distributed according to the ratio of white inhabitants. This act was left to the voters of the several counties to be voted for or against, accepted or rejected, and in the county voting against its adoption it was void and of no effect. Although a good law, it was far in advance of the times, and was only partially accepted, and never substantially adopted and put into practice.

A supplementary act of March 20, 1837, provided that the Levy Court of Frederick County should appoint a board of inspectors of the primary schools in this county, of one person from each election district, to be charged with the same duties and powers as before invested in the inspectors and commissioners. This law ordered the payment by the Levy Court to the school inspectors of the interest arising from the school fund invested by said court, and authorized said court to levy upon the assessable property of the county such amount as would discharge the principal and interest due by the county to the school fund. These inspectors on July 1st of each year distributed the aforesaid interest, the annual school fund of the county, and other school funds among the several districts. The Levy Court annually levied a sum not less than five or more than eight thousand dollars for the primary schools. The district clerk and collector were abolished, and the county collector thereafter collected the school taxes, and paid the same over to the school inspectors. This act was not to be in force until adopted by the majority of the voters of the county. A later act provided that all white children between five and eighteen years of age, inclusive, in Frederick County were entitled to public school instruction. An act of March 21, 1838, provided for the establishment of a separate female school in each school district if desired by a majority of the inhabitants thereof. An act especially relating to Frederick County, passed Feb. 21, 1840, provided that the trustees have power to apply the school funds for the various school purposes as their judgment dictated. Each county received from the State treasury eight hundred dollars for an academy, but in Frederick County four hundred dollars more was allowed for the Rev. John McElroy's school.

The free-school fund was a different one, being derived from a bonus paid by the banks, and partly from the surplus revenue paid to the State by the general government, and appropriated to this purpose. This fund was afterwards appropriated to the use of the Baltimore and Washington Railroad, and an annuity of thirty-four thousand dollars paid by it to the State therefor, which was annually divided among the counties. The amount of this fund due to Frederick County in 1846 was thus invested:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>In the Mechanics' Bank</td>
<td>$2805.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; Commercial and Farmers'</td>
<td>$1600.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; Baltimore</td>
<td>1500.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; hands of farmers</td>
<td>9600.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cash</td>
<td>175.50</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The interest of this sum, together with the portion of the thirty-four thousand dollars annuity received by the county, was appropriated to the benefit of the free schools. In addition to which the county yearly levied about eight thousand dollars (as per act of 1836). Also, at the discretion of the trustees, the sum of twenty-five cents per month was assessed each pupil who was able to pay.

The following were the amounts received by the county from the State in the years mentioned:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Amounts Received</th>
<th>1840</th>
<th>1841</th>
<th>1842</th>
<th>1843</th>
<th>1844</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>$2181.46</td>
<td>1813</td>
<td>$9965.34</td>
<td>1842</td>
<td>2314.95</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In 1846 the county was divided into eighty-two school districts, having about ten thousand pupils in attendance, making one hundred and twenty-two to each district. The county levy of eight thousand dollars gave eighty cents to each pupil, and the State donation gave about forty-five cents, making altogether one dollar and twenty-five cents paid for the tuition of each scholar per year, besides the sum paid by the pupils.

The constitution of 1864 authorized the State superintendent of public instruction to adopt a uniform system of public instruction in Maryland, which that officer, L. Van Bokkelen, prepared and reported to the Legislature in February, 1865. This was the first regular free-school system in the State, and is the basis of the present free schools.

We give below the report for full term ending Nov. 15, 1865, of the schools in the county, as made by Dr. Lewis H. Steiner, the efficient president of the board of school commissioners:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>District</th>
<th>Boys</th>
<th>Girls</th>
<th>Salaries</th>
<th>Incidental</th>
<th>Repairs</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1st</td>
<td>477</td>
<td>309</td>
<td>$1,072.12</td>
<td>$215.64</td>
<td>$517.90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2nd</td>
<td>191</td>
<td>197</td>
<td>684.42</td>
<td>101.86</td>
<td>83.87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3rd</td>
<td>349</td>
<td>361</td>
<td>1,155.34</td>
<td>235.68</td>
<td>116.40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4th</td>
<td>262</td>
<td>296</td>
<td>714.58</td>
<td>122.66</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5th</td>
<td>456</td>
<td>500</td>
<td>1,322.45</td>
<td>127.97</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6th</td>
<td>251</td>
<td>258</td>
<td>844.52</td>
<td>27.88</td>
<td>74.92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7th</td>
<td>222</td>
<td>238</td>
<td>644.25</td>
<td>107.50</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2288</td>
<td>2178</td>
<td>$7,007.48</td>
<td>$949.41</td>
<td>$2,267.8</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This was the last year of the old school system, and the report shows the inefficiency of the system.

We now give the report (likewise made by Dr. Lewis H. Steiner) for the year ending June 30, 1866, the first year of the free schools. This report shows 7888 pupils in attendance, an increase of nearly fifty per cent. over the previous year. The number of school districts 108, in 94 of which schools were opened for ten months. The cost of educating each scholar was $4.531, computing the entire expenditure, which amounted to $36,556.78, over five hundred per cent. larger than that of the previous year under the old régime. This new system went into operation July, 1865, and at first, as was natural to be expected, the opposition made to it was very great. It involved the introduction of order and system into the educational operations of the county, and the supervision of the entire field of labor by men selected for that purpose by the State board of education. The friction, however, manifested in the first introduction of the system gradually diminished during the first year, and at the end of the second the new method was universally accepted and approved.

The present school law in force (with some amendments made since) was passed April 1, 1872, in pursuance of the constitution of 1867, making it obligatory upon the General Assembly to provide a uniform free-school system by taxation. This act created a State board of education, five school commissioners in Frederick County, and three trustees for each district. All white youths between the ages of six and twenty-one years are admitted into the free schools. Ample provision is made for the education of the colored youth in separate schools of one or more in each election district, where the average attendance is not less than fifteen scholars.

The following are the school statistics of the county for the year ending Jan. 31, 1881:

| Number male pupils (white) | 4317 |
| " female " | 3459 |
| " male " (colored) | 614 |
| " females " | 817 |
| Total | 9105 |

Expenditures for incidental expenses | $9727.79 |
| " blackboards, stoves, etc." | 7748 |
| " teachers' salaries" | 15,222.80 |

COUNTY SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS,

1865.—Dr. Lewis H. Steiner, president, Charles McElfresh, John W. Charlton, George Koongle, Joshua Biggs, John S. Repp, James Russell, and Leonard Pickering and Grafton Duvall to fill two vacancies.

1872.—Daniel T. Lakin, president, John W. White, Lewis M. Nixdorff, Ephraim Stover, James A. Divan. Mr. Lakin having resigned, was succeeded by Andrew Kessler, and thenceupon John W. White was elected president of the board.

1876.—James W. Pearse, president, Joseph Brown, Dr. J. W. Hillery, James Trexell, Harry Boyle, present incumbents in 1881. From 1865 to 1868, Dr. Lewis H. Steiner was school examiner, and from 1868 to 1876, John W. Page secretary, treasurer, and examiner, with H. G. Sleeper as assistant. From 1876 to present time Daniel T. Lakin has been secretary, treasurer, and examiner, with Charlston Shaffer as assistant.

The report of the public school board of this county for the year ending Sept. 30, 1881, shows the receipts to have been $69,329.78, and disbursements $64,341.41. The amount paid in salaries to teachers was, to white $11,904.58, to colored $3898.56. The enrollment of scholars was, white 8825, colored 1275, making a total of 10,110. The number of teachers employed was, white 167, colored 122. During the year ten new school-houses were built by the county commissioners for public school purposes.

Daniel Thomas Lakin, now secretary, treasurer, and examiner of the board of county school commissioners of Frederick County, was born near Jefferson, in Frederick County, March 8, 1842, upon a tract of land that was taken up as a "hatchet claim" by Mr. Lakin's great-grandfather, one of the earliest among the early settlers of Frederick County. The land in question has since that time, about two hundred years ago, been in continuous possession of a bearer of the Lakin family name, the owners and occupants at present being the heirs of Capt. William Lakin. ¹ The original deed for the land is still in their possession.

Daniel T. Lakin's father, Abraham, was born upon the old Lakin place March 10, 1792, where, too, Mr. Lakin's grandfather first saw the light. Mr. Lakin's mother was Elizabeth, daughter of Charles Gross, of Frederick County. She was born Oct. 24, 1812. Her granddaughter, Charles Gross, came to Maryland from Pennsylvania at a very early day. Her mother was Betsey Cost, of Loudon County, Va.

Daniel T. Lakin taught school about ten years previous to 1869, in which year he was chosen to be a member from Jefferson District of the board of county school commissioners. Although the youngest member he was elected president of the board, and in 1871, when the power to appoint school board members was vested by legislative act in the judge of the Circuit Court, Mr. Lakin was, of the seventeen members of the old board, the only one called to be one of the five members fixed upon to constitute the new board. He was again chosen the board's president, and in 1871 tendered his resignation, so that he could take an appointment as superintendent of the Monocacy Division of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. In that place he remained for eighteen months, and in the fall of 1875 was a Democratic nominee for the Legislature. Although defeated he handsomely led his ticket. In January, 1876, the newly-appointed board of school commissioners elected Mr. Lakin secretary, treasurer, and examiner, and as such he has served continuously to the present time. He has, therefore, as has been seen, held offices of public trust uninterruptedly since 1869, save for a period of six months,—from June, 1875, to January, 1876.

During the campaign of 1880, being himself a "total abstinence" advocate, he warmly espoused the local option cause by vigorous efforts upon the stump, and enjoyed the subsequent satisfaction of knowing that seven districts in his native county voted for the measure and now enjoy its fruitful blessings. From his youth Mr. Lakin has attended the Reformed Church, and in his political convictions has always been a staunch member of the Democratic party.

Internal Improvements.—The construction of roads connecting the settlements with one another and with Baltimore, Georgetown, Annapolis, and the Pennsylvania towns, was actively begun at a very early period.

¹ Capt. William Lakin was a soldier in the Federal service during the war of 1812, and when Lafayette visited Frederick City in 1825, en route through America, Capt. Lakin was the officer in charge of the military, and enjoyed the distinction of assisting Lafayette to alight from his carriage. On May 14, 1759, the inhabitants about Monocacy and to the northward of the Blue Ridge petitioned that a road might be cleared up through the country to Annapolis, to enable them to bring their grain and other commodities to market. It was referred to the next session, and granted.

Upon the petition of Joseph Wood and other inhabitants between Monocacy and the mountains towards Pennsylvania, a road was by the County Court ordered at March court, 1749, to be laid out from Frederick Town by Abraham Miller's mill, and from thence by Ambrose's mill to ye temporary line. Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., and Joseph Ogles appointed to lay it out. This was the first road laid out in Frederick County after its erection.

A road was ordered to be laid out from Capt. Joseph Ogles to John Biggs' ford on Monocacy, and from thence to Frederick Town.

Col. Thomas Cresap, Thomas Prather, and James Dickson were appointed to lay out one from the mouth of Cocoschegue to Pennsylvania line, and another one from the mouth of the creek into the road near Moses Chaplin's, also another from said creek to Hugh Gilliland's into the former road.

William Wilburn was ordered to lay a road from Frederick Town to the top of Kitttocon Mountain.

A new road (the old one being very crooked and stopped up by falling trees) was ordered to be laid out from Monocacy ford leading to Lancaster, crossing his Lordship's Manor, Little Pipe Creek, and Great Pipe Creek to the temporal line of ye province.

Lewis Duvall, Henry Gaither, and Edward Gaither petitioned for a road from the head of Hawling's River to a convenient place on Snowden's River, near Richard Green's; also from this road near the "Chappell," in the said ford, down to a main road near John Thomas', which were ordered to be laid out.

At March court, 1779, the justices ascertained the following roads to be main roads of Frederick County, and appointed the several persons following overseers of the same:

From the Inspection House at Rock Creek down to the Common Landing on Potomac, and from the Inspection House to Nathan Peddycoats, and from thence down to Rock Creek bridge upon Potomac.—George Gordon.

From Nathan Peddycoats to Capt. John's bridge, the road that leads to William Wallace's, and then up the main road to Capt. John's bridge by Lee's quarter, and then from Nathan Peddycoats to Grove Tomlinson's ford on Rock Creek.—John Clogget.

From Capt. John's bridge to Lawrence Owen's, and from thence down to Rock Creek bridge beyond Caleb Linton's, and from thence down to Rock Creek bridge near James Smith's, and from Lawrence Owen's to a bridge over Rock Creek by Peter Butler's.—John Linton.

From Lawrence Owen's to Muddy Branch, and from the cross-roads by Lawrence Owen's to Thomas Leman's, Lawrence Gates', and thence up to Luke Barnet's road.—John West.

All the roads in the forks of Rock Creek which have been formerly cleared by overseers.—John Beckwith.

From Capt. John's to Isaac Ettinge's mill.—John Thompson.

From Muddy Branch to Seneac bridge by Henry Cramp- hin's, and from the fork road to John Ettinge's mill.—Ninian Hamilton.

From Isaac Ettinge's mill to the "Horse-pen" in the Sugar- lands.—Gowan Hamilton.

From the "Horse-pen" to the upper part of that road.—John Wilcoxon.

From Seneac bridge to mouth of Monocacy.—James Veatch.

From Charles Trail's ford to Lower Bennett's Creek and to the ford on Seneac above Richard Watt's.—John Buckston.
From Thomas Lenar's gates to the ford to Charles Thrail's, and from his own plantation to John Rawlings'.—Robert Lenar.
From Lower Bennett's Creek to Monocacy.—Joseph Beall, son of Ninian.
From the mouth of Rock Creek up to Siego bridge.—Edward Busey.
From the county bridge on Rock Creek to Siego, to the lower end of the county, and from Thomas Williams' mill to the Watery Branch near John Bean's.—William Murdock.
From Rock Creek bridge till it intersects with the old road, and from Nathan Magruder's to Thomas Owen's, and from thence to Rock Creek bridge.—John Sweiringen.
From Rock Creek to Seneca.—John Kennedy.
From Seneca to James Brook's.—Matthew Pigman.
From James Brook's to Charles Williams'.—Higginson Belt.
From Charles Williams' to the lower end of the county.—Thomas Case.
From Richard Snowden's manor to the lower end of the county.—Samuel Rogers.
The main road leading through the forks of Halogy's River.
—James Williams.
From Monocacy to Henry Ballinger's Branch.—Robert Pears.
From the main road by William Griffith's to the top of Kittoctin Mountain.—Alexander Duvall.
From Henry Ballinger's to Hussey's ford, the new road to the Middle ford, and from Frederick Town to John Bigg's ford on Monocacy, and from Frederick Town to the top of Kittoctin Mountain.—John Crampin.
From Linganore ford to the extent of this county.—William Turner.
From Monocacy to Linganore, and from Linganore to the extent of the county near Parr's.—William Comming, Jr.
The river road and Richard Touchstone's road.—Richard Touchstone.
From the top of Kittoctin Mountain to the top of Shanandoe, the road that leads from the top of Kittoctin to Shanandoe by Richard Touchstone.
From the top of Kittoctin Mountain to the top of Shanandoe that leads by John George's.
From the top of Kittoctin to the top of Shanandoe, to the ford that leads by Robert Evans to the top of Shanandoe.—William Johnston.
All the main roads in Antietam Hundred.—Robert Turner.
From the Great Marsh to Antietam; from the river to Stull's.—Charles Higginbotham.
Between the Great Marsh to Potomac, and from thence to Coochegogue, up Coochegogue to Valgamo's mill, and from that to the head of the Great Marsh.—George Moore (son of George).
All the main roads in Salisbury; road to the southwest side that leads from Baker's to Stull's mill.—Martin Casner.
From Baker's to Stull's mill, between that road and the temporary line in Salisbury Hundred.—John William Smith.
All the main roads in Coochegogue Hundred.—Hans Wagener.
From Nicholl's Neck to Fifteen-Mile Creek.—Thomas Cresap.
From Fifteen-Mile Creek to Great Towowale.—Charles Polk.
From the road from Monocacy ford, where John Hussey lived, that leads to Lancaster and from Monocacy, crossing my Lord's Manor, crossing Little Pipe Creek to Great Pipe Creek, and from Great Pipe Creek to the temporary line of the province. Lower part to Henry Smith's branch; from thence to John Carnack's; thence with a straight line to Linganore.—Joseph Wood.
Middleport, from Smith's Branch to Great Pipe Creek, and from John Diggs' Forks to Baltimore County.—Dudley Diggs.
Upper part from Great Pipe Creek to the temporary line.—Joseph Sparks.
From Capt. Ogle's ford to John Bigg's ford on Monocacy, and from thence to Frederick Town.—Joseph Dodderidge.
From the temporary line to William Ambrose's.—William Elder.
From Ambrose's mill to Abraham Miller's mill.—Martin Whetser.
From Abraham Miller's mill till it intersects the nearest main road that leads to Frederick Town.—Jacob Nafz.
Col. Thomas Cresap was ordered to lay out a road from Nicholl's Neck to Fifteen-Mile Creek.
At the June term, 1749, a road was ordered to be laid out from the main road leading to John Tenney's, on Sligo Branch, down Rock Creek, through Carroll's quarters, to intersect the main road to Rock Creek.
The following road was adjudged a main road of the county: From Sligo bridge to Charles Perry's old field, and from the Northwest Branch to Sligo by the school-house (the first mentioned).
A road was ordered to be laid out from Frederick Town to Dulany's mill.
The first bridge built were across Patuxent River, one at a ford called Richard Green's ford, and the other at Peter Murphy's ford. On the petition of Richard Snowden, the March court of 1749 ordered their construction, and appropriated forty-five pounds for the same, to be put half on the next levy and the balance on the succeeding one.
Thomas Pruther, Hugh Parker, and James Dickinson were appointed to view Sideland Hill Creek and build a bridge across the same.
At the June term a bridge was allowed for Rock Creek, which was built by Edward Beswe for fourteen pounds ten shillings, and it being longer than he expected, he wanted five pounds ten shillings more, which extra pay was rejected instantly.
On May 20, 1809, a bridge over the Potomac was opened. The one over the Monocacy, on the Baltimore pike, was opened in 1808.

At the March court of 1749 Thomas Reynolds contracted with the court to keep a ferry over the Monocacy, opposite to the plantation where John Hussey formerly dwelt, until the last day of November court, for which he was to receive fifteen pounds. The rates for ferriage were put at four pence for carrying a man and horse, and three shillings for wagons of non-residents. William Luckett in like manner agreed to keep one over the mouth of the Monocacy, and at same rates,—agreeing in low water to provide a cart to take over tobacco and other things. Edward Wyatt, for ten pounds, agreed to keep the ferry at the mouth of Coochegogue. Daniel Ballinger contracted to keep one over the Middle ford on Monocacy for ten pounds.

In 1750, Wm. Luckett kept the ferry at the mouth of the Monocacy, and Wm. Osborne kept it in 1751.
Other public improvements soon followed, and in 1783 the General Assembly passed a resolution appointing Thomas Beatty, Joseph Sprigg, Andrew Bruce, David Poe, George Keepor, and Robert Long commissioners to lay out a common road from Baltimore Town to Elizabeth Town (now Hagerstown), in Washington County, and from thence to the western limits of the State. In 1805 a turnpike from Baltimore to Frederick was commenced, and carriages were substituted for horseback-riding, which, owing to the inferiority of the public roads, had previously been the most popular mode of conveyance for both sexes. This turnpike was finished in 1808. It passed by Ellicott's lower mill, and through Frederick Town, Hagerstown, and Cumberland; thence crossing the Allegany Mountains to Uniontown, Pa., Brownsville, and Washington, to Wheeling, on the Ohio. At Ellicott's, "on the Great Falls of Patapsco," arched bridges and extensive walls were built. Years before the Messrs. Ellicott had constructed a road from their mills to Baltimore, and had laid out a continuation of it to Frederick, which was built by them in conjunction with the property-owners along the route. At Frederick a road branched off from the turnpike, and, passing through Winchester and Staunton, extended into Tennessee. For many years the people of Tennessee transported large quantities of cotton on this road to Baltimore. At Ellicott's Mills another road branched off through Montgomery County to Leesburg, Va. The public roads, previous to the establishment of the penitentiary system, were kept in order by gangs of convicts, known as wheelbarrow men. Each "gang" had an overseer, who carried a musket and side-arms. Houses built of logs were erected at intervals along the road, in which the convicts were confined at night. "One of these depots," says Martha E. Tyson, in her account of the settlement of Ellicott's Mills, "five miles from Baltimore, on the Frederick road, was standing until 1831, and continued to be pointed out as the spot where on two occasions an overseer had been murdered with bludgeons by the men under his charge. The murderers were tried, condemned, and executed." In the same memoir we find that "before the year 1783 the supply of wheat from the counties of Anne Arundel and Frederick having so much increased, the proprietors of Ellicott's mills, in anticipation of a peace with Great Britain, and the conclusion of the Revolutionary war, determined to make preparations for exporting their flour." The following is a list of the officers of turnpike companies in Frederick County:

Baltimore and Frederick Turnpike Company.

-At an election held May 13, 1805, the following officers were elected:

Frederick and Catoctin Mountain Turnpike Company.—Officers for 1881:

President, W. M. Peaga; Secretary, Theodore Schultz; Treasurer, D. C. Kemp; Additional Directors, A. W. Barkhart, McClinton Young, George T. Dill, John M. Whitmore, Albert F. Ramsburg.

Frederick and Emmittsburg Turnpike Company.—Directors for 1881:

Besides the above three there are ten (thirteen in all) turnpike roads, well graded and macadamized, in the county,—the National, Woodsboro', Liberty, Buckeystown, Liberty and New Windsor, Liberty, Johnsville and Pipe Creek, Sprout Spring, Monocacy and Lianganore, Union Bridge and Monocay, and Urbana roads.

The Monocacy is a fine stream, passing from York County, in Pennsylvania, through Frederick County, Md., and discharging itself into the Potomac about forty miles above Georgetown. In 1804 the rich farmers on that river advanced to the Potomac Company a sum of money on condition that it should be applied to improving the navigation from the junction of the Monocacy with the Potomac into the heart of Frederick County, and the work was completed in a manner to insure an uninterrupted communication by water between Washington and Frederick for at least nine or ten months in the year. It appears that the improvement was very beneficial to Georgetown, which was then one of the flourishing trading towns. In 1808 a bridge was built over the Monocacy on the line of the Baltimore turnpike.

On the 28th of June, 1823, a cave was discovered on the land of Mrs. Catharine Thomas, near the Monocacy, but was not then explored.

On Friday, March 17, 1854, the bridge, built in 1832–33, over the Monocacy, on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, fifty-nine miles from Baltimore, at the junction of the Branch road to Frederick City, was destroyed by fire.

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.—It can readily be conceded that nothing has tended more advantageously to the benefit of a country than the establishment of a railroad, and therefore, in considering the growth and progress of Western Maryland, this factor must be largely taken into consideration. "Cabinied, cribbed, and confined" as this portion of Maryland naturally is; hemmed in by apparently unaccessible mountains, and yet having within herself the means to branch out and advance the interests of not only one but many States, the question which presented itself was, how to overcome physical obstacles and bring her advantages before the general community? The inception, the struggles, and the ultimate triumph of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad are known not only to the people of this State, but to those of others which are rivals in commercial and industrial progress. The scheme, visionary as at first it may have been supposed to have been, which contemplated joining by iron bands the waters of the Potomac with those of the Ohio, was not intended simply for the benefit of Baltimore City, but aimed at giving to each part of Western Maryland, whether rich in cereals or in minerals, an opportunity for development and a chance to show to the rest of the continent the value of its products. In this the acumen and forethought of the first projectors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad were plainly visible, and, in fact, it may be said of them that they built better than they knew. They remembered that away back in the old days the National turnpike over the Alleghanies was the great high-road to the West; they saw that the disciples of old Brandley, the English engineer, who believed that God made the rivers to feed the canals, were clamoring for a hearing for their schemes, and so availed themselves of the new invention, feeling confident that soon every part of Western Maryland would have a share in the benefit and the glory. The result of to-day shows how far-seeing they were, how aptly all of their schemes have adapted themselves to the general good of the State, and how other parts of the country have learned a lesson from the perseverance and faith of such wise and patriotic men.
CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON.

It might almost be considered unnecessary here to go into the history of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, nor would it be, further than to show its connection with Western Maryland, and as it is an axiom that the greater includes the lesser, therefore that railroad of to-day comprises within it elements the strength of which has been gained simply by their connection with a productive section and clear-headed natives of Maryland. And yet the story is one which has in it so much of the practical, and yet withal so much of the romantic, that it deserves to be recorded.

There were two citizens of Baltimore, Philip E. Thomas and George Brown, who felt that not all the canals on the continent could ever surmount the Alleghanies, and who, after careful consideration, came to the conclusion that only railroads could be made practicable for such a purpose. A meeting was held by leading citizens of Baltimore for an interchange of views, and a plan for organization of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad drawn up, a committee of citizens of Baltimore being appointed to present it to the General Assembly, then in session in Annapolis, February, 1827. A few days only had elapsed when the act of incorporation was passed. All the preliminary conditions prescribed by the act of incorporation having been complied with, the construction of the railroad began.

On the 23d of April, 1827, the company was organized, and books of subscription to the capital stock were opened. Mr. Thomas was chosen president, and Mr. George Brown, treasurer. The directors elected were Charles Carroll of Carrollton, William Paterson, Robert Oliver, Alexander Brown, Isaac McKeen, William Lorman, George Hoffman, P. E. Thomas, John B. Morris, Thomas Elliott, Talbot Jones, and William Stewart.

The Legislature of Maryland in 1828 passed a bill subscribing five hundred thousand dollars to the stock of the company, and this, with the subscriptions of the city of Baltimore and those of individuals, rendered the capital stock of the company four millions of dollars. On the 4th of July, 1828, a day memorable in the history of Baltimore, the first stone of the railroad was laid by Charles Carroll of Carrollton with imposing Masonic ceremonies. On the 28th of July of the same year work on the road-bed was begun, and on May 22, 1830, the road was formally opened to Elliott's Mills. From that time it was rapidly pushed westward, and on November 12, 1831, was formally opened to Frederick. Up to this time horses had been the motive-power used on the road, but the period soon came when the locomotive outdistanced all competitors, and at the close of 1831 the practicability of using locomotives had been fully demonstrated.

In the location of the road the directors had determined to pass around the Point of Rocks and get through the Blue Ridge by way of Harper's Ferry Gap, but in 1828 an injunction was sued out in Washington County Court by the canal company, restraining the railroad company from acquiring title to the land until its own works had been located through the pass. Another injunction stopped the railroad from proceeding with the construction of the road beyond Point of Rocks. Litigation lasted until 1832, when the Court of Appeals decided that the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, as assignee of the Potomac Company, had the right of choice of route along the banks of the Potomac, and that the railroad company could not occupy any place along the river to restrict the canal company in the location of its works. This stopped the further progress of the road until the canal company had decided how much of the narrow strip of ground between the river and the precipitous walls of the mountain it desired to appropriate, and after it had exercised its right of election in this regard there was no room left for the railroad. Nothing remained for the railroad company but a "compromise" which would permit the joint occupation of the narrow passes between the Point of Rocks and Harper's Ferry, and to this end application was made to the Legislature for an act proposing a plan of agreement between the two companies. A committee of the House of Delegates, after inspecting the disputed passes, reported that there was room enough for both the canal and the railroad, and severely reprobated the canal company for stopping the westward extension of the road. No remedy could be applied, however, except to give the sanction of the Legislature to a compromise, the terms of which were set forth in the act of December, 1832. The railroad company was authorized to subscribe for 2500 shares of the canal stock, and the canal company was to be permitted to grade the road through the disputed passes, and to receive $100,000 for the work. The appointment of two commissioners was provided for in the act, who were empowered to carry its provisions into effect, both companies consenting thereto. After some negotiation, a settlement was effected, which closed the whole controversy. The railroad company paid the canal company in lieu of the stock subscription, and in satisfaction of all the conditions of the compromise act, the sum of $226,000; and further agreed that the railroad should not be pushed beyond Harper's Ferry until the canal reached Cumberland, provided that it got there at the time fixed in its charter, the year 1840. On the 9th of May, 1833, the construction of the railroad from Point of Rocks to Harper's Ferry was resumed, the work having been stopped five years by the controversy with the canal company.

The five years' blockade at the Point of Rocks, however, was not entirely without compensation. During that period the art of transporting passengers and freight by rail was thoroughly studied and mastered. The completed division of the main stem between Point of Rocks and Baltimore and the Washington branch were put into successful operation, and the speed and strength of the "iron horse" had been developed to a degree not dreamed of when the controversy with the canal company began. At the trial of locomotives in the summer of 1831 the "York" was regarded as a magnificent motor because it could draw a load of fifteen tons at the rate of fifteen miles an hour; but in 1834 the "Arabian," built by Phineas Davis, was making daily trips of eighty miles, oftentimes drawing a load of two hundred and twelve tons. Five other locomotives of equal power were doing the same service on the Washington branch, and when the road was opened between the two cities they made the trip in two hours and ten minutes. At the close of the year 1835 the company had seven locomotives, forty-four passenger-cars, and one thousand and seventy-eight freight-cars in daily use.

From 1835 to 1838 nothing was done towards the extension of the road beyond Harper's Ferry except the surveying of routes by the engineer corps. On April 2, 1838, the Virginia Legislature passed the act which required the company to locate the next ninety-two miles of its road in that State, and also to make Wheeling the western terminus. Work was resumed in the latter part of the year 1838, and during the next four years the company devoted its energies and resources mainly to the construction of the road from Harper's Ferry to Cumberland, a distance of ninety-seven miles. The approach to the Harper's Ferry bridge on the Virginia side was covered by the reservation on which the United States armory was located, but the Secretary of War gave the company permission to lay its track through these grounds. By taking the southern bank of the Potomac the railroad company left the canal company to the full enjoyment of its "paramount right" to the... northern bank, while the act of June 4, 1836, so far modified the compromise of 1833 as to allow the two works to proceed in the direction of Cumberland parti passo. The first division of one hundred miles of the main stem of the Baltimore and Ohio road ended at Martinsburg, and here extensive repair-shops were subsequently erected.

The road was opened to Cumberland, Nov. 5, 1842, and that city remained its western terminus during the next seven years. Singular as it may appear, but little importance was attached to the transportation of coal at the time the railroad company established its western depot there. The only mode of bringing coal to Cumberland in those days was by hauling it in wagons over mountain roads. The great mines which have since yielded many millions of tons had not then been opened, and it was in reality the wonderful impulse given to manufactures and to steam navigation on the ocean by the building of the great railways between the East and the West that created a demand for Cumberland coal.

During the year 1843 the president and directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Company scarcely thought it necessary to make any special preparations for the carrying of coal, and only four thousand nine hundred and sixty-four tons were brought to Baltimore during that year. Ross Winans had constructed an engine as early as 1842 which was capable of drawing eleven hundred tons on a level road and one hundred and seventy tons up a grade of eighty-two feet to the mile, so that the motive-power of the company was supposed to be equal to all the demands likely to be made upon it for the transportation of coal until railway communications had been established with the mines. The development of the Cumberland coal-mines, however, followed close upon the completion of the railroad to that point. In the year 1843 the Maryland and New York Iron and Coal Company began operations, and a railway connecting its extensive mines with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was projected. It was represented to the railroad company that the success of the mining company would depend largely upon the rate at which coal could be transported by rail from Cumberland to Baltimore, and that this would have to be determined in advance. At first the railroad company refused to enter into a permanent contract, because it would involve the expense of building a large number of cars especially designed for carrying coal; and in the event of a failure in the demand for coal, these cars could not be advantageously used in the transportation of ordinary freight. Subsequently, however, upon a guarantee being given that one hundred and seventy-five tons of coal per day would be furnished for three hundred days in the year, the company entered into a contract by which it agreed to transport coal from Cumberland to Baltimore for one and one-third cents per ton per mile, with ten cents per ton added for hauling the cars through the streets of Baltimore to the point of delivery, the cost of loading and unloading to be borne by the mining company. This contract was made early in January, 1844, but it was not to take effect until the projected railway to the mines had been completed.

In the mean time the canal had "stretched its slow length" along the tortuous banks of the Potomac as far as dam No. 6, forty-five miles east of Cumberland, and in the summer of 1843 was ready to begin the transportation of coal from that point. An arrangement was made between the canal company and the railroad company by which the latter agreed to carry coal from Cumberland to dam No. 6 and deliver it to the boatmen for two cents per ton per mile. At the ensuing session of the Legislature the subject of coal transportation was taken up by the House of Delegates, and an order was passed Jan. 25, 1844, calling upon the president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to answer certain interrogatories as to the cost of transporting coal by rail, and as to the facilities of the company for supplying the canal with coal at dam No. 6. The canal company had exhausted all its means, and was unable to prosecute its work any further without additional aid from the State, and the object of this inquiry seemed to be to determine whether it would be better to make dam No. 6 the terminus of the canal and depend upon the railroad for a supply of coal, or to postpone the liens of the State so as to permit the company to pledge its revenues for additional loans to complete the canal to Cumberland. In response to these inquiries, Mr. McLane submitted a statement to show that according to the established rates coal could be delivered at Georgetown at about the same cost for transportation whether the boats should be loaded from the railroad-trains at Cumberland or at dam No. 6. Mr. McLane further expressed the opinion that the demand for Cumberland coal would not exceed 100,000 tons a year for many years to come.

In this prediction Mr. McLane was mistaken, although the experience of the Baltimore and Ohio Company during the first four years after the opening of the coal trade was far from encouraging. Only 5,433 tons were carried in 1844; the next year the amount rose to 16,020 tons. The whole transportation of coal for four years was 44,840 tons. From this time forward the coal trade grew so rapidly that the company often found it difficult to provide transportation. Six new freight-engines built by Ross Winans were placed on the road in 1846, and nine more were added during the two succeeding years. In 1849 the coal carried eastward from Cumberland by rail aggregated 142,419 tons, and in 1850 the amount increased to 192,806 tons. The canal having been completed to Cumberland in 1850, began carrying coal from that point, and the immediate effect of the competition was largely increased shipments by rail. In 1860 the Baltimore and Ohio brought 493,031 tons of coal to Baltimore, 1,112,938 tons in 1870, and 2,255,146 tons in 1889.

The construction of the road westward from Cumberland did not begin until the year 1849. During the seven years' delay there public confidence had become weakened in the project; the increased demand for transportation imposed a large additional expense on the company for new rolling-stock; the credit of the State of Maryland having suffered through her temporary failure to pay interest on her bonds, it was impossible to dispose of the securities in which she had paid her last subscription, except at a ruinous sacrifice, and therefore the net revenue derived from working the road was yearly absorbed in expenditures, and no dividend could be declared. In the beginning of 1848, and at a critical period in the history of the road, Mr. Thomas Swann was elected one of the directors of the company, and very soon his energy and intelligence were seen. On Oct. 10, 1848, he was elected president of the company, and under his administration the road was built from Cumberland to Wheeling. He found the road resting at Cumberland in a state of semi-paralysis. Although a portion of the capital contributed by the State for its completion still remained, it was not available because the credit of both company and State was seriously impaired. Mr. Swann re-established this credit, and then succeeded in inducing the directors to proceed with the works and to let contracts for the construction of the whole western division. Heretofore the company had built its road mainly with the capital furnished by the State and the city of Baltimore, but the bounty of both the State and the city had been exhausted, and the company had nothing to rely on now save its own credit and its own resources. The remainder of the sterling bonds were sold, and when the money derived from this source had been expended, the president and directors of the road courageous faced the situation and advised the sale of the company's coupon bonds, authorized to be issued at the discretion of the president and directors by the act of 1845. Prior to this none of these bonds had been put on the market because the president and directors feared that they would fall below par, and the effect would be to still further impair the credit of the company. But when the alternative was presented of submitting to a discount or stopping work on the western division of the road, the company had no hesitation in deciding what ought to be done. The first lot of bonds offered were taken by a banking-house at eighty cents on the dollar, and then the price rose to eighty-seven cents. The effect upon the credit of the company was precisely the reverse of what had been predicted by those who opposed the selling of the bonds below par.

As already stated, the extension of the road westward from Cumberland was commenced in 1849. The engineers had not proceeded far before they again came in collision with the old claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company to the "paramount right" to occupy the narrow passes of the Potomac, but the difficulty was settled without litigation, and the company was permitted to build its road across and through the mountains without any further interruption from the "assignee of the Potomac Company, chartered in 1784," and soon got out of the region supposed to be covered by this ancient grant. On the 22d of July, 1851, the road was opened for travel to Piedmont, twenty-eight miles west of Cumberland, and on the 22d of June, 1852, the first train reached the Monongahela River. The conditional subscription of $500,000 to the capital stock of the company made by the city of Wheeling became available when the road crossed the Monongahela, and that sum was now added to the construction fund. In the fulfillment of a promise or a prophecy made by Mr. Swann two years before, the road was completed to Wheeling Jan. 1, 1853, and was formally opened from the Chesapeake to the Ohio by an excursion from Baltimore to Wheeling, Jan. 10, 1853. The municipal authorities of Wheeling gave a grand complimentary banquet to the visitors on January 12th, at which George Brown, the first treasurer of the company, and who, in connection with Philip E. Thomas, had first suggested the building of a railway from tide-water to the Ohio River, gave a most interesting historical sketch of the early history of the road.

No railroad two hundred miles in length was ever before constructed through a region presenting so many natural obstacles in so short a time as the western division of the Baltimore and Ohio. The contracts were given out in the summer of 1849, and the road was opened for travel throughout its entire length Jan. 10, 1853. Notwithstanding the vastly improved appliances that have been invented since 1836 for boring tunnels and building bridges, no such rapidity of construction has been witnessed on this side of the Rocky Mountains up to the present time. There are twelve tunnels between Cumberland and Wheeling, the aggregate length of which is ten thousand five hundred feet (two miles); the longest is the great tunnel at Kingwood, four thousand one hundred feet, which cost $469,000. There are also one hundred and fourteen bridges on this division of the road, some of which are splendid structures. The construction of a railroad two hundred miles in length across a series of parallel mountain ranges, tunneling such as could not be outflanked or graded, in the space of three years was a marvelous achievement. This division of the road cost, in round numbers, $8,000,000. Up to the time of its completion the whole line between Baltimore and Wheeling had cost $17,500,000, in round numbers, and the laying of a second track, the purchase of real estate, and the stocking of the road with locomotives and cars brought the whole expenditure up to $22,000,000, this sum being more than three times the amount of the original estimate. The common stock of the company had been issued to the amount of $9,901,500, of which 6855 shares ($885,500) were held by the State of Maryland, 42,582 shares ($4,258,200) by the city of Baltimore, 5000 shares ($500,000) by the city of Wheeling, and 46,478 shares ($4,647,800) by individuals. To this must be added the 30,000 shares of preferred six per cent. stock issued under the provisions of the act of June 4, 1836, and held by the State of Maryland ($3,000,000), making the entire stock debt of the company $13,091,500. Up to this time coupon bonds secured by mortgage had been issued to the amount of $5,677,012.

Since that time the history of the road has been one of progress. As soon as the line had been laid to the Ohio River, Mr. Swann resigned the presidency, and Chauncey Brooks was elected to the position. On Nov. 17, 1858, he in turn resigned, and John W. Garrett was elected to fill the place. Eminently fitted by a severe course of business training for the work, he applied all his energies to the development of the road and to the pushing of it forward into the West, where formerly other lines had a monopoly of traffic. The wisdom of this aggressive policy was soon felt, and in spite of difficulties and opposition the road grew in importance, until now the whole State feels the benefit of its presence, and agricultural and mechanical industries have grown fourfold.

The act of the Legislature of Maryland of June 4, 1836, imposed certain restrictions and limitations upon the railroad company relating to its construction from Harper's Ferry westward, most of which were avoided by crossing to the south side of the Potomac River; but the railroad company, by locating this division of the road in Virginia, violated one of the provisions of the act, which gave great dissatisfaction in Western Maryland, and led to further controversy in the Legislature and in the courts. It was enacted that the road should run through Boonsboro' and Hagerstown, and thence to Cumberland, and it was provided that in the event of any other route being chosen the company should forfeit one million of dollars to the State of Maryland, for the use of Washington County. The company having selected the Virginia route, the commissioners of Washington County brought suit in Frederick County Circuit Court for the amount forfeited. The Legislature repealed the act of June 4, 1836, and upon appeal the Court of Appeals decided that the forfeiture was in the nature of a penalty, which the Legislature could remit, and which was in fact remitted by the repeal of the act.

At the close of the year 1843 the railroad company found itself without authority to enter either Virginia or Pennsylvania, through one or the other of which it was necessary to pass to reach the Ohio River. The five years' limitation of the Virginia act had expired, as well as the fifteen years' limitation of the Pennsylvania act.

Other railroads from the East to the Ohio River were contemplated, and new interests had arisen to antagonize the company. The Pennsylvania act of 1828, authorizing the company to locate its road through that State, contemplated Pittsburgh as its western terminus, or in the event of any other route being selected, that a branch road to Pittsburgh should be constructed. The Pennsylvania act of 1836 provided for a railroad connection with the Baltimore and Ohio at Hagerstown or Williamsport. The people of Western Pennsylvania had been and as late as 1846 were anxious that the road should go to Pittsburgh. After a protracted contest in the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1846, an act was passed authorizing the construction of the "Connellsville Road," and at that early day a large number of the merchants of Baltimore, as well as the stockholders of the railroad, favored Pittsburgh as the western terminus. The Virginia Legislature refused the right of way through that State as long as there was any probability that Pittsburgh would become the western terminus. It was not until 1847 that an act unencumbered with restrictions conferred the authority to enter the State of Virginia, and this grant was coupled with the imperative condition that Wheeling should be the western terminus of the main stem. This act the company accepted. The idea of a connection with Pittsburgh was not abandoned because the road had been driven by Virginia to Wheeling. The extension of the Connelsville road to Cumberland was regarded as a matter of vital importance to Baltimore, and hence that city authorized, in 1856, a loan of $1,000,000 in city stock to the Connellsville company, upon which the city paid the interest for nineteen years, without receiving any return. In 1875 the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company assumed the payment of the principal and arrears of interest, amounting together to $2,235,000. The route from Cumberland to Pittsburgh is comparatively direct, and one hundred and forty-nine miles in distance, and passes through a highly productive country. Benjamin H. Latrobe, in 1856, became president of the Connellsville company, and devoted his energies to the completion of the road to Cumberland, and during his administration, the road was extended from Turtle Creek to Pittsburgh, which was accomplished in 1861. The breaking out of the war put an end for the time to the construction of the road, and left an unfinished gap of ninety-one miles, upon which about $200,000 had been expended. Upon the return of peace work was resumed, and prosecuted as well as the means at hand would permit until April 11, 1871, when the cities of Baltimore and Cumberland and Pittsburgh were united by rail. The Connellsville road is located for a very great distance along the route surveyed in 1754 by Gen. Washington for an available wagon road to transport army supplies from Fort Cumberland to Fort Duquesne.

The Washington County Branch, which connects the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad with Hagerstown, was completed in September, 1867; the railroad company furnishing $400,000, Washington County $150,000, and private subscriptions $200,000 of the capital.

The progress of the road is marked by the periods of opening to the principal points along its route, as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Point</th>
<th>Opening Dates</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ellicott's Mills</td>
<td>24th May, 1830</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freddie</td>
<td>20th August, 1830</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederick</td>
<td>1st Dec., 1831</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Point of Rocks</td>
<td>1st April, 1832</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harper's Ferry</td>
<td>1st Dec., 1834</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bladensburg</td>
<td>20th July, 1834</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington</td>
<td>1st June, 1842</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Opposite Hancock</td>
<td>20th August, 1834</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cumberland</td>
<td>5th Nov., 1842</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Packiment</td>
<td>21st July, 1831</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fairmount</td>
<td>22d June, 1852</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wheeling</td>
<td>1st Jan., 1853</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hagerstown</td>
<td>Sept., 1857</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pittsburgh</td>
<td>11th April, 1871</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Metropolitan Branch</td>
<td>25th May, 1873</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Metropolitan Branch from Washington, D.C., to the main stem at the Point of Rocks was constructed under the act of 1870, reviving the power and provisions of the expired act of 1856. It is forty-three miles in length, and cost $3,583,497. The junction at the Point of Rocks is sixty-nine miles west of Baltimore.

The Packersburg Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad—formerly the Northwestern Virginia Railroad—was chartered in 1851 and completed in 1857. It extends from Grafton on the main stem to Packersburg on the Ohio River, a distance of one hundred and four miles, and is the middle division of the "short" line between Baltimore and Cincinnati. The road was built principally with funds furnished by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company by indorsement of the bonds for $1,500,000, and cash advanced at various times amounting to $2,000,000. The city of Baltimore also indorsed the bonds of the company for $1,500,000, the payment of which the Baltimore and Ohio afterwards assumed. The road is leased to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

The Frederick City Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad enters Frederick County at a point near Parr's Spring, and extends across the southern portion of it to Weverton, a distance of thirty-six miles, with a branch from Monocacy Junction to Frederick City of three miles.

The stations, entering the county from the east, are Plane Number Four, Monrovia, Ijamsville, Frederick Junction, Lime-Kiln, Adamstown, Washington Junction (Point of Rocks), Lander (Catoctin Switch), Berlin, Knoxville, and Weverton.

The road was opened to Frederick, Dec. 1, 1831, a distance of sixty-one miles from Baltimore. The event was celebrated with appropriate ceremonies, the president, Philip E. Thomas, and directors participating, accompanied by a large number of guests, among whom were Hon. George Howard, Governor of Maryland, Judge Baldwin of the Supreme Court of the United States, the mayor and the corporation of Baltimore (specially invited by the Board of Aldermen and Common Council of Frederick), Gen. Stewart, William Gwynn, Gen. Marriott, J. S. Skinner, and a large number of others. Five cars came from Baltimore, in which were passengers the president (Hon. Philip E. Thomas) and directors of the road, the mayor and both branches of the City Council, the Governor of the State (Hon. George Howard), and a number of the officers of the company, about seventy persons in all. The citizens of Frederick gave the entire party a grand reception and dinner at Talbott's (now the City Hotel). The arrival of the cars was announced by the firing of cannon, the ringing of bells, and other jubilating demonstrations. The car "Frederick" was placed first in the train. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at that time sixty miles in length, was the longest railroad in the world. The fare from Frederick to Baltimore was one dollar and eighty cents, or three cents per mile,—just five cents more than the present competing rate of one dollar and seventy-five cents. One train left there daily at nine A.M. From the commencement of its running passengers from the West by stage over the National turnpike, the great thoroughfare of that era, were brought only as far as this point.

The Railroad Accident of 1877.—On June 12, 1877, an excursion-party of over six hundred persons, left Frederick City at 6.45 A.M. for Washington and Mount Vernon. In this party was represented nearly every family of Frederick and many from the county. The train was composed of thirteen coaches, and was in charge of Capt. R. Cooper, with Frank Bond, an old employé, in charge of the passengers. The train sped smoothly along, until suddenly, at about 7.45 A.M., within half a mile of the junction of the main stem with the Metropolitan Branch Road, and without a word of warning or the sound of a whistle, there was a sudden jar followed by a crush, and the train was a wreck. It had collided with an east-bound train. The passengers in the rear cars, which fortunately were not involved in the wreck, were seized with consternation. Some jumped out of the rear windows and from the platforms, but so sudden was the accident, and so soon the cessation of the jar, that comparatively few of them became panic-stricken. But the scene presented by the cars which had suffered was appalling in the extreme. The coaches attached to the locomotive of the eastward-bound train were unoccupied. When the engines collided the concussion drove them back about a hundred yards from the wreck. The engines were both complete wrecks, and the two adjoining cars of the train. Coaches Nos. 56 and 67, containing about one hundred excursionists, were completely telescoped. Some were crushed to death, and many maimed and injured. Five were killed outright. Of these, one was Charles H. Keefer, the head of the firm of Keefer & Knauff, of the Frederick Examiner. He was the son of the late Hiram Keefer, and was born in 1835. As an apprentice he entered the Examiner printing-office in 1849, and became a member of the firm of Schley, Haller & Co. in 1858. By a subsequent change in 1863 he became second member of the firm, then known as Schley, Keefer & Co. Again, in 1865, another business change made Mr. Keefer senior partner, under the name of Keefer, Smith & Co., while in 1875 the present firm of Keefer & Knauff was established. Mr. Keefer, at the time of his death, was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, president of the board of trustees of Montevue Hospital, corresponding secretary of the County Agricultural Society, one of the managers of the Poor Association, a director in the Franklin and Citizens' Building Association, a member of the Standing Committee of the Junior Fire Company, and a member of the O. U. A. M. and I. O. O. F. In 1859 he married a niece of the late Abram Kemp. He was a member of the Reformed Church, in which he had been deacon, and treasurer of its Sunday-school. He was one of Frederick's most popular and influential citizens. Another of the killed was Richard P. T. Dutrow, a prominent farmer, and formerly a member of the Legislature. He had not been on the train over five minutes, having joined the excursionists at Adamstown. He was born in Buckeystown District in 1828, and in 1868 was elected a delegate to the Legislature, and in 1875 chosen as a county commissioner. He married a daughter of Capt. William Lakin, of Jefferson District. The third was Howard Eugene Dixon, about twenty years of age, who lived in West All-Saints' Street with his widowed mother. He was employed at McMurray's packing establishment, and was highly esteemed. The fourth, J. Dorsey Walker, lived in New Market District, and was not quite twenty-one years old. He was a young man of industrious habits and greatly respected. The fifth was Louis H. Schley, a son of Dr. Fairfax Schley, a most popular and promising young man, who had his legs broken, crushed, and fearfully lacerated, and also received internal injuries, which resulted the same day in his death. On the same train with him were his father, mother, and his two sisters. He was born December, 1854, and in 1875 graduated with high honors at Franklin and Marshall College. On his graduation he delivered the "Franklin and Marshall" oration, the highest honor of the institution. On his return from college his father retired from business, and transferred his drug-store to his two sons, Steiner and Lewis H. At the annual election for elders and deacons in the Reformed Church, on Easter Monday, 1877, young Mr. Schley was chosen to the diaconate by the congregation, an honor seldom conferred upon one so young in years. His remains were intered in Mount Olivet Cemetery June 13th, Rev. E. R. Esbach officiating. Among the injured were Col. Charles E. Traill, Leonard C. Mullinix, leg broken; William Bartgis and Henry Brashears, each with a leg broken; Enoch Green, leg broken and serious internal injuries; engineer George Buckey, arm badly hurt; the fireman of engine No. 410, head badly cut; a son of Col. George R. Dennis, arm broken; Luther Knowdle and Isaac Ely, internal injuries; John B. Thomas, John Dadishman, Peter Lugenbeel, L. Clinton Moberly, William Nash Young, William Harrison, Adam Notnagle, H. N. Etchison, G. Fenton Snouffer, and his son William Snouffer, all badly cut or bruised. The extent of the calamity being unknown when the first news reached the city, the entire population of Frederick were overwhelmed with grief. The telegraph-office was besieged by the anxious friends of the excursionists, and as the news began to arrive of the deaths of some and the injuries that had befallen others, it was at first feared that the entire train had been destroyed and the whole party more or less injured. The day will long be remembered in Frederick as one of the darkest in its history.

Agricultural Societies.—About 1821 there was a marked awakening among the agricultural population of Frederick County as to the necessity of adopting improved methods of husbandry and of infusing new life and energy into their work, if they would maintain their standard as the most prosperous and enterprising community in the State. One of the first steps in this direction was recognized at once to be the combination of their individual energies, in order that they might advance in order and harmony and reap the benefit of the experience and advice of all. Accordingly, on the 7th of November, 1821, the Frederick County Agricultural Society was organized. The officers elected were:

Prezident, William E. Williams; Vice-Presidents, District 1, Col. Henry Kemp; 2, Col. John McPherson; 3, John Thomas; 4, James Johnson; 5, Col. G. M. Eichelberger; 6, William P. Farquhar; 7, Jesse Slingluff; 8, Joshua Delaplaine; 9, William Marcel; Secretary, Henry Willis; Treasurer, Thomas Shaw.

Its first exhibition, then called "cattle-show and fair," was held on May 23 and 24, 1822, at George Creager's tavern. Monocacy Bridge, two miles east of Frederick City, and was the first ever held in the county, and the second in the State. At this fair liberal premiums in money were paid to the successful competitors of fine stock.

The next venture was the "Farmers' Club," organized Nov. 22, 1849. Its officers were:

President, Gideon Bantz; Treasurer, Ezra Houck; Recording Secretary, S. H. O'Neal; Corresponding Secretary, E. B. Baitzell; Vice-Presidents, one from each election district, as follows: Frederick, Richard Potts; Middletown, Peter Schlosser; New Market, Harry Dorsey; Liberty, S. D. Wardfield; Woodsborough, Chester Coleman; Creagerstown, William Todd; Emmittsburg, Peter Grable; Petersville, Henry Dunlap; Buckeystown, J. L. Davis; Jefferson, William Lynch; Urbana, John Montgomery; Catoctin, George Blessing; Harver's, J. Harbaugh; Managers, Edward Buckey, Christian Steiner, T. H. O'Neal, Valentine Adams, J. Brower.

On March 5, 1850, William Baer delivered an address before the club on "The different combinations of the soil, effects, mode of treatment, etc." No exhibition seems to have been held by it, though it held many meetings for discussion, at one of which a committee was appointed on manure and inspection, consisting of Wm. Baer, Samuel O. Tyler, and Chester Coleman, who made thereon a very interesting and exhaustive report.

On Jan. 12, 1853, in obedience to a call of many farmers, there was organized "The Agricultural Club of Frederick County," which was to hold annual exhibitions, and monthly meetings for instruction, discussion, etc. It adopted the constitution and by-laws of its predecessor, the "Farmers' Club." Its officers were:

President, Lewis Kemp; Vice-Presidents, William Richardson, Gideon Bantz, H. W. Dorsey, D. W. Naill, R. Y. Stokes, David Thomas, John C. Lane, Noah Phillips, Joseph Eichelberger, George P. Fox, Michael Bantz, Henry Dunlap, William Lynch, George Blessing, David Schindler; Secretary, S. H. O'Neal; Corresponding Secretary, Charles E. Trail; Treasurer, Christian Steiner; Managers, Valentine Adams, R. J. Lamar, B. A. Cunningham, William A. Albaugh, Cornelius Staley.

Its first exhibition was held Oct. 12, 13, and 14, 1853, on the "Barracks" grounds, the east wing of the Barracks being fitted up for domestic fabrics, machinery, etc. The officers in different years were as follows:

1854.—President, Lewis Kemp; Vice-Presidents, William Richardson, Gideon Bantz, H. W. Dorsey, Gen. Anthony Kimmel, R. Y. Stokes, Griffin Taylor, John S. Motter, John Norris, Dr. William S. McPherson, George P. Fox, John Grabie, William Lynch, David Schindler, George Blessing, William C. Landers; Secretary, S. H. O'Neal; Managers, Frederick District, Cornelius Staley, W. F. Johnson, Ross Johnson, John F. Cringin, Lewis G. Kemp, John McPherson, of Wm., John Bender, Valentine Albaugh, John H. Bruner, Abraham Kemp, Worthington Johnson; Mount Pleasant District, R. J. Lamar, Joseph Rountzahn, William S. Miller; Buckeystown, Michael Keefer, Dr. G. Gideon, J. M. Buckey, A. J. Snouffer; Woodsborough, William A. Albaugh; Petersville, Outerbridge Horsley; Urbana, R. G. McPherson; Jefferson, J. Q. A. Kemp, J. W. Charlton, G. P. Rainsburg; Middletown, Samuel Bowles; New Market, Dr. N. V. Shiplay; Liberty, John Phillips, G. W. Dutrow; Creagerstown, Michael Zimmerman; Emmittsburg, Matthew Moran; Harver's, David Wolf; Catoctin, Samuel Wolf; Jackson, David Kailer, John C. Lane. On June 5, 1854, "The Agricultural Club" was incorporated into "The Agricultural Society of Frederick County," which name it has borne under that act of incorporation to the present day.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

1856.—President, O. Dorsey; Secretary and Treasurer, S. H. O’Neal.

1857 and 1858.—President, Valentine Adams; Secretary and Treasurer, Christian Thomas.

1859.—President, Cornelius Staley; Secretary and Treasurer, Christian Thomas.

1860.—President, Cornelius Staley; Secretary and Treasurer, Edward Shriver.

1861.—President, Edward Buckey; Vice-President, Lewis M. Thomas; Secretary, William Mahony; Treasurer, Edward Shriver. The war stopped all exhibitions, and from the fair held in 1860, the last one on the Barracks grounds, no exhibitions were again held until 1868. The officers elected for the year 1861 held over for six years, during which period no election took place.

1867.—President, C. Keefer Thomas; Vice-President, John Lots; Recording Secretary, William Mahony; Corresponding Secretary, James McSheery, Jr.; Treasurer, Edward Shriver. In September of this year the society purchased for $4500 about thirty acres of land of Gen. Edward Shriver, and subsequently a small addition of Mr. Falconer, making its total area some thirty-three acres, on which it erected commodious and substantial buildings.

1868.—President, C. Keefer Thomas; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Treasurer, Calvin Page. This year the first fair held since 1860 was held on the new grounds.

1869.—President, C. Keefer Thomas; Vice-President, John Lots; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1870.—President, Dr. Fairfax Schley; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Corresponding Secretary, Charles H. Keefer; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1871.—President, John Lots; Vice-President, Dr. F. Schley; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Corresponding Secretary, Charles H. Keefer; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1872 and 1873.—President, Dr. Fairfax Schley; Vice-President, B. J. Snouffer; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Corresponding Secretary, Charles H. Keefer; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1874.—President, B. J. Snouffer; Vice-President, William H. Falconer; Secretary, H. C. Koehler; Corresponding Secretary, Charles H. Keefer; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1875.—Same officers except Otis Johnson, secretary.

1876 and 1877.—President, William H. Falconer; Vice-President, James H. Gambrill; Secretary, George Morgan; Corresponding Secretary, Charles H. Keefer; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

1878 and 1879.—President, James H. Gambrill; Vice-President, Dr. Fairfax Schley; Secretary, W. Noah Young; Corresponding Secretary, J. William Baumgann; Treasurer, Calvin Page.

For many years the Frederick County fair, acknowledged to be the best in Maryland, and probably not surpassed by any in the country, has been visited by the Presidents of the United States, accompanied by other distinguished dignitaries, civil and military. The exhibition of 1880 was universally fine. Among those present were President Hayes and part of his cabinet. The unsightly booths which formerly disfigured the grounds and incommoded progress, gave way in that year to a more convenient and systematic arrangement. Additional stalls were erected for the accommodation of stock, and an experienced veterinary surgeon was in attendance, who inspected the entries and prevented the introduction of infectious diseases. The half-mile race-track is one of the finest in the Union, and the grand stand is a large, commodious structure. The exhibition of 1880 surpassed in attraction and interest any of its predecessors, and proved a fruitful source of pride and pleasure to the citizens of the county. The society is entirely exempt from debt, and has a surplus sufficient for all emergencies and to meet the requirements and improvements which the experience of the past has suggested. The annual address was delivered by Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, United States senator from Indiana, and on the same day occurred the grand bicycle tournament. A military parade and review followed on the next day (Thursday). The fair was held on October 12, 13, 14, and 15th. The various committees were as follows:

In the office department—For short-horns, the assistant marshal was Daniel Padgett; Judges, Jacob Walker, Ezra M. Thomas, Dr. Charles Goldsborough. For Devon, Marshal, C. T. F. Howard; Judges, John L. Nicodemus, Samuel H. Brown, George C. Gaither. For Allermen, Marshal, George Bruner; Judges, D. C. Kemp, Christian Thomas, George W. Padgett. For Herefords, Marshal, Charles Hargate; Judges, Wm. S. Miller, Francis T. Lakin, L. C. Cookerley. For Holsteins, Marshal, Worthington Glaze; Judges, Reuben G. D. Rice, John Diller, Samuel Miller, Fat Cattle, Marshal, R. Claude Dutow; Judges, Wm. Kolb, Frederick Henline, Geo.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

The financial exhibit of the society for the year ending Dec. 31, 1880, showed the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Item</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Receipts</td>
<td>$4263.31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>$4263.31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disbursements</td>
<td>$2940.30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Premiums for 1879 and 1880</td>
<td>$2888.80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Employees during fair</td>
<td>$553.15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Printing, telegrams, and postage</td>
<td>$714.11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New buildings and repairs</td>
<td>$4079.41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Discount on $2000 note (renewal)</td>
<td>$329.75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music and incidental expenses</td>
<td>$523.08</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>W. T. Preston's note</td>
<td>$242.53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Collections yet to be made</td>
<td>$250.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cash balance on hand</td>
<td>$156.29</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The fair-grounds are eligible and beautifully located some three-eighths of a mile east of Frederick City, and comprise in utility and beauty everything necessary to promote the accommodation and pleasure of visitors.

To the active agency and energetic labors of Dr. Fairfax Schley, more than to any other person, is due the great success of the Frederick County Agricultural Society in the last few years. With his administration began a new era in the history of the society. In the midst of all his business engagements he has devoted much time and given great attention to its affairs, until now it is one of the most successful agricultural societies in the country.

Although retired from active medical practice since the year 1855, Fairfax Schley, of Frederick City, is still best known as Dr. Schley. His great-great-grandfather, Thomas Schley, came from the Palatinate, in Germany, about 1730, and in 1745 erected the first house upon the site of what is now Frederick City. One of his sons, Jacob Schley, was a captain in the Revolution. One of Thomas Schley's grandsons was William Schley, member of Congress and Governor of Maryland.
of Georgia, in which Schley County was named for him. John, his brother, occupied the Supreme Bench in Georgia, while another brother rose likewise to eminent judicial honor. Henry Schley, father to Fairfax Schley, was born in Frederick City in 1793, and died there in 1871. In early life he was engaged in business in Baltimore with his uncles, Henry Schroeder and Jacob Schley. In 1814 he entered the Federal service as adjutant of a Maryland regiment (of which Col. Cramer was commander), and participated in the battles of Bladensburg and North Point. Upon the termination of the campaign he made his home in Frederick City, and during many subsequent years occupied various places of important public trust, notably as clerk of Frederick County and cashier of the Frederick County Bank. He married Sarah Maria, daughter of Dr. Edward Worrell, of Kent County, Md., where the Worrells have ranked for full a century among the most prominent of families. Mrs. Schley died in 1869. Three sons survive.—Col. John Edward Schley, of West Virginia, Charles Schley, of Milwaukee (who married one of Bradley T. Johnson's sisters), and Dr. Schley, of Frederick. Dr. Schley was born in Frederick City, Oct. 11, 1825, and in Frederick has always had his home. He attended school at Frederick College, and completed a full classical course. Upon the foundation thus obtained he so improved and expanded his knowledge, that for years, and to this time, he has stood as a recognized authority in the field of classics.

He studied medicine under Dr. William Tyler, of Frederick, afterwards attended the University of Pennsylvania, and in 1847 graduated at the University of Maryland. Frederick City was the field of his first practice, and, indeed, his last, for after pursuing his professional labors until 1855 his health gave way and he was reluctantly compelled to desist. His active temperament was not, however, disposed to let him rest, and concluding that, as business he must have, he would follow that most in sympathy with his profession; he therefore embarked in the drug trade, and for twenty years, or until 1876, gave it his close attention, and gained therefrom bountiful results. In 1876 he retired from the business in favor of his two sons, Steiner and Lewis H. The latter, a youth of brilliant promise, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, and a finished scholar, lost his life in a railway collision at Point of Rocks in July, 1877. Dr. Schley was married in 1847 to Ann R., daughter of Christian Steiner, of Frederick. Of their four children two daughters and one son survive. Although of decided political opinions and keenly alive to the movement of public affairs, he is, and ever has been, opposed to participation in the pursuit of office or the active direction of party politics, despite the fact that he has often been urged to stand in nomination. The satisfaction he finds in life is largely made up of the results that flow from the exercise of his philanthropy and charity. He is connected in many ways with public charities, stands among the foremost as a practical worker in that field, and beyond that devotes much of his time and substance in a private way to the noble work of assisting the worthy poor. Besides being president of the Frederick County Agricultural Society, he is a director in the Central National Bank, a trustee of Frederick College, and chairman of the executive committee of the Deaf and Dumb Institution, in which last named he has always felt a deep and abiding interest,—an interest that has been manifested by earnest and zealous labors in behalf of the progress and prosperity of the institution, and the placing thereof upon a model which should stand as an object of approval and admiration abroad as well as at home.

CHAPTER XXIII.

DISTINGUISHED MEN OF FREDERICK COUNTY.

FREDERICK County has furnished much more than its quota of men of exceptional capacity in various walks of life. In addition to the great lawyers whose careers have already been described, some of the most distinguished statesmen and soldiers of the Revolution and of later periods have either been born in Frederick or have made that county their home. Of these none has been more conspicuous than John Hanson, president of the Continental Congress in the fall of 1781. John Hanson was the son of Samuel and Elizabeth Hanson, and was a member of one of the oldest and most influential families in Maryland. He was born in Charles County, Md., in 1715, and represented his native county in the House of Delegates at every session, with few exceptions, from 1757 to 1773, when he removed to Frederick County, which he likewise represented in the same body until his election to the Continental Congress in 1781. He took an active and leading part in the preliminary agitation against the arbitrary legislation of the British Parliament, and in June, 1769, he signed, with others, the non-importation agreement of Maryland. In June, 1774, he was elected chairman of a meeting in Frederick County which adopted resolutions to stop all exports to and imports from Great Britain and the West Indies until the blockade of the port of Boston should be raised by the British government. Upon the formation of the Committee of Observation for Frederick County, in September, 1775, he was elected chairman, and retained that position until the Constitution of 1776 was carried into effect. He also filled positions on various important committees, among them the Provincial Committee for Licensing Suits, the Provincial Committee of Correspondence, and the Committee for the building of a military jail, or barracks, at Frederick, where a large number of prisoners of war were confined. During his chairmanship of the Committee of Observation the formidable Tory conspiracy of Lord Dunmore and White Eyes, an Indian chief, was discovered and frustrated. In 1775 he was commissioned treasurer of the county, and was appointed by the Convention of Maryland to establish a gun-lock factory at Frederick. With James Lloyd Chamberlaine, Benjamin Ramsey, and Thomas Contee, he was appointed member of a commission by the Convention of Maryland, Oct. 9, 1776, to appoint officers and to encourage the re-enlistment of Maryland militia and regular troops whose terms of service in the Continental army were about expiring. Mr. Hanson was elected to the Continental Congress, and presented his credentials Feb. 22, 1781. He was elected president on the 5th of November following, which position he filled for one year, with such fidelity as to receive the formal thanks of Congress. Under instructions from the Legislature of Maryland, John Hanson and Daniel Carroll signed the Articles of Confederation on the part of their State, March 1, 1781. Mr. Hanson was not only a man of conspicuous ability, but possessed great firmness and energy of character, and probably contributed more than any other individual to vivify and strengthen the Revolutionary cause in Western Maryland. He married Miss Jane Contee, and had a number of children, among them Alexander Contee Hanson, afterwards chancellor; another son, Samuel Hanson, was surgeon of Washington’s Life-Guards; and still another, Peter Contee Hanson, was a lieutenant in the First Battalion Maryland Infantry, and was mortally wounded at Fort Washington in 1776. John Hanson died Nov. 22, 1783, at Oxen Hill, Prince George’s Co., while visiting his nephew, Thomas Hanson.

Isaac Shelby. The life and character of Isaac Shelby is well worthy of the attention of every American, and Maryland may enjoy great pride in having given birth to a man so remarkable. The record of his father, Gen. Evan Shelby, is that of a man distinguished for indomitable courage, iron constitution, and clear intellect. A Welshman by birth, Gen. Evan Shelby came to this country a mere lad, who settled near Hagerstown, then in Frederick, but now Washington County, Md. In 1758 he distinguished himself as a captain of rangers under Gen. Forbes, leading the advance upon Fort Du Quesne. In 1772 he removed to the West, and in 1774 commanded a company, under Lewis and Dunmore, in an expedition against the Indians on the Scioto River. In 1779 he led a strong force against the Chicamauga Indians on the Tennessee River, and for his services and gallantry was appointed a brigadier-general by the State of Virginia, the first officer of that grade appointed in the West.

Such was the father of Isaac Shelby. He was born near Hagerstown, now Washington County, but then in Frederick County, Md., Dec. 11, 1750, and blessed with a firm and herculean frame, inured to the use of arms, capable of sustaining great fatigue, he was peculiarly fitted for the scenes in which he was destined to become so prominent an actor. In the great battle of Kanawha, Oct. 10, 1774, on the Ohio River, he had his first experience of fighting as a lieutenant in a company commanded by his father. The action, one of the most severe and sanguinary conflicts of the Indian wars, was fought with varying success from sunrise to sunset; night closed the conflict; in the darkness Corstall, who commanded the Indians, abandoned the ground. He was employed as a surveyor under Judge Henderson’s company in Kentucky, amid the dangers, privations, and difficulties that beset the “dark and bloody ground,” under which his health gave way, and he returned home.

In 1777, Governor Patrick Henry, of Virginia, appointed him commissary of supplies for a large body of troops guarding the frontier, and the commissioners who were appointed to treat with the Cherokees, at Long Island, on the Holston River. In 1778 he represented Washington County in the Virginia House of Delegates, and was appointed by Governor Thomas Jefferson a major in the escort of guards to the commissioners for extending the boundary line between Virginia and North Carolina; by this line as established his residence was found to be in North Carolina, and he was appointed by Governor Richard Caswell, of North Carolina, colonel of Sullivan County. The fall of Charleston in 1780 recalled him from his surveying and locating of lands in Kentucky, and he enlisted for the war, determining never to leave the service till the liberty and independence of the country were established. On his arrival in Sullivan County, N. C., he found a requisition from Gen. Charles McDowell to furnish all the aid in his power to check the enemy, who, having overrun Georgia and South Carolina, had entered North Carolina. In a few days he enlisted three hundred mounted men from the militia, and crossed the Allegheny Mountains, and reported to Gen. McDowell, near Cherokee Ford, on Broad River, and was detached with Cols. Saviel and Clarke to surprise and capture a fort held by Capt. Patrick Moore, a Tory, on the waters of Pacolet, which was accomplished without loss of time or men. The enemy surrendered as prisoners of war. Maj. Ferguson, of the British army, had been detached by Gen. Cornwallis with a strong force to overcome the western part of North Carolina and win them to the support of the crown. The vigilance and activity of Shelby frustrated every attempted surprise, and on the 1st of August, 1780, at Cedar Spring, the advance of the British force came up and attacked Shelby on ground selected by that adventurous spirit. A sharp conflict ensued, which lasted half an hour, when the whole force of Ferguson advanced. Shelby fell back, carrying with him fifty prisoners, including two British officers, who were secured notwithstanding the vigorous pursuit of Ferguson. At Musgrove's Mills, and at the Cowpens and Ninety-Six, Shelby rendered such valuable services that the Legislature of North Carolina voted him their thanks, accompanied with a splendid sword. In 1781, Shelby served under Marion, and captured a British force of one hundred and fifty men at Fairlawn, near Monk's Corner. He obtained leave of absence to attend the Legislature, of which he was a member, and in 1782, while a member, was appointed a commissioner to settle the pre-emption claims upon the Cumberland, and lay off the lands allotted to the officers and soldiers south of where Nashville stands. Having performed this service, he returned to Boonsboro', Ky., and married Susanna Hart. After peace was established he settled upon his farm, which was the first pre-emption and settlement granted in Kentucky. He was a member of the Convention in Kentucky to obtain a separation of that State from Virginia, and was a member of the Convention, in April, 1792, that formed the constitution of that State, and was elected the first Governor of Kentucky. He was again elected Governor in 1812-16, and with spirit not calmed by the frost of age, at the request of the Legislature, though sixty-three years of age, he headed in person four thousand troops, and marched under Gen. Harrison in 1813 to Canada, and for his gallantry at the battle of the Thames Congress honored him with a gold medal. In 1817 he was called to the War Department by President Monroe, but he declined the honor on account of advanced age. In 1818, with Gen. Jackson, he was appointed to treat with the Chickasaw Indians for the cession of their lands west of the Tennessee River. This was his last public act. In February, 1820, he was attacked by a paralytic affection, and expired in Lincoln County, Ky., on the 18th of July, 1826, from a stroke of apoplexy, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. In honor of him nine counties in the States of Alabama, Texas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, as well as several towns and one college now perpetuate his name. His son, Gen. James, was born in 1784, and died September, 1848. He was a major in the campaign of 1813.

Thomas Sim Lee, second Governor of Maryland, was born in 1743, and lived in what is now the Petersville District of Frederick County for a number of years. He was a descendant of Philip Lee, who came to the province from Virginia in the latter part of the seventeenth century and became a member of the Council of the Lord Proprietary. Thomas Sim Lee was an ardent supporter of the Revolutionary cause, and soon became conspicuous for his zeal and energy in its behalf. In 1779, Governor Thomas Johnson was no longer eligible, having served three successive years, and the Legislature proceeded to elect his successor. Two candidates were named, Col. Edward Lloyd, of Talbot, and Thomas Sim Lee, of Frederick. On the 8th of November, 1779, the election took place, and Mr. Lee was chosen Governor. In December the Governor issued a proclamation urging the local authorities of the different counties to press forward as speedily as possible the collection of supplies for Washington's suffering troops. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lee, was also untiring in her efforts in behalf of the cause.

In a letter addressed to her, bearing the date of Oct. 11, 1789, Washington acknowledges in grateful terms "the patriotic exertions of the ladies of Maryland in behalf of the army." In the fall of 1789, Gen. Greene visited Annapolis and conferred with Governor Lee as to the practicability of raising additional troops in Maryland, and the Governor went vigorously to work, assisted by Gen. Gist, and succeeded in recruiting valuable reinforcements for the Southern army. In the same year the British army under Gen. Leslie devastated the shores of the Chesapeake, and Governor Lee addressed an urgent petition to Congress for assistance. Congress was so straitened at this time, however, that it was unable to give any aid, and the people of Maryland were thrown upon their own resources. Under the intrepid lead of the Governor and kindred spirits, the Legislature passed an act appropriating money for the equipment of a fleet of barges, etc., for the defense of the bay. A troop of horse to defend the coast of Worcester and Somerset was also organized. The depredations of the British in the Chesapeake were part of a general scheme for a Tory rising in the disaffected districts, the invasion of Virginia and Maryland, and the release of the British prisoners at Frederick, Sharpsburg, Fort Frederick, Leesburg, Strasburg, and Winchester. The plot was discovered, however, and three of the Tory ringleaders in Western Maryland were apprehended. Leslie was replaced by the traitor Arnold, who again ravaged the shores of the Chesapeake, plundering in particular the plantations of Hon. Edward Lloyd and John Beale Bordley on the Eastern Shore. Washington ordered Lafayette, with twelve hundred men, to proceed to Maryland, and Governor Lee at once took vigorous measures to provide the command with the means of transportation and subsistence. The merchants of Baltimore co-operated with him and furnished valuable aid. A squadron was got together and placed under the command of Commodore James Nicholson. Lafayette's army embarked on the transports, and under the protection of the squadron set sail for Annapolis, where it arrived in safety on the 13th of March. About this time a formidable British expedition was fitted out for transferring the seat of war to the Chesapeake, and active preparations for defense were made by the people of Maryland. This movement culminated in the siege of Yorktown and the final overthrow of the British arms. During all this trying and critical period Governor Lee was unremitting in his patriotic exertions, and by his bold demeanor and exhibition of unwavering confidence infused new hope and courage into many a waverer's heart. On the 17th of June, 1782, Governor Lee issued a proclamation inviting the citizens of the State to celebrate the birth of a son and heir to the king of France, as an evidence of the gratitude of the colonies for the assistance rendered by that nation. The day was celebrated in Baltimore with an elegant dinner. On the 4th of August the French forces then stationed in Baltimore, to the number of about five thousand, were reviewed by the Governor, who subsequently entertained Count Rochambeau and the other French officers at Annapolis. When Governor Lee had served three years as Governor he was no longer eligible, and was succeeded by William Paca, who was elected over Daniel, of St. Thomas Jenifer. The distinguished services of the late Governor were recognized by the Legislature by the presentation of a formal address on the 22d of November, 1782. In 1792, Mr. Lee again became eligible, and was elected Governor a second time. He served in that office from 1792 to 1794. He had also served as a delegate to the Continental Congress in 1783 and 1784. On the 23d of April, 1787, he was elected by the Legislature, with Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Robert Hanson Harrison, Thomas Stone, and James McHenry, as deputies to represent Maryland in the convention which prepared the Federal Constitution, but he declined the honor. He was a member of the State Convention which ratified the Constitution, and in 1792 was one of the Presidential electors, and voted for Washington's second election. His second term as Governor embraced the period of the "Whisky Insurrection" of 1794, during which he reorganized the State militia. He very ably seconded the endeavors of President Washington to suppress this rebellion and put the whole State on a war footing, and sent with dispatch and promptness Maryland's quota to the scene of the insurrection.

It was also during Governor Lee's second administration, in 1793, that the famous case arose of the San Domingo privateer "Industry," which, it was alleged, took on part of her armament in Baltimore, and sallying forth captured the British ship "Rockhampton."

The principles maintained then by Secretary Jefferson are those which were contended for by the United States throughout the "Alabama" controversy, and are now in a fair way of being universally accepted as part of the law of nations.

Charles Carroll, a grandson of the signer of the Declaration of Independence, married Mary Diggs Lee, granddaughter of Governor Lee. From this union was born John Lee Carroll, Governor of Maryland from 1875 to 1879. Governor Thomas Sim Lee died at Medwood, Frederick Co., Md., Nov. 8, 1819, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

Moses Rawlings was commissioned on the 1st of July, 1776, lieutenant-colonel of the rifle regiment of which Col. Stevenson was commander, and Otho H. Williams, major. In the absence of the colonel he commanded the regiment at Fort Washington, but during the assault by the Hessians was badly wounded, and when the fort capitulated he fell into the hands of the enemy with the rest of the command. At this time Washington said of him, "I entertain a very high opinion of Col. Rawlings and his officers, and have interested myself much in their behalf." His four companies of riflemen were joined to the German Battalion, and the command was afterwards known as the Eighth Maryland Regiment. In 1779 he was ordered by Washington to Fort Pitt (on the present site of the city of Pittsburgh), and on the refusal of Washington to permit the German troops to accompany him he resigned, in April, 1779. Capt. Beale took charge of his command at Fort Frederick, and in May, 1779, marched with it to Fort Pitt. On Sept. 27, 1779, Col. Rawlings was placed in charge of the prisoners at Frederick Town, where he remained until the close of the war. In 1794, there being danger of a war with Great Britain, the militia of Maryland was reorganized, and Col. Rawlings was appointed brigadier-general for Washington and Allegany Counties. He died in Hampshire Co., Va., in May, 1809.

The Johnson Family. Among the promoters of resistance to the usurpation of Parliament there were in each county certain families which from their force, education, and social position naturally assumed, or were by circumstances forced into the position of leaders of public opinion and organizers of popular movements.

The Lloyds had been for more than a century leaders on the Eastern Shore counties, and with them the Tilghmans, the Hollidays, the Hemsleys, the Bordleys, the Wrights, and such families had shaped and directed society.

From St. Mary's, as the settlements extended westward, the cadets of the proprietors who had established themselves on the Potomac and the Patuxent gradually controlled and dominated the fertile valleys of the Alleganies. The Dents, the Calverts, the Barrons, the Briscoes, of the lower counties, the Howards, the Carrolls, the Goldsboroughs, the Worthingtons, of the Severn, the South and West Rivers, and the Patapsco, controlled all that section. The great county of Frederick was largely dominated from 1765 to 1790 by the Johnson family.

Among the hardy population of Frederick the Johnsons settled themselves just after the French war. They were a bold, aggressive, self-reliant family, who assumed importance and arrogated to themselves consideration, which they maintained by sturdy effort and by leading in all works of usefulness and public concern.

They were descended from a well-known family of their name in the county of Norfolk, in England. They had been long settled at Great Yarmouth, and had commanded ships in the great fleet that Yarmouth sent out to fight the Grand Armada. They had been members of Parliament and bailiffs of Yarmouth since 1585. One of the family sat in the Parliament of 1625, which resisted the usurpations of the king. Another, Capt. Thomas Johnson, was commander-in-chief of the militia of Great Yarmouth in the great rebellion, first against the king and for the Parliament, and then, when the Commonwealth proposed to overthrow the monarchy, for the king and against the Puritan.

Capt. Thomas Johnson was granted an alteration of the family arms in consideration of his great loyalty and suffering, so that after the Restoration they were emblazoned: "Three lions' heads erased gules, ducally crowned or, on a field argent. Between a fess batted counter-embattled gules. Crest—a leopard's head on a ducal coronet. Motto—'Trust and Strive.'"

His son James was knighted by Charles II., and the grandson of Sir James emigrated to Maryland in 1700 and settled in Calvert County, on St. Leonard's Creek.

He ran off with a chancery ward, Mary Baker, and had one son, Thomas, born in Calvert at the family place on St. Leonard's, Feb. 19, 1702.

Thomas Johnson married Doreas Sedwick and had eleven children. Among them were Thomas Johnson, born Nov. 4, 1732, who married Ann Jennings, daughter of Thomas Jennings, the register of the land office at Annapolis. Although born in Calvert, and spending a large part of his life in Anne Arundel, Thomas Johnson must be considered a Frederick County man. His last years were passed and he is buried there. A sketch of Governor Johnson has already been given.

James Johnson, son of Thomas and Doreas, and brother of Governor Thomas Johnson, was born on the 30th of September, 1736, died Dec. 3, 1809. He emigrated from his father's residence to Frederick County, now Washington County, where he built for the firm, Jacques & Johnson, Green Spring Furnace, a mile from old Fort Frederick, where his son James was born on the 28th of May, 1774, and also Licking Creek Forge at the mouth of said creek. In November, 1774, he established himself permanently in Frederick County, where, in partnership with his brothers Thomas, Baker, and Roger Johnson, he built Catoctin Furnace and Bush Creek Forge, Johnson Furnace near the mouth of the Monocacy, and Potomac Furnace in Loudon County, Va., opposite to the Point of Rocks. During the Revolutionary war, besides casting a large number of cannon, he furnished the Continental army with one hundred tons of bombshells, which assisted in bringing about the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

He was for many years justice of the peace in Frederick County, a member of the court, and in 1779, in conjunction with Alexander C. Hanson and Upton Sheredine, composed a special court for the trial of the Tories who were executed on the Court-house Creek in Frederick Town. He commanded a battalion of infantry in the Flying Camp under his brother, Brig.-Gen. Thomas Johnson, in the Jerseys in the winter of 1776 and 1777, the most gloomy period of the Revolution. He married Miss Peggie Skinner, of Calvert County, by whom he had three children.

Joshua Johnson, son of Thomas and Dorcas, was born June 25, 1742, being harvest-day, died April 17, 1802. He went to London early in life, and entered into a counting-house before the Revolutionary war. He married in England, and had a son and seven daughters. One of them, Louisa C., married John Quincy Adams, afterwards President of the United States, and became the mother of Charles Francis Adams. At the commencement of the Revolutionary war Mr. Johnson removed to Nantes, France, where he remained until the treaty of peace in 1783, when he returned to London, and was appointed by Gen. Washington first American consul for that port, in which capacity and that of merchant he continued until 1797, when he returned to his native country, taking up his residence in Georgetown, D. C. He was appointed by John Adams stamp-master, which office he held until his death.

John Johnson, son of Thomas and Dorcas, was born on Aug. 9, 1745, died April, 1811. He was a physician by profession, and a surgeon in the Maryland Line during the Revolution.

Baker Johnson, son of Thomas and Dorcas, was born on the 30th of September, 1749, died June, 1811. He was a lawyer, and commenced his practice in the Frederick County Court about the year 1776, and continued until November, 1794. Before that year he had been attorney for the proprietary. By industry and economy he acquired a handsome independence. He commanded a battalion of infantry in his brother's, Gen. Johnson's, brigade in the summer and fall of 1776, and was at the battle of Paoli, near Philadelphia, famous for the slaughter of Wayne's men. He married Kitty Worthington, eldest daughter of Col. Nicholas Worthington, of "Summer Hill," near Annapolis, by whom he had six sons and five daughters. After the Revolution he was a leading member of the bar of Frederick and of the General Court.

Roger Johnson, son of Thomas and Dorcas Johnson, was born March 18, 1749, and died March 3, 1831. He was an iron-master, and built Bloomsburg Forge on Bennett's Creek, Frederick County. He was also major of his brother James' battalion in the Revolutionary war. He married Betsy Thomas, daughter of Richard Thomas, of Montgomery County, by whom he had seven sons and four daughters.

Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, of whom a sketch is given in the chapter on the Bar of Frederick, is a grandson of Col. Baker Johnson.

While Thomas was serving the State as Deput Governor and judge, the Johnson brothers were leading the patriot cause in Frederick County. They established iron-works at Cataoctin Furnace, glass-works at the mouth of Monocacy, and paper-mills. They acquired great possessions of land and left large patrimonies to their descendants.

The family is now represented in Frederick by Worthington Ross Johnson and Dr. George Johnson, grandsons of Col. Baker Johnson, and by William Johnson Ross and Charles Worthington Ross, grandson and great-grandson of Col. Baker Johnson.

Governor Thomas Johnson's descendants are his granddaughter, Mrs. Fanny Johnson McPherson, her daughter, Mrs. Anne Graham Ross, and her daughter, Fanny McPherson Ross, and the Dennises' granddaughter, Mrs. McPherson. Maj. Roger Johnson's representatives are Dr. James T. Johnson and his family.

Lawrence Everheart. This heroic soldier of the Revolution was born in Middletown, Frederick County, on the 6th of May, 1755, and enrolled himself on the 1st of August, 1776, as a member of the first battalion, "Flying Camp." His company was commanded by Capt. Jacob Goode. Everheart was then in his twenty-second year, and was a tall, stalwart youth, of great physical endurance and indomitable pluck. With his regiment he joined the brigade commanded by Gen. Rezin Beall, which was then stationed at New York. He was, with the other Maryland troops, at the battle of White Plains, and also at Fort Washington. When the latter was surrendered, however, he managed to escape. In 1778, after the expiration of his term of service, he enlisted at Frederick, with a number of others, in Col. Washington's regiment of cavalry. At the battle of Cowpens he was wounded and captured by the enemy. Everheart, with seventeen men, were selected by Col. Washington to reconnoitre Col. Tarleton's command. As the enemy's horses, impressed from the South Carolina plantations, were much fleeter than those of Everheart and his companions, the scouting-party was overtaken. A bloody contest ensued, and Everheart was captured after his horse had been shot under him. He was taken before Tarleton, when the following conversation occurred: "Do you expect Mr. Washington and Mr. Morgan will fight me to-day?" asked...
Tarleton. "Yes," replied Everheart, "if they can keep together two hundred men." "Then," said the former, "it will be another Gates' defeat." "I hope to God it will be another Tarleton's defeat," replied Everheart. "I am Col. Tarleton, sir!" cried the British commander. "And I," replied the sturdy patriot, "am Sergt. Everheart, sir!" His wounds, which were numerous and severe, were carefully dressed by the British surgeons, and he was treated with great kindness and consideration. He was, however, taken to the field of action, and during the battle which ensued the enemy, finding that they could no longer keep Everheart in their possession, "shot him in the head, over one of his eyes." The wound was not serious, and Washington's cavalry being then intermingled with the British, Everheart pointed out to Col. James Simons the man who had shot him. The British soldier was at once shot down, and his horse was handed over to Everheart. In the eagerness of his pursuit, Col. Washington advanced some thirty yards in front of his command. Observing this, three British officers wheeled about and charged on him. The officer on the right was in the act of cutting him down when Sergt. Everheart sprang forward and saved Col. Washington by disabling the officer's sword arm. The officer on the left was also about to make a stroke at him when a waiter fired his pistol and wounded Col. Washington's assailant. At the same moment the officer in front (believed to have been Col. Tarleton) made a thrust at him, which Washington parried, whereupon the officer fired his pistol, wounding Col. Washington in the knee. On returning from the pursuit, Washington embraced Sergt. Everheart and sent him to the rear, where his wounds were dressed. Everheart was disabled for active service for some time, but was present at the surrender of Yorktown, where he made the acquaintance of Lafayette. In 1782 he was honorably discharged. He returned to Middletown Valley and settled on a farm. He then married, and was the father of several children. He afterwards became a Methodist minister. Col. Washington paid him a visit in 1799, and on meeting the veterans "rushed into each other's arms, kissed, and gave vent to their feelings in tears of joy." Sergt. Everheart died in 1839.

George and John Stricker. Col. George Stricker, of the Revolutionary army, was the descendant of Swiss immigrants who settled in North Carolina at an early period of our colonial history. His mother was a native of one of the French districts of Switzerland. His first wife was named Springer, the mother of all his children; his second wife, it is said, was the mother of John V. L. McMahon, of Baltimore.

Col. Stricker removed to Frederick some time prior to the Revolution, and when the war broke out he raised a company in the neighborhood and repaired to the scene of military operations. He commanded under Gen. Smallwood, and in 1776 was stationed at Annapolis. At Long Island so great was the havoc in his company that scarcely a single member escaped being wounded or killed. In the mean time, Capt. Stricker had been promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy of the German Battalion, and continued in that position until the death of the colonel, when, considering himself ill treated in the promotion of Baron Hansegger to the chief command, he resigned his commission and left the army. Subsequently he was elected a member of the Maryland Legislature. He removed to an estate in the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va., where he died in 1810, aged seventy-eight, and was buried. In person Col. Stricker was dignified and imposing, and his military talents were of a high order.

His son, John Stricker, was born in Frederick on the 15th of February, 1759, and served as a cadet in Capt. George P. Keepor's company in the German Battalion, of which his father was lieutenant-colonel, until commissioned as officer in Boctor's artillery, in which he rose to the rank of captain. He was at the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, and others, and accompanied Gen. Sullivan on his expedition against the Indians. He was sent from New Jersey with the Hessians captured at Trenton under his charge to Frederick, Md. He was present at the execution of Maj. André, within a few paces of the gallows.

At the close of the war Capt. Stricker married the daughter of Gunning Bedford at Philadelphia. About the same time Commodore Barney married Ann, another daughter of Gunning Bedford. In 1783, Capt. Stricker removed to Baltimore and associated himself in business with Commodore Barney. He took a keen interest in the organization of the militia, and himself formed and trained one of the earliest commands in Baltimore. He was soon made brigadier-general, and accompanied Gen. Sam. Smith as second in command of the Baltimore troops on the expedition for the suppression of the Whisky Insurrection in 1794. In 1801 he was made naval agent of Baltimore, and held the position for a number of years.

Gen. Stricker was a Republican, or Anti-Federalist, and was bitterly censured by the friends of Hanson and others for his course as commander of the State militia during the terrible riots which culminated in the death of Gen. Lìgan at the Baltimore City jail. During the attack on Baltimore in 1814 by the British troops under the command of Gen. Ross, Gen. Stricker commanded the brigade which was sent forward to check the enemy's advance, and performed this difficult task with rare discretion and success.

In November, 1814, Gen. Stricker resigned, owing to the appointment of Robert Goodloe Harper, an inferior in rank, to the major-generalship vacated by the resignation of Gen. Smith. He was elected to the State Senate in 1820, but declined, and Reverdy Johnson was chosen in his place. In 1824 he was a member of the committee to receive Gen. Lafayette, and in 1825, on the death of Gen. Harper, the major-generalship was tendered him, but was declined on the score of ill health. He died on the 23d of June, 1825.

Among the most distinguished and prominent men of Frederick County was Upton Sheredine. His father, Maj. Thomas Sheredine, emigrated from the north of Ireland early in the eighteenth century, and took up land in Baltimore County as early as 1721. In 1729 he was sheriff of Baltimore County, and from 1732 to 1749 represented it in the Legislature. In 1742 he was one of the presiding justices, and in 1752 was again elected sheriff. By the act creating "Jones Town," now called "Old Town," in Baltimore City, he was appointed one of the four commissioners, and was one of the first to take up lots in Baltimore. He was a consistent member of the Episcopal Church, and in January, 1728, was appointed by St. Paul's Parish with Richard Gist to purchase a site for the erection of a new church. In 1749, in connection with Thomas Sleigh, he purchased about eighteen acres of ground on the east side of Jones' Falls, in Baltimore, which was added to the town and is now a most valuable section of that city. In 1751 he was among the largest contributors in Baltimore for the erection of a market-house and town hall. He filled many other important trusts, and died about 1754.

His son Upton was born in Baltimore County in 1740, and after a long and useful life died greatly lamented in December, 1800. He is buried on his farm near Liberty, in Frederick County, where is also the grave of his mother, Mrs. Ellenore Sheredine. Upton Sheredine took a most active part in the struggle for independence, was a member of the first State Constitutional Convention from Frederick County, was elected to the First Congress, was a justice of the County and Orphans' Court, and held many other prominent positions. Being possessed of large means, he resided in Frederick Town during the winter, in the house now owned by Mrs. Ezra Houck, which he had built, and during the summer he lived on his farm near Liberty, where he died. He was a highly-cultivated gentleman of pure and lofty principles, and the peer of any man in Maryland. He was also greatly admired for his many fine qualities, and together with Basil Dorsey, Sr., John Lawrence, and others, he did much to mould public sentiment in Western Maryland. He married Sophia, daughter of Basil Dorsey, Jr., and left no children. His property, after providing for his widow, was willed to his nephews, Daniel Sheredine and William Hammond.

Capt. Henry Williams, of Revolutionary fame, was the son of John and Mary Williams, who emigrated from Chester County, Pa., to Frederick County about the year 1753, and settled in the valley of Flat Run below Emmitsburg. His parents were contemporaries of the Reids, Marshalls, Hugheses, Cochrans, Shieldses, Annans, Cavicks, Bayards, Pattersons, Nobles, Porters, Coopers, McKessons, and McNairs, etc., who were among the early immigrants from Pennsylvania. They were of Scotch-Irish descent. Capt. Williams' first wife was a Miss McDonald, and his second wife was a Mrs. Cooper (whose maiden name was Witherow). By his second wife he had several children, one of whom still survives, and is now president of the Frederick County National Bank. Mr. William Patterson, one of Capt. Williams' earliest and warmest friends, used to relate that Mrs. Williams (his first wife) often repaired to an old graveyard in Pennsylvania to visit the graves of her parents and strew flowers over them. It was the oldest graveyard in the settlement of Adams County, or in that section of country, except that of the Elders of Frederick County. Upon the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, Capt. Williams, then quite a young man, was elected second lieutenant of Capt. William Blair's company, belonging to the regiment commanded by Col. John Eager Howard. When Capt. Blair fell mortally wounded at Brooklyn Heights, L. I., Capt. Williams took charge of the "Game Cock" company, First Lieut. Hoekersmith yielding the palm to Lieut. Williams on account of his great popularity with the non-commissioned officers and privates of the company. The company participated in many hard-fought battles, and Capt. Williams was always in the thickest of the fray. Capt. Williams was a member of the Masonic order, and at an early period of the Revolutionary era enjoyed the friendship of Washington and Lafayette. When Gen. Lafayette was in this country in 1824-25, The Society of the Cincinnati in Baltimore gave him a dinner, and it was agreed that each one would in turn relate something of a personal nature. When it came to the turn of Gen. Lafayette, he related a story highly characteristic of the American troops, as showing their eagerness to rush into battle.
At the siege of Yorktown, he said, there were two columns, one of French the other of Americans, drawn out to assault two bastions, and both were to move at the same moment. Of course there was much excitement as to who should make the capture first. In compliment to Gen. Lafayette he was assigned to the command of the American column as an American officer. Both columns started simultaneously, each one watching the other. On the march an American sergeant (William Curran, Jr., of Capt. Williams' company) stepped up to the general and, tapping him on the shoulder, said, "Hurry, general; those d---d Frenchmen will get in before us yet."

Capt. Williams had often related the same story, but did not live to hear Gen. Lafayette repeat it.

An old resident of Frederick supplies the following concerning Capt. Williams: "My first acquaintance with Capt. Williams was in 1811. He was then a hale and hearty old country gentleman of sixty summers. He had quit the sword, and, like Cincinnatus, had taken to the plow. I often saw him riding in his plain country wagon driven by his trusty yellow servant, Gabriel Briscoe, and his other colored servant, Sam Diggs, accompanying him. I was told by my father that Capt. Williams was a prominent man in the Emmittsburg District, and had served with distinction in the stormy periods of the nation's birth."

In the language of a writer in the Maryland Chronicle of May, 1786, Capt. Williams and his company (recruited chiefly in the Emmittsburg District) "covered themselves with glory and received the special commendation of Washington and Lafayette." Capt. Williams was also very useful and active as the commander of one of the scouting-parties which were engaged in unearthing the Danmore-White Eyes conspiracy.

When the war was over he returned home to his estate near Emmittsburg, where, until his death, he followed the quiet pursuits of a farmer. He also took an active part in the politics of the county, the State, and nation from 1786 to 1816, but seldom appeared as a candidate for office, although frequently solicited to stand for the House of Delegates, which he invariably declined. He sided with the Democratic party and generally supported its nominees. In 1812, however, believing with the Democrats of New York and many other States of the Union that De Witt Clinton was a more energetic statesman, and would carry on the war then waging against Great Britain with more spirit and success than President Madison, and holding to the one-term principle for the Presidency, he yielded to the earnest solicitations of his friends in this county, and announced himself (without any nomination) as a candidate for Presidential elector in the district composed of Frederick, Washington, and Allegany Counties. He was chosen in conjunction with Daniel Rentch, of Washington County, by 450 or 500 majority in Frederick County, and about 150 in the district, over Frisky Tilghman and Joshua Cockey, two very popular men, who were the Madison candidates for electors. It was no doubt owing to Capt. Williams' Revolutionary record and great popular popularity that the district was carried for Clinton. Capt. Williams frequently filled the position of a member of the Levy Court and county magistrate, and at the time of his death, in 1821, was a justice of the peace. He was a firm and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, but was universally respected by the members of other creeds.

That Capt. Williams bestowed special attention to the science of farming appears from the fact that the first essay on that subject ever published in a Frederick paper was written by him, and appeared in the Maryland Chronicle of May 3, 1786.

Capt. Williams named one of his sons (since deceased) Washington, after the Father of his Country. His other son, John H. Williams, formerly editor of the Frederick Examiner, is now president of the Frederick County National Bank.

Capt. Henry Williams and Gen. John Ross Key, who resided only about twelve miles apart in Frederick, were bosom friends. Both entered the Revolutionary war about the same period, and both died about the same time. Gen. Key died at his residence near Middleburg, Frederick Co., May 21, 1821. The people of Emmittsburg and Taneytown District, then in Frederick County, passed resolutions at the time of their deceased eulogizing their memories and extolling their public and private virtues.

Charles Beatty. This patriot acted a conspicuous part in the Revolutionary war. At the darkest period of those troubled times, when Washington was retreating through New Jersey, and every man's heart sunk within him, the call to arms was heard to resound through the generally quiet and peaceful town of Frederick, and the people sprang to the rescue of their country. The troops were marshaled on the beautiful green inclosures now occupied by the Catholic institutions. There was a whole battalion present, consisting of eight companies. Col. Charles Beatty addressed them, and invited those who were willing to aid "to step forward," whereupon the whole battalion advanced except three men, who afterwards, amid the jeers of their comrades, also volunteered. The soldiers marched under Col. Beatty, and saw some service at the battle of Brunswick, where three men were killed out of one company. Among them was Lieut. Grosch. The colonel was a wealthy, public-spirited man, and built the house occupied by Mr. Ross in 1841.1

William Beatty was born in Frederick County, in the State of Maryland, on the 19th of June, 1758. He was the eldest of twelve sons. In stature he was erect and stately, and in person vigorous and athletic, capable of enduring the greatest fatigue and of suffering the utmost privation; his attachments were warm and permanent, his feelings glowing and enthusiastic, and his patriotism ardent and almost romantic.

In 1776, when but eighteen years of age, he obtained the appointment of ensign in Col. Griffith's regiment, in what was termed the "Flying Camp" of Maryland. This regiment, which was hastily raised in the early part of the summer, and was to serve until the 1st of December following, received orders to march in July to the city of New York, which it reached without accident, and thence proceeded immediately to headquarters on York Island. The regiment to which young Beatty was attached continued, during the campaign, under the command of Gen. Washington, and at the expiration of his period of service he returned to his native State. He did not, however, remain long in this state of inglorious inaction, for in a short time he was appointed a lieutenant in the Maryland Line of Continental troops, and spent the winter in raising recruits for the regiment to which he belonged. In the discharge of this unpleasant and difficult duty he acquitted himself with much credit, and in the following spring joined the army at Middlebrook, in New Jersey.

His merit as an officer was soon discovered by the commander-in-chief, and he was promoted to a captaincy in the First Maryland Regiment, which had the honor of being for some time under Gen. Washington's immediate command.

The First Regiment, however, under the command of Col. Gunby, to which Capt. Beatty was transferred, and of which he was now the senior captain, was finally ordered to join the Southern division of the American army in the Carolinas. The distinguished feats of this division are familiar to every American. The First Regiment, according to Marshall, "gained the battle of Cowpens, and was pre-eminently distinguished in the retreat through North Carolina, and at the battle of Guilford." In this last battle, which was fought on the 15th of March, 1781, young Beatty signalized himself in a particular manner by engaging in single combat a gallant British soldier, whom he pierced to the heart with his espontoon. This brave regiment, to whose valor the glory of the day must be partly attributed, sustained its high character for courage and discipline, and acquired a reputation that never will be lost. Young Beatty rose high in the estimation of his superior officers and of the army. His conduct had been such as to merit and receive no ordinary praise, and his patriotism and personal courage promised, at no great length of time, to elevate him to high rank in the army of his country. But his brilliant career was destined soon to be brought to a close. At the battle of Hobkirk's Hill, near Camden, which was fought on the 25th of April, in the same year, Capt. Beatty, while gallantly leading on the right company of the First Maryland Regiment, received a mortal wound. Thus fell, in the twenty-third year of his age, this brave and promising young officer, who has been emphatically termed by Judge Johnson, "the delight of his command." Gen. Lee, in his memoirs of the war in the Southern department, speaking of this battle, says, "The British lost no officer of distinction, which was not the case with us. The wound of Lieut.-Col. Ford proved mortal, and Capt. Beatty, of the First Maryland, was killed, than whom the army did not possess an officer of more promise." Col. John E. Howard does justice to the gallantry of Capt. Beatty in the following extract of a letter to William B. Rochester, member of Congress from New York: "It would give me much pleasure to add my testimony to that of Gen.

1 During the Revolution large numbers of British prisoners were confined at Frederick. The privates were quartered at the barracks, while the officers were paroled and allowed their liberty. The latter, it is said, rode fine chargers, and were great favorites with the Tory ladies in the neighborhood. Some of them at length became so insolent that they would ride out abreast and make the country people give the road to them. They went further, and rode out early in the morning to meet the country girls coming to market and insulted them. It happened that they met Miss Cassell, a daughter of a prominent farmer, who had an uncle living in town, a most powerful and giant-like young man, about nineteen or twenty years old. She complained to him that a certain British officer whom she pointed out to him had insulted her. It was during the session of the court. Daniel provided himself with a cowhide, and gave him a just and severe cowhiding on the court-house green. The British officer ran into the court-house and complained to the judges of the assault on him by Cassell. Daniel was called into court. He came in blubbering, and when asked what he had done to the officer, answered that he had whipped him, the 'damn beast.' The judge said, 'That's right, Daniel, whip him well; and whenever you hear of any British officers insulting any country women, whip them good.' 'Good God,' said old Jacob Young, who was tainted with Toryism, 'Col. Johnson (the judge), that you should give such advice from the bench!' He repeated it, 'Whip them well, Daniel.' He waited at the court-house door for the officer to come out, and ran his cowhide under his nose; the officer ran back to the judge with his second complaint, but feared no better than at first."
Greene and others of the great merit of Capt. William Beatty. Indeed, the general, in few words, has so strongly portrayed his character that little can be added." "Among the killed," says Gen. Greene, in his report to Congress, "is Capt. Beatty, of the Maryland Line, one of the best of officers, and an ornament to his profession."

The Hoffmans. The founder of the Hoffman (formerly spelled Huffman) family in Maryland it is supposed was Jacob Huffman, who resided in Frederick Town. Jacob, who was of German parentage, had a vegetable farm, from which he supplied the Frederick market. He died on his farm. His son Peter is said to have come to Baltimore in 1771. He was a frugal, industrious man, and after a while had saved enough to begin the dry-goods business at "53 Old Market Street." His business increased until he was compelled to remove to No. 4 Calvert Street. In 1794 he abandoned the retail business, and founded the wholesale house of Hoffman & Co., North Charles Street. Of Peter's sons, Jacob removed to Alexandria, Va., and established there a dry-goods store. Another son, George, married Miss Tilghman, of the Eastern Shore, who died leaving no issue. He then married Henrietta Rogers, by whom he had four sons and one daughter, viz.: Rogers, married the beautiful Miss Key, of Georgetown; George B., married Louisa, the daughter of Gen. Benjamin C. Howard; William Henry, married Miss Travers, of New York. Peter Hoffman, son of Peter, married a daughter of Samuel Owings and had four sons, viz.: William Alfred, died unmarried, Latimer, George, and Samuel Owings Hoffman. His daughter Sarah married Mr. Guest, another daughter married a son of Mr. Birkhead, and a third daughter, Henrietta, remained unmarried. Samuel Owings Hoffman married a daughter of William Gilmore. Samuel, son of Peter, married Miss Curson, by whom he had five children,—four daughters and one son, Curson Hoffman. Jeremiah, son of Peter, married in England. David, youngest son of Peter, married a daughter of Governor McLean, of Pennsylvania, by whom he had one son, who died young. The Hoffmans have long been one of the most distinguished and wealthy families of Baltimore.

The McPhersons. John McPherson, Sr., was born in Pennsylvania in 1760, and removed to Frederick in 1781. Not long before the conclusion of the Revolutionary war he received a lieutenant's commission in the service of his native State, but as a cessation of hostilities soon after ensued, no demand was made upon him for active field duty. He went to Frederick as an agent for the supply of prisoners then quartered there. In 1783 he married there, which confirmed his residence in Frederick, where he lived until his death, in December, 1829. He served with honor in the Legislature, and as an associate judge of the court.

Col. John McPherson, Sr., was the largest manufacturer of iron and owner of real estate in Western Maryland.

Col. John McPherson, Jr., a prominent citizen of Frederick, was born in 1796. He married, Dec. 23, 1823, Fanny, daughter of Thomas Jennings Johnson, and granddaughter of Governor Thomas Johnson. While in Washington City, during the Presidency of John Quincy Adams, the guest of her relative, Mrs. Louisa Catherine Adams, daughter of Joshua Johnson, formerly of Frederick County, Mrs. McPherson was regarded as one of the most beautiful women of the land, and was a great favorite at the White House. Col. McPherson in early life was closely associated with every enterprise projected in the interest of Frederick City and County. For a long time he managed with marked success the Branch Bank, now Central National Bank. He died March 11, 1874. In his early life he was largely connected with the iron interests of the county, and for a number of years was the owner of Catotin Furnaces. He was one of the prominent projectors of the National turnpike from Washington to Wheeling, and of the Frederick waterworks. When Lafayette visited Frederick in 1825 he was the guest of Col. McPherson, who was then captain of the troop of soldiers known as the Light-Horse Cavalry, in which he took great pride. He left two daughters, Mrs. Worthington Ross and Mrs. Col. George R. Dennis.

The Thomas Family. Dr. Philip Thomas, father of Hon. John Hanson Thomas, was born near Chester-town, June 11, 1747, and removing to Frederick, commenced the practice of medicine in that town, Aug. 1, 1769, after having studied four years under Dr. Vandyke. He had also attended professional lectures in Philadelphia, and the hospital and a "bettering house" in that city, under Professors Bond, Shippen, and Morgan; also a series of lectures by Dr. Smith on Natural and Experimental Philosophy. Dr. Thomas took an active and prominent part in the Revolutionary war. He was chairman of the Frederick County Committee of Safety, and was one of the Presidential electors who voted for Gen. Washington at the first election. He was also the first president of the Medical Society of Maryland. Dr. Thomas died on the 25th of April, 1815.

The career of John Hanson Thomas, son of Dr. Philip Thomas, has already been narrated in the chapter on the bar of Frederick.
Dr. John Hanson Thomas was born in Frederick City, Sept. 23, 1813, was the son of the Hon. John Hanson Thomas, at that time congressman, and his mother was Mary Isham Colston, a niece of Chief Justice John Marshall. Dr. Thomas graduated at the University of Virginia in 1834, and afterwards studied medicine in the office of Dr. Alexander, a well-known and successful practitioner of Baltimore. Dr. Thomas graduated at the Maryland University, and practiced medicine for a short time in Baltimore. He took up his permanent residence there, and in 1837 married Miss Annie Campbell Gordon, a daughter of Mr. Basil Gordon, a wealthy merchant of Fredericksburg, Va., and a sister of Douglas H. Gordon, now a citizen of Baltimore. In 1839 the doctor was made a director of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Baltimore, and the following year was elected its president. The duties of this position he performed with marked ability and success until January, 1879, when, after re-election, he resigned on account of declining health. During his presidency, on two separate occasions, he employed his private fortune to tide the bank over threatened difficulties and possible disaster. He was for several years chairman of the State Central Whig Committee, and in 1853 made an unsuccessful campaign with Hon. W. Pinkney White for the State comptrollership on the Whig ticket. He was also elected to the State Legislature, and for several years was a member of the Baltimore City Council. While in that body he originated the idea of a system of boulevards around that city, which has been partially carried out in the case of Boundary Avenue.

In 1861, just before the breaking out of the war, Dr. Thomas, Judge Chambers, Governor Lowe, Col. William H. Norris, and other distinguished gentlemen were appointed a peace commission, which went to Richmond and vainly sought to avert impending hostilities. He then became a member of the well-remembered Legislature which met at Frederick the same year, where he was, with ten other members, arrested by the United States authorities and taken to Fort McHenry, and afterwards successively to Forts Monroe, Warren, and Lafayette, being under arrest in all six months. Among other positions of trust and honor held by Dr. Thomas was that of director and first president of the Baltimore Academy of Music Company, and it was largely owing to his active, intelligent efforts that the building was so successfully completed. Two days before the famous 19th of April, 1861, he was one of the committee of citizens which went to Cockeysville to meet the United States troops on their way to Washington, and earnestly sought to persuade those in command to march them around instead of through the city. Dr. Thomas held several private trusts, such as directorships of insurance companies and the presidency of the Baltimore Academy of Music Company. He died July 15, 1881, at Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, and left the following children, viz.: Mrs. H. Rieman Duvall, of New York; Mrs. John Carroll, of the "Caves," Baltimore Co.; Basil Gordon, J. Hanson, Raleigh C., Douglas H., and J. Marshall Thomas,—all of whom are grown.

Hon. John Lee, born in 1788, was also a distinguished politician. He was educated at Harvard College, but did not graduate. He was well known and much respected in public and social life in Maryland for more than half a century. He was a representative in Congress from his district in Maryland for the term ending March, 1825, and served as senator and delegate in the Maryland Legislature for a number of years. While in Congress Mr. Lee was chairman of the House Committee appointed to escort the Marquis de Lafayette from Frederick City to Washington. He was then thirty-seven years of age. In 1860 he supported Bell and Everett. In the latter years of his life he espoused the cause of the Conservatives, and never ceased to feel a deep interest in their success. Mr. Lee was one of the pioneers of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and never ceased, even at the advanced age of fourscore, to evince a deep interest in all the internal improvements of his native State. Mr. Lee died at his residence in Frederick County, May 17, 1871, aged eighty-three years.

Maj. Michael Buyer was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war, and at the battle of Brandywine was ordered by Col. Parker, of Virginia, to station a picket-guard of fourteen men on the top of the hill between the American and British lines, and not to abandon it on point of death. Accordingly, he took the station and threw up a small breastwork. After remaining at his post for some time, he saw the regiment of grenadiers called the Queen's Regiment advancing up the hill to attack him. He thought of his orders and the folly of opposing a whole regiment with fourteen men, but he determined to have one fire. He ordered his men to wait until the British advanced in point-blank shot, to take good aim, and then retreat to the main body at the bottom of the hill. His orders were obeyed, and he drew his men off in safety. Some time afterwards a number of British officers who were in the battle of Brandywine were made prisoners and were quartered at the house of Col. William Beatty, about four miles from Frederick, the native place of Col. Buyer. He met with one of them, and asked him what had become of the regiment which advanced up the hill to a breastwork and received the fire of the picket-guard at the top. The British officer replied he remembered the circumstance very well, and that the fire from the picket-guard killed the captain and eleven men, and that when they marched up to the breastwork they found it so slight that they kicked it over with their feet.

William Elder, son of Guy Elder, a native of Calvert County, in this State, during the Revolutionary period was a resident of the Emmittsburg Hundred or District, in Frederick County, near the Pennsylvania line. As early as 1770 he took an active part in the Tom's Creek and Monocacy Valleys in rousing the people of that section to resist the encroachments of the British government against the rights and privileges of the American colonies and to throw off their allegiance to George III.

William Elder, son of Guy, was a quiet, thoughtful, peaceable man, like Goldsmith, schoolmaster, lord of ferry and hickory bush, well read in ancient lore, and withal a natural-born orator. His eloquent voice was heard calling upon the people to rally to the rescue and arm for the defense of American liberty. What Samuel and John Adams and James Otis were to the people of Massachusetts, and Patrick Henry and Richard Henry Lee were to Virginia, William Elder was to the people of the north end of Frederick County. The inhabitants of Tom's Creek Valley heard Mr. Elder's clarion tones, and they listened with eagerness to his vivid and startling denunciations of the king and British Parliament.

Mr. Elder belonged to a Quaker family, and when he espoused the American cause it is said to have "created no little flutter in the royal camp." He helped to organize and equip the Game-cook company of Frederick County, so called from their jaunty cap and waving plume or cockade, the distinguished frontiersmen of Tom's Creek. Of this company William Blair was elected captain, Henry Williams first lieutenant, and George Hoekensmith second lieutenant. Mr. Elder was also a member of this organization, and at the sound of the bugle "to arms! to arms!" it early came to the front, and reported to John Hanson, chairman of the Committee of Safety, Frederick Town, that it was ready for duty, equipped for the conflict.

It was in the hottest of the fight at Brooklyn Heights, Long Island, N. Y., where its gallant captain, Blair, fell mortally wounded; participated in all the most important engagements of the war, and assisted at the siege of Yorktown and in the capture of Cornwallis. Capt. Blair was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and was noted for his gallantry and indomitablepluck. 1

Henry Meyers. The following is from Miner's "History of Wyoming County, Pennsylvania;" "Licut. Lawrence Meyers was married to Miss Sarah Gore, Jan. 3, 1782. She was of the patriotic family that sent five brothers and two brothers-in-law into battle. That she was very handsome cannot be doubted, for in 1857, then eighty years of age, the round face, regular features, and pleasing expression told of remarkable youthful beauty. Licut. Meyers was of a German family from Frederick Town, Md. Robust in early manhood, he became corpulent with advancing age, and presented a singular contrast with the spare forms of the Yankees, worn down by exertion and care. But he was ever a favorite. The large round face seemed radiant with benevolence and cheerfulness. Besides having held several offices in the militia, he was for several years a magistrate, and in 1800 commissioner of the county. The plan of the court-house, a cross, was introduced by him, taken from that at Frederick Town, which doubtless owes its origin to the Roman Catholic settlers of Maryland, under their liberal and tolerant founder, though that it was an emblem of Catholicism or had any Christian significance was probably unknown to Mr. Meyers or those in Luzerne who approved thereof. The delight of his life was to talk of Frederick, and anything that existed or came from there was an object of his special regard."

Gen. Anthony Kimmell, popularly known for many years as "the Farmer of Linganore," was the son of a prominent merchant of Baltimore, and was born in that city in 1799. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Baltimore, after leaving which he engaged in mercantile pursuits until attaining the age of twenty-three, when he married a wealthy lady of Frederick County, and removed to that portion of the

---

1 We are indebted for these particulars to a writer in one of the Frederick journals, whose name is unknown to us. The writer says,—

"A grandson of old Grandmother Hoover, who died near Emmittsburg many years ago, an aged lady who lived over one hundred years, and personally witnessed some Indian forays on Tom's Creek and the upper Monocacy, informed the writer of this sketch that she personally knew nearly all the men in Capt. Blair's company, and was present when they left the Tom's Creek settlement for the Revolutionary campaign. She and the neighbors gave them a good shake of the hand, and, like the mother of the Graeichi, bid them return with their swords or muskets or be transfixed on them."

After the battle of Long Island a meeting was held at the old tavern of Henry Bear, at the sign of John Wilkes, Patrick Street, Frederick Town, and measures taken to fill up the ranks designated by De Heister's and Knypersens Hessian.
State. In 1814, when a mere boy, he entered the army, and from that period identified himself with the State militia, rising to the rank of major-general. He traveled extensively in Europe, and was the vice-president of the American delegation to the Great World’s Fair held in London in 1851. In 1840 he was a member of the electoral college which elevated Gen. Harrison to the Presidency, and subsequently was twice defeated as the Whig candidate for Congress, the Democratic party in his district being too strong for even his popularity to overcome. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate from Frederick County, and although an extreme Southern man, escaped arrest at the time the Maryland Legislature was either dispersed or arrested by the government.

At the age of twenty-two he became a member of the Masonic fraternity, rising to the position of Grand Master of the State, and with the exception of Gen. B. C. Howard, was at one time the oldest Mason in Maryland. He was a member of Baltimore Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, and took a great interest in the welfare of the fraternity. He was also a member of the Association of Defenders of Baltimore in 1814, and was always present at the annual meetings of the members on each recurring 12th of September, the anniversary of the battle of North Point. Gen. Kimmell went to Baltimore at the last celebration prior to his death, which occurred April 24, 1871, and attended church on Sunday with the surviving members, and dined with them on the following day, although quite feeble at the time. Gen. Kimmell had been a widower for many years, and left an only son, a Frederick County farmer, to inherit his large estate. The remains were taken to Baltimore by a delegation of Masons from Frederick, and were placed in the Masonic Temple. The funeral took place the same day, and the body was interred in the family burial-ground, corner of Paca and Lombard Streets.

Rev. Thomas Bacon¹ was a native of the Isle of Man, an island in the Irish Sea, about equally distant from the coasts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and forming part of the diocese of the Bishop of Sodor and Man. He must have been born not far from 1720. As to his family, he was of good descent, his brother being Sir Anthony Bacon.

Of his early education, all that is known is that he was the pupil and protege of the pious and celebrated Bishop Wilson, of Sodor and Man. Having completed his theological studies, he was ordained deacon by Bishop Wilson, Sept. 23, 1744, and in March following priest, with a view to his going to one of the American “plantations.” Soon after this he received the appointment of chaplain to Lord Baltimore, the proprietary of Maryland, and came over to that province. He arrived there in the autumn of 1745, and went at once to Oxford, the then port of entry for the Eastern Shore, in Talbot County. There was an intelligent merchant residing there from his own Ireland, to whom he brought letters, and by whom he was very cordially welcomed. Mr. Bacon was accompanied by his wife and a young son. The rector of the parish (Rev. Samuel Maynadier), a good old French Huguenot, who had received orders in the English Church, was very near his end, and he appointed Mr. Bacon his curate. His (Mr. Maynadier’s) sermons had gained for him the character of a sober, good, and learned man, and he was found to be most agreeable in the social circle. He was devoted to music, was a good composer, and played well on two or three instruments.

The old rector died late in the year 1745, and Mr. Bacon succeeded to his place. His ministry proved most acceptable, and his congregation so increased that it was found necessary to enlarge his church in the first year of his pastorate. He lived at Oxford some two years, and then removed about twelve miles higher up the country to Dover, near the head of tide-water. About that time he thus wrote to his people:

> “Upon being appointed your minister, I began seriously and carefully to examine into the state of religion in the parish, and I found a great many poor negro slaves belonging to Christian masters and mistresses, yet living in as profound ignorance of what Christianity really is as if they had remained in the midst of those barbarous heathen countries from whence they and their parents had been first imported. Being moved, therefore, with compassion at seeing such numbers of poor souls wandering in the mazes of sin and error, as sheep having no shepherd, no kind, tender-hearted Christian to set them right, and considering them as a part of the flock which the Almighty had placed under my care, I began seriously to consider in what manner I could best discharge my duty to them and deliver my own soul from the guilt of their blood, lest they should perish through my own negligence. My first attempt towards it consisted in occasional conversation and advice as often as I happened to meet with any of them at my own house, or at a neighbor’s, or upon the road, etc., and, in short, familiar exhortations as opportunity brought a number of them together at any quarter where I visited their sick, or at their funerals or marriages. I then determined to speak to them.”

In carrying out this determination he preached two sermons, which he sent to London and had published just as they had been delivered, as containing simply the general points of his instruction. One of his reasons for publishing them was that “possibly it might raise a spirit of emulation among his brethren to attempt something in their parishes towards the bringing home so great a number of wandering souls to Christ." "In setting forth this scheme of instruction," he says, "I consulted nothing but conscience, and had no other view than the discharge of that duty I so solemnly took upon me at my being admitted into Holy Orders." Before the end of the third year of his ministry a chapel was erected for the convenience of those in its neighborhood in a distant part of his parish, in which he ministered at stated intervals. But Mr. Bacon did not stop with what he had already done in behalf of the colored people. In 1749 he preached and published "four sermons upon the great and indispensable duty of all Christian masters and mistresses to bring up their slaves in the knowledge and fear of God." Having mentioned what he felt it his own duty to do, and spoken of the greatness and difficulty of the work, he says, "I found that I must have help, which put me upon considering where laborers might be had; and finding upon the strictest and most impartial inquiry that it is the indispensable duty of all masters and mistresses to bring up their slaves in the knowledge and fear of God, I was determined to call in assistance from where it was due. I therefore, as steward, and in the name of the Lord of the harvest, do press and invite you to work in His vineyard, and to promise, on His part, that whatsoever is right and equal that shall ye receive." Of these four sermons to say that his language is classical yet plain, his thoughts fresh yet well digested, his positions sustained ably yet conclusively, and sometimes eloquently, and that the gospel is distinctly and faithfully presented, and all with the most intrepid, yet affectionate and Christian spirit, is nothing more than every impartial reader must acknowledge to be true. But the colored people in his parish were not the only ones who awakened his interest and enlisted his efforts. About this time he undertook the establishment of a charity and working school. With this view he preached a sermon on the subject, which he also published. He then purchased a tract of land for the purpose, about a mile west of the church, on the road to Oxford. A copy of this sermon, together with a letter explaining his object, was sent by him to Lord Baltimore, who approved of the scheme, and sent him one hundred guineas to assist in erecting the house, and gave direction to the receiver-general in the colony to pay him twenty pounds, equal to ninety-three dollars and twenty cents, annually. Lady Baltimore added to this five pounds, equal to twenty-three dollars and thirty cents, and his nephew, who was his private secretary, the same amount. Bishop Wilson a short time after, learning what the Baltimores had done, sent him a letter of congratulation and encouragement, and told him he had fifty pounds more to aid in the instruction of negroes, and that it might be laid out in purchasing a boy and girl who might be taught and made useful servants for the school. A brick building was erected, and in 1755 a master was employed and the school removed into it. Not long after this Mr. Bacon lost his wife and son, and his own health and spirits seem to have suffered much, owing to his bereavement and the sickly atmosphere of the neighborhood. How long it was after the death of his wife before he married again does not appear, but it must have been in the course of two or three years. He then married one of his own parishioners, Elizabeth, the daughter of Col. Thomas Bozman, of Oxford Neck, a gentleman in easy circumstances. The laws creating parishes, relating to the rights ofclergymen, and the duties of vestrymen, were all enactments of the General Assembly. Since 1727 no edition of the laws of Maryland had been published save the annual acts of the Legislature in pamphlet form, and as the Legislature busied themselves at almost every session in making some change in them, it had become difficult for the clergy to understand what their legal rights or restrictions were, or for the vestry to know what their legal duties were or what the penalties for neglecting them. As Lord Baltimore's chaplain in Maryland (a place which he still held), it seemed right that Mr. Bacon should set himself to supply for the church this manifest want. But as he was not accustomed to do anything by halves, he undertook to give the enactments of every General Assembly from the beginning of the colony, retaining, however, those which had been repealed only so far as to give their titles and state the fact of such repeal. In this exhibit the church would have the whole history of the legislation of the province respecting it, and the civil community would derive from it an equal advantage.

---

¹Condensed from Sprague’s “Annals of the American Pulpit.” The author is Rev. Ethan Allen.

He had not been long engaged in this work when All Saints' Parish, in Frederick County, became vacant by the death of its rector, and Mr. Bacon, in 1757, was appointed to it. This was, in point of emolument, decidedly the first parish in the province, being worth, it is said, a thousand pounds, equal to four thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars per annum, and the bestowal of it upon Mr. Bacon showed the estimation in which he was held. His new parish was on the Western Shore, some seventy miles northwest of Annapolis. Mr. Bacon went there with impaired health, and being obliged to be much in Annapolis, in order to complete the work which he had undertaken he employed a curate to assist him in his parochial charge. It was not till the year 1765 that his work made its appearance. It was a large folio of a thousand pages, printed on thick white paper, making a handsome volume. It was printed in Annapolis, and it may be questioned whether its superior, in point of mechanical execution, was ever issued from the American press.

Whatever the utility of this work may have been to the church and to the civil community, it has now a higher value as a book of reference. It is, in fact, the history of the progress of Maryland from its earliest days, not only as to its legislation, but as to its civil and ecclesiastical legal provisions and changes for one hundred and thirty years. The conclusion of his "Laws of Maryland" found Mr. Bacon's health irrevocably gone. He lingered on for three years, and died on the 24th of May, 1768.

He left behind him a widow and three daughters, who returned to Talbot. The eldest, Elizabeth, at the request of his brother, Sir Anthony Bacon, of Glamorganshire (he having no children), went to England to reside with him, and from him, at his death, she inherited ten thousand pounds sterling. She married George Watkins Price, of Breacon, in Wales, whose public charities were so munificent, but left no children. Mr. Bacon's daughter Rachel married Rigdon Bozman Harwood, of Talbot County, who left two daughters. The other daughter, Mary, married Moses Passapas, of Dorchester County. Mr. Bacon's successor as rector of All Saints' Parish was the notorious Bennett Allen.

Bennett, or Benedict Allen, of whom traditions are still preserved in Frederick County, was one of the most extraordinary figures in the colonial history of Maryland. He was a graduate and Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, was ordained deacon of the Church of England by the Bishop of Oxford on the 23d of September, 1759, and priest by the same diocesan two years afterwards, on the 20th of September, 1761. He was licensed for Maryland on the 3d of September, 1766, by the Bishop of London, and came over to the province in 1768, with letters to Governor Sharpe from Frederick, last Lord Baltimore, who commended him to the Governor's special consideration as one of his most particular friends, desiring that he might have the first good living or parish of the Established Church that offered itself, or if one good living could not be had, then two indifferent ones. His object evidently was to obtain Mr. Allen a comfortable berth. The character of Frederick Calvert was none of the best, and it is more than probable that Allen had been his boon companion and associate in dissipations which were anything but seemly for a clergyman even in those days. Governor Sharpe seems to have suspected his true character even from the outset, as there is abundant evidence in his correspondence with Lord Baltimore of a deep reluctance to help Mr. Allen forward in his designs, a reluctance which brought down upon him the full weight of the dissipated proprietor's anger and ill will. The Governor finally inducted Mr. Allen into the rectorsip of St. Ann's, at Annapolis, and for a time everything went smoothly enough. He was a man of considerable tact, and could be pleasant enough when his interest lay that way; but he could not brook opposition, and as soon as he was crossed gave way to violent outbursts of temper. At first he seems to have been quite intimate with the Dulany family, especially with Walter Dulany, and with Samuel Chew and other leading men of Annapolis and vicinity. It was not long, however, before he got into hot water. Desiring to augment his income, he attempted to secure the living of St. James' Parish, in addition to that of St. Ann's, but his course was characterized by such duplicity that the vestries, some members of which had in the beginning favored the project, refused to give their consent to it. He ascribed his failure largely to the opposition of Walter Dulany and Mr. Chew, and quarreled with both of them. The former he attempted to cane on the street, but seems to have met with a Christian equally muscular; and he insulted Mr. Chew so grossly in the latter's own house that he was compelled to take the irate parson by the collar and put him out of the front door. Mr. Allen's clerical blood was now fully up, and he sent Mr. Chew a challenge, which the recipient, not knowing it to be a hostile message, threw contemptuously, unopened, into the fire. Learning subsequently the nature of the communication, he promptly accepted Mr. Allen's invitation to the field of honor, providing, however, that they should both repair to the appointed place unaccompanied, and that the contest should be to the death. Mr. Chew was on hand at the appointed time, but Mr. Allen failed to make his appearance; but fearing that his reputation for belligerence might suffer, he took care to explain that his failure to keep the appointment was due to the fact that Mr. Chew had violated the terms of the duel by taking with him to the field a servant armed with a blunderbuss. Mr. Chew replied that he had taken this precaution because he was afraid Mr. Allen would attempt to assassinate him, as he had previously done in the case of Mr. Dulany.

St. Ann's not furnishing sufficient revenue for the support of Mr. Allen, who had complained that even the £300 living of St. James' was not enough to keep him in liquors, Governor Sharpe, apparently worn out by his importunities and the repeated commands of Calvert, determined to give Allen the important post of the Lord Proprietary's agent for the province, and actually appointed him to the place, displacing, in order to do so, Col. Edward Lloyd, a prominent member of the provincial government, and one of the most influential planters in Maryland. Alarmed lest the appointment of Allen should breed discontent and weaken his authority, the Lord Proprietary wrote to the Governor, asserting that he had not intended Mr. Allen to have an office of so much consequence. About this time the rich parship of All Saints', in Frederick County, the best living in the province, became vacant by the death of the venerable rector, Rev. Thomas Bacon, and Mr. Allen was induced into it by the Governor. As soon as Mr. Allen got the appointment he hastened to seize the rich rectoryship. His unsavory reputation, however, seems to have preceded him, and he found it necessary to get possession of the church keys by stealth, and to force his way into the church through opposing vestrymen. Having gotten inside the sacred edifice, he at once leaped into the reading-desk and commenced to rattle off the service. Remonstrances were in vain, and the terrified congregation withdrew for a time to the outside of the church. At last, losing all patience, several of them went in again and approached the chancel to repeat their protests, when Mr. Allen suddenly put a pistol to the head of the foremost, and with a sounding oath told him he would kill him if he came a step nearer. This naturally had the effect of speedily emptying the church, but the repulsed congregation soon made it so unpleasant for the rector, by means of volleys of stones, that he was compelled to evacuate the position and retire from the field. In spite of this little unpleasantness, Mr. Allen managed to hold on to his salary of £1000 per annum until 1777, though he did not perform his duties in person, being represented by his curate, Mr. Goldie.

In that year the Church of England in Maryland was deprived of its livings and Mr. Allen forced to return to England. He carried back to his native country the same violent temper he had exhibited in Maryland, and an intense hatred of the Dulans, which manifested itself in 1779 in a bitter anonymous attack in the London Morning Post upon the character of Daniel Dulany. To this Lloyd Dulany replied in terms of equal bitterness, but no notice was taken of his answer by Allen until 1782, when he avowed himself the author of the attack upon Daniel Dulany, and challenged Lloyd Dulany for his utterances in reply to him. The challenge was accepted, and Mr. Dulany was killed by Mr. Allen at the first fire. What became of Mr. Allen is not known, but according to tradition he died in England a poor abandoned drunkard.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Zacharias was born near Clear Spring, Washington Co., Md., and was early trained in a knowledge of the duties and doctrines of the Christian religion. While still a youth he connected himself with the St. Paul's German Reformed Church, near his father's residence, under the pastorate of the Rev. James R. Reilly. His classical studies were commenced at the Hagerstown Academy, and he afterwards entered Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., and continued there until the close of the junior year. This institution subsequently, in 1839, conferred upon him the degree of A.M. In 1826 he entered the theological seminary at Carlisle, Pa., which had been opened the previous year, with the Rev. Dr. Lewis Mayer as principal. At the same time he availed himself of the opportunity afforded him to attend some of the lectures at Dickinson College, of which the Rev. Dr. Nesbit was then president.

In 1828 he was licensed and ordained to the Christian ministry of the Reformed Church, along with the Rev. John H. Crawford, Henry Wagner, John G. Fritchez, Jacob F. Dieffenboker, and J. Casper Buehler, the first graduates of the theological seminary. The Revs. Dr. T. L. Hoffeditz, Frederick Rahauser, and Dr. S. Hellenstein officiated at the ordination. He had accepted a call from the Creutz Creek and Conomodgley Churches, in York County, to which he ministered about two years. In 1830 he received a call from the Harrisburg and Schuylkill congregations. In this field he labored until 1835, in the spring of which year he removed to Frederick City, of the church at which place he continued pastor until the time of his death. Dr. Zacharias attained to considerable prominence in the ministry of the Reformed Church, in whose welfare he took a deep and active interest. He was president of the Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States which convened at Chambersburg, Pa., in 1835, and also of the General Synod, at its second triennial session, in Dayton, Ohio, in 1866. He several times filled the same position in his classis. He was also for a number of years a member of the board of visitors of the theological seminary, and likewise of the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions. In these several capacities he was efficient and active. He likewise served on important committees, such as those to prepare an appendix to the English Hymn-Book, to
He was a member of the committee which prepared the Tercentenary edition of the Heidelberg Catechism in the original German, Latin, Modern German, and English languages. He likewise took a deep interest in the educational enterprises and various charitable interests in the immediate vicinity of Frederick, and lent his efforts sometimes also, in the shape of public addresses, to promote their success. He was taken sick during a visit to the West, made in the autumn of 1872 for the purpose of seeing an aged brother, who has since died. After his return he was so indisposed that he preached but few sermons, the last one of which was delivered Dec. 29, 1872, and was on the text, "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law." Gal. iv. 4. On the 12th of January he was in his pulpit for the last time, when he made a few touching remarks, after a sermon by Rev. J. T. Glodhill, asking his people to pray that if it was God's will he might be restored to health. On the subsequent Sunday he baptized an infant in the church in the presence of the Sunday-school, which was his last ministerial act in his church. After this, and up to his death, he baptized at the parsonage some of the children of his congregation, and probably performed the marriage service in a few instances. On Thursday, March 20, 1873, he was seized with a complication of symptoms, which caused his physicians to look upon the approach of death as near at hand. He lingered, however, for twelve days before he died. Among his last words were, "At the foot of the cross." It will be long before the community of Frederick will lose the remembrance of this gentle servant of his Master. For thirty-eight years he had the Reformed Church of Frederick under his care, and few men have been so loved by their congregations, or have so grown into the affections of the community in which they lived.

Father John McElroy was born at Enniskillen, Ireland, in May, 1782, and was at the time of his death, which occurred at the Novitiate, Frederick, Sept. 12, 1877, in his ninety-sixth year, being the oldest Jesuit priest in the world. He received an elementary education at home, and came to America in 1803, being then twenty-one years old. Jefferson was at that time President of the United States, and was the object of Father McElroy's high esteem. After a short experience of mercantile life he entered Georgetown College, where he had been appointed treasurer and book-keeper. He remained in this position about eight years, during which time he prosecuted his classical studies. He was ordained priest May 3, 1817, being at that time thirty-five years of age. In 1822 he was sent to Frederick to succeed Father Maleve, pastor of St. John's Church, and remained there for twenty-three years. Father McElroy was appointed chaplain of the United States army under Gen. Taylor, during the Mexican war, at the close of which he went to Boston as pastor of St. Mary's Church, at which place the Immaculate Conception Church and College were reorganized through his instrumentality. About five years before his death he returned to Frederick, to which his heart was indissolubly bound by ties of the tenderest character, and although weighed down by the burden of fourscore years and ten, he was enabled on several occasions to say mass and deliver brief sermons to his former flock. Father McElroy had been on the superannuated list for twelve years, suffering the greatest portion of that time from blindness, and latterly from a dislocated thigh, caused by a fall, which confined him to his bed until his death. His long pastoral career in Frederick was characterized by marked liberality. It was a habitual custom of his to make frequent visits to the parsonages of the Protestant ministers here, Rev. Mr. Schaeffer's, Dr. Zacharias', and others, and his social relations with these gentlemen were frank, open, and whole-soled. From the time of his death to the date of his burial hundreds of people visited the Novitiate to take a last view of his remains. On Saturday morning, September 15th, his remains were taken to St. John's church, and masses were offered continually between 5 and 8.30 A.M., when the offices of the dead were chanted by forty seminarians in the sanctuary, unaccompanied by the organ. Then followed the Benedictus, chanted by a quintet from the Novitiate, assisted by a full chorus of seminarians. Mass was then celebrated by Rev. Father Brady, provincial of Maryland, during which Prof. Dilman, of Mount St. Mary's, Emmittsburg, rendered in a subdued tone a voluntary on the organ. Rev. Father McGuire delivered the funeral discourse. After sketching Father McElroy's life the speaker coupled his name with that of the late Chief Justice Taney, and held up the two men before the congregation as living epistles to be read and known of all men for their sterling character, vigorous intellect, and spirituality of temperament. Father McGuire pleaded eloquently for the imitation of such models of true greatness, and mentioned the fact that he owed his own soul's salvation to the Christian, humane, considerate treatment of Father McElroy, who had taken him in his youth from the moral corruption and evil associations of rural life, had given him an education, and had placed him on the road to blessedness. Upon the conclusion of the sermon the funeral procession moved to the grave in the following order, as the chant intoned the “Misere”:

William Judge (a novice), cross-bearer; Denny and Woods, acolytes, eunices-bearers; forty seminarians with lighted candles; Father Brady, provincial of Maryland; Fathers Gache, Ward, Stonestreet, Tisdall, Gaffney, Colleveduto, Brie, Sumner, Nagle, Holland, Scanlon, Toul, of the Novitiate, Frederick; McCleskey, of Emmitsburg; McGuire, of Boston; McMullen, of Emmitsburg; Healy, of Georgetown College; Jenius, of Washington; Kelly, of Loyola College, Baltimore; Parron, of Woodstock; Hough, of California; Connolly, of Missouri; Fulmar, of Boston; Fulton, of Boston; and Tilton, of Providence, R. I. Then came the bier, borne by eight brothers, followed by a long train of citizens. After the absolution and litany for the dead the body was committed to the earth in a portion of St. John's graveyard set apart for ecclesiastical burials, and near the grave of James McSherry, the historian.

Rev. Bernard Michael Houseal, the founder of the First Evangelical Lutheran Church of Frederick Town, then known as Monocacy Station, was born at Heilbronn, in Württemberg, and was the son of Rev. Bernard Housal, of that place. Just before embarking for America he married, at Rotterdam, in Holland, in 1752, Sybilla Margaretha Mayer, daughter of Christopher Bartholomew Mayer, of Ulm, in Württemberg. Mrs. Houseal was a cousin of Christian Mayer, of Ulm, who came to Baltimore in 1784 and was the progenitor of the Mayer family of that city, of which the late Charles F. Mayer, the distinguished lawyer, and the late Col. Brantz Mayer, the well-known author, were members. Mr. and Mrs. Houseal, with Christopher Bartholomew Mayer and his two sons and one other daughter, landed at Annapolis in the early part of 1752, and thence they all proceeded to the western part of the province of Maryland, and settled at Monocacy Station. As they disembarked from their voyage at Annapolis, it is probable that Daniel Dulany, then dwelling there, and whose landed possessions in Western Maryland were large, induced the thrifty Germans to look at his lands in and about Frederick Town; nor is this conjecture weakened by the fact that the ground for the church begun at that village subsequently by Houseal was given to him for that purpose by Dulany. Even at that early day, three years before Braddock’s defeat, Lutherans were coming in numbers to the converging valleys of the Shenandoah and Potomac Rivers, so that a community from the Fatherland, speaking a common language, and devoted to Lutheranism as a common faith, was already established to welcome the new-comers. Yet the bravery of the enterprise will always be undisputed, for Monocacy Station was then only a frontier settlement, bordering on a wild country thronged with savages. Here the Houseals and the Mayers stopped, and the Rev. Mr. Houseal began his ministrations (he was then a man of twenty-five years of age) as clergyman of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, having been presented by Daniel Dulany with the deed of the property, as before stated, on which the first church was erected, and on which the new church now stands. The completion of the church was stopped by the French war and Indian hostilities. It was afterwards finished, and the Rev. Mr. Houseal continued his pastoral labors in Frederick Town until 1759, when, at the instance of the venerable Dr. Muhlenberg, he was transferred to Reading Town, in Pennsylvania, where he served until about 1768. He was afterwards at Easton, in Pennsylvania, and in Philadelphia. In 1770 he was transferred to New York, and there became “senior minister of the ancient Lutheran Church” of that city. He was one of the governors of the New York College, and one of the corporators of the New York Hospital. When the troubles began which culminated in the war of independence, Houseal took his stand at once as an adherent of the crown. From the historical records of New York we find him to have been loud in his declarations of loyalty to England, as one of the “addressers of Lord Howe and Sir William Howe” after the occupation of New York in 1776. Houseal’s church and dwelling were burnt by the Americans when they left the town on its occupation by the British. Houseal remained in New York during the war, and at the peace of 1783 departed with many of his congregation as loyalist refugees to Halifax, Nova Scotia. He afterwards went to England, and having conformed to the Church of England, was ordained to its ministry by the Bishop of London in 1785, and sent back to Nova Scotia, where he resided as rector of St. George’s Parish—his church being known as the old “Dutch Chicken-Cock Church”—till his death on the 9th of March, 1792. It may be interesting to mention that his wife’s family, with whom he came from Rotterdam, removed to Pennsylvania before Houseal left Frederick Town, and that his wife (née Mayer) survived him, and died at the age of ninety-one years, in 1824, at Stonehouse, Devonshire, England, where after her husband’s death she lived with her children and grandchildren.
The Rev. Mr. Houseal is described as a man of commanding stature, stately manners, and dignified address, thoroughly educated in ancient and modern languages, as well as theology, and speaking Latin— an accomplishment of his day—with remarkable fluency. He served for thirty-one years as a minister of the Lutheran Church, preaching as the occasion demanded in English, German, Dutch, or French. The sixteen years of his after-life in Nova Scotia were devoted as a clergyman to the Church of England. No reason is assigned for his leaving the church of his fathers, but it was doubtless due to individual convictions.

Jacob Englebrecht. This highly-respected and venerable citizen of Frederick was born in that town Dec. 11, 1797, and died Feb. 22, 1878, in his eighty-first year. Blessed with a strong constitution and a kindly disposition full of genial humor, endowed with earnest admiration for everything that was truthful, honest, and patriotic, and thoroughly interested in the prosperity and success of his native place and country, he was a most valuable citizen, and his death was a serious loss to the whole community. His tastes led him to gather up scraps of local history, so that he became the authority of Frederick in this particular, and every one was ready to acknowledge the accuracy of his reminiscences, fortified as they generally were by a written diary of local events which he had carefully kept since the year 1819. He was frequently called upon to serve the community in an official capacity,—in the council board from 1831 for several years, in the mayorsalty for three years (from Feb. 28, 1865), and also as the city tax collector. An ardent lover of vocal music, and possessed of a rich, sonorous voice, Mr. Englebrecht was for several years before 1825 the leader of the choir in the Reformed Church, and from 1836 to 1842 of that attached to the Lutheran Church. The citizens of Frederick will recollect with what a ringing tone he led the choir on the Decoration Day of 1878 as they sung the "Star Spangled Banner" at the grave of the author of its stirring words in Mount Olivet Cemetery, and how the employment of some favorite old melody by the choirs in the church worship could always inspire him to bring his voice to their aid. On Sunday following his death he was buried in the cemetery, being followed to the grave by a large number of personal friends. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. George Diehl, D.D., and Rev. H. Blifield.

George Trisler. Among the many men of mark to whom Frederick County has given birth, the subject of this sketch stands forth conspicuous. George Trisler was born in Frederick Town in the year 1768, about the period when the Whigs of Frederick were debating the question of separation from Great Britain, and died in 1845, aged seventy-seven. His parents emigrated from Lancaster County, Pa., to Frederick Town soon after the establishment of Mason and Dixon's line. His father was of German descent, and George received the rudiments of a good German and English education, and spoke both languages with great fluency. He was somewhat familiar with the classics and French and Latin languages. As he grew up to manhood he became acquainted with Mathias Bartgis, who, in 1779, was the first printer in Frederick, and he resolved to learn the art of printing. In connection with Bartgis & Wilcox, he subsequently edited and published a paper at Winchester, Va., before he had attained the age of twenty-one. He subsequently resolved, however, to abandon types and the editorial chair, and sedulously devoted himself to mercantile pursuits. He entered the house of Henry Schroeder, of Baltimore City, then an extensive importer and dealer in German and Irish linens and staple goods. By close application to business he gained the good will and confidence of his employer, and became his principal clerk and salesman. In 1794 he married a young lady in Baltimore. The following notice of the wedding appeared in the Baltimore Daily Intelligencer:

"MARCH 25, 1794.—Married, last evening in the city of Baltimore, by the Rev. Mr. Kurtz, Mr. George Trisler, merchant of this place, to the amiable Miss Kitty Breidenbough (daughter of John Breidenbough, of this town), a young lady endowed with every accomplishment to render the marriage state happy. ("We wish the young and gifted pair long life and all the pleasures which can flow from a happy and agreeable union of wedded life.—Ets. Int.)"

In 1795, Mr. Trisler returned to Frederick Town, and entered the mercantile business there on Market Street upon an extensive scale. Mr. Trisler took a keen interest in politics, and espoused the Republican side of the question in 1796 and 1800, supporting Thomas Jefferson for President against John Adams. He was a warm supporter of Jefferson's administration and the embargo measures of 1808. He was the author of an address to the voters of Frederick, Washington, and Allegany Counties in 1808, and supported the claims of Dr. John Tyler, of Frederick, and Col. Nathaniel Rochester, of Hagerstown, for the electoral college, pledged to the election of James Madison and George Clinton for President and Vice-President. Mr. Trisler was a gentleman of infinite humor, and his "Bulletins from Paris Row," published in the Political Examiner, excited the curiosity of the Frederick folks whenever they made their appearance in print. He was the life and soul of the social circle, and always had something to say that was pleasant and laughable.

Mr. Trisler's fugitive poetical productions, written off-hand at his desk behind the counter, if collected would make two large volumes. His effusions were printed in Bartgis' Maryland Chronicle, in the Federal Gazette, Dr. Carey's Key, Winter's Rights of Man, Independent Volunteer, Colvin's Republican Advocate and Political Examiner of Frederick Town, and in the Virginia Museum and Philanthropist of Winchester, Va., the Baltimore Daily Intelligencer, Telescope, and Post, in Edward Coate Pinkney's Marylander, the Oracle of Dauphin, the Washington Monitor, and a number of other publications. Some of these poems embody deep thought and study, while others are full either of humor or of pathos.

In the social circle of Frederick Town from 1800 to 1840, and among such choice spirits as Henry Kuhn, Joseph M. Cromwell, Jacob Rohr, George Baltzell, Wm. R. Sanderson, Dr. Wm. Tyler, Gen. Joseph Swearingen, Gen. Thomas C. Worthington, Dr. John S. Miller, Mathias E. Bartgis, Frederick Loehr, Benjamin Rutherford, Lewis Medart, Henry Bantz, William C. Russell, Capt. Jacob Honck, George Webster, Wm. M. Beall, Richard English, John Schissler, Samuel Barnes, Thomas Carlton, Thomas W. Morgan, and many others, Mr. Trisler was the head in wit, humor, and repartee.

He was a generous, open-hearted man, and when Mount St. Mary's College was destroyed by fire in 1824, although he was a Protestant, he contributed a handsome sum towards rebuilding it, and also tendered the president and his associates all the goods they needed from his store on credit at their own terms.

In December, 1824, when Lafayette visited Frederick, Mr. Trisler was among the most zealous and active citizens in honoring him. He wrote an ode and had it printed in large letters on the arch of triumph at the intersection of Market and Patrick Streets.

James Cooper was born in Frederick County, May 8, 1810; he was educated at St. Mary's College, and at Washington College, Pennsylvania. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Pennsylvania in 1834. In 1838, and again in 1840, he represented that State in Congress, and 1843, 1844, 1846, 1848 was a member of the State Legislature, serving as Speaker in 1847. He was appointed attorney-general of Pennsylvania in 1848, and was chosen a senator in Congress in 1849 for the term of six years. Feeble health prevented him from active participation in the debates. He subsequently returned to Frederick, Md. He was a brigadier-general in the army, and died in Columbus, Ohio, 1863.

George Baer was born in Frederick, and was a representative in Congress from 1798 to 1801, and again from 1815 to 1817. He died in Frederick at an advanced age.

Francis Brengle, born in Western Maryland, was a representative in Congress from that State from 1843 to 1845. Died Dec. 10, 1846.

Daniel Sheffey was born at Frederick, Md., in 1770. He had but a limited education, and was a shoemaker by trade, but a man of vigorous mind and great intelligence. He removed to Staunton, Augusta Co., Va., and studied law while working at his trade. When admitted to the bar he attained a very lucrative practice, and was frequently a member of the State Legislature. He was a representative in Congress from 1809 to 1817. His speech in favor of renewing the charter of the first Bank of the United States was a masterly production. To John Randolph's sneer, "Ne sutor ultra crepidam," he sent back the stinging retort that "Randolph could never have risen from the shoemaker's bench." He died Dec. 3, 1830.

John A. McMahon was born in Frederick, Md., Feb. 19, 1833, and was graduated from St. Xavier's College, in Cincinnati, in 1849; he was admitted to practice in 1854; he was a delegate at large from Ohio to the Baltimore Convention of 1872, and was a representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from Ohio.

Adamson Tannehill was born in Frederick County, Md., in 1752, and served as a captain through the Revolutionary war. He removed to Pennsylvania, and settled near Pittsburgh; he was a justice of the peace at the breaking out of the "Whisky Rebellion," and firmly opposed that outbreak. He served as a brigadier-general in the war of 1812, and was a representative in Congress from 1812 to 1815. He died at Grant's Hill in 1817.

David Ross was a delegate from Maryland to the Continental Congress from 1786 to 1787.

William Schley was born in Frederick City, Md., Dec. 15, 1786. He received an academic education in Georgia, studied law, and was admitted to the bar at Augusta in 1812. He was in 1825 elected judge of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Georgia. In 1830 he was elected to the State Legislature; from 1833 to 1835 he was a representative in Congress, and for the following year was Governor of Georgia. He published a "Digest of the English Statutes," and died at Augusta, Ga., Nov. 20, 1838.

John H. Farquhar was born in Frederick, Md., Dec. 20, 1818. and removed with his father to Indiana in 1833. He was a civil engineer in the service of the State from 1837 to 1840, when he studied law and practiced his profession. In 1842 and 1843 he was secretary to the Indiana Senate, chief clerk, in 1844, of the House of Representatives of the State, Presidential elector in 1860, and was commissioned a captain in the Nineteenth United States Infantry in 1861, and served until 1864, when he resigned and was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and served on the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and on the Militia.

Roger Nelson was born in Frederick County, and was a general in the Revolutionary army, receiving severe wounds at the battle of Camden. He was a representative in Congress from Maryland from 1804 to 1810, and was for several years a member of the Virginia Legislature, and from 1810 to 1815 he was judge of the Upper District of that State. He was the father of John Nelson, and died at Frederick, Md., June 7, 1815.

Henry S. Geyer was born in Frederick, Md., in 1798, and removed in early life to Missouri. He saw some service in the war of 1812, and was captain of the first militia company formed in the State. He was an eminent practitioner of the law, and took also an active part in politics. He was a member of the convention that framed the first constitution of the State, and an active member for two sessions of the Legislature, of which he was Speaker during his last term. He succeeded Thomas H. Benton in the United States Senate, and served from 1851 to 1857. He was an attorney in the celebrated Dred Scott case. A man of decided ability, he possessed pleasing manners and a high character. He died at St. Louis, March 5, 1859.

Necrology of Frederick County since 1749.—The following is a list of the deaths of leading individuals born in or identified with Frederick County since 1749:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 1, 1750</td>
<td>John Thomas, high sheriff.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 29, 1756</td>
<td>Richard Burdus, formerly clerk of the Provincial Court.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>November, 1756</td>
<td>Isaac Brooke, surveyor of Frederick County.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July, 1757</td>
<td>Alexander McKeeny and Samuel Wilson, shot and killed near Frederick Town.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>October, 1758</td>
<td>Rev. Samuel Hunter, rector of All Saints’ Parish.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 19, 1761</td>
<td>Saul Richards, aged 58.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>January, 1761</td>
<td>Capt. Peter Butler.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1766</td>
<td>Edmund Key, leaving “Paradise,” 335 acres, “Good Hope,” 200 acres, and “Friendship,” 200 acres. One of these plantations was on the Potomac, and all of them were between Great Coccocmeag and Little Coccocmeag.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 29, 1765</td>
<td>John Darnall, one of the judges of the Provincial Court.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>January, 1768</td>
<td>Capt. Joseph Chapline, for many years a representative of the General Assembly.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>September, 1771</td>
<td>George Scott, farmer of the quit-rents in Frederick County, and deputy commissary of Prince George’s County, died in the latter county. William Turner Wootten, of Frederick County, was appointed deputy commissary in his place.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 8, 1786</td>
<td>John Magill.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aug. 27, 1787</td>
<td>Dr. Adam Fischer, aged 51.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 2, 1789</td>
<td>Baron Knypshansen, the Hessian general, who served in America during the greater part of the Revolutionary War.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 24, 1798</td>
<td>John Thomas Schley, who built the first house in Frederick in 1746, aged 78.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 29, 1792</td>
<td>Mrs. Catherine Ritchie, wife of John Ritchie.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 27, 1793</td>
<td>Col. Joseph Sim.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 22, 1794</td>
<td>At Rich Hill, four miles from Frederick, Mrs. Ann Johnson, wife of Thomas Johnson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 27, 1795</td>
<td>Rev. Edward Jones, formerly minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Moorefield.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dec. 20, 1797</td>
<td>Mrs. Eleanor Sheridene, wife of Upton Sheridene, of Milburn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 8, 1799</td>
<td>Melchior Geisser, a native of Germany, said to be 110 years old. He lived to see the fifth generation. Buried February 10th, in Middletown.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1799</td>
<td>Maj. Henry Hardman, an old soldier.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 14, 1800</td>
<td>Upton Sheridene, at Milburn, of yellow fever. He was the first U. S. tax commissioner for the State of Maryland.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 11, 1801</td>
<td>John Gambier, aged 78.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 9, 1802</td>
<td>Mrs. Patty Brunner, aged 83.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 13, 1802</td>
<td>Mrs. Barbara Schonn, aged 65.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 14, 1802</td>
<td>Frederick House, schoolmaster, aged 77.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 23, 1802</td>
<td>Henry Dorst.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 25, 1802</td>
<td>Jacob Baltezz.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 6, 1803</td>
<td>Joseph McCully, coppersmith, aged 32.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 14, 1803</td>
<td>William Biggs, aged 78. He left eight children and forty-two grandchildren.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dec. 18, 1803</td>
<td>Christian Steiner, aged 67.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 1, 1803</td>
<td>At his plantation, Col. William Bently, aged 64.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 25, 1803</td>
<td>John Tobias Reimer, aged 87.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 15, 1803</td>
<td>James Marshall, aged 74.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 12, 1804</td>
<td>Mrs. Elizabeth Fey, aged 73.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 21, 1804</td>
<td>Nicholas Freydenger, a native of Germany.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 2, 1804</td>
<td>Mrs. Elizabeth Hoffman, aged 80.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 24, 1804</td>
<td>Jacob Kline.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 3, 1804</td>
<td>James Smith, merchant, and one of the wealthiest inhabitants of Frederick County, aged 66.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 23, 1804</td>
<td>Col. Benedict Jamison, at his farm.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 29, 1804</td>
<td>Martin Storor.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 18, 1804</td>
<td>Baltzle Hinkle.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 27, 1804</td>
<td>William Robertson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 26, 1804</td>
<td>Mrs. Peale, of the Museum.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 21, 1804</td>
<td>Miss Rebecca Potts, daughter of Richard Potts.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 16, 1805</td>
<td>Andrew Shriner, merchant, aged 27.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 21, 1805</td>
<td>Mrs. Mary Lee, wife of Thomas Sim Lee, formerly Governor of Maryland.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 16, 1805</td>
<td>George Burkhart, an old merchant.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 19, 1805</td>
<td>Archibald Campbell, aged 58.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 28, 1805</td>
<td>Mrs. With French, aged 72.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 30, 1805</td>
<td>Mrs. Becty, wife of Thomas Bently.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 30, 1805</td>
<td>Louis Kemp.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 16, 1806</td>
<td>Alexander Contee Hanson, chancellor of Maryland.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
March 3, 1806.—Mrs. Ellis Fleming, aged 86.
March 11, 1806.—Mrs. Mary Hymes, a native of Germany, aged 103.
May 6, 1806.—Mrs. Beall, wife of Upton Beall.
Feb. 10, 1807.—Mr. William Dean.
Nov. 25, 1808.—Richard Potts.
Dec. 27, 1808.—Henry Winemiller.
Feb. 1, 1809.—Jacob Boyer, Sr.
June 30, 1809.—Edward Salmon.

March 27, 1810.—The Louisiana papers record the death of the wife of Governor Henry Johnson. The decease was born in Maryland in 1796, and was a cousin of the author of the “Star Spangled Banner.” Her father was the Hon. Philip B. Key, formerly a distinguished member of Congress, and one of the most eminent lawyers in the United States. Mrs. Johnson resided for many years in Georgetown, D.C., and her husband was for several years a United States senator.

April 10, 1810.—Mrs. Stickley, wife of Solomon Stickley.
April 26, 1810.—Mrs. Beall, wife of Wm. M. Beall, postmaster.
May 27, 1810.—Thomas McElroy, Esq., one of the senators of the Maryland Legislature.
July 10, 1810.—Capt. Thomas Spigg.
July 19, 1810.—Hieronymus Sise.
Sept. 15, 1810.—Mr. Leaver.
Nov. 22, 1810.—George Schmertzel, Sr.
Nov. 24, 1810.—Erickson H. Stone.
Nov. 24, 1810.—Jacob Wise.
Nov. 25, 1810.—Maj. Jacob Miller.
Nov. 29, 1810.—Col. George Stricker, at his residence in Virginia, aged 78. He was formerly of Frederick County, Md., and took an active and prominent part in the Revolutionary war.
Dec. 17, 1810.—Rev. Daniel Wayman, at York, Pa., aged 61, formerly pastor of the German Reformed Church of Frederick.

Jan. 17, 1811.—Samuel Duvall, surveyor of Frederick County.
Feb. 26, 1811.—Rev. Peter Kemp.
Feb. 27, 1811.—John Balzer, an inn-keeper.
April 13, 1811.—Thomas Noland.
April 25, 1811.—Col. Normand Bruce.
May 26, 1811.—Roger Edmundson.
May 27, 1811.—George Jacob Schley.
June 16, 1811.—Col. Baker Johnson.
Oct. 1, 1811.—Mrs. Margaret Hoff, aged 86.
Feb. 14, 1812.—Samuel Potts.
Feb. 21, 1812.—At Frederick Town, in the 85th year of her age, Mrs. Jane Hanson, reliet of Hon. John Hanson, a delegate from Maryland to the old Revolutionary Congress, and president of that body in Philadelphia in the period of 1781-82. Mrs. Hanson, whose maiden name was Jane Con- tee, was a native of Prince George’s County, but had resided a great part of her life in Frederick, of which, at the time of her death, she was one of the oldest inhabitants. She survived her husband thirty years, and had lived to mourn the last of a numerous family of children. One of them, her youngest son, Lient. Peter Contee Hanson, just entering into manhood, devoted himself to the service of his country in the struggle for independence, and fell at the battle of Fort Washington in 1776. Her eldest son, and the last of her children to die before her, was Alexander Contee Hanson, chancellor of Maryland.

March 7, 1812.—Mrs. Elizabeth Brengle, wife of Christian Brengle.
March 7, 1812.—Daniel Stoner, Sr., at an advanced age.
May 8, 1812.—Valentine Shriver.

Dec. 24, 1812.—Rebecca Shriver, wife of David Shriver, aged 71.
Sept. 5, 1813.—Mrs. Margaret Johnson, relief of Col. James Johnson, aged 64.
Nov. 12, 1813.—Philemon Barnes, aged 90.
Dec. 31, 1813.—Maj. Charles Baltzell, at his farm near Wood- borough, aged 77. He was a native of Germany, and in his youth served several campaigns in the Seven Years' war. He subsequently emigrated to this country and settled in Maryland. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war from the beginning until the army was disbanded, when he became a member of The Society of the Cincinnati.
June 9, 1814.—Mrs. Catherine Johnson, widow of Col. Baker Johnson.
July 1, 1814.—Rev. Frederick V. Nebelheimer, aged 64, for many years pastor of the Lutheran congregation at Han- over. He was master of Arabic, Syriac, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin.
July 28, 1815.—At his home near Georgetown, D. C., Philip Barton Key, member of Congress.
May 2, 1815.—John Hansen Thomas, one of the most eminent and eloquent of the legislators of the State, aged 29.
Jan. 13, 1817.—Wm. Potts, aged 76.
May 15, 1817.—Arthur Shaaf, in the 49th year of his age, a native of Frederick County, but for many years a resident of Annapolis, where he practiced law.
April 26, 1818.—John Baer, aged 63.
Feb. 2, 1819.—David Stone.
Feb. 2, 1819.—Conrad Englebrecht.
Feb. 26, 1819.—John Brunner.
March 30, 1819.—John Hughes.
Apr. 23, 1819.—Alexander C. Hanson, aged 33.
May 7 or 14, 1819.—At Gloeborough, John T. Shaaf, aged 56.
May 8, 1819.—Richard Brooks, aged 44. Mr. Brooks was a distinguished member of the bar.
June 22, 1819.—Madame De La Vincendiere, aged 65.
Aug. 26, 1819.—Wm. Baer, Sr.
1819.—John Payan Baneuff, a refugee from San Domingo in 1794; had 900 acres of land at Frederick Junction, and owned many slaves.
Nov. 9, 1819.—Ex-Governor Thomas Sim Lee, in his 75th year.
May 27, 1820.—Francis Bingest, a native of Germany, aged 163 years.
June 27, 1820.—John Thomas Steiner, aged 31.
Nov. 5, 1820.—Peter Hawmon.
Nov. 7, 1820.—John Resler.
Nov. 11, 1820.—Johannes George Meyer.
Dec. 1, 1820.—James Wright, tailor.
Dec. 8, 1820.—Mrs. Jacob Hoffman, aged 32.
April 5, 1821.—William Findlay, a soldier of the Revolution.
April 19, 1821.—Jacob Moldart, aged 67.
July 5, 1821.—Richard White (printer), aged 34.
July 6, 1821.—Sarah, wife of Col. John McPherson, aged 55.
Jan. 16, 1821.—Elizabeth C. Potts.
Jan. 11, 1821.—Peter Hardt, Sr., schoolmaster, and organist of German Reformed Church. He was a Hesian prisoner.
Jan. 17, 1821.—Jacob Steiner, aged 27.
Jan. 21, 1821.—Michael Allix, oldest person in town, aged 94.
March 29, 1821.—Henry Kouns, aged 94; came to Frederick at the age of 22. By trade a blacksmith, he soon made enough money in that business to purchase a small farm on Pipe Creek, where he lived for 57 years. He raised ten children, and left six children, one hundred grandchildren, and one hundred and thirty-five great-grandchildren.
Nov. 5, 1823.—Wm. M. Beall, aged 81.
Dec. 13, 1823.—James Lindsey, weaver, a native of county Tyrone, Ireland.
March 1, 1824.—Samuel Mixdorf, aged 79.
April 17, 1724.—William Stewart, a native of Leeds, England, a painter and musician.
July 28, 1824.—Monsieur Joseph B. Charles, dancing-master.
Aug. 20, 1824.—Thomas Bailey, a Revolutionary soldier.
Nov. 24, 1824.—Adam Coons, negro, aged 85, the only colored man ever confirmed in Frederick County as a regular member of the Lutheran Church. He was formerly a slave of Michael Loener, one of the founders of the church, and was the first colored man buried in the Lutheran graveyard.
Feb. 3, 1825.—Anna Maria Ramburg, widow of John Ransburg, Sr., aged 84.
April 6, 1825.—Mathias Bartgis, who established the first newspaper in Frederick.
May 18, 1825.—Capt. Henry Steiner, register of wills.
June 5, 1825.—A colored man belonging to John Hughes stabbed to death by Francis Martin, son of John Martin, a tailor.
July 15, 1825.—Gen. Joseph Swearingen, late of the Ninth Brigade Militia.
Aug. 28, 1825.—Rev. Peter A. Thomson, of St. Mary's County, at Tarbut's inn. His death was occasioned by mortification, resulting from the breaking of his jaw-bone in the drawing of a tooth.
Sept. 18, 1825.—Jacob Faubel, a mason, aged 70. He was one of the Hessian regiment during the Revolution, and was taken prisoner in New Jersey.
Oct. 4, 1825.—Daniel Leab, aged 21. While he was drawing a load from a gun it went off, and the bullet passed through his left eye, causing death in twenty minutes.
Nov. 14, 1825.—Maj.-Gen. Robert Cummings, commander of the Second Division of Maryland militia, aged 72.
Dec. 1, 1825.—Mrs. Lucy Sprigg, widow of Thomas Sprigg, aged 74.
Jan. 6, 1825.—Adolphus Wilhelm, killed by a runaway accident.
Jan. 27, 1826.—Benjamin Harwood, trustee of the State of Maryland, and treasurer of the Western Shore.
Feb. 1, 1826.—Lewis Green, teller in the Branch Bank, and brother of the editor of the Maryland Gazette.
Feb. 1, 1826.—Mrs. Anna Maria Meyers, aged 81.
Nov. 16, 1826.—Col. John Ritchie, aged 70.
Dec. 16, 1826.—Mrs. Anna Ritchie, wife of John Ritchie, aged 55.
Feb. 28, 1827.—Capt. John R. Corberly, aged 45; buried in Catholic cemetery.
April 22, 1827.—Harriet, wife of John Brein, and daughter of Col John McPherson, at Catoting Furnace, aged 43.
June 9, 1827.—George Getzendantner, surveyor of Frederick County.
Sept. 1, 1827.—Frederick Markley, aged 51.
Sept. 14, 1827.—Franz Kleinert, aged 76. He was a Hessian soldier in the Revolutionary war, was captured in New Jersey, and was buried in a vault made by himself.
Sept. 28, 1827.—Thomas Bond, aged 60.
March 3, 1828.—Joseph Smith, aged 64, and for forty years agent of "Carroll's Manor." He was buried in the Catholic graveyard.
Sept. 4, 1828.—Mrs. Francesca Chester Schley, wife of Frederick A. Schley, and daughter of Capt. David Lynn, of Allegany County.

Sept. 15, 1828.—Christopher Hickman, who came to America with the Hessian regiments during the Revolutionary war, aged 76.

Nov. 2, 1828.—Mrs. Sophia Brunner, aged 80.

April 4, 1828.—Miss Dehouline, aged 86, a native of France, who, with a sister, who died the year previous, settled at Frederick immediately after the San Domingo revolution of 1793.

May 28, 1829.—John Brunner, aged 81.

Sept. 5, 1829.—Col. Stephen Steiner, aged 61.

Oct. 16, 1829.—John Jacob Schley, in Louisville, Jefferson Co., Ga., father of Frederick A. Schley, and born in Frederick County, aged 77.

June 23, 1830.—Joseph Bell and — Klaus, killed by falling off a bank of earth on the railroad just where it crosses the Georgetown turnpike.

Aug. 17, 1831.—John Walker (tobaccoist), aged 77, a Revolutionary soldier.

Aug. 18, 1831.—Daniel Hauer, who lived in Frederick since 1771, aged 84.

Sept. 10, 1831.—John Leather, aged 76, a Revolutionary soldier, who was wounded at Brandywine. For a number of years he was an elder in the Lutheran Church.

Sept. 13, 1831.— Catharine Tyler, wife of Dr. John Tyler, aged 61.

May 29, 1832.—At Marseilles, France, the Rev. Michael Du Bourg Egan, nephew of the first Catholic Bishop of Philadelphia, and formerly president of Mount St. Mary’s Seminary, at Emmitsburg, aged 29.

Aug. 31, 1832.—Rev. Samuel Knox, aged 76.

Sept. 11, 1832.—Judge Jacob Steiner, of the Orphans’ Court, aged 70.

Oct. 27, 1832.—John Gebhardt, aged 82.

Dec. 7, 1832.—Prof. John M. Scheneck, organist of All Saints’ Church; found dead in his bed at Mrs. Murray’s tavern.

Jan. 10, 1833.—Maj. Peter Mauz, aged 81.

March 6, 1833.—Peter Brengle, high sheriff.

March 26, 1833.—John Graham, president Frederick County Bank, aged 73.

June 14, 1833.—Mrs. Ann E. Harrison, wife of Wm. G. Harrison, of Baltimore, and daughter of Wm. Ross.

June 10, 1833.—Abraham White, in the 88th year of his age. A native of Pennsylvania, he emigrated to Frederick County, Md., some time prior to the Revolutionary war, and was among the first to enter the Revolutionary army. He was active in recruiting troops, and by his exertions in a short time organized a company, of which he became captain, and which was attached to Capt. Bruce’s battalion. He remained in command until 1780, when he was appointed by the commander of the French forces, then at Williamsburg, first conductor of the First Brigade of Artillery, with a major’s commission, in which capacity he acted until the general disbandment. In 1802 he removed to Baltimore, where he resided for many years.

Dec. 29, 1833.—Adam Sulivall, aged 74; came to America in 1777, and was of the “Bayreuth Regiment.”

Feb. 12, 1834.—George Mayberry, tavern-keeper.

July 23, 1834.—Mrs. Anna Catharine Hauer, widow of Daniel Hauer, and a native of Germany, aged 92.

Dec. 11, 1834.—Wm. Coleman Brier, aged 22, at Antioch Iron-Works.

Dec. 18, 1834.—Mrs. Ann Key, relict of Philip B. Key, at the residence of her son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Navins.

July 17, 1835.—John Reich, Sr., aged 71.

Oct. 31, 1825.—John Schley, clerk of the court since 1815.

Nov. 23, 1835.—Ex-Sheriff Thomas Carlton, aged 54.

Jan. 7, 1836.—Capt. J. L. Kuhn, United States army.

Jan. 27, 1836.—Rev. Frederick D. Schaeffer, D.D., aged 76.

March 9, 1837.—Dorothea, sister of Chief Justice Taney.

May 3, 1837.—Rev. David F. Schaeffer, of an apoplectic fit, formerly pastor of the Lutheran Church. He was found dead in his bed, aged 51.

May 26, 1837.—John B. Key, son of F. S. Key.

Oct. 14, 1837.—Hon. L. Harding, chief justice of the Orphans’ Court of Frederick County, aged 59.

Aug. 16, 1837.—J. P. W. Amelung, originally from Germany, and a resident of Baltimore, aged 48.

Dec. 10, 1837.—Dr. Henry Baker, one of the elders and class-leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Liberty Town, aged 60.

January, 1838.—Mordecai Vor, keeper of toll-gate at Catoctin Mountain.

April 29, 1838.—Col. Philomena Griffith, an officer of the Revolutionary war, at New Market, aged 82.

May 31, 1838.—John Jacob Baltzell, aged 87.

Sept. 8, 1838.—James Dixon, attorney-at-law.

July 19, 1838.—Christian Gutzmann, proprietor of the ‘Frederick Times and Democratic Advocate,’ aged 47.

July 13, 1838.—Ner Talhamosse, Col. Baker Johnson, formerly of Frederick Co., Md., in the 50th year of his age, leaving a wife and five children to mourn their irreparable loss. Col. Johnson was the son of Col. Baker Johnson, of Frederick Town, Md.

Nov. 14, 1838.—At the residence of his son-in-law, Daniel Wetter, near Cootergaster, Frederick Co., Md., Maj. Frederick Willhide, a soldier of the Revolution, in the 88th year of his age. Maj. Willhide on the 2d of November, 1776, enlisted in the German regiment of this State for three years, during which period he was promoted to orderly sergeant in the company to which he was attached, and faithfully served out the term of his enlistment; he afterwards acted as volunteer until the close of the war. During the period of his service he was engaged in some of the hardest-fought battles of the Revolution, having been present at Brandywine, Germantown, Trenton, and Monmouth, and witnessed the closing struggle at Yorktown. Maj. Willhide afterwards commanded a company of volunteers, and was subsequently commissioned a major in the old Maryland line, though he was never in any active service after the war.

Nov. 25, 1838.—Joseph Little, 77 years of age.

Oct. 31, 1839.—Casper Mauz, aged 64.

Dec. 22, 1840.—Wm. Carlton, almost instantly killed while running with the Junior Fire Company.

July 2, 1839.—Sister Genevieve, Superior of St. John’s Female Academy and Orphan Asylum. Her family name was Rechta Tyler.

June 29, 1841.—Valentine Brunner, aged 84, a Revolutionary soldier.

Aug. 22, 1841.—Dr. Grafton Duvall, aged 62.

Sept. 16, 1841.—Daniel Hauer, aged 74.
Oct. 15, 1841.—Dr. John Tyler, aged 79.
May 17, 1842.—Capt. Daniel Prengle, of the "Mohawk Invincibles."

Nov. 25, 1843.—Frederick Englebrecht, born in Frederick, Aug. 3, 1786.
Feb. 20, 1843.—Rev. Nathaniel L. Mills, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and member of the Baltimore Annual Conference, aged 79, and in the 58th year of his ministry.
July 2, 1846.—Rev. Dennis Mouldon, of smallpox.

Dec. 15, 1846.—Hon. Francis Brengle, aged 46. He was formerly a member of the Maryland Legislature, and afterward a member of Congress.
Feb. 17, 1848.—Henry Bear, aged 91, the last of the Revolutionary survivors of Frederick County. He entered the army in 1776 as a volunteer. He was one of the company that marched from Frederick under the command of Capt. Peter Mants, and which formed a part of the old Maryland line.
July 29, 1848.—Judge Abraham Shriver.
Jan. 31, 1849.—Thomas Turner, editor of the Frederick Herald. Mr. Turner was collector of the port of Georgetown, D. C., about 1837, at which time he was also editor of the Potomac Advocate. He was shortly after appointed clerk of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, and followed the office on its removal from Washington to Frederick City, where he subsequently resided. On the removal of the office from Frederick to Cumberland he resigned his post, and devoted himself entirely to the editorial management of the Herald, in which position he continued up to the time of his death. He also represented Frederick City in the Legislature.
Aug. 5, 1849.—M. E. Bartgis, mayor of Frederick. He was by profession a printer, and edited and published a paper in Frederick for many years.
Aug. 10, 1849.—At Petersville, Col. John Thomas, father of ex-Governor Francis Thomas, of Maryland, aged 85.
Nov. 16, 1849.—John Casper Freethie, aged 70, husband of Barbara Freethie, of Whittier's poem.
1851.—Dr. Edward Goldsborough.
1851.—Col. Thomas C. Brashear.
April 1, 1851.—John Ebert, aged 79.
May, 1851.—Thomas S. Dulany, merchant.
March 29, 1852.—Henry McElfresh, member of Assembly, elected only a few weeks before his death to fill a vacancy.
Dec. 18, 1852.—William Ross, a prominent member of the Frederick bar, and president of the Frederick Branch of the Farmers' Bank of Maryland, aged 51.
Oct. 14, 1852.—David Schley, for several years editor of the Frederick Examiner.
April 30, 1852.—David Shriver, a native of Frederick County, but for many years a resident and prominent citizen of Cumberland, Md., in the 56th year of his age. Mr. Shriver was selected by the Hon. Albert Gallatin, the Secretary of the Treasury, as engineer to lay out and construct the great National road from Cumberland to Wheeling, and on its completion was appointed by the general government commissioner of public works. He surveyed and superintended the construction of the Reisterstown turnpike, and took a prominent part in building the plank-road from Cumberland to West Newton. He also served as a delegate in the Legislature from Frederick County, and for a long time was president of the Cumberland Bank of Allegany.
Oct. 29, 1855.—Wm. Thompson Palmer, in St. Louis.
Feb. 20, 1854.—Rev. Nicholas Dorsey, of the Methodist Protestant Church, at New Market.
March 1, 1855.—John P. Thompson, the founder and for a long time the editor of the Frederick Herald, and president of the Frederick County Bank, aged 79.
Nov. 8, 1855.—George Bowius, formerly a member of the Maryland Legislature.
Feb. 9, 1856.—Samuel Geyer, the father of Dr. J. W. Geyer, editor of the Frederick Union.
July 26, 1856.—Dr. Samuel Tyler, aged 36.
April 12, 1857.—Col. Edward Schley.
April 13, 1857.—Mary Ann Evitt.
Nov. 27, 1857.—John Rohr, born in Frederick in 1737.
Nov. 1, 1858.—Ex-Governor Wm. Schley, of Georgia. The deceased was born at Frederick, Md., in 1776, but for many years was a prominent citizen of Georgia, having been a judge of the Superior Court as early as 1825, a member of the Legislature in 1826, and of Congress from 1832 to 1835, when he was elected Governor of the State. For twenty-five years he was the Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch (Masonic) Chapter of the State, and at the time of his death president of the Medical College of Georgia.
June 22, 1858.—Caspar Mants, ex-sheriff of Frederick County.
Dec. 29, 1858.—Clark Koontz, formerly one of the editors of the Frederick Union.
April 14, 1860.—Hon. William Cost Johnson, a native of Frederick County, at Washington City, aged 54.
Feb. 12, 1862.—Mrs. Agnes Houston, widow of James F. Houston.
July 7, 1862.—Dr. William Waters, aged 62.
Dec. 18, 1862.—At 6 p.m., Mrs. Barbara Freethie, the heroine of Whittier's poem. She was born Dec. 5, 1766, and was the widow of John C. Freethie. She lived in a house next to the Bentzontown bridge, south side, which the corporation bought in 1808 with the lot of George Eisler, and on April 3, 1869, sold the house to James Hopewood for $300, who removed it. The corporation found it necessary to widen Carroll Creek, running through the town, and this house being in the way had to be removed.
Jan. 16, 1863.—Rev. Josiah Varden, aged 57. He joined the Methodist Protestant Church in 1825, soon after its organization, and was at once placed among the active preachers, and continued in the service until about ten years before his death, when failing health compelled him to ask retirement to the superannuated list. While an active member he was for three successive terms chosen president of the Maryland Annual Conference, and was twice stationed in Baltimore, at the East and West Baltimore Churches.
March, 1865.—Rev. Mr. Olmeyer, Professor of Chemistry of St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg.
June 7, 1866.—Professor Wm. Baer, aged 79, a well-known chemist and specialist in agricultural chemistry.
1867.—Dr. John W. Dutrow.
May, 1867.—Benjamin F. Bartgis, aged 78, formerly editor of the Republican Gazette, and subsequently of the Hornet newspapers, which were published in the interests of the Republican party, under old party divisions and in fierce opposition to the Federal party.
Feb. 21, 1868.—At Frederick, Father Matthew Saunders, a well-known Catholic priest. He was born in Holland in 1867, and was there ordained in 1831. The next year he came to America, and entered the novitiate of the Society of Jesus in Maryland. He was appointed to take charge of some of the missions in Charles County, later he was transferred to St. Mary's and Prince George's Counties, and in 1858 was removed to the Eastern Shore, where he continued until within a few months of his death.
Feb. 22, 1870.—Joseph M. Palmer, the eminent lawyer.
March 8, 1871.—Mrs. Laelinda Greenwell, aged 101 years 9 months and 27 days.

May 17, 1871.—John Lee, of Meadfoot, aged 82. He was the son of Thomas Lee, Governor of Maryland.

March 11, 1871.—Louis Eider, of Emmitsburg, aged 73; he left a large number of relatives in Baltimore.

April 1, 1871.—Maj. Henry Schley, an aged and influential citizen, at the residence of his son, Dr. Fairfax Schley.

He was adjutant of Col. Chambers’ regiment during the war of 1812, and served at Bladensburg and Baltimore. Prior to the constitution of 1851 he was clerk of the Frederick County Court, and afterwards for several years the cashier of the Frederick County Bank. He was a brother of William Schley, the well-known lawyer.

April 1872.—John E. Naill, brother of Hon. David W. Naill, at his residence in Illinois. He was born at Taneytown, Md., graduated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa., studied law in the office of Hon. James Cooper, formerly a United States senator from Pennsylvania, and went to Illinois when quite a young man. There he accumulated a very considerable estate. He was a Democrat, and in 1860 served on the Breckenridge and Lane electoral ticket. His party repeatedly tendered him the nomination for Congress in his district, and he was also solicited to accept the nomination for Governor of his adopted State, but having no taste for public life declined both nominations.

Sept. 21, 1872.—Col. A. B. Hanson, an old merchant, who served honorably in the war of 1812.

March 11, 1874.—Col. John McPherson, aged 78.

Feb. 27, 1877.—Col. Daniel S. Biser, at Burkittsville, aged 75. Of Mr. Biser it may be said that he was in official harness during nearly the whole course of his life. He was elected to the State Legislature many times (once on the reformed Union ticket with Hon. Francis Thomas and Gen. Edward Shriver). In the winter of 1842-43 he was Speaker of the House of Delegates, and presided over that body with marked ability. He held various other positions also, prominent among which were assistant flour inspector under Governor Lowe, flour inspector-general under Governor Ligon, clerk of the Circuit Court of this county, by appointment from Judge Nelson, to fill the unexpired term of J. W. L. Carter, member of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Board for a number of years, etc. Although an active politician and a staunch Democrat, he was highly respected and esteemed by his political opponents as well as friends.

June 18, 1879, the dead body of Rev. John M. Friday, pastor of the Lutheran Church at Harper’s Ferry, was found in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, just above the lock and below the bridge at Harper’s Ferry. The circumstances attending his death were stated by a newspaper account, written at the time, to have been as follows: “On last Thursday evening he was engaged by a young couple from Haltown to marry them with the utmost secrecy on the Maryland side of the river. At the close of the ceremony, some distance above the bridge, he was requested to tarry until the bridal pair could cross the bridge, so that no suspicion of their marriage would be excited by being seen on the bridge in the presence of a minister. On Friday morning the dead body of Mr. Friday was found in the canal above the lock. A silver watch-chain was wound around his left hand, a position habitual to him when standing or leisurely walking. There was a wound along the right temple, extending a little behind the ear. The theory of some is that while waiting for the fifteen minutes to pass, in order that the bridal couple might reach the Virginia shore, and standing on the bank of the canal, a robber stealthily approached and dealt a blow which, striking the temple, produced instantaneous paralysis, and the body fell forward into the water of the canal, without getting the left hand out of the watch-guard. The robber becoming alarmed at the fatal result, not anticipated by him, and the body not rising to the surface, regarded it too perilous to remain long enough to rifle the pockets.”

Mr. Friday’s wife was a daughter of George Whip, of Jefferson, Frederick Co., and the body was interred at that place. The identity of the supposed murderer was never established.

Oct. 14, 1881, at Frederick, Dr. Joseph C. Cockey. Dr. Cockey was a graduate of the University of Maryland, and for many years an intimate friend of the late Prof. Nathan H. Smith. Besides practicing medicine, Dr. Cockey took a great deal of interest at times in local politics. About twenty-five years ago he represented the Fourth Ward of Baltimore in the City Council, and in 1877 was an unsuccessful candidate for the State Senate. He was identified with the Republican party. At one time Dr. Cockey had an exceedingly large practice, but as he was compelled to visit Frederick frequently to attend kinpeople there, his practice gradually fell off. He was comparatively well-to-do, however. In the summer of 1881 a Kansasman, Dr. J. Hanson Cockey, of Rye, N. Y., died, and he went there to settle his business affairs. The funeral took place at Frederick, and the remains were interred in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The General Assembly in 1778 passed an act for the relief of the maimed officers, soldiers, and seamen from Maryland engaged in the Revolutionary cause. Under its provisions those in necessitous circumstances were entitled to half-pay, and the children of those deceased to certain annuities. The records of the Orphans’ Court show that the children and wives of the following soldiers from Western Maryland availed themselves of this act:

William Parsons, died in service.
William Bright, died in service.
Charles Williams, died in service.
David Miller, died in service.
Samuel Haukis, wounded.
Sera Mijes, wounded.
John Meek, Seventh Regiment, wounded at Guilford.
John Brown (sergeant), Sixth Regiment, wounded at Camden.
Robert Kerns (sergeant), Second Regiment, wounded.
James Park, Second Regiment, wounded at Cowpens.
James Garth, Second Regiment, wounded at siege of Ninety-Six.
John Alsop, Second Regiment, wounded at Cowpens.
George Burklap, First Regiment, wounded at Eutaw.
Christopher Lambert, Third Regiment, wounded in Carolinas.
Michael Walmunt, First Regiment, wounded at Guilford.
Philip Fisher, First Regiment, wounded at Guilford.
John Ober, wounded.
John Auber (sergeant), Second Regiment, wounded.
Lake Lawlowe, First Regiment, wounded at Guilford.
James Shehan, Second Regiment, wounded at Monmouth.
Peter Cunningham, Seventh Regiment, wounded in South Carolina.
John Stoner, Seventh Regiment, wounded at Germantown.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Edward Rose, wounded in New Jersey.
John Snyder (corporal), lost his leg in Camping.
Paul Haggerty, disabled.
John Shovell, Sixth Regiment, wounded at Camden.

CHAPTER XXIV.
COUNTY OFFICERS.

The first election ever held in Frederick County took place March 7, 1749, for delegates to the General Assembly. The following were elected: Henry Wright Crabb, Thomas Owen, Joseph Chapline, Daniel Dulaney.

The first election held in the county after the practical abolition of the Lord Proprietary's government was that at which were chosen the delegates to the convention of the province which assembled at Annapolis on the 22d of June, 1774. This convention, while affirming the allegiance of the people to King George, took care to make due provision for armed defense by the formation of a militia composed of companies of sixty-eight men each, who were to be provided "with a good fire-lock with bayonet fixed thereon," and the requisite quantity of ammunition. The cost of the equipment was to be defrayed by contributions from the different counties, of which Frederick was expected to furnish thirteen hundred and thirty-three pounds, a sum greater by four hundred pounds than that assessed to any other county in the province. In September, 1775, the freeholders of Frederick County met for the purpose of selecting a Committee of Observation (to consist of fifty-three members) for Frederick County. For "the ease and convenience" of the people of Frederick County it was provided that that county should be divided into three districts. The Upper District was bounded by the South Mountain and the lines of the county westward; the Middle District extended from the South Mountain to the Monocacy; the Southern District was bounded by the Monocacy from its mouth to Bennett's Creek, and with that creek to the headwaters of the Patuxent. The place for holding the elections in the Upper District was Elizabethtown (now Hagerstown); in the Middle District, Frederick Town; and in the Lower District, Hungerford's (now Rockville, Montgomery County). In the articles of association adopted at Annapolis, July 26, 1775, it was provided that forty companies of minute-men should be enrolled, of which Frederick was to furnish eight, or thrice as many as any other county with the exception of Baltimore County, whose quota was five companies. The companies in Frederick County were to compose a battalion of themselves. At the convention which met at Annapolis, Dec. 7, 1775, the delegates elected from Frederick County were: Middle District, Charles Beatty and Baker Johnson; Lower District, Henry Griffith.

In the convention of May, 1776, the same delegates served, with the addition of William Baird as the representative from the Upper District (now Washington County). On the 10th of May it is recorded that George Brent, a member "for that district of Frederick County which lies west of Locking Creek," appeared and took his seat. In June, 1776, John Stull was associated with Mr. Baird on the representation from the Upper District. On the 24 of July, 1776, the convention adopted resolutions providing for the election of representatives from the different counties to choose a permanent form of government for the State. The judges of election for Frederick County were: Upper District, Noah Hart, Christian Orndorff, and Eli Williams; Middle District, Christopher Edelen, William Luckett, Jr., and David Shriver; Lower District, Jonathan Wilson, Zadock Magruder, and William Luckett, Sr. The convention met at Annapolis, Aug. 14, 1776, and the delegates from Frederick County were: Upper District, Samuel Beall, Samuel Hughes, John Stull, Henry Schnebely; Middle District, Adam Fischer, Upton Sheredine, Christopher Edelen, and David Shriver; Lower District, Thomas Sprigg Wootton, Jonathan Wilson, William Bayly, Jr., and Elisha Williams. On the 8th of November, 1776, the convention adopted a constitution and form of government for Maryland, and an election for officers under the new constitution was held November 25th of the same year. The judges for Frederick County at this election were William Luckett, John Adlun, and Joseph Wells. The justices of the peace who formed the County Court of Frederick at the organization of the new government in 1777 were Normand Bruce, William Blair, Upton Sheredine, William Beatty, Joseph Wells, Jacob Young, George Scott, Christopher Edelen, James Johnson, William Murdock Beall, Carleton Tannehill, William Luckett, Jr., John Lawrence, Basil Dorsey, David Shriver, Joseph Wood, Jr., Ephraim Howard, John Haas, James Fleming, Charles Warfield.

The justices of the Orphans' Court for Frederick County were Normand Bruce, William Blair, Upton Sheredine, William Beatty, and Joseph Wells, and the surveyor was John Hanson, Jr.; the register of wills George Murdock, and the coroners Benjamin Ogle, Leonard Smith, Van Swearingen, and William Hobbs. At the election of 1786 the following notice was issued:

"Public Notice to the electors of Frederick County is hereby given, that on Monday, the 4th day of September next, is the day appointed by the Constitution for the election of two persons for this county to be Electors of the Senate; and as our representation under the present form of government is a subject of the first magnitude, 'tis to be hoped every person inspired with real or true patriotism will not fail in giving his personal attendance on that day.

"THOMAS BEATTY, Sheriff.

"FREDERICK-TOWN, Aug. 28, 1786."

At that time the State Senate, consisting of fifteen members, was chosen by electors from the different counties, and in pursuance of the above notice the electors of Frederick County met at the court-house (the only election precinct), where a poll was opened, which resulted in the unanimous choice of Thomas Johnson and Thomas Sim Lee as electors for the county to choose the Senate, as directed by the State constitution.

On the 18th of September, 1786, the electors met at Annapolis, and selected the following State senators to serve for five years:

On Oct. 23, 1828, two barbecues were held at Frederick, that of the Adams party at Bentz’ pump, and that of the Jackson men in Niddorff’s meadow.

A public meeting of the Jackson Democrats of Frederick County was held at the court-house on the 24th October, 1832, at which it was unanimously decided to withdraw the Democratic electoral ticket of that district, not on account of any objection to Gen. Jackson, but owing to the manner in which the ticket was gotten up.

At the Presidential elections of 1824 and 1828 Frederick, Washington, and Allegany Counties composed an electoral district, and were entitled to choose two electors of President and Vice-President. At each election the friends of Jackson were successful by a small majority. After which time, owing to the wise policy of Gen. Jackson’s administration, his friends had increased, and at the approaching election of the fall of 1832 it was supposed that he would receive in the district a majority of at least five hundred votes.

Of this condition of the public sentiment of the counties the Legislature of the State, which was anti-Jackson, was fully sensible, having learned it from Mr. Adams’ defeat in 1824 and 1828, and more recently by the vote for electors of the State Senate in September, 1831, when nearly five hundred votes more were given to the friends than to the enemies of Jackson. With the intention, as was alleged, of preventing the fair expression of this sentiment at the November election, the Legislature at its previous session, by a new arrangement of the electoral districts, united with the above-named counties six other counties and the city of Annapolis, in which Mr. Adams in 1828 obtained a majority of seventeen hundred votes, and in which his party still maintained the supremacy. With regard to this action of the Legislature the people of Western Maryland declared that "a more flagrant, a more disgraceful, a more arrogant violation of popular rights is not to be found in the history of any government professing to be republican." The opposition sought to justify their friends in the Legislature with the pretext that the new apportionment of representation by Congress created the necessity of a new arrangement of electoral districts in Maryland. This subterfuge, however, did not screen from public indignation a measure by which the people of Western Maryland were deprived of their political rights. Under the new apportionment law Maryland was entitled to ten electors of President and Vice-President, instead of eleven as before. Under the new law enacted by the Legislature in their arrangement of the districts, the city of Baltimore, then containing 89,625 inhabitants, was authorized to elect two electors, and the people of Baltimore County, which contained 40,251 inhabitants, were empowered to choose one elector. It was asked, if this distribution of three electors was deemed equitable, why did the Legislature suppose it necessary to alter the electoral district composed of Frederick, Washington, and Allegany Counties, in which there were 81,660 inhabitants? These three counties were, however, united with Charles, St. Mary’s, and Calvert, which were remote, and with which they had no interests in common equal to those with the adjoining county and city of Baltimore. The friends of Jackson in the district thought it was a design to deprive them of the aid of a large Jackson majority (not less than 2000) in Baltimore County and City, and overwhelm them with the anti-Jackson majority of 1500 in the three southern counties. The reason for the separation of the city from the county of Baltimore was alleged to be as follows: in the county there was a well-known Jackson majority of more than 1500. If to these figures the Legislature had added the majority of 500 in the city, all hope of giving these electors to Mr. Clay would have been vain and futile. Instead of creating one district with a privilege of choosing three electors, the county was authorized to elect one and the city two others. By this arrangement it was hoped that two electors would be added to the Whig ticket. In the other district similar peculation was discernible. The Jackson majorities of Harford, Cecil, and Queen Anne's Counties were to be counterbalanced by the Clay majorities of the other counties of the Eastern Shore, with which they had been associated.

On the 20th of April, 1840, a Whig County Convention was held. There were five log cabins and several barrels of hard cider. The procession was a mile long. Speeches were made by Richard J. Bowie, John P. Kennedy, Governor John Pope, of Kentucky, Edward Stanley, of North Carolina, George H. Proctor, of Indiana, Daniel Jenifer, Wm. Cost Johnson, and S. Teackle Wallis. On June 8, 1840, a Democratic County Convention was held. There were two thousand three hundred persons in the procession. The speakers were Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, Dr. Duncan, of Ohio, Dr. Risteen, Messrs. Ely, Spencer, Mitchell, and Francis Thomas. On June 10, 1840, John W. Bear, "the Ohio Blacksmith," addressed a Harrison meeting in Frederick. In 1840 the "Junior Tippecanoe Club" was organized, with Alex. Russell, president; Lewis H. Steiner and Joseph Yearick, vice-presidents; Morgan Smallwood, secretary; and Sydney Bantz, treasurer. On Oct. 28, 1840, a Whig barbecue was held at Slater's Woods. On Oct. 23, 1852, a Democratic barbecue was held on Barracks Hill, and speeches were made by Benjamin C. Pressman, Col. W. W. W. Bowie, and Thos. J. McKaig. On Oct. 30, 1852, a Whig barbecue was held, and speeches were made by J. B. Ricaud, A. R. Boteler, R. T. Merrick, J. T. B. Dorsey, and others.

Civil List.

Citizens of Frederick County who have filled the Office of Governor of the State.
Thomas Johnson, 1777-79; Thomas Sim Lee, 1779-82, 1792-94; Francis Thomas, 1841-44; Enoch Louis Lowe, 1851-54.

Citizens of Frederick County who have represented Maryland in the Senate of the United States.
Richard Potts, 1793.

Congressmen from Frederick County to the Continental Congress.
John Hanson, 1781-85; Thomas Sim Lee, 1783-84; Richard Potts, 1781-82.

Natives of Frederick County who have been members of either House of Congress since the adoption of the Constitution.
Upton Shererdine, the first member-elect; George Baer, formerly cashier of Frederick County Bank; Daniel Shefey, Representative from Virginia; Henry S. Geyer, Senator from Missouri (married Shefey's sister); James Cooper, Senator from Pennsylvania; Francis Brengle; Francis Thomas; George Cary, Representative from Georgia, son of Dr. John D Cary, editor of The Key; William Schley, Representative from Georgia, and elected Governor of Georgia (1834) on the Union Jackson ticket; John H. Farquhar, Representative from Indiana: Henry R. Wardfield; Henry W. Hoffman; Roger Nelson; John Nelson; William Cost Johnson; Jacob M. Kinkel; John Ritchie; Frederick Green, Representative from Tiffin District, Ohio, son of Capt. Lewis Green; John F. O'Neil, Representative from Zanesville District, Ohio; John A. McMahon, Representative from Ohio; Milton G. Umer.

Judges of the Court of Appeals from Frederick County.
Richard Potts, appointed 10th October, 1831; Madison Nelson, elected 1867; William P. Maulsby, appointed 1876, to fill vacancy caused by death of Madison Nelson, until next general election; John Ritchie, appointed in 1881, and afterwards elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Richard J. Bowie.

Judges of the General Court from Frederick County.
Alexander Contee Hanson, appointed 9th March, 1778.

Chancellors of the State from Frederick County.
Alexander Contee Hanson, appointed 3d October, 1789.

Judges from Frederick County in the Court of the Fifth Judicial District, comprehending the Counties of Frederick, Washington, Montgomery, and Allegany.
Richard Potts, chief justice, appointed 5th January, 1791, and reappointed chief justice 15th October, 1796; William Claggett, chief justice, appointed 28th January, 1802.

Judges from Frederick County in the Court of the Fifth Judicial District, comprehending the Counties of Frederick, Washington, and Allegany.
John R. Key, associate judge, appointed January, 1791; Upton Shererdine, associate judge, appointed January, 1791; William Claggett, associate judge, appointed 28th January, 1806; Abraham Shriver, associate judge, appointed 29th January, 1806; Roger Nelson, associate judge, appointed 7th May, 1810; Richard Marshall, associate judge, appointed 1842.

Judge of the Third Judicial Circuit, comprising Frederick and Carroll Counties.
Madison Nelson, elected 1851.

Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, comprising Frederick County.
Madison Nelson, elected 1864.

Judges from Frederick County in the Sixth Judicial Circuit, comprising Frederick and Montgomery Counties.
Madison Nelson, chief judge, elected 1857, died Jan. 1, 1879; John A. Lynch, associate judge, elected 1867; William P. Maulsby, chief judge, appointed 1870, to fill vacancy caused by death of Madison Nelson, until next general election; John Ritchie, appointed March 16, 1881, chief judge, to fill vacancy caused by death of Richard J. Bowie, elected in 1870, and who died in March, 1881.

Frederick County State Senators.
1776, Upton Shererdine; 1781, Abraham Faws; 1786, Thomas Johnson; 1791, Joshua Dorey; 1801, Dr. John Tyler; 1894, Roger Nelson; 1866, David Shriver; 1811, Thomas Hawkins; 1816, Roger Brooke Taney; 1821, Joshua Cocke; 1826, John Nelson; 1831, Thomas Sappington; 1856, Wm. Schley; 1837, John Lee; 1883, Richard Potts;
FREDERICK COUNTY.

1844, Casper Quayn; 1846, David W. Nall; 1850, Jacob M. Konkel; 1854, Wm. Bradley Tyler; 1857, Anthony Kimmel; 1861, Grayson Eichelberger; 1865, Charles E. Trail; 1867, Joshua Biggs; 1871, Dr. Lewis H. Steiner. Dr. Steiner is the present senator, having been re-elected in 1875 and in 1879.

Members of the House of Delegates from Frederick County from 1749 to 1882.

HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Depuy Commissioners.

1742-54, John Darnall; 1754-57, Beverly Ghielin; 1757-59, J. Dickson; 1759-61, John Darnall; 1761-64, Peter Butler; 1764-76, Thomas Bowles.

Registers of Wills.

Clerks of Circuit Court.

Sheriffs.

1748, John Thomas; 1759, George Gordon; 1759, James Dickson; 1760, Samuel Beall; 1763, Thomas Prather; 1765, George Murdock; 1766, George Scott; 1769, Normand Bruce; 1772, James Hackman; 1773, Lawrence O'Neill; 1775, Thomas French; 1776, William Beatty; 1778, Valentine Brothet; 1782, Christopher Edelin; 1783, Thomas Beatty; 1788, Peter Mants; 1791, Tobias Butler; 1794, Richard Butler; 1797, Abner Ritcheo; 1800, Lawrence Brengle; 1805, George Creager, Sr.; 1806, George Creager, Jr.; 1809, Ezra Mants; 1812, Marie Jones (died); 1814-15, Joseph M. Crowell; 1818, William M. Beall; 1821, Thomas W. Morgan; 1824, Thomas Charlton; 1827, John Rigney; 1836, Peter Brengle (died); 1832, Matthias E. Bartig; 1833, Mahlon Talbot; 1856, Thomas Gourley; 1859, Henry How; 1842, George Rice, of James; 1845, Adam Custard; 1848, Norman B. Harding; 1851, Casper Mants; 1855, Israel C. O'Neill; 1855, Mahlon Roderick; 1857, Michael H. Haller; 1859, Joseph M. Ebbers; 1861, Michael Zimmerman; 1863, John A. Steiner; 1865, William B. Tabler; 1867, Nathan O. Neighbois; 1869, Hiram Bartig; 1871, Robert Lease; 1873, Thomas H. Willard; 1875, John Sweadner; 1877, William Richardson; 1879, J. S. B. Hartsoe.

The General Assembly, by an act of February, 1777, established the Orphans' Court, to be held by not less than three justices of the peace. This court was empowered to take all probate of wills, grant letters of administration and letters testamentary, also warrants to appraisers in cases where there was no dispute, and in every respect had the same power, jurisdiction, and authority in connection with the register of wills that the deputy commissary had before that time in connection with the County Court. This court was authorized to bind out as apprentices orphan children the profits of whose estates were not sufficient for their maintenance, the children of beggars, illegitimate children, and the children of parents out of the State, where a sufficient support was not afforded. By the act of 1798 the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, had authority to appoint and commission three men of integrity and judgment to be justices of the Orphans' Court, and to hold their offices until their successors were appointed. Under the constitution of 1838 and legislative enactments in pursuance thereof, the judges held office for four years.

The first court was held Oct. 13 and 14, 1777. The following is a full list of its judges from 1777 to the present time:

Judges of the Orphans' Court.

Nov. 18, 1756, John Murdock was appointed surveyor in the room of Isaac Brookes, the only two in the county until after the convention of 1776, as disclosed by the records.

The first surveyor in the county under the first constitution was John Hanson, Jr., and the next one George Dent, appointed in April, 1782, and who served until he resigned, Dec. 20, 1783. His successor was Samuel Duvall, qualified Jan. 3, 1784, and went out in 1811.

Surveyors.

1811, Lawrence Brengle; 1814, John Woodrow; 1823, George Getzmann; 1825, Corbin West; 1830, Horatio G. O'Neil; 1835, Eliza H. Reckwell; 1839, Thomas H. O'Neil; 1845, A. I. Barney; 1853, Singleton H. O'Neil; 1855, Joel Hall; 1857, Jesse Rapp; 1858, W. H. Hillsbary; 1861, John S. Ruschbaum; 1865, L. Thomas Browning; 1875, John S. Ruschbaum; 1879, R. A. Rager, and yet in office.

State's Attorney.1

Collectors and Treasurers.

1803, Lawrence Brengle; 1806, George Creager; 1809, George Baetzel; 1856, Adam Larentz; 1852, Joseph Sehelt; 1840, John Siford; 1841, George Beckenhagen; 1843, Patrick McNeil.

1 This list is exclusively for Frederick County after the office was made elective by the people under the constitution of 1851.

O'Neil; 1844, Elias L. Delashmutt; 1846, Elisha Howard; 1848, Thomas C. Brashier; 1850, Dr. John W. Geyer; 1852, John Bartholomew; 1854, John Need; 1856, Arthur Delashmutt; 1858, Zachariah T. Windshear; 1860, Daniel Castle; 1862, Samuel D. Geisinger; 1866, William M. Feges; 1868, Daniel Michael; 1870, Lloyd H. Herrig; 1872, George W. Miller; 1875, William H. Miller; 1878, Peter W. Shaffer; 1880, D. H. Routzahn.

Tractees of County Poor.

1786, Basil Beall, Thomas Price, Jacob Steiner, Nicholas Tice.

The Levy Courts originally consisted of the justices of the peace, and by the act of 1798 were seven in number. By later enactments the number was increased, and the county was divided into districts, with one from each district sitting on the board.

Subsequently five commissioners took their places, and performed the duties previously transacted by the Levy Courts.

The Levy Court, or board of commissioners, had general charge of the business of the county in making levies, laying assessments, appointing superintendents, constables, school officers, and other local and county officials. It had jurisdiction over all the county's finances, over all roads, bridges, and highways. Until the creation of Levy Courts the duties performed by them had been before that been under the control of the County Courts, but as population increased new boards were found necessary to meet the exigencies of the time.

We give a full list of the justices of the Levy Court and of the commissioners from 1803 to the present time, a period as far back as the public records show them:

Levy Courts and Commissioners.

1802.—Ignatius Davis, Joseph Swearingen, Henry Williams, Alexander Warnich, of Charles, Henry Kuhn, Andrew Shriner, Benjamin Farquhar. This court appointed Adam Frasham to take care of the law-scales and court-house. The following judges of election in the different districts were chosen: First, Edward Tillard, Francis Hoffman, Christian Kemp; Second, Richard Butler, Jacob Getzmann, Nicholas Haltz; Third, Edward Boteler, Derrall Willard, Joseph Miller; Fourth, John Briggs, Nathaniel Porter, Peter Shofer; Fifth, Normand Bruce, James Mark, Ludwig Kesseling; Sixth, Joseph Wells, Charles Stevenson, Dr. John Baker; Seventh, Job Waters, Jeremiah Browning, Isaac Wright. The constables appointed for the year were Jacob Bayer, Jr., East Frederick Town Hundred; Adam Frasham, West Frederick Town; John Stults, Isaac's Creek; Thomas Knox, Upper Monocacy; Joseph Hedges, Manor; John Westfall, Tom's Creek; Abraham Bankert, Pine Creek; John Gibbons, Taney Town; Wm. Borm, Pipe Creek; Merrymon Stevenson, Westminster; Jacob Kiler, Union; Horatio Marlow, Linganore; Francis Hagans, Sugar Loaf; John Kephart, Lower Monocacy; Jacob Martin, Lower Catoctin; Arthur Boteler, Middle Catoctin; William Brown, Upper Catoctin; John Shepherd, Berlin; Jacob Lawrence, Middletown.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

1874-75.—Lewis Crawford, George J. Whip, John W. Staup, Z. G. Harris, A. W. Nicodemus.
1876-77.—Joseph Wood, Ezra Toms, Samuel Hargett, A. B. Simmons, Daniel Biser.
1880.—Thomas A. Smith, of T., George H. Ambrose, Peter Duddenar, Daniel Smith, of J., Thomas R. Jarboe, Samuel M. Buzzard, vice Mr. Ambrose, deceased; clerk of board, H. F. Steiner.

Commissioners of the Tax.

Under the act of Assembly of 1797, five commissioners were appointed in each county to ascertain the quantity of land in the respective counties, and to calculate the amount of the average value thereby established. No clergyman, practicing attorney, physician, sheriff, clerk, ordinary keeper, mariner, or inspector could be appointed. To them were returned the lists of able-bodied men liable for militia duty. They were empowered to call the assessors before them and correct their valuations of property, and to alter and correct the accounts on the change of property. The commissioners for the years 1798, 1799, and 1800, while the law was in operation, were Joshua Howard, Peter Mantz, Thomas Beatty, Samuel Skinner, Thomas and John Gwinn.

Frederick County Members of Constitutional Conventions.

First State Convention in 1776, Adam Fischer, Upton Sherdine, Christopher Edelin, David Schriver.

Justices of the County Courts at the first organization of the State Courts in 1777.

CHAPTER XXV.
FREDERICK CITY.

Frederick City is charmingly situated on both sides of Carroll Creek, a branch of the Monocacy River, from which it is three miles distant, in a valley remarkable for the fertility of its soil and the beauty of its scenery. Some eight miles to the eastward are the Linganore Hills, extending from north to south, while parallel with them on the west lies the Catoctin Range, a spur of the Blue Ridge, which rises still farther westward. On the north the valley seems shut in by the converging hills, and at its southern extremity the Sugar-Loaf Mountain looms up like some mighty sentinel placed there to bar the way. Beyond it, and some twelve or fifteen miles distant from the city, flows the Potomac River. In every direction the landscape is a feast to the eye, and without the least exaggeration Frederick may be termed the fairest jewel of the State. In the words of Whittier,—

"The clustered spires of Frederick stand Green-walled by the hills of Maryland; Round about them orchards sweep, Apple and peach-trees rooted deep, Fair as the garden of the Lord."

Frederick is sixty-one miles from Baltimore, seventy-five miles northwest of Annapolis, and forty-three miles from Washington. The city is regularly laid out, with broad streets intersecting at right angles, and is lighted with gas. Its churches are spacious and handsome, and many of its private dwellings are costly and elegant. In the immediate vicinity of Frederick there are many handsome country-seats, and the society both of the city and the neighborhood is hospitable, intelligent, and refined. One of the quaint institutions of the city is the old town-clock, which notifies people of the passing hour with one double stroke for the first quarter, two for the second, and three for the third. One of the pleasantest spots in the town is the ancient square which surrounds the court-house. No healthier or purer water can be found than that which supplies the city from the mountains on its west. The geographical situation of Frederick early made it an important seat of trade, and its historic reminiscences and associations date back to early colonial times, when all the country west of it was a wilderness inhabited only by the red men.

Frederick City and its environs were first settled in 1733 by hardy German immigrants, some of whom came direct from the Old World, and the others chiefly from Pennsylvania, where they had previously settled. The Rev. Mr. Muhlenberg, of Pennsylvania, was among the earliest clergymen who held divine service in Frederick County, with the exception of the Catholic missionaries who attempted to convert the Indians of the Linganore and Monocacy Valleys. About this time a colony of thirty-odd persons from the province of New York arrived in the vicinity of Frederick. The advent of the pioneers created a great commotion among the Indians, and was the forerunner of an emigration destined in the next decade to fill up the valley.

The mode of erecting a town at that period was nearly always the same. Commissioners were appointed to agree with the owner of the land for a tract of fifty or a hundred or more acres, which was then staked off and divided into lots of an acre each, intersected by proper streets, lanes, and alleys. The lots being numbered and prices attached to them, the owner of the land was then allowed to select one lot, and the rest, or so many as there were applications for, were divided among the "takers-up," who received the freehold in consideration of a yearly quit-rent, usually of one penny, to the Lord Proprietary. In case the experiment failed, as it often did, the embryo towns were declared to "be annulled and untowned," and the land reverted to its former owner.

In September, 1745, Patrick Dulany laid out Frederick Town, on part of the survey called "Tasker's Chance." The commissioners, in laying out its streets, intended that they should run towards the cardinal points; but their surveyor, having but very rude instruments and a defective compass, accomplished this object but imperfectly. The original plat had three hundred and forty lots. All the streets were sixty feet wide save Peace and North, both of which were thirty-three feet. The lots from Patrick to Church Street were three hundred and sixty-three feet in length and sixty-two in width. From Patrick Street to the creek the lots were three hundred and fifty-five feet in length, being a deduction of thirty feet in front for street-way and eight feet for water-way. All the rest were three hundred and ninety-three feet in length and sixty-two in width, except some on the west side, which were irregular from the situation of the land. Lots from numbers seventy-three to seventy-seven, inclusive, were reserved for the court-house, and number seventy-eight for the church. On Aug. 10, 1782, a plat of the town was prepared at the request of Clement Hollyday, one of the commissioners for the preservation and sale of confiscated property held or owned by persons inimical to the Continental Congress and the patriot cause. This resurvey and plat of the town by Samuel Duvall, surveyor, showed that part of lots numbers 217, 218, 261, 262, 263, and 264 lay in lands of Jacob Bentz, and not on "Tasker's Chance." This was occasioned no doubt by the variation of the magnetic needle. Samuel Duvall made an addition of twenty lots, swelling the total number to three hundred and fifty-one. Another survey of the town was made June 15, 1821, by Lawrence Brengle, with commissioners appointed by an ordinance of the corporation, to establish more definitely the metes and boundaries of certain streets and lots. The two main streets are Patrick and Market; the former running east and west, the latter north and south. Parallel to Patrick Street on the north run Church, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Streets, and parallel to it on the south, All-Saints', Jail, South Streets, etc. Market Street is nearly a mile in length. The great Western turnpike road to Baltimore passes through Patrick Street, and near its eastern extremity stands the forty-second milestone from that city. Through Market Street passes the road leading from Gettysburg, Westminster, etc., towards Georgetown, D. C.

Up to the period of the Revolutionary war German was the language generally heard upon the streets. The immigrants, as stated in another chapter, had fled from religious oppression, and their names underwent many a distortion and mutilation at the hands of the English representatives of the Lord Proprietary as they labored to write them down from sound upon the pages of the early records. The original intention was to locate the town on the banks of the Monocacy; but in consequence of the person to whom the present site of Frederick had been sold regretting the purchase of the land, Mr. Dulany, to whom all the land in the neighborhood belonged, took back this tract, and the town was laid out on Carroll's Creek, instead of being placed on the banks of the Monocacy at Ceresville, as Mr. Dulany had intended. The greater part of the lots were subject to a quit-rent of a shilling sterling to Mr. Dulany, to which the Revolutionary war put an end. The lots were all laid out north and south with reference to Patrick as the main street; consequently those on Market, now the principal street, have now only the depth of sixty feet. At that time the Pennsylvania and Virginia road passed through the town along the alley of which the residence of Maj. Daniel Hughes, a few years ago, formed the corner. Bentstown, from the bend at Patrick Street, was laid out subsequently, and in consequence of the creek and marshy ground took a southwesterly turn.
It was generally termed in deeds and lease instruments "an addition to Frederick Town." Hallerstown, which is the south end of Frederick, derives its name from a Mr. Haller, the crier, whose numerous descendents gave its name to this part of the city. Among the early immigrants were John Thomas Schley, the Shellmans and Brunners, who came over from Germany in 1745. Then came the Kems, Rayners, Groshes, etc. Mr. Shellman carried the chain in laying out the town. The building of the town was commenced at what is now the lower part of Patrick Street. The first house was built by John Thomas Schley about 1746, and was on the lot now owned by William Reinhardt on Stein Alley. It was torn down in 1853. Mr. Schley built at the mouth of that alley a "stone well," which had a statue of stone representing a man with a girdle around him looking to the rising sun. A part of this stone Dr. Fairfax Schley, a descendant of John Thomas Schley, now has on his farm near the city. John Thomas Schley carried on a great variety of business, and was a most enterprising citizen. He also superintended the school, and was the organist of the German Reformed Church, of which he was a leading member. The Baltzells came over later, leaving the old country in consequence of religious proscription. In conformity with their fatherland customs, these German settlers introduced the practice of ringing bells on Saturday evening, which was kept up for a century. The first brick house was built by Jacob Steiner, and was occupied as a tavern, and occasionally the County Court sat there. It was located on the corner of Market and Patrick Streets, where Stewart & Price's store now stands. The first child born in Frederick Town was Eve Catherine Schley, daughter of John Thomas Schley, born in 1747. She married Jacob Bier, and died in Baltimore City, May 26, 1843, aged ninety-six years.

On the 7th of March, 1787, in conformity and for the purpose of carrying into execution an act of Assembly passed at the November session, 1786, to improve and repair the streets in Frederick Town, and for other purposes, the following commissioners qualified: Jacob Young, Jacob Miller, Michael Alex, John McPherson, Conrad Doll, and John Hoffman. This board appointed Lawrence Brengle clerk. John Shellman, one of the commissioners nominated in the above act, having declined to serve, the board selected in his place Henry Mc Cleary. In 1788 the board appointed Henry Cronise collector of taxes assessed for street purposes. In 1789 the commissioners were Baker Johnson, Abraham Paw, Henry Mc Cleary, John Hoffman, Jacob Young, Michael Alex, Conrad Doll, and Abner Ritchie, clerk.

This year the board gave way to the municipal government chosen under the charter and franchises granted in an act passed by the General Assembly at the session of 1816–17, incorporating Frederick Town.

The limits of the city were designated thus: beginning at the forty-fourth mile-stone on the Baltimore and Frederick Town turnpike road, about three-quarters of a mile from the east end of Frederick Town, and running thence with a straight line so as to include John Hughes' brick house; thence with a straight line to include John McPherson's house (formerly Schertzell's); thence with a straight line to include the late Christopher Mayer's house; thence with a straight line to include John Graham's house; thence with a straight line to the mouth of Carroll Creek; and thence with a straight line to the aforesaid forty-fourth mile stone. But for taxable purposes the boundaries were made, to wit: all the lots originally laid out as Frederick Town, with all additions thereto, including Bentz Town, and Jacob and Michael Buckey's dwelling-house and tan-yard, and Jacob Buckey's factory, at the east end of the town, and Stephen Steiner's dwelling and tavern-stand on the west end, and George Lease's on the north end of said town; also Ramsburg's mill, also the English Presbyterian church, and the lots fronting on the west side of Bentz Street, from Ramsburg's mill to the aforesaid church, both inclusive. The act of incorporation provided for the election of a mayor and five aldermen for three years, and for dividing the town into seven wards, from which annually one councilman was to be elected. Under its provisions the first election was held on the last Monday in February, 1817. The following is a full list of the mayors, and a partial list of other officers for different periods:

1817.—Mayor, Lawrence Brengle; Register, John J. McCulley; Councilmen, T. A. Schley, Frederick Nurr, John McPherson, Henry Mc Cleary, John Cromwell, Rev. David Martin (president), William Kolb; Aldermen, Stephen Steiner, B. S. Pigman, George W. Eul, George Rice, William Ross (president); Assessor, Henry Koontz; Surveyor, L. Brun-
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Frederick and Pennsylvania Railroad bonds ..... $250,000
Bank bonds (in part payment of money paid Gen.
Jabal Early) ........................................ 125,000
Water-works bonds .................................. 70,000
Market-house bonds .................................. 55,000
Carroll Creek bonds .................................. 50,000
Floating debt ........................................ 12,500

Total ........................................ $368,500

All these bonds drew six per cent. interest until 1880, when they were converted by Charles C. Smith, city register, into five per cent. bonds.

The average annual expenditures proper of the city amount to about eight thousand dollars, of which a fraction over one half is expended in salaries. The city's credit is first-rate, and the municipal government meets its obligations with prompt fidelity.

In 1840, during the hard times prevailing all over the land, it issued its checks in sums of twelve and a half, twenty-five, fifty, and one hundred cents on the various city banks to relieve the existing monetary pressure, which it redeemed and paid when the financial storm had spent its force.

Taverns, or Inns.—The keeping of "ordinary," or "inns," was commenced very soon after the laying out of the town. After the Revolution, and until the completion of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the town and county were filled with hostelsries of all sorts, owing to the fact that Frederick was on the direct route of travel from the East to the West. At these inns the presidents, vice-presidents, senators, congressmen, and other public functionaries from the South and West were wont to stop for rest and refreshment on the journey to and from the national capital. In 1749 the inn-keepers were John Crampin, Kennedy Farrell, and Jacob Bency, who were granted licenses as "ordinary keepers" by the County Court.

In 1750, Mrs. Charlton kept a tavern on the corner of Patrick and Market Streets, on the lot where Stewart & Price's hardware-store is, and in her upper chambers the County Court held several sessions until the completion of the first court-house. On Dec. 30, 1756, Christopher Lowndes advertised to let by the year, or for a term, and to be entered upon on the beginning of the following March, a very good public-house with all necessary outbuildings, situated in the middle of the town, and then in the occupation of William Beall, and that any person inclined to rent the said house might know the conditions by applying to Christopher Edelin, on the premises, or to him.

Henry Brother, on Patrick Street, where the Central Hotel is now located.

In September, 1797, the following advertisement appeared:

"George Nelson respectfully informs the public in general and his old customers in particular, that he has opened a House of Entertainment in Frederick Town, in the house formerly occupied by Mrs. Zimmer, nearly opposite Mr. Thomas Johnson's, in Market Street. He flatters himself that he will be able to give general satisfaction to those who please to favor him with their custom. A few Boarders will be taken on reasonable terms.

"N.B.—Weaver's Reeds made and sold by the subscriber.

"G. N.

"Sept. 27, 1797."

Early Physicians.—At an early period the people of Frederick enjoyed the services of skillful and talented physicians, and ever since the standard thus established has been jealously maintained by the members of the profession who have been the leading practitioners there. The first "physician," however, appears to have been an "irregular" doctor named Jacob Fought, who settled in Frederick May 9, 1754. He was from Germany, and announced that he could cure the "country distemper" in four weeks, and would undertake to remove a wen without cutting it off. He advertised several other cures, and, like some modern quacks, desired no money until the cure was completed. He boarded at first with Michael Jeffrey.

On the 1st of August, 1769, Dr. Philip Thomas located at Frederick, and was followed by Dr. John Fischer and Dr. John N. A. Bogen. The latter was a Hessian, and for some time was confined at the "Barracks" as a prisoner of war. After the war he married a daughter of Henry Koontz, and occupied the house on West Patrick Street where the office of B. F. Brown is now located.

On the 17th of January, 1786, Dr. John Tyler, who had just returned from Europe, announced that he was about to practice physic, surgery, etc., and on the 1st of May in the following year Dr. Adam Fischer informed the public that, as smallpox was then in adjacent towns, he would inoculate "as low" as any other physician. Dr. Fischer had been educated at a German university, and was an accomplished physician. His practice soon became very large, and extended over a wide area of territory. He died from a kick received from his horse at Reisterstown, Md., and left two sons and three daughters. One of them was Dr. John Smith Fischer. His son Adam and his daughter Elizabeth left over a hundred descendants.

On Nov. 27, 1792, Dr. Thomas Sim commenced the practice of medicine in Frederick, and in 1803 Dr. Runkel lived on Patrick Street, opposite Benjamin Ogles' store. On April 25, 1806, Dr. Fischer removed from Patrick to Market Street, to the house formerly occupied by Mrs. Colgate, next door to Conrad Shafer's tavern, and opposite to Adam Keller's. For several years preceding 1807 Dr. Edward Anderson had practiced in Frederick, but afterwards removed. In 1820, Drs. John Baltzell, Gerard J. Schneider, William Bradley Tyler, and Godfrey Weise were popular practitioners. Subsequently we find, in 1821, Dr. Jacob Baer; in 1822, Drs. William Bantz and Grafton Duvall; in 1827, Dr. H. Staley; in 1829, Dr. Montandon (dentist); in 1833, Dr. Albert Ritchie; in 1834, Dr. R. E. Dorsey; in 1838, Dr. W. S. McPherson; in 1839, Dr. William M. Kemp; and in 1852, Drs. Richard Potts and Basil Norris.

Hon. Lewis Henry Steiner, M.D., was born in Frederick City on the 4th of May, 1827. His father, Christian Steiner, born Jan. 14, 1797, and his mother, Rebecca Weltzheimer, born April 20, 1802, were both natives of Frederick. Dr. Steiner is a great-great-grandson of Jacob Steiner, who emigrated from Germany to Frederick County, and a great-grandson of John Steiner, who was born about 1750, in Frederick County, about three miles from the present residence of Dr. Steiner; commanded a company of militia against the Indians in 1775, and was a member of the Committee of Observation for Frederick County during the Revolutionary war.

Dr. Steiner was prepared for college at Frederick Academy; and entered the sophomore class of Marshall College, Mercersburg, Pa., in 1843, receiving in 1846 the degree of A.B., and in 1849 that of A.M. He studied medicine with Dr. William Tyler, of Frederick, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1849 with the degree of M.D., commencing the practice of his profession in his native city in 1850. In 1852 he removed to Baltimore, where he was associated with Dr. J. R. W. Dunbar for several years in the conduct of an institution for medical instruction. In 1853 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry and Natural History at Columbia College, Washington, and Professor of Chemistry and Pharmacy at the National Medical College of the same city; in 1854, Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics at the College of St. James, Maryland; in 1855, Lecturer on Applied Chemistry at the Maryland Institute; and in 1856, Professor of Chemistry at the Maryland College of Pharmacy. In 1852 he was elected a member of the American Medical Association; in 1853, Fellow of Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland, and in the same year member, and in 1874, Fellow, of the American Association for Advancement of Science; in 1855 he was elected correspondent of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia; in 1869, corresponding member of the Maryland Academy of Sciences; in 1872, member, and in 1876, Vice-President, of the American Public Health Association; and in the latter year member of the International Medical Congress (Philadelphia); in 1876, Fellow, in 1876 and 1877, Vice-President, and in 1878, President, of the American Academy of Medicine. In 1881, Dr. Steiner returned to Frederick, where he has since resided.

At the outbreak of the civil war he took an active interest in the Union cause, assisted in raising troops, and when the Sanitary Commission was organized, in 1861, he was appointed inspector, and in 1863 chief inspector, and assigned to the Army of the Potomac. In this service he labored indefatigably until the close of the war, and distinguished himself so greatly by his zeal and skill that in 1865, in recognition of his services, he was elected by the New York Commandery companion (third class) of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States. After the close of the war he took great interest in adapting the system of public education to the changed condition of affairs, and as president of the school board of Frederick County from 1865 to 1868 reorganized all the schools of the county. Dr. Steiner's contributions to literature and science have been constant since 1851, and have given him a high place both in and out of his profession. Dr. Steiner has also been a frequent contributor to reviews, medical and literary journals, and was for several years assistant editor of the American Medical Monthly, published in New York. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon Dr. Steiner by the College of St. James in 1854, and by Yale College in 1869. He is a corresponding member of the Maryland Historical Society and the New Haven Colony Historical Society, trustee of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute at Hampton, Va., and honorary member of the Harrisburg Pathological Society. Before the war Dr. Steiner was a member of the Whig party, but became a Republican when that organization passed away. Since 1871 he has represented Frederick County in the State Senate, having been elected for three successive terms over strong Democratic opponents. In 1876 he was a member of the Cincinnati Republican Convention which nominated Mr. Hayes for the Presidency.

Dr. Steiner's scientific and professional attainments have won for him a national reputation, and given him a high place among the most distinguished names known to medical science in this country. Although he has been frequently honored by the political confidence of the people of Frederick County, he is not a politician in the ordinary acceptation of that term, and stands high above the petty arts and devious methods which too often characterize the politics of the day. In the Senate, Dr. Steiner is the recognized leader of the Republican party; but while loyal to the political principles of that organization, he never forgets the superior fealty due his constituents and the State at large, and his services in the General Assembly have gained him an enviable place in the estimation of the people of all sections of Maryland, and of every political complexion. An elegant scholar, an able physician, a man of high scientific attainments, of the purest personal character, a refined and genial gentleman, Dr. Steiner is a representative whom Western Maryland may be proud to claim, and whom Maryland at large is happy to count among her sons.

Dr. Steiner was married on the 3d of October, 1866, to Sarah Spencer, daughter of Hon. R. D. Smyth, a distinguished lawyer and genealogist of Guilford, Conn., and has five children, two sons and three daughters.

Business Notes.—The following advertisement appeared April 23, 1761:

"The subscriber having furnished himself with a large quantity of fine fresh hairs, both curled and uncurled, now carries on the business of Peruke making in Fourth Street, Frederick Town, Frederick County, Maryland, where all gentlemen may furnish themselves with Perukes made after the most beautiful, neatest, and newest fashion. He also makes Tates and Frazetts for ladies in any form required, so that no person cannot distinguish them from the ladies' own hair. He also sells all sorts of hair for Peruke makers' use, either in the rough or ready prepared after the most approved method. A good preparer, peruke maker, or barber who can shave well, may have immediate and constant employment by applying to the subscriber.

William B. Walls."

"Well's Invention," lying near Fieder Gault's iron mine, in Frederick County, containing five hundred and seventeen acres, was offered for sale in 1763.

On Dec. 29, 1763, Francis Sanderson, coppersmith from Lancaster, removed his business to Frederick, where he made all sorts of copper articles, such as stills, brewing-kettles, fish and wash-kettles, tea-kettles, saucepans, and other copperware, pewter, lead, etc.

In 1764, William Banks was a barber and peruke-maker, and because some enemy of him had inserted in the papers an advertisement that another one was needed by the inhabitants, he became very angry.

On Oct. 10, 1769, a number of wagons arrived containing about three hundred pounds' worth of goods from Philadelphia and Baltimore, not accompanied with the proper certificates, and were stored at the risk and cost of the owners.

In September, 1770, a factory for weaving and the manufacture of weaving machines was established.

A letter from Frederick in the Maryland Journal (Gazette?) of Nov. 6, 1773, says, "Frederick County is amazingly improving, and the condition of the German emigrants is astonishing. We have plenty of stocking and worsted weavers. Our church is the only one in the province that has got a steeple."

In March, 1776, powder belonging to the State was stored in the market-house.

July 5, 1781, Robert Wood, proprietor of the "wire-mill," also added to his business a cotton and wool-card manufactory, and continued the nail business.

May 4, 1786, Peter Engels was appointed armourer of the new arsenal. In the same year Frederick Heisley was a clock and watch maker opposite the German Reformed church; also kept shop at the "Sign of the Dial," opposite Jacob Steiner's saddlery shop and store, on Market near Patrick Street.

"Constitution" Smith was a hatter in 1789, so called from his endless talk about the new Federal Constitution.

The first grist-mill was located on West Patrick Street, on the lot now owned by Jacob Schmidt, and where he keeps a hotel.

The merchant and custom flouring-mill, now owned by Lewis Bruner, was built in 1790 by Ramsburg & Beltz. Mr. Bruner purchased it in 1845, and has since operated it successfully.

In 1795 Christian Koons opened a carrying-shop, corner Patrick and Market Streets.

July 17, 1799, William Robertson, weaver, opened shop next door to Henry Gardner's blacksmith-shop, and opposite James Smith's store, on Market Street.

From 1795, and for many years, John Reich carried on a blacksmith-shop on South Market Street, where William Reich now lives, and the same shop is now operated by Alex. Noland (colored).

Michael Alex carried on butchering and slaughtering from 1778 to 1800.

On Oct. 25, 1797, William King commenced the cabinet-making and turning business.

April 26, 1797, Peter Smith had a boot and shoe manufactory a few doors below George Burkhardt's, on Patrick Street, in 1799 the making of arms for the service of the United States was largely prosecuted in Frederick.

Dec. 10, 1802, Philip Haupman opened a boot and shoe manufactory at Gorge Tew's, nearly opposite the "stone well" on Patrick Street.

Feb. 4, 1803, John Geyer carried on saddling and harness-making opposite Mrs. Kirnall's tavern, on Patrick Street.

In the same year Peter Storm had his coppersmith-shop two doors below David Leroy's tavern, on Patrick Street.

In the spring of 1805, John Bantz was a dyer and weaver.

Jan. 14, 1809, Jacob Kinnerly and Nicholas Hoover carried on the rope-making business on Patrick Street, facing Harmann's blacksmith-shop.

Candy-making was begun in 1812 by M. A. Miller (called "Cat-Fish" Miller), in a building located on the lot where part of the City Hotel stands. This candy was made of molasses.

In 1822, Mrs. Getz, from Lancaster, Pa., opened a kind of bakery where B. F. Brown's place of business now stands, on East Patrick Street. She made the first ice-cream known in the town.

Sept. 19, 1833, a meeting was held for the purpose of establishing a carpet-manufactory, with $8000 capital.

The following advertisement appeared in the Maryland Gazette of 1749:

"Sept. 1st, 1749.

"The subscriber hath obtained a patent for keeping a fair at Frederick Town, near Monocacy, on the 21st day of October and the tenth day of May next, each fair to continue three days, and for a market to be held there every Saturday after the first of November next.

"All persons who will bring any goods, merchandise, cattle, or any thing else to the said fairs, or markets, to sell, shall be free and exempt from the payment of any toll, stallage, pleage, or any other charge, for the term of five years next ensuing this last day of Aug. 1749."

D. Dulaney.

December, 1763, Robert Peter kept store as agent for John Glasford & Co., merchants, of Glasgow, Scotland.

Mr. Loudes advertised, Sept. 20, 1764, as follows:

"WANTED.—To rent in a store in Frederick Town, in Frederick County. A youth about 17 years old, that writes a good hand, understands arithmetic, and is willing to engage for 3 or 6 years. Any person wanting such employ, on application to the printing-office, may be informed as to the rest."

Feb. 19, 1793, Benjamin Ogle kept store.
Feb. 9, 1796, A. Petioola, miniaturist-painter, advertised to paint miniatures at twenty-six dollars apiece at Mrs. Hauser's, opposite Dr. Thomas', on Patrick Street.

May 5, 1796, Lewis Weitzheim opened a "new medicinal store" next door to Francis Kleintert's, at the "Sign of the Golden Mortar," near the jail.

July 19, 1797, Levi Noyes had a wholesale and retail grocery-store, corner of the market-house.

In the same year Adam Deshler kept a general store in the stone corner house near the German Presbyterian church, and opposite Rev. Mr. Runbeck's.

Nov. 5, 1802, James Huy, wishing to remove from town, advertised his entire stock of general goods for sale.

In 1803, Adams & Roth had a large dry-goods and grocery-store next door to market-house.

Up to 1803, James Smith kept store where the United States Hotel now is, and had a tobacco warehouse. He died that year. From a poor redempitique he had become a wealthy merchant.

April 9, 1804, the sign of the "Cash and Sugar-Leaves Store" was next to George Baer's, on Patrick Street.

Nov. 11, 1806, Amelia Woffenden announced her removal to the new store on Patrick Street, between Bailey's and Graham's. She kept ladies' dry-goods.

In 1811, Dr. Jacob Baer kept a drug-store on Patrick Street, opposite the "Indian Queen."

Aug. 21, 1826, W. L. Helienstein opened a store in a house of Col. John Ritchie's, corner of Market and Patrick Streets.

Amusements.—On May 10, 1786, the Frederick Town Theatre opened at Mr. Graf's room; tickets three shillings and ninepence.

Aug. 17, 1786, a "new theatre" was opened by the old "American Company," under the management of Messrs. Hallam and Henry, with the comedy of "School for Scandal." Also the same night was presented at the market-house the tragedy "Zara." This entertainment concluded with "a little hornpipe by a little man, and a little epilogue by a little lady." Tickets were 3s., 9d., "sold at Capt. Morris' and at Mrs. Owens'"; children 1s. 11d. The money was appropriated to the use of Mrs. Tabler.

On June 5, 7, and 9, 1792, at Mrs. Kimball's tavern, a company of French dancers performed.

Sept. 11, 1797, Bicket's equestrian circus exhibited: box, one dollar; "standing room," fifty cents.

Dec. 11, 1802, Mr. Powers, the ventriloquist, exhibited at Baer's "ball-room."

June 20, 1809, Mr. Durang opened a new theatre at Mr. Stalling's "Sign of the Spread Eagle." The curtain was raised at a quarter to eight; box, fifty cents; gallery, twenty-five cents.

April 20, 1821, an African lion, a buffalo, an elk, and a calf with six legs were exhibited at Shimmel's tavern.

June 5, 1825, Williams & Herbert's company of tragedians appeared at the City Hall, and on the 26th added to their number Mrs. Burke and Mrs. Placeid.

June 8, 1822, it was advertised that the prices at the theatre over the market-house were, for box, seventy-five cents; pit, fifty; "tickets sold at Talbot's bar, Robinson & Co. lottery-office, and W. C. Russell's grocery-store."

July 18, 1822, a menagerie exhibited at Shafer's tavern, and seats of agility were performed by Master Daniel Munich.

Aug. 22, 1822, a company of rope-dancers, comprising three Italians, two Spaniards, and one Chinese, appeared.

July 23, 1824, another troupe of rope-dancers exhibited at Stiehler's inn.

In 1824, Mr. Starne kept a museum at the house of Mrs. Mary Gantz.

May 4, 1825, Taylor, the ventriloquist, performed at Williamson's tavern.

Jan. 8, 1826, Magee, the Irish giant, exhibited.

July 26, 1826, a circus of eight men and eighteen horses performed at the Barracks ground.

Oct. 4, 1826, a circus exhibited on East Fourth Street, outside of "St. Domingo."

Sept. 28, 1829, a menagerie appeared, and Dec. 13, 1827, the bones of a mastodon were exhibited at the court-house.

May 27, 1830, Carl Blisse, the Prussian singer, gave a concert.

July 14, 1831, Stiekeny & Co.'s circus exhibited.

Oct. 15, 1831, a caravan performed at Brush's lot, in Mill Alley.

Jan. 23, 1832, Chang and Eng, the Siamese twins, exhibited. They returned October, 1865.

May 2, 1832, Nicholls, the ventriloquist, and Nov. 15, 1833, Hugh Hogan, another ventriloquist, appeared.

April 25, 1833, a menagerie exhibited, and April 1, 1834, another menagerie appeared at "Cannon Hill."

Frederick Races.—Horse-racing was very popular in Frederick County at an early period, having probably been introduced by the settlers from Southern Maryland. Thus, for instance, under date of April 26, 1749, only four years after the town was laid out, we find the following advertisement:

"To be run for at Frederick Town, in Frederick County, A subscription of Twenty Eight Pounds Two shillings and six pence, and the Entrance Money of each day. The horses, &c., to carry weight for inches as on the two preceding days, and to pay after the rate of it in the Pound Entrance. The winning horses to be excepted each day. The horses, &c., are to be entered with Kennedy Ferrell by 12 o'clock the day before they run, and if any differences arise, they are to be decided by John Darnall, Esq., and Capt. Nathaniel Wickham."

On Aug. 12, 1757, an extremely hot day, a remarkable race was run from Frederick Town to Annapolis by a large horse with a man on his back, and a small mare with a boy, for seventy-five pistoles, fifty to twenty-five being laid on the horse, which won, performing it exactly in eleven hours, four of which the two horses traveled very gently together.

In the Maryland Gazette of Sept. 27, 1759, appeared the following:

"On the Twenty-third day of October, 1759, next will be run for, at Frederick Town, in Frederick county, a purse of thirty pounds, by any horse, mare, or gelding. On the twenty-fourth all the entries and what other money may be made up, the winning horse the first day excepted. Each Horse to carry nine stone weight, to run three heats, two miles each heat. If any disputes shall arise, the same to be determined by Messrs. James Dixon and Christopher Edelin. Every horse, etc., to be entered with Mr. Arthur Charlton, in the Town aforesaid, the day before the Race, and the owners to pay thirty shillings entrance-money."

On Monday, the 20th day of October, 1766, was run for, "on the usual race-ground in Frederick Town," a purse of thirty pistoles, offered for any horse, mare, or gelding, each carrying ten stone, sad-
The entries were made with George Stricker, and three horses were to start, the winner to obtain two heats out of three one-mile heats. A second day's race for a purse of fifteen pistoles was also run.

Races were also held on the north side of Piscataway Town, about a half-mile from it, Oct. 21, 1766, and at Old Fields, Bladensburg.

In 1772, Moses Rawlings inaugurated a series of races in Frederick County.

Sept. 25, 1797, the Frederick Town races opened, to last three days, under the charge of Henry Brothet.

On Sept. 20, 21, and 22, 1809, races were run at Middletown, with John Stoddlemire and Jonathan Levy as managers; entrance, "one shilling in the pound." In 1811, John Adams and George Nichols conducted the Boonsboro' races near Frederick.

On the 5th of September, 1820, races began on Mr. Stubb's land; William B. Bourke, manager.

At the August races (1821) at the "Dry Tavern," on the Liberty road, H. Holly won the prize.

Posts, Stages, and Mail.—On the 28th of August, 1773, Absalom Bonham announced that he "rode post from Baltimore to Frederick once a week." From Frederick another post extended to Winchester, Va. Bonham set off from Wm. Adams', at the "Sign of the Race Horses," every Saturday at one o'clock p.m.

On Feb. 22, 1786, Matthias Bartgis informed the public,

"that as he intends to establish the Post from Frederick Town to Baltimore and back to Frederick Town, from thence to Hager Town and Sharpsburg and back to Frederick Town, and, every fortnight, until he has a sufficient number of subscribers to pay expenses of the Post; and then to be continued weekly. That those who subscribe will have their letters and papers carried gratis; non-subscribers will have to pay for their letters from Frederick Town to Baltimore One Shilling; from thence to Frederick Town one shilling; to Hager Town and to Sharpsburg six-pence; from thence to Frederick Town six-pence; and so in proportion for each letter that is sent; paid to me, M. B."

Dec. 29, 1786, the public were informed that the new Frederick and Hagerstown post-rider put up at Mr. Steele's tavern, at the sign of "General Hand," in Market Street, opposite Wm. Stenson's, where letters for and from those places "are received and will be carefully delivered."

Following is a post advertisement of December, 1797:

"Starts from the house of Wm. Fares, Lancaster, every Monday and Thursday morning at five o'clock; arrives in Frederick Town on Tuesday and Friday evenings; and likewise starts from the house of Mrs. Kimball, Frederick Town, every Monday and Thursday at six o'clock, and arrives at Lancaster on Tuesday and Friday evenings; next morning proceeds on to the city of Philadelphia in the Turnpike line of stages, owned by Messrs. David Witter & George Weed.

"A stage of Mr. Winemiller starts from Mrs. Kimball's, Frederick Town, every Wednesday morning at six o'clock, arrives in George Town on the evening of the same day. Sets out again from Georgetown on every Saturday morning at six o'clock and arrives in Frederick in the evening.

"Likewise a stage of Messrs. McClellan & Spangler starts from the house of Mr. Balster Spangler, Little York, on every Monday at one p.m. for Baltimore; leaves Baltimore every Wednesday at ten o'clock, and arrives in York on Thursday evening.

"Passengers going on to George Town or Baltimore may, by taking the Monday's stage from Lancaster, arrive at either place without being detained on the road. And, in returning from the above place, the line will immediately go on to the city of Philadelphia.

"The fare from Lancaster to Frederick Town is $4.50; from Frederick Town to George Town, $3.00. The usual allowance of fourteen pounds gratis to each passenger; one hundred and fifty pounds the same as a passenger.

"John Riley."

April 13, 1797, the Frederick Town stage was advertised to start from the house of Wm. Fares, in Lancaster, for York and Frederick Town every Tuesday at nine o'clock A.M., and from the house of Mr. Kimball, in Frederick Town, every Monday for York and Lancaster.

"The Mail Stage from Frederick Town to Susquehannah," says another advertisement, "will commence running three times a week, for spring, summer, and fall seasons, on the last Monday of February, 1803, starting from Mrs. Kimball's, sign of the Golden Lamb, Patrick Street, Frederick Town, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at four A.M., and arrive at Susquehannah evening of same day. Returning, will start from house of Mr. John Morrison, Susquehannah, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at four A.M., and arrive at Susquehannah evening of same day. The line passes through Woodsborough, Tancy Town, Petersburg, Hanover, and York, and meets the line of stages from Philadelphia at Susquehannah, and also the mail stage from city of Washington at Frederick, three times a week, which forms a regular line from Philadelphia to Washington.

(Signed) "WM. SCOTT, "JOSIAH HALL, "JOSEPH HALLAN.

"Feb. 14, 1803."

On the 24th of October, 1806, a new line of stages from Frederick Town to Winchester, Va., was established. It left Mrs. Kimball's, sign of the "Golden Lamb," Sunday morning at six o'clock, arriving at Winchester Monday morning at ten o'clock. It left Winchester Wednesday at one o'clock P.M., and arrived at Mrs. Kimball's Thursday evening. Fare $3.50; way passengers seven cents a mile.

The summer mail schedule of 1819 was as follows: Arrives at Frederick from the East, via Baltimore, on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursdays from twelve to two P.M., other days at four P.M. Closes Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at eight A.M. and five P.M., and Saturday at five P.M.

Statistics of Frederick in 1798.—In 1798 there were seven religious congregations of different denominations in Frederick, viz.: the Roman Catholic, the Episcopalian, the Lutheran, the Calvinists, the Presbyterian, the Baptists, and the Methodists. Each of these had a place of public worship. The German Presbyterian, or Calvinist, church had a handsome and lofty stone steeple, in which were two good bells and the town-clock. The German Protestant, or Lutheran, church had likewise a steeple and two bells of very sweet tone. The other buildings of a public nature were a spacious poor-house, a court-house, an academy, or county school-house, and two market-houses, all of brick, likewise a stone jail, with a large yard surrounded by a stone wall, four hundred and forty-nine dwelling-houses, besides a number of shops, etc., composed the town, which in 1797 contained the following number of inhabitants, viz.:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Gender and Age</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>White males under ten years</td>
<td>387</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from ten to sixteen</td>
<td>176</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from sixteen upwards</td>
<td>682</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total of white males</td>
<td>1245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White females under ten years</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from ten to sixteen</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from sixteen upwards</td>
<td>584</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total white females</td>
<td>1055</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total of white males and females</td>
<td>2300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colored males under ten years</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from ten to sixteen</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from sixteen upwards</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total colored males</td>
<td>118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colored females under ten years</td>
<td>54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from ten to sixteen</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; from sixteen upwards</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total colored females</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total of colored males and females</td>
<td>306</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total number of inhabitants, white and colored</td>
<td>2606</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The industrial occupations were represented as follows: two tobacconists, fifteen blacksmiths, eleven saddlers, sixteen joiners, two comb-makers, twenty-nine shoemakers, twelve weavers, one worker in paste, five wagon-makers, several taverns, eleven hatters, three stocking weavers, five gunsmiths, three nailers, thirteen tailors, thirty-four stores and mercantile shops, three painters, one portrait-painter, thirteen masons, two skinners, six tanners, two curriers, three printers, six butchers, two clock and watch-makers, one silversmith, four cooperers, four tanners, three wheelwrights, three chair-makers, one harness-maker, four potters, four leather breeches makers and glovers, two apothecaries, two brewers, one well-digger, five barbers, two cabinet-makers, one pump-maker, two saddle-tree-makers, one brick-maker, one brush-maker, nine bakers, five carpenters, two turners, one cooper, one "white-smith," two reed-makers, two distillers, one miller, two heel-makers, two blue dyers, two plasterers, and several teachers, doctors of divinity, physic, and law.

The greater part of the mechanics employed journeymen and apprentices. From the above statement it will be seen that manufacturing industries must have been carried on with a good deal of enterprise and on a considerable scale.

Market-House and City Hall.—In the early history of the province and State, and, indeed, up to less than half a century ago, lotteries were authorized by the Legislature to raise money for the erection of churches, public buildings, bridges, etc., and were a favorite means of making public improvements without resorting to taxation. On the 21st of December, 1769, a "drawing" was held in Frederick and Prince George's Counties for three thousand one hundred and eighty acres of land, divided into numerous prizes. On May 25, 1811, a lottery was held in Frederick Town for paving Market Street, for which there were 8000 tickets at $5, $40,000, all prizes, 20 per cent., profits, $8000 to be raised. The managers of this municipal scheme were John McPherson, Henry Steiner, Seth Clarke, William Ross, and Raymond Sanderson.

In December, 1768, a scheme for a lottery was devised for raising $600 for finishing the market-house and town hall in Frederick. There were 2000 tickets at $2 each, and 557 prizes. The profits retained were 15 per cent. The managers to conduct the lottery were Christopher Edelin, Casper Shaf, Thomas Price, George Murdock, Levi Cohen, Jacob Young, Lodowick Welmer, Charles Beatty, Joseph Gaither, George Scott, Adam Fisher, John Horse, William Parker, Jacob Schley, Daniel Hughes, Upton Sheredine, George Stricker, James Crampiliu, Jr., William Deakin, Jr., Andrew Steigar. This lottery was drawn with great success in the coming year, 1769, and the work on the building was immediately commenced. It was erected on Patrick Street, on the lot where John H. Ramsburg's carriage-manufactory is now situated. The General Assembly, by an act passed Nov. 2, 1770, fixed an ordinance making Wednesday and Saturday market days, which continued in force until 1788. An act to establish a market in Frederick Town, passed Nov. 17, 1787, provided that a deed made Jan. 20, 1786, by William Murdock Beall, Henry McClearry, John Gebhart, and Henry Zeiler, of a lot of central ground containing sixty feet by one hundred and eighty feet, more or less, and an alley of twelve feet by one hundred and fifty-five feet, and transferred to Baker Johnson, Richard Potts, George Murdock, John Bruner, Jacob Steiner, John Adlum, and Peter Mantr, as trustees, etc., to be set apart for the use of the inhabitants of Frederick Town, together with other ground for the widening of alleys, shall be used for market buildings, etc., to remain free and open for the benefit of the public.
Louis McMurray was born in Baltimore (now Carroll) County, twenty-eight miles northwest of Baltimore City, on the 27th of February, 1823. He was the son of Samuel and Sarah McMurray. His father was a farmer, and continued farming until 1832, when he moved to Baltimore. John McMurray, father of Samuel, came to this country from Ireland with his wife, and went to Virginia in 1788, where a daughter was born,—Anne McMurray. Her mother brought her to Baltimore, where she was baptized at the cathedral in 1789 by the Rev. John Carroll, afterwards Archbishop of Baltimore. Anne McMurray married John Little, brother of Peter Little, who was a representative in Congress for twenty-one years. Shortly before her death she was confirmed by Archbishop Gibbons. She was thus baptized by the first Archbishop of Baltimore and confirmed by the last, who still fills the office.

Samuel McMurray, father of Louis, was born on his father's farm, in Baltimore County, in 1792. This farm was purchased in 1789. Samuel McMurray came to Baltimore in 1813–14, and took an active part in defending the city during the war of 1812. At the termination of the war he returned to his farm. He married, in 1815, Sarah Sellman, daughter of Vachel and Eleanor Sellman. John Sellman, of William, father of Vachel, Jonathan, and Johannez, came to this country in 1750, and established the furnace or iron-works situated about two miles west of Westminster. These have been worked, with longer or shorter intermissions, to the present time.

Vachel Sellman married, in 1793, Eleanor Gill, of Baltimore County, whose father resided near Black Rock, and was one of the leading farmers in his section.

Louis McMurray has three sisters,—Catharine, Ann, and Caroline McMurray. Catharine married twice, her first husband being Adolphus Dellingue, who was a prominent merchant in Baltimore, and afterwards in Cincinnati, Ohio. He died in 1844. In 1846 she married Ira S. Holden, a merchant of New Orleans. They are both now deceased and buried in Greenmount Cemetery.

Ann S. McMurray married Micajah Young, a native of Baltimore County, but a resident of Montgomery, Ala.

Caroline McMurray married Charles E. Houghton, a merchant of Cincinnati, Ohio, now a resident of Baltimore.

Samuel McMurray and family moved to Baltimore in 1832, where he engaged in the hotel business as proprietor of the Western Hotel, corner of Howard and Saratoga Streets. He retired from the Western Hotel in 1838 to a residence on Pearl Street. In 1840 he commenced keeping a restaurant, and his son Louis engaged in the business with him. He continued in that business until his death in 1850.

In 1851, Louis McMurray was married to Jane Monies McDermott by the Rev. Alexius Elder, at the residence of her uncle, Thomas Smith. She is the daughter of Francis McDermott, of York, Pa., a distinguished classical teacher in his day. Mrs. McMurray, on the mother's side, is a niece of the late Rev. Andrew Smith, of Georgetown College, and Rev. John Smith, for many years pastor of St. James' Church, New York City.

Louis McMurray continued in the restaurant business about one year after his father's death, when, in the fall of 1851, he commenced in a small way packing hermetically sealed goods. After packing the goods they were consigned to Ira S. Holden, of New Orleans, La. The goods were sold at enormous prices. Previous to this time Mr. McMurray had had no knowledge of the packing business, and he had to grope his way in the dark. He was confident that hermetically sealed goods would come to be used in every household, and this caused him to make special efforts to be one of the successful packers. The profits arising from the first shipment dazzled his eyes, and, as Mulberry Sellers says, he thought "there were millions in it." But he was somewhat disappointed, not in the profits, but in the keeping of the packed goods, particularly oysters, of which he packed a considerable quantity. The losses and difficulties were many and great, as the method of packing was not very perfect. At that date very little was known about the use of steam in the preparation of oysters. Many experiments were tried to ascertain the temperature necessary to keep oysters, peas, and the different kinds of vegetables. After various trials it was found that a higher temperature was required than the boiling-point of water, 212°, and after various experiments Mr. McMurray discovered that the proper temperature could be obtained by a solution of calcium potash, or salt. This discovery enabled him to pack oysters and vegetables so that they would keep with but a small percentage of spoilage, and he shipped the goods readily to all parts of the world. Mr. McMurray soon found it necessary to enlarge his business, and commenced building extensive factories on the property pururchased of Sellman Shipley and others, the heirs of Johannez Sellman. The factories were built of such dimensions as to enable Mr. McMurray in the busy season of fruit to employ, as he has frequently done, eight hundred to a thousand hands in preparing peaches and other fruits and vegetables. In the winter season the oysters were packed in the same factory and required about three hundred hands. These extensive accommodations enabled him to pack large quantities of goods to meet the demands both of the home and foreign markets. He also built his dwelling, 268 West Biddle Street, adjoining the factory, where he now resides. In 1868, owing to the failure of the peach crop in Maryland, Mr. McMurray went to Cincinnati that season to pack peaches. There he became familiar with the taste of sugar-corn, Previous to that he had very little knowledge of sugar-corn, as the corn packed in the Baltimore factory was what is termed field-corn, and not of that delicious sweetness which sugar-corn retains after packing. For a few years Mr. McMurray had for partners Messrs. Alexander B. Ellis and Charles E. Houghton. Mr. McMurray consulted them about the packing of sugar-corn, but they did not approve the idea. In the fall of 1868 he visited Frederick, and having satisfied himself that the venture was practicable, bought a lot of four acres from Peter Manse in Frederick, opposite the former residence of Chief Justice Taney. In the spring of 1869, Mr. McMurray commenced the erection of his factories at Frederick.

He contracted with the farmers of the vicinity at high prices to raise several hundred acres of corn, and one hundred acres of tomatoes and peas were planted out. One of the farmers of the region called on Mr. McMurray and said, "Mr. McMurray, don't you think you are doing very wrong? No sane man would plant that much corn and tomatoes; they would not be used in Frederick in all your life." Mr. McMurray replied that it would be all right. Twenty-five practical tanners from Baltimore were sent to Frederick, and commenced making cans; but the farmers who had agreed to raise corn for him by the acre thought it was a wild-goose speculation, and gave very little attention to the corn-fields and cultivation, consequently the crops were poor, and there was very little corn to pack. This was the cause of a very heavy loss the first year. But this did not deter Mr. McMurray, as he knew sugar-corn could be raised successfully in Maryland. He accordingly consulted Thomas H. Smith, his foreman, and they concluded that they must commence farming the lands themselves to make a success. The first year or so Mr. McMurray rented the land, and afterwards commenced purchasing farms as they were offered for sale. The doubts of the Frederick County farmers were shared by Baltimore canners, one of whom, Thomas Kensett, said to him one day, "Mr. McMurray, you had better burn down your factory in Frederick, and you will make money by stopping the corn business." Mr. McMurray smiled and thanked him, but told him he would stick it out to the last. Mr. Kensett said there could be no sugar-corn raised equal to that grown in Maine, but Mr. McMurray has proved to the contrary. In 1870, the second year of Mr. McMurray's Frederick enterprise, the men who did the sealing up of the cans, and who had contracted with him to the end of the packing season, business becoming a little slack for a few days, became restless and wanted to return to Baltimore. Mr. McMurray immediately set to work and invented and obtained a patent for a machine for sealing up the cans by unskilled labor. This enabled a boy of sixteen years of age to seal up twice as many cans as could be formerly done with the old capping-iron and skilled labor. This is the principle used in nearly all the factories in the United States. Mr. McMurray also invented a stove for heating the irons which are used. He also obtained several other patents for soldering devices, which he uses in his factories. With the help of his invention, thirty unskilled boys, who have never capped a can before, can cap up one hundred thousand cans a day. Without this it would require fifty men skilled in the art of tinning to do the same amount of work. Mr. McMurray has purchased one thousand acres of land of Miss Emily Harper, being part of "Carrolton Manor," and now owns two thousand five hundred acres of land in Frederick County, which is regularly cultivated in connection with his canning business. His agricultural operations are conducted with his own teams and under the foremanship of Thomas H. Smith, and it requires three millions of cans to contain the corn thus raised. When in full operation last season from eighty to one hundred thousand cans were packed each day, and eleven hundred and fifty hands employed in the various departments of the Frederick business.

Mr. McMurray's success has been recognized, not only by the increasing demand for his goods, but by the awards of several international expositions. At the Centennial Exposition in 1876 he received the highest medal and diploma for canned sugar-corn, and also the highest diploma and medal for canned oysters. At the Paris Exposition in 1878 he received a gold medal and a diploma, the highest awards of the Exposition, for the superiority of his corn and the excellence of his oysters. It may be added that Mr. McMurray can justly claim to be the first person to raise and pack sugar-corn to any large extent in Maryland. In 1872, Mr. McMurray purchased a lot at the foot of Cross Street, Baltimore, from Charles M. Dougherty, where he had erected extensive factories for the packing of oysters, fruits, etc. Soon after, Mr. Ellis died, and Mr. Charles E. Houghton withdrew from the business. The Baltimore factory fronts seven hundred and fifty feet on Cross Street, employing during the oyster season from four hundred to five hundred hands, canning four thousand bushels per day, and during the fruit season from six hundred to seven hundred hands.

The present market-house and town hall was built in 1872. On June 19th of that year an ordinance was passed appropriating $40,000 for its erection, but the cost of construction with the purchase of some additional ground made the total expenditure $55,000. The city hall, one of the finest rooms in the State, has a comfortable seating capacity for eleven hundred people, and is well arranged and ventilated.

Fire Companies.—The first fire company in Frederick was organized in the year 1760, but its name has not been preserved. In that year a lottery was gotten up for raising five hundred dollars for purchasing a fire-engine, consisting of seventeen hundred and fifty tickets, at two dollars each. The surplus, if any, it was announced, would be applied towards the erection of a market-house in the town. By this scheme there were little more than two and a quarter blanks to a prize, and the profits retained were not quite fifteen per cent. upon the whole. The managers were Thomas Schley, James Dickson, Conrad Grosh, Arthur Charlton, Christopher Edelin, Michael Roman, Casper Shaaf, Thomas Price, Levi Cohen, John Cary, and George Murdock.

On Feb. 14, 1806, another lottery was announced for purchasing a fire-engine with hose. The scheme was—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1500 tickets at $2</th>
<th>$3000</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Prices</td>
<td>2177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sun to be raised</td>
<td>8823</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Its managers were Henry Steiner, Francis Mantz, Henry Bentz, George Creager, Sr., Levi Welteheimer, Charles Shell, Jacob Medtart, C. Adam Ebert, Peter Burchardt.

In 1807 the “Friendship Fire Company” existed. Its engine was made in London, England, and was the best in America when brought over.

In 1813, at a meeting of the “Union Fire Company,” the following distribution of the members was made, and on September 1st was published for the information of the citizens of the town:

- Property-men, Daniel Hauser, Sr., Henry McClearay, Conrad Doll, John Gehhart, William House; Engineers, George Baer, Frederick Heider, Vacey Koons; Lame-men, Henry Steiner, Jacob Baer, Michael Hauser, John Rigney, William Michael, John McPherson; Bucket-men, Jacob Steiner, Woodward Evisitt; Axe-men, William Baer, of Henry, John Haw; Trumpet-men, John Hanson Thomas, George Littlejohn; Councilors to the trumpet-men, Abraham Shriver, Jacob Steiner, and Woodward Evisitt; Hook-

- men, Harry Baer, John Dill, John Fisher, Sr., Michael Kohl, Frederick Reel, George Hauer; Ladder-men, Joshua Dorsey, John Reich, John Baltzell, Philip Hauptman, Solomon Steckle, David Boyd, John Fritchie, James Robertson, Peter Fout, Charles T. Melshheimer, Thomas Shaw, James Aechy, Benjamin Williams, Jacob Rohr, William Wirtenburger.

Independent Fire Company.—This veteran company, the oldest existing in Maryland, is sixty-four years of age, having been organized in 1818. Its records prior to 1836 are lost, but its performances in subduing conflagrations live in the grateful recollections of the citizens, the oldest of whom, like the venerable Peter Reich, ran with its engine over threescore years ago. Its officers have been as follows:

- 1836.—President, G. M. Conradt; Vice-President, Jacob Doll; Secretary, D. J. Markey; Treasurer, Gideon Bantz, Sr.; Principal Engineer, D. B. Devitt; Assistants, George Hoskins, Daniel Haller; Directors, William Small, John Feeler; Pipe Director, G. M. Conradt; Hose Director, Jacob Doll; Engine Director, John Feeler; Lane Director, William Small; Property Guards, William Schley, Joseph Schell; Superintendents fire-plugs, John Schaeffer, Mark Besore; Ladder-men, Jacob Neckle, Henry Kepler; Lane-men, F. A. Schley, Samuel Caracnak, Casper Quinn; Axe-men, John Hausban, Henry Rhode; Hose-men, George Salmon, Philip Reich, Henry Young, V. J. Brunner, Henry Hausfeld, Edward Trail, George J. Fischer, Gideon Bantz, Sr., W. C. Russell

- 1837.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, D. J. Markey.

- 1838-39.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, George Markell.

- 1840.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, Robert Johnston.

- 1841.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, Edward Shriver.

- 1842-43.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, F. A. Rigney.

- 1844.—President, Casper Quinn; Secretary, A. G. Quinn.

- 1845.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, W. H. Spangler.

- 1846-47.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, F. A. Rigney.

- 1848-52.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, H. C. Stelner.

- 1852.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, J. Willis Rice.

- 1855.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, H. C. Stelner.

- 1854.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, J. Willis Rice.

- 1855-57.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, P. W. Englebrecht.

- 1867-79.—President, Edward Shriver; Secretary, John W. Kaufman.

- 1879-80.—President, James McSherry; Secretary, Joseph F. Eisenhauer.

- 1881.—President, James McSherry; Vice-Presidents, John W. Baughman, George C. Derr; Treasurer, John C. Harlot; Secretary, Joseph F. Eisenhauer; Assistant Secretary, S. Harry Hauer; Directors, W. E. Getzmann, J. B. Tyson, Warren Tyson, W. A. Simmons, H. C. Keener, Dr. H. T. Burek; Foreman, H. B. Tyson; Assistants, J. S. Veit, George Kitzo, Charles Hoen, Charles Muller; Chief Engineer, D. H. Kolb; Assistants, Casper Brust, Frank Ross, Samuel Jones, Boris Tyson; Firemen, Henry Brust, George Sauer, James Lowe, Christopher Hiltner; Chief Pipers, Charles A. Porter; Assistants, Edward Olen, M. Miller, William Angeline, William Hiltner, Edward Mullhorn, Edward Edier, C. B. Shipe, J. C. Woodward, E. L. Green, J. C. Bohat; Surgeon, Dr. Frank T. Burek.
In September, 1876, the company got its first steam-engine, "Romeo," costing four thousand dollars, and in 1881 exchanged it, damaged by fire, for its second one, "Juliet," costing three thousand two hundred dollars. In 1876 it sold its old hand-engine, previous to getting a steam one, to a fire company in Winchester, Va. Its present membership is four hundred and forty, and it has eight hundred feet of hose. Its engine-house is on West Church Street, near the old Reformed church. Since 1836 it has had but three presidents, to wit: Casper Quynn, serving eight years; Gen. Edward Shriver, serving thirty-four; and Capt. James McSherry, the past three. In forty-five years it has had only seventeen secretaries.

Junior Fire Company.—The origin of this company arose from the casual meeting in the last week of November, 1838, of William Carlton, Alex. K. Mantz, and George F. Webster in Mr. Mantz's drugstore. These gentlemen published a notice in the Herald for a meeting to be held for the formation of a young men's fire company at the Dill House, at which Mr. Carlton presided, and Mr. Mantz was secretary. On December 15th another meeting was held and committees appointed to solicit subscriptions. These committees reported from time to time the amounts subscribed, until, in January, 1839, the City Council voted to make up the amount necessary to secure to the company an engine, hose-carriage, etc. The full organization took place in that month by the election of William Pitts, president; William Carlton, vice-president; Ezra Dadyssman, secretary; William Gittinger, treasurer; James Brunner, William F. Johnson, George F. Webster, Samuel Canby, James Bartgis, and A. K. Mantz, directors. The company contracted with John Rogers, of Baltimore, for an engine for one thousand dollars, and the lot twelve feet front in the rear of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank was secured for the purpose of erecting an engine-house upon it. At a meeting held Feb. 16, 1839, the hose and hose-reels were ordered, one from Mr. Rogers, of Baltimore, and the other from H. Boetler, of Frederick. Aug. 24, 1839, the engine was received and placed in the engine-house, which had been erected on the lot above mentioned. On March 23d it was ordered that the engine be painted a vermilion red. The officers have been the following:

1838.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, John H. Birely.
1844—15.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, John Bender.
1846.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, William Bartgis.
1847.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, Henry Titlow.
1848.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, J. W. Birely.
1849—50.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, John Lambright.
1851—53.—President, Ezra Doub; Chief Engineer, William Bartgis.
1854—55.—President, Ezra Doub; Chief Engineer, John Lambright.
1856.—President, Ezra Houck; Chief Engineer, G. James Buecky.
1857—70.—President, John W. Birely; Chief Engineer, Jacob Buecky.
1876.—President, John W. Birely; Chief Engineer, J. J. Shindler.
1877.—President, Edward Koontz; Chief Engineer, Jacob Buecky.
1874.—President, Edward Koontz; Chief Engineer, G. Jacob Buecky.
1875—77.—President, Edward Koontz; Chief Engineer, William F. Buesing.
1877—81.—President, Edward Koontz; Chief Engineer, Francis T. Rhodes.
1881.—President, Edward Koontz; Vice-Presidents, Albert T. Rice, L. V. Baughman; Secretary, Alexander Brengle; Treasurer, William P. Rice; Investigating Committee, John D. Zeiler, J. Henry Lampe, George S. Rhodock; Foreman, Nicholos Blumouer; Assistant Foremen, C. P. Smith, W. C. Birely; Chief Engineer, Francis T. Rhodes; Assistant Engineers, William Winebrenner, E. C. Ekbert, Lewis Boyer, Clarence C. Rice; Firemen, Joseph Brumecy, W. H. Buesing, Edward Stoner, William Kushman; Chief Hose Director, M. A. Woodward; Assistants, Richard Lippus, M. C. Rice, Henry Haller; Chief Pipe-men, C. T. Topper; Assistants, George Groshon, H. W. Falk, George Mulhorn, George Ketler, W. H. Shipley, Edward Nunez, Philip Whisner, Howard Kushman; Surgeon, Dr. S. F. Francis.

The present engine-house on Market Street was built in 1846, on the old Hart lot, and in 1872 was enlarged at an expense of six thousand five hundred dollars. The first engine-house, on the lot in the rear of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, was one-story brick building. The company bought its present steam-engine in the fall of 1876 for four thousand dollars. It is called the Silsby engine, and was made at Seneca Falls, N. Y. It now has five hundred feet of hose attached. This company has two hundred and fifty-three active and eighty-three life members.

United Fire Company.—The United Fire Company was organized in 1845, with Charles Mantz as its first president, and was the successor of the old Washington Hose Company, which had a short time before ceased to exist. Its first engine was one of the old-fashioned hand-engines. In 1848 its present engine-house on Market Street was erected. All its records and books up to July 24, 1868, were lost by the flood of that date, when Quintman S. J. Beckley was its secretary. Since then its officers have been as follows:

1869.—President, John Loxe; First Vice-President, John T. Sim; Second Vice-President, Augustus Joteler; Secretary, Q. S. J. Beckley; Treasurer, Charles E. Tabler; Directors, Hiram Bartgis, J. D. Zeiler, Jacob B. Tyson, Jacob Lillibich, Milton McDaniel, Edward Sim; Chief Engineer, W. J. Wilson.
1870-75.—President, John T. Sim; Secretary, F. M. Faubel.
1875.—President, John T. Sim; Secretary, L. T. O. Frazier.
1876-78.—President, Gabriel Beckley; Secretary, John H. Bennett.
1878-81.—President, Hiram Bartgis; Secretary, John H. Bennett.
1881.—President, Hiram Bartgis; First Vice-President, Frederick J. Nelson; Second Vice-President, A. L. Butler; Secretary, John H. Bennett; Treasurer, Lewis Rice; Directors, David A. Castle, George Wents, J. Sabin, N. J. Wilson, David Koh, George W. Vanforsen, E. N. Hobbs; Chief Engineer, Moses Fisher; Assistant Engineers, Joseph Chew, Charles Chew, Charles B. Chabough, William Need; Chief Foreman, Frank Chew; Assistant Foremen, Oscar L. Haller, William Duvall, Lewis Albrough, George Moberry; Chief Pipe-man, F. T. Kesserling; Foreman, Jacob B. Tyson; Assistant Foremen, E. D. Frazier, Willie Bartgis.

Its present engine, "The Lily of the Swamp," was purchased Feb. 22, 1878, and is one of the best steam fire-engines in the State. Over four hundred and fifty persons are members of this company. It has turned out in the past year on parade over one hundred and twenty-five members dressed in tasteful uniforms.

Schools, Libraries, Societies, Etc.—The General Assembly of the Province of Maryland, Oct. 26, 1723, passed an act for the encouragement of learning and the erection of school-houses in the several counties. It provided for one school in every county, to be under the control of seven visitors. On Nov. 26, 1763, another act was passed for erecting a public school in Frederick County, and authorizing the purchase of an acre of ground in Frederick Town, to be bought by the following persons nominated as school visitors, viz.: Col. Thomas Cresap, Thomas Beatty, Nathan Magruder, Capt. Joseph Chapline, John Darnall, Col. Samuel Beall, and Rev. Thomas Bacon. These visitors were empowered to erect a school-house out of certain funds collected for the use of the county schools. By an act passed June 22, 1768, it was recited that, as it was apprehended that the purchase of one acre for the school would be attended with too much expense, and as the first visitors appointed lived so remote and distant from each other that it was inconvenient for them to attend and execute the duties of their office, therefore it was enacted that the following new visitors be appointed, viz.:

Jonathan Wilson, Thomas Bowlus, George Murdock, Maj. Joseph Wood, Thomas Price, Casper Shaa, and Charles Beatty, who were authorized to purchase half an acre and erect thereon a school-house. By an act passed Dec. 20, 1769, it was recited that the funds appropriated were insufficient to purchase ground and make the necessary buildings thereon. It was therefore enacted that the justices of the County Court cause to be laid out and buttet and bounded with stones, or good locust posts, one-half acre of the lots laid off for public uses in Frederick Town, on the northwest corner of the said court-house, and which said half-acre was vested in the said school visitors and their successors in office for the use of said school. The funds appropriated by the Assembly for said school being insufficient to erect the buildings, the inhabitants of the county got up a lottery to raise nine hundred dollars to make up the deficiency. The managers were Jonathan Wilson, Thomas Bowlus, George Murdock, Joseph Wood, Thomas Price, Casper Shaa, Charles Beatty, Samuel Beall, Jr., Normand Bruce, Andrew Hough, Enes Campbell, Christopher Edelin, John Cary, Lodowick Weltner, Peter Gosh, Thomas Neil, Nicholas Tice, Samuel Hughes, Thomas Johns, and James Brand. Three thousand tickets were sold, at two dollars each, and there were eight hundred and fifty-two prizes. The drawing took place Nov. 2, 1769. The history of the school up to 1797 is very meager, and whether there was any school building erected before that time is uncertain. Hugh Montgomery Brackenridge taught an academy, beginning Aug. 1, 1778. He had fifteen scholars, and charged thirty pounds per pupil, without board, but this was depreciated currency of the Revolution. Rev. George Ralph opened an academy Jan. 16, 1792. James Clark opened a seminary April 11, 1793, in Dr. Philip Thomas' house, near the Baptist church. The General Assembly, at the November session of 1796, passed an act reciting that, under the act of 1763, the specified one acre had been purchased, and that under that of 1769 the designated one-half acre had been appropriated out of lots for public uses, and that commodious buildings thereon had been erected and nearly completed. Therefore it was enacted that there be founded a school or seminary of learning in Frederick Town, to be known as "Frederick County School."

This act appointed George Murdock, Richard Potts, Dr. Philip Thomas, Baker Johnson, Francis Mantz, John McPherson, and George Baer, Jr., as school visitors, who were made a corporation and body politic. This act would seem to establish the fact that prior to 1797 no school building had been erected on these lots. The "Academy" was opened Oct. 2, 1797, under Samuel Knox, principal, at which time William Potts took the place of Francis Manz, resigned, in the board. October 7th, Hatch Dent became teacher of the English department, at a salary of one hundred and twenty-five pounds per annum and the tuition fees of three pounds per annum, he to collect them from the pupils.

An act passed by the Assembly in 1798 (November session) appropriated eight hundred dollars, payable annually, to this school out of the treasury of the Western Shore.

In 1799, Thomas Barnaby was the junior English teacher, and Mr. Cairon the French. Tuition fees: twenty dollars per annum for Latin and Greek, twelve dollars for English until entering on some branch of mathematics, and from that period to be sixteen dollars.

An act passed at the November session, 1801, provided for a lottery for the benefit of the school, and made the appointment of additional school visitors, to wit: William Luckett, William Hobbs, of Samuel, Roger Nelson, Peter Manz, John Schley, Joshua Dorsey, Daniel Clark, Jr., and Robert Cummings. But in place of Peter Manz, resigned, William Campbell was appointed, who after a few weeks declined, and Oct. 30, 1804, Roger Brooke Taney was chosen to fill the vacancy. Francis McHenry was a teacher in the first English school in 1806. On July 19, 1803, Thomas Luckett, a student in the classical department, and Richard Smith, of the advanced English school, were charged with having fought a duel, Smith sending the challenge, and George Mason acting as second to Luckett. Smith was expelled and the other two pupils reprimanded, or rather Mason was only slightly censured. It appears that one shot passed between the combatants, when the second (Mason) seized the pistols and stopped further proceedings. On July 20th the resolutions expelling Smith and reprimanding Luckett were rescinded. This duel and subsequent proceedings relative thereto created great excitement. On Sept. 22, 1803, Samuel Knox, principal of the school, resigned, and was succeeded by Dennis Dunlevy, with John McDonald in the introductory English school, and Lewis St. Martin teacher of French.

July 26, 1805, George Murdock having died and Daniel Clarke removed from the county, their places as visitors were filled by electing Dr. John Baltzell and Maj. John Graham. In 1804, John H. Thomas became a visitor, vice John Schley, resigned, and Mr. Guillon was appointed, in 1806, the French teacher. In 1807, Edward Salmon was the mathematical teacher. In 1809, Dr. Edward Anderson was chosen visitor, vice William Potts, resigned, and S. Markell was made master of the introductory school, and Charles Cresolles the French teacher. August 15th, Rev. Patrick Davidson was made master of the mathematical department. July 8, 1809, William Ross became visitor, vice Richard Potts, deceased. On the 12th of December, 1810, Dr. Philip Thomas was elected president of the board of directors, and Dr. J. Baltzell secretary. To fill the vacancy in the principalship, caused by the resignation of Dennis Dunlevy, Sept. 1, 1809, John V. Wylie was elected March 2, 1811. On March 22, 1813, a rule was promulgated against students dancing, and Charles James Wolfender was expelled for sending to his brother student, Peachy H. Williams, a challenge to fight a duel. Samuel Markell, teacher of the inferior English school, established the Lancasterian system on May 4, 1813.

There is no record of the board from June 3, 1814, to July 24, 1815, between which periods Dr. Philip Thomas (president), John Hanson Thomas, and Roger Nelson died. Francis A. Schley and Richard Potts were chosen to fill two of the vacancies, and John McPherson was made president. In 1819, on the death of Joshua Dorsey, John Brien was made visitor in his place. Feb. 1, 1819, Roger Brooke Taney resigned as visitor, and Dr. William Tyler was chosen in his stead, and on the 14th John Nelson was appointed. At the same date Rev. Samuel Knox was chosen principal of the school. June 13th, John H. McElfresh was chosen visitor, vice George Baer, resigned, and Frederick Ellsworth was selected as teacher in place of Rev. Mr. Davidson, deceased. Sept. 26, 1826, John Graham and John Brien, two of the visitors, having resigned, their places were filled with Abraham Shriver and Dr. Grafton Duval. On May 4, 1827, after a heated controversy, the Lancasterian system was abolished by a vote of four to three. Ayes: John McPherson, Abraham Shriver, John McElfresh, Frederick A. Schley. Nays: Dr. John Baltzell, William Tyler, John Nelson.

On June 27, 1827, Samuel Markell was appointed teacher in place of Frederick Ellsworth, deceased. August 20th, James G. McNeely was appointed principal of the classical department, and C. J. Hademan teacher of the mathematical department. David F. Schaffer became a visitor this year. On June 17, 1828, a ball-alley was ordered to be built with two sides in the yard of the academy, and trees to be planted in said yard. On July 12th the resolution ordering the erection of a ball-alley was rescinded, and one adopted substituting nine-pins and quoits for the recreation of the pupils. Sept. 23d, Mr. Grillet was elected as French teacher.

The General Assembly passed an act at its December session, 1828, authorizing the visitors to sell the school-lots and buildings, and buy ground elsewhere and erect more commodious buildings. This act also created the school into "Frederick College," with power to grant diplomas and degrees after a regular course of studies pursued under the prescribed curriculum of the board of visitors.

April 4, 1829, Mr. McNeely, the principal, resigned, and on May 4th, Nathaniel Vernon was elected mathematical teacher. May 9th, David F. Shaffer was elected superintendent of the institution and professor of moral philosophy and belles-lettres, and Samuel Hubbell teacher of the languages. July 30th, Rev. Mr. Swan was elected teacher, vice Mr. Hubbell, resigned.

Dec. 28, 1831, Dr. William McPherson and George M. Eichelberger were elected visitors, vice John Nelson and W. Schley. Mr. Eichelberger refusing to serve, William Ross was appointed. Freeman Converse was appointed teacher of the classics. April 9, 1832, the college's scheme of lottery was ordered to be sold at not less than two thousand five hundred dollars. August 29th, Mr. Converse resigned as teacher. July 20, 1833, the academy and lot were offered for sale. July 31, 1834, G. F. Stein was elected principal. April 22, 1835, Mr. Stein resigned, and Mr. Freeman Converse became principal. In 1837, Thomas W. Morgan, Worthington Johnson, Jacob Markell, and Dr. A. Richie were visitors. June 30, 1838, Mr. Converse resigned the principalship, and August 13th, Rev. Joseph Smith, of Franklin College, was elected in his place. In 1843, on the resignation of William Ross and the death of John H. McElfresh, William J. Ross and Samuel Tyler were elected visitors. In 1843, William Baer was professor of chemistry. June 10, 1844, Rev. Joseph Smith resigned as principal. November 18th, Dr. William Bradley Tyler was elected visitor, vice Dr. W. S. McPherson. Feb. 24, 1845, James Thompson, principal for the past year, resigned, and was succeeded by J. S. Bonsall. Thomas Turner succeeded Dr. John Baltzell as visitor. Aug. 16, 1848, Rev. James Barrow was elected to the English department. April 7, 1849, Mountjoy Luckett was elected visitor, vice Thomas Turner, deceased, and Jan. 4, 1851, J. M. Kunkell and Samuel Tyler were elected trustees, vice Drs. S. B. Tyler and A. Ritchie.

Dec. 12, 1851, Rev. Dr. Zacharias was elected a trustee, vice J. Markell, resigned, and Edward Shriver was also elected. Aug. 22, 1854, J. S. Bonsall was re-elected principal, Nathaniel Vernon teacher of mathematics, and Rev. E. W. Reinecke professor of English language, etc. Sept. 4, 1855, the salary of the principal was raised to nine hundred dollars, and the children of the teachers were ordered to be educated free. May 21, 1856, Prof. E. W. Reinecke resigned, and Mr. Harris was elected in his place. In 1856 the board consisted of Samuel Tyler, M. B. Luckett, Edward Shriver, Jacob Kunkel, Dr. Zacharias, Thomas Morgan, F. A. Schley, Jacob Markell, and J. L. Bringle. John D. Wilson was elected a teacher, vice Professor Harris, resigned. In 1857, Bradley T. Johnson was elected a visitor, and in 1861, Grayson Eichelberger and Dr. George Johnson, and in 1866, Gideon Bantz. In 1867, Charles Shafer was made professor of mathematics. In 1868, Dr. Fairfax Schley and Dr. W. H. Baltzell came into the board. In 1870, Col. G. R. Dennis and Jacob Reisneider, and in 1873, Charles W. Ross, were elected members. In the same year G. C. Deanner succeeded J. S. Bonsall as principal, and was succeeded in 1876 by the present incumbent, Henry A. Gatch. Since then visitors have been elected as follows: In 1874, Francis Markell; 1877, Dr. Lewis H. Steiner and C. V. S. Levy; and in 1879, John H. Williams.

The officers for 1851 were as follows:

Board of Visitors.—General Edward Shriver, president; Fairfax Schley, M.D., William H. Baltzell, M.D., Gideon Bantz, C. V. S. Levy (secretary); L. H. Steiner, M.D., John H. Williams, Charles W. Ross, Francis Markell (treasurer), Corps of Instructors.—Principal, Thomas A. Gatch, A.M., Professor of Latin and Greek; E. C. Shepherd, Professor of Higher English Mathematics and Sciences; William H. Harry, Professor of Mathematics and Elementary English.

This institution is pleasantly situated at the corner of Counsel and Record Streets, away from the noise and bustle of the business part of the city. Its leading object is to make sound and accurate scholars, and to prepare those who are there educated to do honor to themselves in all the various relations of life. The scholastic year consists of two sessions, and the number of pupils average annually about ninety. It has a large, well-selected library, a valuable cabinet, and costly apparatus for its philosophical and chemical departments. Although in its reorganization of 1828 it was empowered as a college to confer degrees, it has remained a first-class academy.

On Oct. 24, 1866, Mrs. King opened a select school at the house occupied by Mrs. Reilner, nearly opposite the "Stone Well."

At a meeting held in Mr. Shafer's tavern it was agreed to commence a "Public Debate" every Saturday night, the first one to begin Dec. 16, 1899.

Sept. 27, 1819, the Frederick Town "Library Company" was organized and elected its officers.
On Feb. 22, 1811, "The Ugly Club" met at the house of G. G. Muelly to celebrate Washington's birthday.

May 4, 1812, the Lutheran Church Academy was opened under the charge of Rev. David F. Schaeffer, A.M., pastor of the Lutheran congregation, who taught Latin, Greek, "logick," "Rhetoric," and the various branches of mathematics, English grammar, arithmetic, reading and writing, as well as the English and German languages.

On Dec. 18, 1817, at a town-meeting convened at the academy for the purpose of forming a "Bible Society," Rev. Patrick Davidson was called to the chair, and Rev. Charles Mann appointed secretary. A constitution was adopted, and the society called the "Frederick Bible and Charity Fund Society." It was ordered that all copies of the scripture distributed by the society should be without notes or comments. The initiation fee was one dollar and annual subscription the same. Life membership was put at twenty dollars. The following were the committee to collect subscriptions: Revs. P. Davidson, D. F. Schaeffer, Chas. Mann, J. Helfenstein, Hatch and D. Martin, and Col. John Ritchie and John Brien.

"The Frederick County Bible Society" met Sept. 15, 1821, at the Lutheran church, and elected the following officers: President, John Graham; Vice-President, Jacob Steiner; Recording Secretary, Dr. Jacob Baer; Treasurer, Col. John Ritchie; Corresponding Secretaries, Revs. Jonathan Helfenstein, John Johns: Board of Managers, John Graham, F. A. Schley, Geo. Baer, John Nelson, Jacob Steiner, Jacob Baer, John Ritchie, Richard Potts, Wm. Ross, John Ballzell. On Sept. 18, 1821, the first annual meeting of "The Young Men's Bible Society" was held in the German Reformed Presbyterian church, when the following directors were chosen for the ensuing year: Christian Steiner, Valentine J. Braunner, F. A. Gebhart, John Keitzell, Robert McCleary, Thos. H. Fleming, James M. Shihman, Wm. Fisher, John Fessler, Cyrus Mants, Jas. F. Houston, David Boyd, Geo. Salmon, Thomas Sim, Singleton Davall, John T. Brooke, W. V. Morgan, Wm. Waters, Geo. Englebrecht, Lewis Medart. At a subsequent meeting of this board the following officers were elected: President, Cyrus Mants; Vice-Presidents, John T. Brooke, Singleton Davall; Treasurer, Geo. Englebrecht; Corresponding Secretary, J. F. Houston; Recording Secretary, L. Medart.

On Oct. 13, 1821, the Frederick Town "Measanimies Debating Society" met at Capt. Turbot's at early candle-light.

"The Frederick Benevolent Society" met (agreeably to adjournment) on Jan. 21, 1822, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, John L. Potts; Secretary, Benjamin M. Miller: Treasurer, Lewis Medart; Directors, John T. Brooke, J. M. Shihman, Wm. Y. Magill, Wm. Blackford, Robert McCleary, D. Shrengel, P. Torney.

On March 1, 1823, "The Education Society of Frederick" was organized, its object being to educate orphans, or children whose parents were in reduced circumstances, to such knowledge as might be deemed requisite and necessary by the board of directors, who were David E. Shueffer, F. Nurn, Geo. W. Kent, Geo. W. Conrady, Jacob Keller, Lewis Medart, Geo. Englebrecht.

On March 12, 1827, a meeting of the citizens was held to establish a "Religious Tract Society." Wm. Ross was in the chair, and Geo. Englebrecht secretary. A constitution was formed, and the society called "The Auxiliary Tract Society of Frederick and Vicinity." Annual subscription, fifty cents; young persons, twenty-five cents. The officers elected for the year were: President, Lewis Medart; Vice-President, Frederick Ellsworth, David Boyd; Secretary, Geo. Englebrecht; Treasurer, Wm. L. Helfenstein.

On Aug. 22, 1853, Dr. Lewis H. Steiner was appointed professor of chemistry in the National Medical College.

In 1821 it was determined by the Synod of the Reformed Church to found a theological seminary at Frederick City, and on Jan. 12, 1822, the financial committee, through its chairman, John McPherson, announced that at the General Convention of the Reformed Church held at Reading, Pa., this seminary had been permanently located at Frederick, and Rev. Dr. P. Milledollor, of New York, elected its president.

In March, 1827, D. H. Bingman, formerly of Capt. Partridge's military school at Norwich, Vt., opened a military academy. A company of his cadets visited Hagerstown December 5th of that year. Their uniforms were neat, and their marching and manoeuvres unusually correct and precise. During the visit they were entertained by Col. Williams and others, of Hagers-town, and by Dr. Boerstler, of Funkstown, by Mr. Fitzbaugh, near that place, and Mr. Edwards, of Boonsboro'. The following committee of the cadets returned thanks in a card to the above gentlemen, viz.: H. H. Abbott, Wm. Harding, Joseph Webster, Wm. Foltz, H. Steiner. The institution was in successful operation for some time, and students came from distant States. Many of its pupils afterwards became distinguished in the late civil war, both in the Federal and Confederate ranks.

The Frederick Female Seminary has been in existence for nearly forty years, and during all that period has maintained a high standard of efficiency. It obtained its charter from the State Legislature in 1840, and subsequently received authority from the same source to raise fifty thousand dollars and erect suitable buildings. These buildings were completed in 1843, and are believed to equal those of any similar institution in the country. They consist of two commodious edifices in the Ionic style, each fifty feet front by ninety feet deep, with high basement and three stories. The Collegiate Hall, in which the commencement and other public exercises are held, is a fine apartment, forty by forty-eight feet and seventeen feet high, handsomely frescoed. To Hiram Winchester, the first president of the seminary, the community is principally indebted for the establishment of this institution. Through his instrumentality the charter was obtained and funds were raised for the erection of the buildings. The school was opened under its chartered privileges in 1843, and in 1846 the first catalogue was issued. The trustees that year were Gideon Bantz, David Boyd, and Christian Steiner, and over eighty students were in attendance, many of them from abroad. In process of time, as the school became popular and numbers increased, the buildings were found to be too small. Hence, in 1843, an additional grant was obtained from the Legislature authorizing the raising (before mentioned) of fifty thousand dollars. Of this sum twenty thousand was held as an endowment fund, and a part of the remainder appropriated to the erection of a second building, in design and architecture identical with the first. This is the western building and present school edifice, the eastern one being now used only as a dwelling. The history of the school was for many years one of great prosperity; numbers increased, and the names of many young ladies from the South appeared upon the roll of students. George D. Prentiee, in the Louisville, Ky., Journal of Dec. 14, 1858, said, "We do not remember to have ever seen in any part of the United States such elegant and handsome edifices devoted to educational purposes as those of the Frederick Female Seminary." Mr. Winchester remained as president from 1846 to 1865. For a short time during the civil war the school was suspended, and the building was used by the United States forces for hospital purposes. This interregnum lasted during the autumn and winter of 1863 and '64, and the spring of 1864. Mr. Winchester resigned Aug. 18, 1865, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas M. Cann. His administration continued through a term of eight years, until August, 1873, when he resigned. Prof. J. H. Hackelton was then elected to the presidency. In addition to the three first-mentioned trustees, the following names have at different periods appeared on the list: David Schley, G. M. Eichelberger, Lewis Rumsburg, Lewis T. Coppersmith, Dr. Lewis H. Steiner, David J. Markey, Grayson Eichelberger. The first graduating class of 1846 numbered three, and the total number of graduates is over two hundred and seventy-five. Prof. Hackelton died in 1877, since which time the seminary has been under the charge of his widow, Mrs. M. W. Hackelton. Prof. Hackelton was born in Bristol, Me., April 7, 1817, and was the youngest of a family of eight children of James Hackelton, a well-known ship-builder. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1844, and then went to Philadelphia, where he was admitted to the bar. About this time, being attacked with a serious bronchial affection, he visited Mississippi, in the hope that change of climate would effect a cure. There he engaged in teaching, first as professor of natural science and languages in the Holly Springs Female Institute, and afterwards as principal of Chalmers' Institute for Boys, in Holly Springs. In 1855 he became connected with the Female College at La Grange, Tenn., first as vice-president, and afterwards as president, on the death of his old friend and classmate, Prof. D. Z. Johnson, with whom he had been associated. Here he met and married Miss Maria W. Nash, of Hadley, Mass., and the next year returned to Holly Springs, to take charge of its Female Institute. The war interrupting for a time all educational effort, he was engaged in mercantile business in Memphis, Tenn., but soon returned to his much-loved profession of teaching, and in 1873 came to Frederick. He was a communicant of the Episcopal Church and a man of the highest character. His labors as an educator extended over a period of about thirty years. As a home for girls during the period allotted to their education, no more healthful or delightful location could well be found than the Frederick Seminary. It is easy of access, being directly upon the line of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroads, and within two and a half hours' ride of Baltimore and Washington. The course of study is extensive, but particular attention is given to the common English branches. The seminary confers upon its post-graduates the degree of A.M., and upon those who complete the course of belles-lettres a gold medal. Pupils enjoy the advantages of a well-selected library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a cabinet of minerals, maps, charts, globes, etc. Mrs. Hackelton, the principal, is assisted by her daughters and by a corps of teachers and professors.

The years 1870–80 were signalized by the erection of a mural tablet in Collegiate Hall in memorial of Hiram Winchester, the founder of the institution, on which occasion Dr. Lewis H. Steiner delivered an eloquent address. The officers of the seminary are as follows:

Board of Trustees.—Charles E. Trout (president), J. Wm. Bidwell, Francis Markell, Milton G. Ureke, Lewis M. Nixdorf.
Visiting Committee.—Rev. Geo. Deihl, D.D., Rev. Osborne Ingle, Rev. S. V. Leech, D.D., Rev. Irvin P. McCurdy, Rev. C. E. Eshbach, D.D., Rev. H. Biefield, Rev. H. P. Hamill, Hon. Wm. J. Ross, Thomas M. Wolfe (last two appointed by the Governor). Faculty.—Mrs. M. W. Hackelton (president), Biblical Literature, Mental and Moral Science, Belles-Lettres, and Eloquence; Rev. Irvin P. McCurdy, M.E., A.B., Professor of Greek and Higher Mathematics; Elizabeth J. Watt, A.M., Mathematics and Latin; Alice S. Blyth, English Literature, Natural Science, and French; Ethel G. Hackelton, Latin and English; Maud V. Hackelton, History, Ancient and Modern; Prof. George Linck, Vocal Culture, Plans, Organs, and Modern Languages; Mrs. M. W. Hackelton, Harp and Guitar; Ethel Hackelton, Piano; Alice S. Blyth, Piano; Florence W. Doubl, Drawing and Painting.

The teachers in the Frederick City schools for the term ending April 15, 1881, were as follows:

School No. 9, Male Department.—George W. McBride, principal; Katie M. Bartgis, V. S. Wengley, Josie Partee, assistants; 219 pupils. Female Department.—Helen J. Rowe, principal; M. S. Yarkele, C. H. Steiner, Susie Steiner, A. E. Shope, assistants: 258 pupils.
Colored School No. 1.—J. E. Furry, principal; Mary E. Gross, assistant: 140 pupils.
Colored School No. 2.—D. B. Washington, principal; Anna McBrown, assistant: 92 pupils.

Maryland Deaf and Dumb Institution.—This institution was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly passed at the January session of 1867. On October 3rd, at the first meeting of the board of visitors, the organization of the board was effected, and at its next meeting, held April 22, 1868, the board decided to open the institution on the first Wednesday in September. The original act set apart the State grounds at Frederick, together with the buildings thereon (the old Barracks and grounds built and fitted in the French and Indian war, and repaired in the Revolutionary struggle), for its use, and gave it an annual endowment of five thousand dollars, and appropriated twenty-five thousand more for furnishing and building purposes. The necessary arrangements having been made and the building constructed, the institution was formally opened on the first Wednesday of September, 1868, with appropriate exercises and the reception of thirty-four pupils. This number was increased during the session to fifty-nine, of whom forty-one were males and eighteen females. Twenty-eight had been in the Columbian Institution, at Washington, D. C., four at the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of Virginia, one at that of Pennsylvania, one at that of Connecticut, and twenty-five had never been in any institution.

Charles W. Ely, A. M., of the Ohio State Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, was unanimously elected principal, to date from Sept. 1, 1870, to supersede Mr. Cooke, who had filled that position since its organization. Having graduated in one of the first universities in the United States, and having been an instructor of the deaf and dumb for seven years in one of the most prominent institutions in the country, Professor Ely combines with a thorough education and large experience that decision of character and forbearance, which qualify him in an eminent degree for that position. He has remained at its head to the present time. The General Assembly, at the January session of 1870, appropriated one hundred thousand dollars to erect a new building, and on August 29th of that year the contract for its erection was awarded to William L. Brown, of Baltimore, at $93,400. Ground was broken on that day for the commencement of the building, and on May 31, 1871, its corner stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies, conducted by Hon. John H. B. Latrobe, Grand Master, assisted by the Grand Lodge of Free Masons of Maryland. The oration was pronounced by Rev. Richard Fuller, D. D., of Baltimore. The First and Second Branches of the City Council of Baltimore, the Knights Templar of that city, the mayor, aldermen, and Council of Frederick, the various benevolent orders and societies, and the fire department of the city, together with a large concourse of citizens, were present to witness the ceremonies. The architect, William F. Weber, of Baltimore, who had drawn the plans for its construction, was appointed superintendent of the building. Two sections of the new building (the centre and south wing) were completed prior to, and occupied since, Jan. 1, 1873, and these afforded accommodations greatly in contrast with those offered by the Barracks, which were wholly unsuited to the wants of the institution. The Legislature of 1874 appropriated an additional $125,000 for the completion of the building according to the plan originally adopted. The contract to build the north wing was awarded to the former contractor, William L. Brown, and it was completed in the summer of 1875, and occupied at the opening of the term commencing September 1st. The building is imposing in appearance, and is greatly admired for its architectural beauty. The work throughout is massive and substantial. An iron fence has been erected in front on Market Street, and the grounds are beautifully graded and ornamented, making the institution attractive in all its surroundings. There are one hundred and twenty-one pupils, representing every part of the State, who find employment in two shops, a cabinet and shoe-shop, while several scholars versed in printing publish a very interesting newspaper, called The Maryland Deaf-Mute Bulletin. The girls are taught dress-making and light house-work. This institution is supported and controlled by the State. Applicants are received to be educated, and not for medical treatment. All deaf and dumb children in the State, as well as those who though able to speak are so deaf as to be unable to receive instruction in ordinary schools, are admitted. The pupils learn to write rapidly and well, and studies arithmetic, geography, grammar, and history, using the ordinary school-books. In some cases the course of study is further extended. The time of one teacher is given entirely to instruction in speech and reading. The institution is practically free, since those who are unable to pay are admitted free of charge upon presenting the proper certificate. The session begins the second Wednesday of September, and closes on the last Wednesday in June. Visitors are received at the institution on Tuesdays and Thursdays between two and four P.M., and are shown all over the building. The institution is an honor to the State and an ornament to Frederick, whose citizens have always taken the greatest interest in its welfare and success.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

501

The officers and visitors are—

CHAPTER XXVI.
RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS AND CEMETERIES OF FREDERICK CITY.

By an act of the Provincial Assembly, adopted and approved in 1692, the English Church was made the established religion in Maryland. Frederick County with the rest of Western Maryland was included at first in St. John's Parish, Prince George's County, but in 1722 all of St. John's Parish north of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River was made Prince George's Parish, and the Rev. George Murdock became its rector.

All Saints' Parish.—During the pastorate of Mr. Murdock (in 1742) all of his parish north of the Great Seneca Run was made into All Saints' Parish on the petition of its inhabitants. The act of Assembly read as follows:

"An act for dividing Prince George parish in Prince George County, and for erecting a parish out of the same called by the name of All Saints' parish. By this Act, from and after the 22d of November next, all that part of Prince George parish beginning at Great Seneca run mouth, and running by and with said run to the head thereof, from thence with a due East line to the head of one of the droughts of the Patuxent River, and so bounding all around as the upper part of said County is bounded, shall be separated, constituted, and erected into a parish to be called by the name of All Saints' parish, and it is hereby adjudged, deemed, and taken to be a separate and distinct parish, and the freeholders of said parish are empowered to elect Vestrymen and church Wardens, and to build and erect a church thereon, to have and to hold and enjoy all privileges and advantages that are held and enjoyed by any other parish within this province."

The petition asking the establishment of the parish was signed by nearly two hundred persons. The territory included in the parish comprised a part of what is now Montgomery County, all of Frederick County, part of Carroll County, and Washington, Allegany, and Garrett Counties. The petition for the creation of the parish reads as follows:

"To the Hon'ble the upper and lower houses of Assembly. The humble petition of the inhabitants of Senea & Monocacy in Prince George County There with,

"That, whereas the parish of Prince George in the County aforesaid is so vastly large, being about 90 miles in length and populous, and the parish so great a distance from your petitioners that it is not in their power to attend the church or receive the benefit therefrom they would, which is a great trouble to them, & withal the minister of the said parish being growing in years and incapable of taking journeys as formerly.

"Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that your honors, according to your accustomed piety and goodness, would be pleased to provide an act of assembly for the dividing of the aforesaid parish of Prince George at great Seneca Run mouth, & with the said river to the head, from thence to the head of Patuxent river, or where your Honors by inspecting into it shall think most proper, which would tend much to the honor of God and edifying of your petitioners, & as they do in duty bound ever pray,

HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

John Prester.
Peter Prester.
Thomas Prather.
James Hook.
Thomas Gitterson.
George Williams.
William Walts.
John Pyburn, Jr.
George Calvin.
Joseph Wells.
Andrew Cottrell.
John Collier.
Francis Collier.
Charles Hays.
Wm. Hays.
Thos. Charter.
William Whent.
James Arns.
George Weaver.
Charles Coats.
William Williams.
James Vetch.
Matthew Markland.
Jo. W. Stinton.
William Ellis.
Jon. Hays.
William Griffith.
Thomas Balsell.
Alexander Duvall.
William Brown.
Wm. Hook.
Jno. Delashmut.
Elias Delashmut.
Robt. Owens.
Fraid Pain.
Thomas Fee.
John Bailey.
Geo. Fee.
John Turner.
Nathaniel Tucker.
William Tucker.
Jno. Tucker.
Jane Wells.
Edward Mohherly.
William Mohherly.
Clement Mohherly.
Geo. Williams.
Francis Halbert.
Andrew Cox.
Thomas Morris.
Giley Williams.
William Hunt.
Eleaner Hunt.
John Johnson.
Wm. Parry.
Charles Rosson.
Richard Ransom.
Robert Swig.
Nathan Dawson.
John Powell.
Benj. Finian.
John Valentine Presler.
John Hutson.
Thos. Johnston.
Paltis Foutch.
Jacob Foutch.
Jacob Matthews.
Jacob Hooff.
Geo. Gomph.
Jacob Stone.
Chis. Mathews.
Jos. Smith.
Peter Smith.
Frances White.
Daniel France.
Abraham Miller.
Chris. Thompson.
Peter Hoofman.
Christian Cichedananer.
Joseph Broner.
Jno. Broner.
Jno. Teterlany.
Henry Knafe.
Jacob Knafe.
Leonard Baker.
Geo. Swinehart.
Vinerston Lion.
Jacob Frederick.
Thos. Barnett.
Benj. Osborn.
Geo. Colton.
John Bell.
Jno. Fletcher.
Jno. Ward.
Thos. Compton.
Wm. Morris.
Saml. Mackery.
Saml. Eads.
Isaac Hardee.
Jno. Mash.
Geo. Bare.
Thos. Prather.
Aaron Prather.
Wm. Swearingen.
Jno. Clapham.
Wm. Shepherd.
Wm. Shepard, Jr.
Wm. Spiegen.
John Moore.
Wm. Moore.
Wm. Moore, Jr.
Geo. Moore.
Jno. Stull.
Henry Frick.
Jno. Vandener.
Wm. Ward.
John Parson.
Andrew Martin.
Geo. Ivill.
Jno. Cabis.
Wm. Black.
Hugh Rice.
Michael Jones.
Jno. Fowns.
Robert Howston.
Garratt Gobby.
Thos. Davis.
Saml. Davis.
James Fauu.
Wm. Graham.
Wm. Healer.
Thos. Fletcher.
Garon Hambleton.
Wm. Pehey.
Thos. Wilkeson.
Jno. Fryer.
Rice Jenkins.
Charles Busssey.
Wm. Norris.
Saml. Plummer.
Wm. Cook.
Stephen Hanton.
Jno. Wofford.
Jno. Watts.
Benj. Warringanford.
John Smoot.
"Thomas Reall, and other names not attainable."

Rev. Joseph Jennings became the first incumbent of the parish on the presentation of Governor Bladen, Nov. 23, 1742, and his successor, Rev. Samuel Hunter, was presented as incumbent to the parish by Governor Bladen, Dec. 11, 1746. In 1744 he had been appointed rector of Christ Church, Kent Island, and was transferred thence to Frederick.

In 1747 (Bacon, ch. 9) an act was passed

"empowering the Vestry men and church Wardens of All Saints' Parish in Prince George County, or of the county wherein the parish shall be, to purchase three separate acres of land in the said parish whereon to build a church and two chapels of Ease, and to empower the County Justices of Prince George County, or of the County wherein the parish shall be, to levy on the taxable inhabitants of the said parish the sum of three hundred pounds current money for the uses a' therein mentioned, namely, £200 for building the parish church at Frederick town, on Carroll creek, £50 towards building the chapel already begun between Monocacy and Seneca creek, and £50 towards erecting another chapel between Antietam and Conococheague."

The chapel in the southern part of the parish, St. Peter's, was begun at this time, but the parish church and the other chapels were not. In 1753, Governor Sharpe informed Lord Baltimore that this parish would show 2215 taxables, whose thirty pence per poll would amount to £394.10 after deducting all charges, showing a population of S$80.

When Frederick County was created the parish ceased to belong to Prince George's County.

In 1750 an act was passed

"to enable the justices of Frederick County to levy a sum of money on the taxable inhabitants of All Saints' parish, in the said county, namely, £100 currency for finishing the Parish Church in Frederick town, and the minister of the said parish to perform divine service, etc., at the said parish church and at each of the two chapels of Ease belonging to the said parish on every third Sunday."

These chapels were many miles apart. The first church at Frederick was built on the old burial-ground, about a mile south of the present cemetery belonging to the church.

In the County Court records of December, 1749, there is an entry of the indenture of a boy to Rev. Samuel Hunter, second rector of All Saints'. There is also a record dated April, 1750, of his mark for cattle and hogs, and August 20th, of his purchase of a negro girl; and in 1752, of the sale of a town-lot of ground, No. 92, sixty feet by ninety-three. In the county records for 1754 there is an entry of his purchase of a negro man and of fifty acres of land; also of one hundred and fifty acres; and in 1755, of his buying a negro man and forty-three acres of land.

In a letter of Governor Sharples's of June 4, 1759, he states that "some time ago" the parish of All Saints', Frederick, was vacated by the death of Mr. Hunter, that is, in 1758. He left no will, but the court record shows that his wife, Ann, became his administrator, and credits herself with cash received from the vestry of All Saints' Parish. On the 11th of May, 1761, Mrs. Hunter was married to James Holmes.

Rev. Thomas Bacon was the third rector of All Saints'.

After the death of Mr. Hunter the parishioners again addressed their petition to the Governor and Assembly to divide the parish, as follows:

"To his Exc. Lord Harpsf. and Mr. Geo. of Md., and the lower and upper houses of assembly of the province now convened, the Petition of the Free-holders and Freemen of All Saints' Parish, in Frederick Co., humbly sheweth:

"That whereas the aforesaid parish, from its vast extent and great numbers of people residing there, has rendered it impracticable for any one clergyman to discharge his function in such a manner as to improve and edify the people so fully and amply as Christianity and the nature of the thing require, we are induced to ask your Excellencies and Honorable Assembly to divide the parish with the counties in your province, except the small part between Seneca and Rock Creek, which being abstracted from the other, the parish remains 100 miles in length, besides its extent every way, as it is peopled at present. From this inconvenience the word of God and Christian knowledge are much imdered and hindered. Numbers of the parishioners cannot go to church at all, and others who otherwise are well-wishers to the orthodox reformed religion of the church of England, have their children baptized by dissenting ministers, and others, again, join themselves in worship with other sectaries as Quakers.

"Your Petitioners therefore pray your Excellency and Honors to take our state and circumstances unto your most serious consideration, and grant that an Act may pass for dividing the said parish, which may be in force immediately after the death of the Rev. Sam. Hunter, our present incumbent, that your petitioners may have the exercise of the word of God preached to us, and the sacrament duly administered to our education and comfort. We pray for the dividing line to begin at the mouth of Musconassey, and to run up with the said creek till it intersects the Pennsylvania line. The lower part of which division will be a compact uniform parish, and would amount, by the number of taxables at present, to upwards of 27,000 lbs. of Tobi, which we pray may be a distinct parish by another name, and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

1 For a sketch of Rev. Thomas Bacon, see chapter on "Distinguished Men."
The same petition was afterwards presented with the amendment stating the whole amount of tobacco at 70,000 pounds, and the amount for the lower parish if divided at 34,000 pounds; also that the parish had now become vacant by the death of the Rev. Samuel Hunter. It was signed by

Edward Sprigg,
Jon. Wilson,
Joseph Beall,
Rob’ Lee,
Michael Dowden,
Richard Beall,
Newton Chiswell,
John Veatch,
Thomas Dawson,
Joseph Hauns,
Samuel Ellis,
Charles Cotts,
Ezekiel Goshen,
Zachariah Ellis,
Nath’ Dowden,
Joshua Locker,
Charles Hoskins,
John Dowden,
Ephraim Davis,
Charles Hayes,
John Owen,
Joshua Hickman,
Wm Willson,
Joshua Wilson,
James Ellis,
James Lovington,
Jacob Ducket.

Ezekel Hickman.
Willm Dayton.
William Hickman.
Stephen Hickman.
Isaac Elinge.
Joshua Hickman, Jr.
James Gore.
James Remmer.
John Baxter.
Joseph Groves.
Charles Hopkins.
George Wilson.
James M. Gore.
Cheeong Joyce.
James Riggs, Sen.
James Riggs, Jr.
Philip Byant.
James Buny.
Tbos. Dawson.
Robt. Lamar.
Charles Cotts.
Richard Taylor.
Silas Veatch.
W. Norris.
William Wheat, Jr.
William Summers.
Charles Watts.
John Lason.
Richard Kirby.”

Edward Sprigg,
Jon. Wilson,
Joseph Beall,
Rob’ Lee,
Michael Dowden,
Richard Beall,
Newton Chiswell,
John Veatch,
Thomas Dawson,
Joseph Hauns,
Samuel Ellis,
Charles Cotts,
Ezekiel Goshen,
Zachariah Ellis,
Nath’ Dowden,
Joshua Locker,
Charles Hoskins,
John Dowden,
Ephraim Davis,
Charles Hayes,
John Owen,
Joshua Hickman,
Wm Willson,
Joshua Wilson,
James Ellis,
James Lovington,
Jacob Ducket.

William Saer.
Silas Veatch.
Will Barker.
Thomas Conly.
James Gore.
William Osborn.
James Mannin.
Thomas Gore.
Robt. Masters.
Jeremiah Veatch.
James Veatch.
Daniel Veatch.
Isaac Baker.
William Cottes.
Thomas Appleton.
John Wade.
George Wade.
Nathan Veatch.
Leonard Beall.
John Rawlins.
Thomas Howard.
Benjamin Veatch.
Solomon Stimson.
Thomas Barge.
Jared Stooks.
George Hays.

Governor Sharpe replied as follows:

"Beleg unwilling to give my assent to such an act before I could know whether it would be agreeable to his Lordship or not, I desired the gentlemen of the upper house to retain the petition on their hands. If his lordship approves thereof, they will prepare a bill and send it down at the next session."

On the 4th of May, 1760, the Governor in writing to Lord Baltimore said, "During the sessions I communicated to the gentlemen of the upper house your Lordship’s pleasure relative to a division of All Saints’ Parish, whereupon the Attorney-General prepared a bill for that purpose, which was sent to the lower house, but was there rejected because, as it was said, some of the Burgesses from Frederick County were of opinion that a division might be made more agreeable to the parishioners than proposed by the bill, and therefore nothing ought to be done therein till the parishioners could be consulted." The division line, it will be seen, as defined in the bill, was quite different from the one before asked for, the line proposed now running from the Potomac River to and with the ridge of the Catoctin Mountains until it intersected the temporary line, instead of the Monocacy River.

The act read as follows:

"An Act dividing All Saints’ Parish, in Frederick County, and making a chapel of Ease a parish church.

"Whereas, the inhabitants of the upper part of All Saints’ parish, in Frederick County, have by their petition to the present General Assembly represented that a very considerable part of the inhabitants of the said parish are by reason of the great extent thereof deprived of the benefit of public worship and hearing sermons & have therefore prayed that the said parish may be divided by a line drawn from the Potomac river to & with the ridge of the Catoctin Mountains until it intersects the temporary (Pennsylvania) line, and also that the Chapel of Ease now standing between Concordence and Antietam may be erected into a parish church.

"Be it therefore enacted, etc., that from and after the end of this present session of assembly, the aforesaid parish of All Saints’ shall be and is hereby declared to be divided by a line as above described, and all West and North thereof is declared to be a separate parish by the name of All Souls’ Parish, having all the benefits, privileges, powers, and authorities of any other parish, and the chapel spoken of be made the parish church."

As previously stated, the bill passed the Upper House, but failed in the Lower. It is not known at what date the presentation of Mr. Bacon was made, but it was somewhere near the end of 1758. He was placed in charge of the parish at first as curate, in accordance with a rule adopted by the Governor. In 1759, however, the parishioners petitioned for his induction, which would make him the permanent incumbent, and he was accordingly inducted.

In May, 1760, there occurred the great fire in Boston, by which two hundred and twenty families were rendered homeless. To send them aid Governor Sharpe issued an appeal to every congregation in the province. In response to this appeal the Rev. Mr. Bacon sent from the church and two chapels funds equal to ninety-five dollars; the Dunkard, sixteen dollars; the Presbyterian, in Frederick Town, twenty-four dollars; and the Lutherans, twelve dollars and fifty cents.

In 1761 a petition was sent to the General Assembly stating that the church in Frederick Town had been enlarged, but that the chapel below Monocacy was a crazy wooden building not worth repairing; and the chapel beyond the Antietam was decayed and not capable of holding one-third of the congregation and could not be enlarged, and asking a parish assessment of 120,000 pounds of tobacco to rebuild them; whether the petition was granted or not does not appear.

Three years before leaving Talbot County, Mr. Bacon had commenced his great work of compiling the laws of Maryland, showing what had been repealed and what were still in force. It was an undertaking of special value and importance to the clergy, for the church, as a legal establishment, was legislated for by the General Assembly, and without such a compilation no clergyman or vestryman could know when they were liable to incur the penalty of violated law or what their legal rights might be. From its commencement Mr. Bacon had given such time to it as he had been able, and we learn that on the 15th of February, 1762, he went to Annapolis in order to compare his manuscripts with the records. In 1765, after many difficulties and delays, Mr. Bacon brought out his compilation of the laws of Maryland. It is a folio volume of a thousand pages, and has ever since remained a standard authority. Its historical value is very great, since it is a voluminous record of the progress of Maryland from its earliest period for one hundred and thirty years.

Rev. George Goldie, curate of All Saints', was licensed by the Bishop of London for Virginia, Feb. 23, 1766, but appears to have come direct to Maryland. He became curate to Mr. Bacon, and was very popular with the congregation. Mr. Bacon left Talbot with his health much impaired, and the conclusion of his last public work did not find it improved. In July of 1767, Governor Sharpe speaks of him as advanced in years and declining in health. He lingered on, however, until the 24th of May, 1768, when he died in his seventieth year. He was buried in the old parish church at Frederick Town. At his death he left a widow and three daughters, who returned to Talbot County.

Three days after the death of Mr. Bacon (May 27th) the Rev. Bennett Allen1 was appointed his successor. Mr. Allen's curates were Rev. Jeremiah Berry, Rev. Daniel McKennon, and Rev. Bartholomew Booth. Rev. Jeremiah Berry was a native of St. John's Parish, Prince George's County. After his ordination in England he was licensed by the Bishop of London, on Dec. 22, 1768, for Maryland. He did not arrive here until the spring of 1769, and soon after, it appears, became curate of All Saints', and officiated in the chapel below Monocacy, now St. Peter's Parish.

Mr. Berry was a Whig, and in 1777 took the oath of fidelity to the State of Maryland. He continued in his post till after the Revolution, and died, it is said, in 1783, leaving three sons,—Jeremiah, Nicholas, and William,—one of whom was the grandfather of Gen. Berry.

Rev. Daniel McKennon was from England, and was licensed by the Bishop of London, Dec. 22, 1768, the same day with Mr. Berry. On arriving in Maryland he became a curate to Mr. Allen, and was probably employed at Frederick Town, for, as stated in the Maryland Gazette of Jan. 23, 1771, Mr. Allen lived in the remote corner of the parish (that is, in Hagers-town), and did not appear to perform divine service in Frederick Town more than once or twice a year. Mr. McKennon remained as curate until January, 1774, when Governor Eden presented him to Westminister Parish, Anro Arduino County. During the Revolution he sailed for England, and was lost on his passage at sea, leaving his family in Maryland. There are now five of his descendants in the ministry of the church, among whom are the Rev. Dr. Walker, of South Carolina, and his brother, E. T. Walker, of Virginia.

The matter of the division of the parish came up again before the General Assembly in 1770, and an act was passed "to divide All Saints' Parish, in Frederick County, and to erect two new parishes by the names of Eden parish and Frederick parish." By the act nine commissioner were appointed to imme-

---

1 For sketch of Bennett Allen, see chapter on "Distinguished Men."
diately divide the parish into three equal parts, respect being had to numbers, and to return a certificate of such division to be recorded in the County Court.
The parish church was to be in one district, and each chapel of ease in another. Upon the removal of Rev.
Bennett Allen, the incumbent, these three districts would become distinct parishes. The parish-church district was to retain the name of the old parish, the Monocacy district was to be called Eden Parish, and the Antietam district Frederick Parish. The freeholders of each parish were to meet at their respective churches on Easter Sunday after the said removal, to elect six vestrymen and two wardens. Hon. Robert Eden was at this time the Governor of the province, and the lower parish was named after him.

On the 4th and 15th of January, 1774, the vestry advertised in the Maryland Gazette that they intended petitioning the next General Assembly for an assessment to build a church where the old one then stood. In 1776 Frederick County was divided into three counties, and part of All Saints' Parish was thus thrown into Montgomery County and part into Washington County. By the constitution of 1776 the legal revenue of the clergy was made to cease on the 3d of November, though the church property in the parishes was reserved to the vestry. The clergy were thus left without any legal support.

According to the tenor of the act of 1770, when Mr. Allen vacated the parish, the lower and upper districts of this parish became respectively Eden Parish and Frederick Parish.

In 1777 the clergy were requested to take the prescribed oath of allegiance to the State of Maryland.
This was done by Mr. Berry, and he continued to officiate in Eden Parish. There were then thirty-eight clergymen in the State, and all but nine or ten took the oath.

In 1779 the General Assembly passed the "Select Vestry Act," by which parishes were enabled to elec tvestries, and when elected the parish property of whatever name was vested in them, and they were empowered to elect ministers and provide for their support. Rev. Francis Launder removed to Frederick from Calvert. He was licensed by the Bishop of London for Maryland in 1771. On his arrival in the province he was placed in charge of Christ Church Parish, Calvert County, where he remained, with the exception of two years, until he removed to All Saints'. On the 22d of June, 1784, the first convention of the clergy and lay delegates of Maryland assembled at Annapolis, but it does not appear that Mr. Launder was there.
His ministry could not have been of long continuance, for the county records show that his will was made in 1785, and proved May 25th of that year. He was buried in the old churchyard. His will shows that he left a wife Mary, a son James, then in Georgia, and another son Francis, not yet twenty years old.

Rev. George Bower was rector of All Saints' in 1786, and also of Frederick Parish, Washington County. He appears to have resigned these parishes in 1788, and to have become the rector of Queen
Caroline Parish, Anne Arundel County, now in Howard County. At the end of the year he returned to Antietam (Hagerstown), and henceforward resided there.

Although the lower part of All Saints' Parish had been made by an act of Assembly in 1770 a separate parish by the name of Eden Parish, and had ever after had its own minister, yet, whether from dislike to the name given it or for some other reason, the General Assembly in 1792 passed an act ignoring the former one, and providing for the division of All Saints' Parish in Montgomery and Frederick Counties, and erecting a parish out of the same by the name of St.
Peter's Parish.

In 1793, Bishop Claggett made a visitation to All Saints' Parish, and on the 24th of March confirmed eleven persons. One of the names on the list of confirmations has affixed to it these words: "The first person I ever confirmed." This, therefore, was the first confirmation held by Bishop Claggett. It was also the first time the parish had ever been visited by a bishop.

In the report of Mr. Reed, the district visitor of this year (1798), he says, "In Frederick Town the church was in a serious state. There was no vestry in All Saints', and no information consequently could be had from that source."

St. Mark's, Zion, and St. John's Parishes.—
Under the vestry act of 1798, and on the petition of a number of persons, the Diocesan Convention combined a part of All Saints' Parish with another charge, and gave to both the name of St. Mark's Parish.

Another report of Mr. Reed, the district visitor in 1800, says, "On Sunday, the 28th of May, I preached at Frederick Town to a small audience, mostly young men and boys. Religion is cold and dead. They have no vestry there, and I believe if it was not for our friend, Mr. Wm. Beall, the church would be exttinct there. The house is in a most ruinous state, and destitute of common cleanliness. They have repaired the wall around the churchyard, and Mr.
Bower preaches there every other Sunday."

Zion Parish was formed at the Diocesan Convention of May, 1804. A petition was presented from sundry persons residing in part of All Saints', Frederick, and St. Peter's, Montgomery County, desiring the convention to authorize them to constitute themselves a separate congregation, and it was resolved that the convention confirm the proceedings of the parish newly constituted by the above-mentioned petitioners, provided the vestries thereof obtain the approbation of the vestries of the parishes out of which it was formed.

We have seen that as early as 1770 the upper part of All Saints’ Parish had been constituted a separate parish by the name of Frederick. In 1806, however, a petition was presented to the Diocesan Convention from sundry persons and inhabitants of this portion of All Saints’ Parish, which lay in Washington County, praying to be allowed to constitute a separate cure by the name of St. John’s Parish. The petition was granted, and the convention enacted that the whole of Washington County should constitute St. John’s Parish, except that portion in said county which had been given to St. Mark’s Parish.

The Rev. Mr. Bower, rector of All Saints’ Parish, died in 1813. In a letter to the Rev. Dr. Kemp, dated Feb. 27, 1814, Hon. John Hanson Thomas thus speaks of the churches under his charge: “For several years before his (Mr. Bower’s) death he officiated only in the church at this place and that on the Maryland tract, about twelve miles from hence. The old parish church is situated in a remote part of the town, very difficult of access in bad weather, and in a very uncomfortable state of decay. We have at considerable expense erected a new, commodious, handsome building in the centre of the town (about a mile distant from the old one), which is not yet finished. Several gentlemen have paid towards it $— each. About $4000 have been laid out, and our funds are exhausted, but we are devising means to raise the money, and nothing now is wanted to complete the church inside but the pews and pulpit.”

On the 25th of October, 1814, J. S. Cook arrived at Frederick Town. He was a candidate for the ministry, but decided to open a school in Frederick. He asked to be appointed lay reader for All Saints’, and his request was granted.

In 1815, Rev. Mr. McDowell, of New York, was elected rector, but declined.

Bishop Kemp warmly desired the election of the Rev. Joseph Jackson to the rectoryship of All Saints’, but the friends of the Rev. Thomas Howell were also urgent in pressing his name upon the congregation. Both parties, however, failed to accomplish their object, and the Rev. Frederick W. Hatch was elected rector. Mr. Hatch removed to Frederick from North Carolina, having been ordained a deacon by Bishop Cragget, in 1811.

In 1818, Mr. Hatch reported eighty-five communicants. In 1819 he removed to Virginia, but in 1830 became the rector of Washington Parish, District of Columbia. In 1834 and 1835 he was chaplain of the United States Senate. In 1836 he removed to the State of New York, and in 1858 went to reside with his son in California, and died there Jan. 14, 1860, upwards of seventy years of age.

Rev. John Johns became the rector of All Saints’ in 1819. He was a native of Delaware, and a graduate of Princeton College, N. J. He was ordained deacon by Bishop White, May 6, 1819. In 1828 he resigned the parish, and became the rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, and subsequently was Bishop of Virginia.

Rev. John S. Stone became rector in 1828. He was a native of Connecticut; was ordained deacon Jan. 4, 1826. Rev. S. Douglass was elected to succeed Mr. Stone. He accepted the call, but soon resigned.

Rev. Thomas Jackson was chosen rector in May, 1830. He was a native of England. In 1835 he was stricken with paralysis, and died at Richmond, Va. Rev. Henry V. D. Johns, who succeeded him, was a native of Delaware, and a brother of Bishop Johns, of Virginia. He was a graduate of Princeton College, N. J., and of the General Theological Seminary. He was ordained deacon by Bishop White, July 28, 1826, and in 1833 became rector of All Saints’. In his report, rendered in 1834, he mentions that a parsonage had been finished, the church repaired and thoroughly furnished, a chapel built by J. Breen at Catoctin Furnace, and consecrated by Bishop Stone Oct. 25, 1833, and a missionary employed, who officiated not only at this chapel, but at Point of Rocks and at Brownsville, in Pleasant Valley. He died in 1836, aged fifty-nine, leaving a widow, three sons, and two daughters. He published eight or ten sermons and addresses and two small volumes of family prayers. Rev. Henry Kepley, a native of Maryland, was ordained deacon by Bishop Stone in 1837, and became rector of All Saints’ in that year. He removed to Virginia in 1839. Rev. Upton Beall was chosen rector about the 1st of May, 1838. He was a native of Prince George’s County, Md., and a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary. Rev. Joshua Peterkin became the rector of All Saints’ in 1841. Mr. Peterkin was a native of Baltimore, and was ordained deacon by Bishop Moore in 1837, after having graduated at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The Rev. Joshua Morsell became Mr. Peterkin’s assistant November, 1842. Mr. Peterkin resigned in 1847, and his successor was the Rev. William W. Pendleton, a native of Virginia, and a graduate of the West Point Military Academy. He removed to Virginia in 1853, and during the civil war was an officer in the Confederate army, rising to the rank of brigadier-general.

Rev. Charles Seymour became rector of All Saints' Dec. 15, 1853. He was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, and a native of New York. He was ordained deacon in 1844 by Bishop B. T. Onderdonk. His rectorship ceased July 1, 1862, and he was succeeded by Rev. Marmaduke M. Dillon, who entered on his charge Nov. 17, 1863, after a vacancy in the parish of more than eighteen months.

Mr. Dillon was a native of England and had been an officer in the army. In 1866 he resigned, and went to the English colonial diocese of Nassau, West Indies.

The Rev. Osborne Ingle was chosen rector shortly before the convention of May 16, 1866. He is a native of Virginia, D. C., a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary, and was ordained in 1863 by Bishop Johns, of Virginia. He removed to Baltimore in 1864, and became assistant minister at St. Paul's. In July of that year he was chosen rector of Memorial Protestant Episcopal Church, and from thence was called to Frederick. He is still the rector of All Saints' Parish. In 1871 he had for his assistant Rev. Joseph T. Colton. Following is the list of the rectors and assistant clergy of All Saints' since its formation:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>No. Communicants</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1828</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1829</td>
<td>John Graham...... 107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1830</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1831</td>
<td>T. W. Johnson..... 106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1832</td>
<td>J. W. Ross........ 129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1833</td>
<td>Richard Potts....</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1834</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1835</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1836</td>
<td>W. J. Ross........ 135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1837</td>
<td>R. H. Marshall.... 117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1838</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1839</td>
<td>W. J. Ross........ 98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1840</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1841</td>
<td>W. J. Ross........ 91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1842</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1843</td>
<td>1866. G. R. Dennis 179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1844</td>
<td>Dr. Johnson...... 146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1845</td>
<td>Dr. R. Dorssey..... 146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1846</td>
<td>T. W. Johnson..... 152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1847</td>
<td>W. J. Ross........ 149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1848</td>
<td>Louis Medartt..... 150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1849</td>
<td>1866. G. R. Dennis 177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1850</td>
<td>Richard Potts.... 151</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

On the 22d of June, 1811, the vestry advertised for proposals to build a new church upon a vacant, moderate plan, about 60 feet long and 40 feet wide, and on March 19, 1814, was advertised the lottery for finishing the new church, viz.:

5000 tickets at $8—$15,000, less twenty per cent.—$3000, the sum to be raised; Managers, Philip Thomas, John Graham, George Baer, John H. Thomas, Richard Potts, John Tyler, Thomas Shaw, William Ross, Benjamin Rutherford.

Oct. 13, 1819, a family vault in the graveyard was built. On the 10th of April, 1855, the corner-stone of the present elegant church was laid, the principal feature of the occasion being an able address by Rev. Dr. Johns. On Jan. 3, 1856, the church was opened for divine services, and the sum of twenty-three thousand dollars had been paid in for the cost of erection, and the other contributions towards the same object were one thousand and eighty-six dollars, as per report of 1856.

Evangelical Reformed Church.—This church was established by the German immigrants from the Palatinate, who settled on the present site of Frederick City prior to 1740. No records of the church, however, have been preserved earlier than 1747.

In May of that year, when Rev. Michael Schlatter visited Frederick, he found a German Reformed organization, which had existed for some considerable time without a pastor. He speaks of Frederick as a newly-laid off town. He preached in "a new and yet unfinished church," and administered the holy communion to ninety-seven persons. This was already the second church, the first having already grown too small or gone to decay.

This second church was consecrated May 14, 1747, and stood at the lower end of what is now known as the old Reformed graveyard near Patrick Street.
From the baptismal record it is evident that this congregation had, if not a stated ministry, at least one occasional supply. The earliest baptismal record preserved is that of Elizabeth, daughter of Adam and Barbara Stull, born Feb. 6, 1747, from which time on the records of this famous church are reasonably full and complete.

John Thomas Schley was the first teacher of this congregation. He was born Aug. 31, 1712, at Mertzheim, in Germany, and married, in January, 1735, Margaret Wintz. She died in June, 1790, and Mr. Schley November 25th following. They lived in wedlock fifty-five years, had nine children, five of whom survived their parents. He was a lay reader in the church, and a man of good education and rare discernment, and for forty-five years was the mainstay of the church. From him descended the large and influential Schley families, so well and favorably known in the political, military, agricultural, and ecclesiastical history of Maryland. In the absence or sickness of the pastors Mr. Schley often officiated, and next to the pastor was the person of whom spiritual and temporal advice and support were sought.

Rev. Theodore Frankenfeld was pastor from 1753 to 1755. He arrived in Frederick May 4, 1753, and preached his introductory sermon on the first Sunday after his arrival. He continued his services to the close of 1755, about which time he died, and was buried in the old graveyard of the church. He was succeeded by Rev. John Conrad Steiner in 1756, who remained in charge a little less than three years. He reported one hundred and ninety-six communicants on Easter Sunday, 1759. Rev. Philip William Otterbein was the next pastor, and commenced his labors in 1760, and continued for about five years. During his pastorate, in 1761, Stephen Ramsberg and Jacob Shower purchased from Christian Lowndes in the name and for the use of the congregation, the lot on which the Evangelical Reformed Church buildings, including the present parsonage, now stand, and in the following year a stone parsonage was erected thereon. In 1764 the third house of worship was built, the original walls of which are still partially preserved in the church and chapel, in which stands the town-clock. The site for the church and graveyard was the gift of Daniel Dulany, and was deeded to Stephen Ramsberg, John Brunner, George Hoffman, and George Lingenfelter, elders of the church, and to their successors forever upon the sole condition that it should not be applied to any other purpose than that for which it was given. The building committee of this church was composed of John Thomas Schley, Frederick Witman, Jacob Brunner, and Valentine Adams. Its dimensions were sixty feet long, forty-five wide, and eight high, with steeple sixty feet high. It was built of stone, the materials of which were hauled by the congregation to the spot where the building was erected. Its original cost was six hundred and eighty-four pounds currency. The materials of the old church were sold to John Thomas Schley for ten pounds.

Rev. Charles Lange became pastor in February, 1766, and continued for nearly two years. The next in the succession was Rev. Frederick L. Henop. His pastorate continued fourteen years, during the most trying period of American history. It was an age of heroes and heroines, whose unwritten history remains a precious legacy to their descendants. In 1770 the first organ was purchased for one hundred and ninety-three dollars and thirty-seven cents. In 1775, Jacob Bantz presented to the congregation the principal part of the present Reformed graveyard, lying west of Bantz, and between Second and Third Streets. In 1778 two bells were placed in the steeple, which were bought in London, England, with fixtures, for one hundred and thirty pounds English currency.

Rev. John Runkel succeeded Mr. Henop. He preached his introductory sermon Dec. 5, 1784. During his stay there was considerable dissension in the congregation, as is shown in the following advertisement, which appeared Jan. 2, 1794:

"Notice is hereby given by the vestry of the High Dutch Reformed Congregation in Frederick town; a rumour being spread that evil-minded persons intended to use violence on the property of said congregation. We, the said vestry, being regularly elected, installed and served as such a number of persons; being, therefore, authorized and constrained by the deeds on said congregation's property, as likewise the long-established rules of said congregation adopted and understood. Being desirous to preserve, love and peace, exhort all who may have been led astray to consider, we dare not violate our trust, and are therefore under necessity to notify them that if violence is used we must seek protection under God by the laws of our country. John Brunner, of Henry, Joseph Doll, John Brunner, Jacob Rohl, Jacob Metzger, Henry Baer, Jacob Brunner."

In Bartgis' Maryland Gazette (in which the above appeared) we find the following under date of Jan. 9, 1794:

"Mr. Printer,—In your last paper I found in the corner where you generally place the public notices and advertisements a notice given by the Vestry of the High Dutch Reformed Congregation in Freik Town, etc., a notice that must command the attention of the ignorant, and awe the timid into submission by conceiving that the vestry of the High Dutch Reformed Congregation must be something very great and powerful. Let the persons who form that vestry inquire whether the Presbyterians either of ancient or modern times have had or now can have a vestry, since they were always governed by elders and deacons. Then, Mr. Printer, it is to be wished that the spelling of the vestry may be contracted into vestry, and that period 'being desirous to preserve, love and peace, exhort all who have been led astray, etc.' be better explained. Upon the whole, we ex-
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

peet to see a better harmony of words and sentences with a true explanation of 'to preserve, love and peace,' since it is unintelligible with a comma after 'preserve,' and uncertain whether 'love and peace' are verbs or substantives.

"The mention of 'evil-minded persons,' who are said to have an intention to use violence on the property of said congregation' imports that the said vestry suppress themselves and some of their adherents; the High Dutch (I think they might have written German) Ref. Congregation, excluding the majority, who cannot swallow their bigotry, nor submit (especially in a free country) to the yoke of their spiritual tyranny. It is to be wished that their differences might be brought to an happy issue, or else that the laws of our country might finally settle them so that the public may hereafter be not imposed on by notices of that kind. And if, Mr. Printer, you intend to insert every 'rumour spread' we are able to furnish you with a great number of rumours, and by your favour to enlarge your Gazette from half a sheet to a whole one. I am, etc.,

"OBSERVATOR."

What the specific cause of disension was does not fully appear, but it seems to have been subsequently removed, as the congregation was not divided, but continued to flourish under the original organization. On Feb. 22, 1800, the church was used for the delivery of ex-Governor Thomas Johnson's funeral oration on George Washington. In 1801, Mr. Runkel retired with the privilege of naming his own successor. He selected Rev. Daniel Wagner, who remained from October, 1802, until October, 1810. In 1807 the steeple was remodeled, and the wood-work and spire, which are still standing, were put up by Stephen Steiner as architect and contractor. The pulpit at first was on the west side and then on the south. The first stairs to the galleries were on the outside, the steeple standing outside of the edifice; but afterwards the wings were built up to the steeple, making the church square in shape. In the first church a door opened from the rear portion into the graveyard. About the time of this remodeling the original bells were superseded by two of a larger size cast in New Haven, Conn., but they proved inferior in tone to the old ones.

The next pastor was Rev. Jonathan Helfenstein, who continued from 1811 to 1828. In August, 1821, a catechising society was formed, which was the earliest type of a Sunday-school known in the congregation. In 1822 and 1823 the church edifice was remodeled by Mr. Hart as architect, at a cost of two thousand five hundred dollars. The interior of the church was changed in appearance by transferring the pulpit from the west side to the south end of the church. In 1825 the English language was given prominence in the services by calling an assistant pastor, Rev. Samuel Helfenstein, Jr., who was to preach exclusively in English. The arrangement agreed upon was three English sermons to one in German. The assistant, however, remained only two or three years.

Rev. John H. Smaltz was pastor from July, 1829, to October, 1833. During his pastorate the German service was given up, and English alone was used at the Sunday services.

Rev. Charles Reighley was next in the succession from September, 1833, to near the close of 1835, and during this period restlessness and discontent prevailed.

Rev. Daniel Zacharias, D.D., who came next, preached his first sermon on the first Sunday in April, 1825, and continued pastor to the day of his death, March 31, 1873, an unbroken period of thirty-eight years. In 1836 the recesses were built to the side of the steeple and the stairways to the galleries were placed in them. A slate roof was also put on the edifice. In 1839 a back building was added to the parsonage. In 1840 the present organ, manufactured by Fith & Hall, of New York, was purchased by the "Ladies' Sewing Society" for twelve hundred dollars. In the same year also the Frederick congregation became a self-sustaining charge, and then the system of renting pews and sittings was first introduced. Dr. Zacharias now began to preach German occasionally, and gathered back the scattered German members. In 1843, Rev. Isaac Gerhart was called to Frederick as German pastor, and continued some six and a half years. The church was incorporated in 1848, in which year the congregation determined to erect a new church edifice upon the site of the lecture-room and sexton's house. In addition to this a lot thirty feet front by one hundred and forty feet deep was purchased from Mr. Ebenezer Good for fifteen hundred dollars. The corner-stone was laid June 12, 1848. Its architect was John Wall, of Baltimore. It was dedicated June 8, 1850, and cost in money twenty-four thousand dollars, though its real value cannot be estimated because of the amount of work done and materials furnished as contributions to the church. The building is on the style of the Erechtheum, and has two beautiful and well-proportioned towers in imitation of the Lantern of Demoethenes. In front is a handsome portico. The steps leading to this portico are from the immense granite-quarries of Woodstock, and were furnished by Messrs. Sumwalt & Green, of Baltimore. The iron railing was supplied by Bechtol & Co., of New York. The basement is divided into a large lecture-room, a vestry-room, pastor's room, library for the Sunday-school, and apportionments for wood and coal. The main body of the building contains one hundred and eighteen pews arranged in three blocks, with aisles between. The side galleries are also supplied with pews, and are entered from the eastern and western towers. The organ-gallery (containing a handsome organ purchased at a cost of about four thousand dollars) is well arranged for the comfort of the choir, and is separated from the side galleries so as to prevent intrusion. The building committee was composed of Dr. Daniel Zacharias, John Kunkel, and Gideon Bantz. Charles Haller acted as master builder.

On the morning of the consecration the edifice was filled to overflowing. The dedication services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Zacharias, and Rev. Alfred Nevin, of Chambersburg, preached from the text, "The glory of this last house shall be greater than of the former."

"The Orphans' Home Board" of the church was incorporated Jan. 13, 1873, and what was known as the Wilson property, adjoining the church on the west side, was bought for $5000, but never used for the purpose intended.

The present pastor is Rev. E. R. Eschbach, who commenced his labors June 14, 1874. On Oct. 11, 1874, the church erected a handsome monument to the memory of Dr. Daniel Zacharias on his grave in Mount Olivet Cemetery, at a cost of $1034.05. In October, 1876, the church edifice was refresed, re-painted, and recarpeted, at a cost of $1828.43.

The old organ was also replaced by a new one manufactured by Messrs. Johnson & Son, of Westfield, Mass., costing $4000.

In 1880 the steeple of the old German church was repaired and painted, and in 1881 an elegant chapel was constructed for the Sunday-school and other purposes at a cost of twelve thousand dollars. This is built on the old German church lot, and a portion of the walls of the old church thereon form a part of the new chapel, which is known as Trinity Chapel. Work was commenced May 11, 1881, and the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies on Saturday, July 9, 1881. The sermon was preached by Rev. Theodore Apple, D.D., of Lancaster, Pa. Rev. Dr. Eschbach, pastor of the church, followed with a full and explicit history of the church from 1845 to 1881. Rev. D. Diehl, Rev. Dr. Leech, Rev. Osborne Ingle, Rev. Mr. Hammond, Rev. C. W. Stinespring, and Rev. Mr. Cauliflower also assisted in the exercises.

At the conclusion of the services in the church the congregation repaired to the chapel, where services were conducted by Dr. Eschbach according to the rites of the church. The following articles were then placed in a tin box and deposited in the stone: history of the congregation, Bible, order of worship and hymn-book of the Reformed Church, Sunday-school hymn-book, constitution of the church, revised New Testament, copies of newspapers, etc.

Evangelical Lutheran Church.—The records of the church date back to Aug. 22, 1737, but German Lutherans had probably settled in this neighborhood some years earlier. The settlers brought their Bibles, catechisms, and hymn-books with them, and as soon as possible invited ministers of their faith to visit the settlement, in order that they might preach to them, baptize their children, and administer the sacrament. On the 31st of October, 1736, Rev. Gabriel Neasman, pastor of a Lutheran Church in Philadelphia, visited the little community. The congregation had already effected an organization, but no church record had been kept prior to this. A substantially-bound book was purchased, and entries of baptisms were commenced. The first baptism upon record is that of George Frederick Unsult, born Aug. 6, 1737, baptized on the 22d of the same month by Rev. Mr. Wolf. From 1748 to 1763 the record bears among others the names of Bechtel, Schley, Culler, Angelberger, and Metzger.

June 24, 1777, a constitution was adopted and signed by the church wardens—John George Lay, John Stirtzman, John Michael Roemer, George Michael Hoffman, Peter Apple, and Henry Six—and twenty-six communicants; total, thirty-four male members. The constitution provided that no person should preach in the church who could not furnish adequate credentials of ordination and ministerial character and standing. Prior to this date the congregation had erected a wooden church edifice on Church Street, on the eastern corner of the lot of ground deeded to the congregation by Daniel Dulany. From this time the congregation grew steadily. In 1757, Rev. Bernard Michael Houseal was pastor, and served the church for several years.

In 1753 the congregation began to make arrangements for a larger and more substantial stone edifice, which was soon afterwards commenced. The work, however, was arrested by the French and Indian war, and was not finished until 1762. The church was dedicated by Rev. John Christopher Hortwick on Trinity Sunday, 1762. In addition to the services of Rev. Messrs. Houseal and Hortwick, other clergymen furnished occasional preaching. April 28, 1771, Rev.
John Andrew Krug became pastor, and served the church for over twenty-five years. The congregation steadily advanced in numbers and prosperity. The Revolutionary war interrupted its growth for a time, as many of the men were enlisted in the army. Rev. Mr. Krug was born in Germany, March 19, 1732, a month later than George Washington, and was about thirty-nine years of age when he became pastor of this church. He died May 30, 1796, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

Rev. Mr. Wildbahn became pastor Dec. 4, 1796, and continued in charge until June 4, 1798.

Dec. 1, 1799, Rev. Frederick Moeller became pastor. August 1800, the church contracted with Stephen Steiner to erect a church steeple for the sum of seventeen hundred dollars. Rev. F. Moeller resigned the charge June, 1802. His successor was Rev. Frederick William Jazinsky, who was educated in the universities of Germany, and as a young man had served as an officer in the armies of Frederick the Great of Prussia.

July 17, 1808, Rev. David F. Schaeffer, a young man who had just completed his theological studies, became pastor. He was a person of remarkable social and ministerial qualities, and the congregation grew rapidly under his active ministry.

On Aug. 8, 1812, the corner-stone of a union church for the Lutheran and Reformed congregations was laid on land presented by Mr. Waltz, near the old meeting-house on Carroll’s Manor. Rev. S. Helfenstein preached in German, and Rev. David F. Schaeffer in English.

A lottery for Emmanuel Evangelical Lutheran Church at Frederick was organized about this time. There were 2500 tickets @ $2.50 = $6250; discount of twenty-six percent. $1625 to be raised; managers, F. Heisely, Dr. Bogen, G. Creager, Jr., Wm. Michael, David Morkell, Peter Burkhart, John S. Miller, Charles Schell, H. Ziecle, J. Medtart, J. Fesler, F. Leoth, M. Kelb, J. Dill, and F. Mantz.

The services of the church had been conducted in the German language until the year 1810, when Mr. Schaeffer introduced occasional services in English. On the 18th of September, 1820, a Sunday-school was organized by Mr. Schaeffer. The young men and ladies of the church took an active part in this new enterprise. Among the most active were Cyrus Mantz, Philip Reich, George Engelbrecht, Jacob Engelbrecht, Edward Trail, Augustus Ebert, John Winter, Emanuel Greenwald, John H. Hoffman, Mary K. Baer, Lydia Ramsburg, Henrietta Emmett, and others.

In 1825 the church was enlarged by an addition of twenty-eight feet to the north end.

A number of young men from this church became students of theology and ministers of the gospel. Among them are the following: Rev. Dr. C. P. Krauth, the first president of Pennsylvania College, Rev. Messrs. Meyerheffer, D. J. Hauer, W. Jenkins, Daniel Jenkins, J. Winter, D. P. Rosenmiller, J. N. Hoffan, Benjamin Keeler, C. F. Schaeffer, John Kohler, Michael Wachtcr, Jacob Medtart, Francis J. Ruth,—Roof, Emanuel Greenwald, W. H. Harrison, James Horkey, Sidney Horkey, J. J. Sumon, P. L. Harrison, J. F. Procest, George Procest, Thomas M. Kemp, Jeremiah Frazier, A. I. Weddel, John Gladhill, Jesse Wineceoff, J. G. Martz, George A. Nixdorff, Cyrus Waters. The pastors of the church have been—Bernhard Michael Houseal, 1757; John Christopher Hertzwick, 1762; John Andrew Krug, April, 1771; Rev. — Wildbahn, Dec. 4, 1796; Rev. F. Moeller, December, 1799; Rev. Frederick William Jazinsky, 1802; Rev. D. F. Schaeffer, July, 1808; Rev. Simon W. Horkey, January, 1827; Rev. Dr. George Dicht, July, 1851.

The church buildings have been a wooden church erected in 1741—46, stone church 1754—60, enlarged 1825. The present large brick church, extreme length ninety-five feet, width seventy-five feet, with seating capacity for eleven hundred persons, is in the Norman Gothic style, with two steeples in front, each one hundred and fifty feet in height. The Sunday-school and lecture-room are in the rear of the church; the building is a two-story structure. The lower room is forty-two by seventy feet, and the upper story comprises a large infants’ school-room, young men’s prayer-meeting room, and the pastor’s study.

The congregation owns two graveyard lots. The one on which the church stands extends one hundred and thirty feet from Church Street to Second. The other is on the eastern suburb of the town. The congregation owns also several hundred acres of mountain land in Allegany. The parsonage, a good brick building, is located near the church on Church Street. The present church edifice was erected in 1854 and 1855, the corner-stone having been laid on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 26, 1854. Its cost was twenty-five thousand dollars. The building committee were John Lotts, L. Coppersmith, Michael Keefer, George Smith, and Jacob Morkell. Among the largest contributors were Henry Nixdorff, Joseph Rountzahn, Lewis Coppersmith, John Lotts, Lewis Birely, Jacob Morkell, Joshua Dill, Lewis Kemp, David J. Morkey, Nancy Mottet, George S. Greashow, J. W. L. Corty, and John Morkell.

The present lecture and Sunday-school rooms were enlarged at a cost of four thousand dollars in 1855.
The church was renovated and improved in 1858 by excavating the cellar and adding a new furnace. The church was used as a hospital by the United States army in the winter of 1862 and 1863, and subsequently was refrescoed and renovated. In 1870 the exterior and interior were repainted and otherwise improved at a cost of two thousand five hundred dollars. In 1872 a new organ was purchased for two thousand six hundred dollars. In 1878 a new roof was put on and other improvements made, and in 1879 the church was refrescoed and new carpets were procured.

The congregation numbers five hundred and fifty members, of whom four hundred and fifty are communicants. The Sunday-school numbers over seven hundred pupils and ninety teachers and officers. The church also has a mission-school in the west end of the town, with seventy pupils, under the care of Messrs. Nixdorff and Shaffner, Mrs. Frazier, and Miss Keller. The large Sunday-school connected with the church is under the control of the pastor, Rev. George Diehl, D.D., who is ex officio president. W. M. Hardt is superintendent; J. M. Ebberts, secretary; Mrs. Bowie Doll, Mrs. Parson, Mrs. Cory, and Miss Mary K. Baer, managers; Messrs. Morkey and Storm, librarians. Among the teachers are Messrs. Levy Maugh, John M. Ebbert, J. H. Bennett, David Young, Nat. Nagel, J. D. Hone, L. M. Engelbrecht, C. F. Kreh, C. B. Fox, H. A. Hahn, Lewis Keeler, T. Chileotte, L. Duval, J. N. Loy, J. B. Gorratt, D. Costeel, N. M. Nixdorff, H. Haller, George Zimmern, and Misses Rice, Hone, Engelbrecht, Fot, Davidson, Doll, Haller, Ebert, Street, Hardt, Nixdorff, Schroyer, Tabler, and Hahn.

The infant school, numbering over two hundred and thirty scholars, is under the control of Misses J. M. Hardt, George F. Miller, and John Fleming, and Misses Hone, Bennett, Haller, and Zacharias.

Among the families that are prominent and active members of the church may be mentioned the Engelbrechts, Hardts, Nixdorffs, Levy, Markeys, Bennetts, Samons, Hallers, Titows, Getzendenners, Smiths, Millers, Groshows, Reifschiders, Fraizers, Zimmermans, Schleichs, Whips, Growes, Pooseys, Trandleys, Keefers, Eberts, Leoslickins, De Granges, Rixers, Hitzehows, Otts, Duvalits, Cortyes, Gareatt, Parsons, Stithmons, Fontees, Winsogs, Feetslers, Hahos, Krehs, Eidergs, Railings, Lembrights, Mobertys, Grabenhorsts, Eichelbergers, Gofts, Reuners, Chilcoates, Dolls, Simmonses, Chamberses, Rountahgs, Kolles, Culiers, Busheys, Johnsons, Moors, Schaffners, Warners, Yingers, Baumgoebners, and LOCHeiners. Among the prominent members recently lost by death are John Loats, John Reifskinder, J. M. Busley, John D. Getzendenner, Philip M. Engelbrecht, B. L. Storm; and by removals from the town, Dr. Bruce Thomas and Basil Delashnutt. The present officers are Rev. George Diehl, D.D., pastor and president of the church council; Thomas M. Haller, secretary; and L. M. Nixdorff, treasurer. The church council, in addition to the pastor, are George S. Groshaw, William S. Miller, L. M. Nixdorff, John T. Moore, David Derr, Col. H. Calles, W. Irvin Parson, J. P. Renner, George A. Schroeder. The organist of the church is Miss Lucille Reich. The choir is under the direction of William Schroeder and Miss Fannie E. Hone, assisted by Messrs. Elkins, Keeeler, Stone, and Schroeder, and Misses Tabler, Moerity, Fesler, Krech, James, and Bartgis.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The first circuit formed, embracing the whole country west of Baltimore, was called Frederick. There is no evidence of Methodist services having been held in the town of Frederick before 1770, when it was visited by Robert Strawbridge and the Rev. John King. After that, however, it was regularly visited by the circuit preachers. A society was organized, among whom John Haggerty was the most active, and who subsequently became a distinguished preacher. While Methodism grew with the population in various parts of the circuit, the progress in Frederick was comparatively slow. For more than thirty years after its introduction there were only about thirty members. In 1792 the first church was built, of boards, on West Second Street, and afterwards a second one of brick was erected on the same lot, now or lately owned by the Methodist Protestant Church. In 1841 the third edifice was erected on East Church or Second Street, which in 1864 and 1865 gave way to the present elegant and commodious structure, adjoining which is a substantial and tasteful parsonage.

The pastors (as far as discoverable) have been:

- John King; 1774, Philip Gatch, William Duke; 1775, William Waters, Robert Strawbridge; 1776, Freeborn Garretson, Martin Rodia: 1777, Samuel Sprague, Caleb Pedoesifer; 1779, Richard Garretson, William Wendening; 1780, Thomas Foster, William Waters; 1781, Charles Scott, Jonathan Forrest; 1782, Philip Cox, Michael Ellis; 1783, Ignatius Pigma, William Phobes; 1784, John Magary, Isaac Smith; 1785, William Riggold, Samuel Browne; 1786, Michael Ellis, Joseph Cromwell; 1787, Jonathan Forrest, Benton Riggin; 1788, Elphial Reed, George Calhoun; 1789, John Hill; 1790, Jonathan Forrest, John Simmons; 1791, Jonathan Forrest, Thomas Bell; 1792, Aquila Garretson, John Chalners; 1793, Joshua Wells, Thomas Boyal; 1794, Martin Hill, Charles Bargoon.

Frederick Circuit was first formed by the second Methodist Conference held in America, which met at Philadelphia, May 25, 1774. Among the five preachers taken into full connection there was Philip Gatch, one of the earliest of native American preachers. He was born March 2, 1751, in the Twelfth District of Baltimore County, and was the son of George Gatch, who married a Miss Burgin, whose ancestors came from Burgundy and settled near Georgetown, Kent Co., not far from Sassafras River. Philip's grandfather, Godfrey Gatch, emigrated from Prussia in

FREDERICK COUNTY.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

1725. Rev. Philip Gatch preached in connection with William Duke, a young man, a few weeks on Frederick Circuit, then containing only a hundred and seventy-five members, and extending from Baltimore County to the western boundary of the province, and south to and including Georgetown, D. C. He was then sent to Kent County to take the place of Rev. Abraham Whitworth, expelled for bad conduct. In the latter part of the year 1774 he returned to Frederick, and continued until the close of Conference year. One Saturday evening, in going to his Sunday appointment, he had to pass by a tavern, when he was attacked by two ruffians and forced into the inn to drink liquor, but refused. The men falling into a quarrel between themselves, Mr. Gatch escaped and went on his way. In the following year he was sent to Kent Circuit, but Mr. Strawbridge, one of the two preachers on the Frederick Circuit that year, being under necessity of going to Baltimore, Mr. Gatch and he exchanged, and the former returned to Frederick for the third time. He suffered bitter persecution, but did not falter, and even ventured to preach at a place where a short time before two Baptist preachers had been taken from the stand and maltreated. At one of his appointments, between Bladensburg and Baltimore, he was seized by a mob and tarred and feathered, from which treatment his eyes never fully recovered. Such were some of the trials the faithful preachers of this church had then to undergo; but this last outrage excited public indignation to such an extent that nothing of a similar nature ever again occurred to the preachers of any denomination. Mr. Gatch in 1777 was stationed in Virginia, on Sussex Circuit, where he was inhumanly treated by two men, who nearly dislocated his shoulders. By these and the previous injuries received on the Frederick Circuit he was disabled from an active itinerancy, and was located by the Conference of 1778. On Jan. 14, 1778, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Smith, of Pohwahant County, Va., to which State he removed in 1788, and continued to preach there locally. In 1797 he removed to Clermont County, Ohio, where he organized the first Methodist society or church in that county. In 1802 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention that formed the first constitution of Ohio, under which it was admitted into the Union in 1803. From 1803 to 1824 he was one of the associate judges of the Court of Common Pleas. He died Dec. 28, 1835. Such was the first regular preacher on the Frederick Circuit, a man whose Christian and private and public life was of so high an order that Judge John McLean, of the United States Supreme Court, wrote and published his life, under the title of "Memoirs of Rev. Philip Gatch."

In 1857 the Baltimore Conference was divided, and Frederick Station became one of the appointments of the East Baltimore Conference. The pastors since 1860 have been:

1860, McKendree Riley; 1861-62, B. F. Crerer; 1863-64, Wilfred Downs; 1865, Dr. Hicks; 1866 and 1867, James Curny; 1868, Richard Hinkle.

In 1869 the Frederick Station was again incorporated into the old Baltimore Conference by the transfer of the Maryland appointments of the East Baltimore Conference. The ministers in charge of the station since then have been:

1869 and 1870, Richard Hinkle; 1871 to 1874, Job A. Price; 1874 to 1877, Alfred H. Ames, M.D.; 1877 to 1879, W. T. L. Welch; 1879 to 1882, S. V. Leech, D.D.

Statistics of 1881.—Probationers, 12; full members, 265; local preachers, 2; children, 10; deaths, 5; parsonages, 2; present indebtedness, $5180 (on church property); Sunday-school officers and teachers, 43; Sunday-school scholars, 257; collected for missions from church, $144.70; collected for missions from Sunday-school, $183.58; collected for ministerial support, $1770.

Presbyterian Church.—The Frederick Presbyterian Church has nearly reached its one hundredth year of existence, having been established in 1782. We have sought in vain for records concerning the first edifice in use by this congregation, the old building which stood within the graveyard at the end of West Fourth Street. It was a plain brick structure, with brick floor, high-backed pews and lofty pulpit, and tradition says that the bricks were brought from England. The people who gathered there to worship God from distant parts of the county were chiefly descendants of the Scotch-Irish settlers in the Cumberland Valley.

The minister who was instrumental in organizing the first congregation was the Rev. Stephen B. Balch, D.D., who was the pastor of the church at Georgetown, D. C., from 1780 to 1833. Mr. Balch came a distance of forty miles once or twice a month to minister to the congregation, and manifested the keenest interest in the progress and welfare of the church many years after, as is shown by a letter written to Henry McCleary in 1803. The names of many associated with this organization in its early history have been lost, but the following seem to have been prominent, viz.: the families of Bailly, Reynolds, Fleming, McCleary, Dean, White, Ritchie, Bryan, McPherson, Hoff, Neill, McLanahan, Buckey, Sanderson, McElfresh, Graham, Howard, Snyder, Thompson, Boyd, Robertson, Ross, and Mormon.
These names were associated with the organization as early as 1800.

The Rev. David Baird succeeded Dr. Balch. About this time the General Assembly of the church made a special effort to occupy fields that were promising in Western Maryland and the Valley of Virginia.

The Rev. Cunningham N. Sample, who was licensed to preach in April, 1793, was appointed April, 1795, by the General Assembly, and ordered to discharge his mission on the Western Shore of Maryland. Subsequently he was directed by the Presbytery to preach at Frederick and Pipe Creek.

The report by Mr. Sample of his work, presented April, 1795, met the approbation of the Presbytery; but we find that the Assembly of 1796 did not approve his course, because “he had not pursued the route pointed out to him.” In 1799 a letter was received from Mr. Sample stating that he had retired from the ministry, and had engaged in a secular employment. During the ministry of Mr. Sample, Abraham Hoff, John Neill, Hugh Reynolds, and Henry McCleary were elected elders, and David Bryan deacon.

The next minister who served the church was the Rev. Samuel Knox, of the Presbytery of Belfast, Ireland. The earliest information concerning this pastor to which we have had access is found in the records of the Frederick Academy. In May, 1797, Mr. Knox was elected president of that institution. Whether he was called to this position after or before he was called to the church we are unable to state. In 1803, Mr. Knox retired from the church, and in the same year resigned his position in the academy. In 1804 the Presbytery of Baltimore, with which his church has always been connected, instructed its commissioners to the General Assembly to represent “the advantages which might probably result to the cause of religion from the appointment of a missionary to itinerate on the Western Shore and on the waters of the Potomac.”

For a period of four or five years there was no regular pastor, and only occasional preaching.

In 1809 the Rev. Patrick Davidson, of the Presbytery of Carlisle, was called to the vacant pulpit. Mr. Davidson was a graduate of Dickinson College, was licensed by New Castle Presbytery in 1797, and served the churches of Fagg's Manor, Tom's Creek, and Pipe Creek prior to his removal to Frederick.

In August, 1809, Mr. Davidson was elected principal of Frederick Academy, and probably entered upon his work as pastor in Frederick in the year 1810. But it was not until 1815 that he was dismissed from the Presbytery of Carlisle and installed as pastor of the Frederick Church. In 1817 the congregation considered the question of the removal of the church to a more eligible place, and Dec. 20, 1819, a site for the new church was bought of Mrs. Susan Keller, and deeded to Henry McCleary, Joseph Fleming, John McPherson, John Ritchie, and John Reynolds, in trust for the church. The church edifice was not completed until 1825, and not dedicated until after 1827, probably during the ministry of the Rev. Mr. McCullough.

In 1830 the following persons were appointed elders, viz.: John Ritchie, John White, and Robert McCleary, Oct. 9, 1824, the pastoral relation was dissolved by the death of Mr. Davidson. From this time until September, 1830, the church was without a pastor, and the following ministers acted as supplies for brief periods, viz.: Rev. J. W. McCullough, Rev. Mr. Mines, Rev. Mr. McIntosh, and Rev. Mr. Gallo-

In September, 1830, Rev. I. G. Hamner, D.D., received a unanimous invitation to become pastor. Dr. Hamner was of Princeton Theological Seminary, and had for contemporaries in that institution such men as Albert Barnes, J. W. Alexander, David McKinney, Theodore D. Woolsey, Edward N. Kirk, and others well known throughout the country.

Dr. Hamner had been in Fayetteville, N. C., as pastor, and came to Frederick when this church was in a very depressed condition. Under Dr. Hamner's pastorate, however, it rapidly improved, and the children, who up to this time had received instruction in a Sunday-school conducted by Presbyterians and Episcopalians, were gathered into a school of their own. Of the fifty persons admitted to membership during his brief ministry, seven have acted as ruling elders in the church. Four members were ordained and installed as elders before Dr. Hamner resigned his position as pastor, viz.: J. E. Woodbridge and Chester Coleman, in December, 1831; David B. Devitt, in January, 1833; and James L. Davis, in June, 1833.

In June, 1833, Dr. Hamner resigned, to take charge of the Fifth Presbyterian Church, Baltimore. Having served that church for many years, he afterward became pastor of churches in New Haven, Conn., and Newark, N. J.

From June, 1833, to November, 1834, the pulpit was supplied by Revs. T. P. C. Shellman and Joseph Smith. At the latter date Rev. Philo F. Phelps, a graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary, was called as pastor, and entered upon his duties as such in 1835.

In December, 1835, Lloyd Dorsey, M.D., and Samuel R. Hogg were ordained elders. On the 8th of October the following persons were elected trustees according to the provisions of the charter: John Bailey, L. P. W. Balch, and Thomas Gurley, for one year; Robert McCleary, Albert Ritchie, and Wm. R. Sanderson, for two years; Frederick A. Schley, J. P. Thompson, and Moses Worman, for three years.

Mr. Phelps' pastorate was brief, extending over about two years. From Frederick he went to Florida, and thence to Lansingburg, N. Y., where he died in 1841.

Mr. William Blood took charge of the church in 1837. He remained one year, but was not installed as pastor.

For some months after this the pulpit was supplied, by direction of Presbytery, by the following ministers from Baltimore: Rev. J. G. Hamner, D.D., Rev. J. C. Backus, D.D., Robert J. Breckenridge, D.D., and George W. Musgrove, D.D.

Rev. Joseph Smith was elected pastor July 24, 1838, and in August of the same year principal of the Frederick Academy. Dr. Smith was a graduate of Jefferson College, studied theology with Rev. Dr. Hill, of Winchester, Va., and spent one year at Princeton. He had for contemporaries in the Theological Seminary, Dr. Hodge, Dr. Wm. Nevin, Bishops Johns and Melville, of the Episcopal Church, Dr. Schumacher, of the Lutheran Church, and others.

In June, 1843, the Rev. John Miller became pastor. He graduated from Princeton College in 1836, and from the Theological Seminary in 1839. On Jan. 2, 1844, a free day-school was started under the direction of Mr. Miller. It opened with nearly forty scholars, and soon increased to seventy. For its support and management the ladies of the church formed an organization by electing Mrs. Patrick Davidson president, Mrs. Samuel Tyler, secretary, and Mrs. Edward Shriver treasurer. The following constituted the board of managers: Mrs. Reynolds, Mrs. John White, Mrs. Moses Worman, Mrs. McLanahan, Mrs. R. McCleary, Miss C. Reynolds, Miss M. Eichelberger, Miss Margaret Sanderson, Miss Emma Reigart, Mrs. Charles Shriver, Miss M. Davidson, Miss Eliza Montz, Miss E. Berger, Miss J. H. Williams, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. M. Hood.

Nor was this the only school started by Mr. Miller. A letter received from Peter McMortin, now of Michigan, informs us that he started a classical school through the solicitation of Mr. Miller, that most of his patrons were connected with this church, and that Dr. Albert Ritchie was so much interested in this school that he vacated his office that it might be used for a school-room. In 1845 the congregation decided to build a parsonage, and Edward Shriver, Seth Nichols, and George J. Fisher were appointed a building committee.

The lot on which the parsonage is built was bought of Frederick H. Schley, and the house was built by the voluntary contributions of the members.

In 1847 the frame house now occupied by Mr. Renner was bought of Mrs. Sarah English. About the same time the church was repaired and the iron fence put up around it. In December, 1848, Mr. Miller resigned his charge, after having accomplished much that has proved of permanent benefit to the church. Mr. Miller's successor was the Rev. Joseph M. Atkinson, who was educated at Princeton College and Seminary. Mr. Atkinson had served the churches of Sheperdstown and Smithville, Va., and was installed pastor of this church July, 1849. In September, 1853, Jonathan Tyson and Charles M. Miller were ordained as elders. In December, 1855, Rev. Jacob Kerr received a call, but declined it. He was invited to act as supply, and acted in that capacity for one year. In October, 1857, Rev. J. B. Ross accepted a call to become pastor. In the following year the church was renovated and improved. The walls were frescoed, the front and the windows were remodeled, and a new furnace and chandelier were introduced at a cost of two thousand eight hundred and twenty dollars. Mr. Ross resigned his charge in October, 1862.

For one year and a half after the dissolution of the pastoral relation the church was without a pastor. During several months of this period the edifice was used by the government for hospital purposes. The number of sick and wounded after the battle of Antietam, which occurred Sept. 17, 1862, was so great that all the public buildings, the school-houses, and several of the churches were needed for their accommodation. After several months had passed the government restored the church to the trustees, but such was the excitement that the session did not begin to make arrangements to secure a pastor until January, 1864.

At that time they sent for Rev. Robert H. Williams, who had two churches in charge in Harford County. He accepted, and preached his first sermon as pastor on the first Sabbath of May. On the following evening he was installed as pastor by Rev. C. Dickson, D.D., G. P. Hays, D.D., and Rev. Griffith Owen.

Before a month of Mr. Williams' ministry had passed arrangements were made for the organization of a mission Sabbath-school. For a long time this school was under the superintendence of the pastor, and afterwards was in charge of Simon Parsons and James Hogg. So successful was this school that another was soon opened, under the superintendence of Henry K. Cormack, on All Saints' Street. The temperance society, which was organized in 1866, was composed principally of the boys of the Sabbath-school, and became the nucleus of the Good Templars, and afterwards the Temple of Honor, the only temperance organization now in the city.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Frederick was reorganized in 1868, and from that time to this the young men of this church have been among its prominent and most useful members.

The Sewing Society was reorganized, and Miss Charlotte Baer acted for a long time as its prominent officer. The youngest association of the congregation is the Ladies' Missionary Society.

In May, 1867, William Dean was installed as elder, and in July, 1867, Adam Gault and A. Y. McCormick, M.D., were ordained as deacons.

In January, 1872, C. W. Ely and C. H. Hill were ordained elders, and George Dean and C. G. Meyers deacons. In January, 1876, G. F. S. Zimmerman and T. Lyon Davis were ordained elders. The trustees who served the church during Mr. Williams' ministry were the following, viz.: E. H. Rockwell, Grayson Eichelberger, Edward Shriver, James Hergeshheimer, Adam Gault, G. J. Doll, G. F. S. Zimmerman, David M. Kinney, M. D., Simon Parsons, Jacob Tyson, Henry Markey, Hiram Schisler, W. L. Morris, William Worman, Perry McCleary, Frederick Duvall, and Samuel H. Brown.

Mr. Williams retired in 1880, and in the spring of 1881, Rev. Irwin P. McCurdy was called. The elders for 1881 were Charles W. Ely, Charles H. Hill, George Zimmerman; Deacons, George W. Means and Charles G. Meyers.

The Baptist Church.—Following is a copy of the covenant of the first Baptist congregation in Frederick Town:

"The Covenant agreed upon, entered into, and signed by the Baptist Church of Jesus Christ at Frederick Town, State of Maryland, the 10th day of July, 1790. We, the subscribers, inhabitants of Frederick County in the State aforesaid being constituted into a church agreeable to the order of the Baptists some time about the first of July in the year of our Lord 1773, having been by misfortune deprived of our records, from the time of our constitution until now, do, for the glory of God, and our own peace and comfort, covenant and agree to and with each other, to maintain, stand by, and defend the following essential doctrines, and observe the rules of discipline hereunto annexed; that is to say in general we hereby declare our assent to all those doctrines contained in the Baptist Confession of Faith adopted by the Baptist Association at Philadelphia in the year 1742, and lately reprinted by their order; which we receive as comprehending the articles of our faith, believing it to be agreeable to the word of God; (at least in its essential parts) we recommend it to the perusal of one another, our families and friends. But in particular we profess to believe in the following very essential doctrines." (Here follows the articles of belief.)

Members' Names.

Thomas Ritchie, rec'd by letter from New York, Sept. 21, 1827.
Catherine Estworthy, Nov. 5, 1827.
Patty Dean, Nov. 5, 1827.
Henry Randall (by letter), Nov. 5, 1827.
Isabella Randall, Nov. 5, 1827; deceased 1828.
Luke Forrest, rec'd from Ebenezer Church, Feb. 4, 1828.
Henry Lease.
Ann Bannister, received by baptism; dis. 1826.
Nancy Hill (colored), Mary Davis.
Elder Wm. Parkinson, received by letter from First Baptist Church, New York, Oct. 31, 1840; dis'd July 7, 1841.
Mary Ward, deceased.
Ezekiel Beatty, deceased June 19, 1792.
Elijah Beatty, excommunicated July 23, 1796.
Sarah Gasaway, dec'd.
Ruth Rainbridge, dis'd 1794.
Abraham —, deceased.
Keziah Davis, deceased.
Posthuoman Claggatt, dis'mitted.
Mary Claggatt, dis'mitted.
Alexander Ogle, dis'mitted.
Mary Ogle, dis'mitted.
Mihld Smith, excluded Dec. 5, 1818.
Negro, Sarah Hopewell, dismissed 1806.
Negro, Catherine Stuart, dismissed 1806.
Thos. Morgan, dismissed 1793.
Negro “John,” deceased.
Thomas Hill, excommunicated.
Sarah Maynard, deceased.
James Walling, dis'mitted.
Priscilla Tillard, deceased.
Pender Smith (black woman), excluded.
Maria Huyatt, deceased.
Sarah Tillard, deceased.
Isabella Paxton, deceased.
Polly West, dismissed 1845.
Geo. Sedwick, dismissed 1806.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Polly Ritchie, received by letter; dism'd by letter to New York; received 1833.

Jacob Leese, Jr.
Mary Geyer, received by letter; excomm'd Dec. 26, 1828.
John Welsh, rec'd by letter Oct. 5, 1811; dec'd.
Mary M. Holmes, excomm'd Dec. 26, 1828.
Mary Ann English.
Joseph Trapnell, May 23, 1827; excommunicated July 25, 1829.
Harriett Trapnell, May 23, 1827.

Aaron Bannister, dism'd 1830.
John Bannister, Aug. 19, 1827.
Millie Grayson, by baptism.
Daniel Leese, received by baptism Dec. 26, 1828.
John Roderick, rec'd by baptism Dec. 26, 1828.
Richard English, received by baptism 1826.
Elizabeth Dean, received by baptism 1829.

It appears that the old covenant and records up to 1790 had been taken away by John Beatty.

On the 10th of July, 1790, Wm. Gilmore was chosen deacon, and Thomas and James Beatty trustees. The latter were ordered to have the deed for the meeting-house lot made to them and their successors. Absalom Bainbridge was licensed to preach in the same year. April 21, 1791, Elijah Beatty was appointed clerk. Sept. 24, 1794, Alex. Ogles and Posthumous Craggott were chosen additional trustees. Jan. 21, 1797, full license was given Wm. Parkinson to preach; July 22, 1797, George Grice was elected deacon, vice Wm. Gilmore, resigned.

The records from 1790 to 1841 (the last found) do not give the names of the preachers, but are mostly taken up with additions to the church and dismissions and excommunications therefrom, with other routine church affairs.

As far as can be learned the early preachers were Absalom Bainbridge, 1790; Wm. Parkinson, 1796; Jeremiah Moore, 1805; — Ledyards, 1809; John Welsh, 1811; Plummer Waters, Jr., 1818; Joseph H. Jones, 1836.

St. John's Catholic Church.—To write fully the history of St. John's Catholic Church and residence is to give the history of Catholicism in Frederick County. All the churches in the county have been more or less connected with St. John's. St. Joseph's, on the Manor, and the churches of Petersville, Liberty, and Middletown, are its offshoots. St. John's is also associated with the churches of Mount St. Mary's and Emmitsburg, as having had for a number of years the same pastor, the Rev. John Dubois, afterwards Bishop of New York. By the middle of the last century a number of Catholics had settled in the Monocacy Valley. They were principally of English origin, having come directly from England or from the lower counties of the State. Many of them were tenants on Carroll's Manor, on the Mo- nocracy, and these formed the nucleus of St. Joseph's Parish, at present under the charge of the fathers of the Novitiate. A large portion of the English settlers belonged to the Established Church, but in this particular locality (the Manor) the Catholics were probably in the majority, as Mr. Carroll, no doubt, was anxious that his religion should get a foothold in Frederick Valley. That most of them were from the lower part of the State is shown by the fact that the names frequently occurring on the old baptismal and marriage records are those belonging to St. Mary's, Charles, Calvert, and Prince George's Counties. Other Catholics were drawn to Frederick County in order to escape the rigors of the penal laws, which were in full force in the rest of the province. In enumerating the Catholic population of Frederick one hundred years ago the German Catholics have also to be taken into the reckoning. These immigrants came from Germany and Pennsylvania about the middle of the last century. Some Hessians settled in Frederick Town at the end of the Revolutionary war, but of these very few were Catholics. There were also a few Irish Catholics scattered through the county.

John Cary, whose name is signed to a deed for a lot on which the original chapel was built, appears to have been an Irishman. The deed is in favor of Father George Hunter, and bears date Oct. 2, 1765. In the document it is stated that for and in consideration of the payment of five shillings, current money, the title is given to the lot above mentioned. This same lot had some years previously cost the seller forty or fifty times that amount. Mr. Cary was a merchant, as appears from the deed. The spiritual needs of this congregation were supplied as well as circumstances permitted by the fathers from St. Thomas' Mission, near Port Tobacco, then and for a long time after the residence of the superior of the Jesuits in Maryland. The fathers of this mission had stations, churches, or residences through Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and a part of New York. Most likely Frederick Valley was for some time attended directly from St. Thomas'. The father who was appointed for the work used, no doubt, to make long excursions, which would take in the Catholics of what is now the District of Columbia, of Montgomery and Frederick Counties, along the banks of the Potomac River. After the mission was begun at Conewago some German father would perhaps go to Frederick Town, a distance of forty miles, to administer the sacraments to the faithful of his nationality.

In the course of time the number of Catholics increased, especially in Frederick Town, and it became necessary to build a residence and chapel. This resi-idence and chapel were accordingly erected in 1763 by Father John Williams, an English Jesuit. Very little is known about this father. He came to the mission of Maryland on June 9, 1758, in company with Fathers James Framback and James Pellentzi, the founders of the congregation at Conewago. How long Father Williams remained at Frederick and who was his immediate successor is uncertain. He returned, most probably, to Europe, as his name is not mentioned among the nineteen ex-Jesuits in Maryland in 1774. There is reason to believe that Father George Hunter was the successor of Father Williams, from the fact that his name occurs in the deed already mentioned. It may be objected that Father Hunter was superior of the order in Maryland at the time, 1765, and that the deed was consequently made out in his name. This reasoning is not conclusive, for it is doubtful whether Father Hunter was superior in 1765. It is known that he was superior and vicar-general in 1794, but this was after his return to Maryland. Nor were deeds always made out in the name of the superior, as will be seen farther on. In Campbell's list of ex-Jesuits, alluded to before, Father James Framback is set down as the pastor of Frederick Town in the year 1773. The mission intrusted to Father Framback was no easy one, as the whole of Western Maryland and the upper part of Virginia formed his parish, entailing upon him long and perilous expeditions to visit the Catholics scattered through this extensive territory. Sick calls over mountains and rivers for fifty and sixty miles must have been very trying for one who had already been on the laborious Maryland Mission nearly twenty years. He slept generally beside his horse, in order to be prepared for a sudden flight, and on one occasion, when on a visit to a Catholic family in Virginia, he barely escaped with his life by the fleetness of his horse in carrying him through the waters of the Potomac. He was fired upon by his pursuers before he reached the Maryland side of the river, but escaped unhurt. Father Framback was a German, and came to the mission in 1758. He died at St. Ignace, Aug. 26, 1795, in the seventy-third year of his age.

Father James Walton succeeded Father Framback. This statement is made on the authority of a deed for a part of the Novitiate property, which was executed in 1779.

Father Walton was an Englishman, and came to Maryland in the year 1776, and died at St. Ignace in 1803, aged sixty-five.

The first residence erected now forms part of the Novitiate. It was a two-story brick building, and included on the first floor three rooms and a passage, and had a front of about fifty-five feet. The second floor was used as a chapel, and has since been used as the library of the Tertian fathers, the chapel of the Blessed Virgin, and the fathers' recreation-room. Many years afterwards a basement was added to the building by the grading of the street. This was the work of Father McConnell. The small chapel of Father Williams was for nearly forty years the only place of worship for the Catholics of Frederick County. The fathers remained in Frederick Town after the suppression of the Jesuits, or at least went thither now and then. Father Walton, the last father of whom we have any record as having been there, died in 1803, but some time before his death the chapel was attended by the Rev. John Dubois. As the fathers of the old society were yearly growing fewer, and the number of Catholics was constantly becoming larger, many of the more distant churches were given up to secular priests. St. John's fell into good hands. The Rev. John Dubois is too conspicuous in the history of the church in the United States to need any notice here. He began to administer to the spiritual wants of St. John's congregation about 1792. He had also under his care the Catholics about Emmitsburg, and those of Montgomery County, Martinsburg, Western Maryland, and Virginia; and, in fact, was for a long time the only priest between Baltimore and St. Louis. "Some of his congregation," we are told, "came to Frederick to attend mass and receive the sacraments from distances of twenty, forty, and sixty miles; and when any of them were ill or dying the indefatigable pastor journeyed these distances on horseback, and sometimes on foot, to carry the consolations of religion to them. His missionary labors were extraordinary; he spared no pains, labor, or fatigue in the discharge of the sublime duties which heaven assigned him. After the exhausting fatigues of his ministry in town he secured the country in quest of souls, entering into the minute details of instructing and catechising the children and servants, etc."

One of the first undertakings of the new pastor was to build a church in place of the small upper room in the residence. The work was begun in the year 1800. The people thought him mad, and even Mr. Tancy, afterwards chief justice, who was a member of his congregation, said, "We all thought that the means could not be raised to pay for such a building; that the church would never be completed, and if completed, would never be filled with Catholics." The church was a brick building, eighty-two feet in length and forty-five feet in breadth, and having been torn down in part in 1859 and rebuilt and transformed, has since been used by the Junior Fire Company as an infirmary. Much difficulty was met by Rev. Mr. Dubois in paying for the church. The usual means were resorted to, and in 1804 a lottery authorized by the State was resorted to, but with little success. The announcement was as follows:

"Lottery to complete Church of St. John’s, Fred’k. Town, 1800 tickets or $5 = $21,000, subject to deduction of 15 per cent. Managers, J. Dubois, Henry Dannall, Joseph Smith, Samuel Lilly, George Baer, Jun., Peter Mants, Roger B. Taney, Frederick, Feb’y 3, 1804. Tickets to be held of managers, or at the stores of Messrs. John McPherson, Francis Mants, Jacob Steiner, Henry Kountz, Jr., John and Isaac Mants, John Baily, George Baer, and William C. Hobbs."

The Rev. Mr. Dubois remained in Frederick until 1806, when he removed to Emmittsburg, and from this place most probably went to Frederick once or twice a month. Things continued in this state until Father Francis Malevie, of the Society of Jesus, took charge. This occurred in 1811. The church continued to grow, especially in the more distant stations, and it became necessary a few years later to build small churches in several parts of the county. The German element had become more numerous in Frederick, but the English and Irish names were still in the majority. During the years that had passed since the Revolution a great many slaves had been brought into the county, and as a number of them were Catholics, their instruction in religious duties entailed no trifling burden on the pastor. The church of St. John’s was still unfinished, and was even unsafe. The interior was not plastered, and the roof had been so poorly made that it had begun to sink. Supports from within had become a matter of necessity, as the side walls, yielding to the weight, were pressed out. Father Malevie had the church plastered in 1812, and the roof was secured by means of wooden columns.

Father Malevie was born Dec. 1, 1770. His naturalization papers speak of him as a native of Russia, and a subject of the emperor of that country. In early life he entered the order of St. Francis of Assisi, but on account of the troubles in France at the end of the last century he was forced, on the dispersion of his order, to live in the world as a secular priest. In 1804, with the permission of the Holy See, he entered the society in Russia. While yet a novice he was sent to the United States, and was the first Jesuit who came from Russia to this country. Father Malevie was allowed to take his last vows on the 29th of June, 1815. On his return to Frederick he continued the work which he had been doing so well. The next undertaking worthy of note was the building of St. Joseph’s Church on the Manor, about seven miles from Frederick. The work was finished in 1820. The lot of ground for the church and graveyard, with a portion of the funds, no doubt, for the building itself, was a gift to the father from Charles Carroll of Carrollton. There is not, perhaps, a piece of land in Frederick County that has for its size more conspicuous names connected with it than the St. Joseph’s property. First, the gift already mentioned; then another was made by the Pattersons, another by the Harpers and McTavishes; and finally, in 1853, another by Mary Ann, Marchioness of Wellesley. The document by which the marchioness conveyed the property has an international character, as it had to pass through the office of the American consul in England, the Hon. Mr. Ingersoll. St. Joseph’s congregation has always been under the charge of the Jesuit fathers, who have attended it from their residence in Frederick, or from the Novitiate.

In 1821, Mr. Coale, a prominent Catholic of Liberty, a town about twelve miles from Frederick, offered a lot of ground for a church. Father Malevie, with the approbation of the superiors, accepted it, and a building was begun. The work, however, went on very slowly, and was not completed until after his death. This church has, with the exception of two or three years, been always attended by the Jesuit fathers of Frederick. A few years ago the old building was torn down, and a new one was erected at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars. Gen. Coale, the son of the donor of the lot, bore all the expenses of the new church.

Father Malevie died Oct. 3, 1822.

Several gentlemen, among whom was Mr. Taney, addressed a letter to the father superior, asking him to retain Father McElroy. The request was granted, and thus was begun a career of usefulness which, if we consider the resources at hand, has scarcely been equalled in any city in the country. Father McElroy found the congregation small, the church sadly in need of repair, the residence old and weather-beaten, and after twenty-three years of arduous labor he left the congregation large and flourishing, whilst the old church had given way to one of the finest edifices in the State, and the old two-story residence had been greatly enlarged and was doing service as a Novitiate of the society. The new residence on Church Street, the buildings for St. John’s Literary Institution, and the school and orphanage of the Sisters of Charity, gave proof also of the energy and skill of the pastor of St. John’s. It is an easy matter to show financial fact in large cities with liberal congregations, but it was quite a task to build churches and schools in Frederick fifty years ago, as money was scarce, and the little to be had was to be used with consummate ability in order to accomplish anything.
at all commensurate with the necessities of the case.
Towards the end of 1823 negotiations were begun with the superior of the Sisters of Charity for the establishment of a community in Frederick. The help the Sisters could render to the pastor for school purposes was much needed. Early in 1824 five Sisters arrived from Emmittsburg, and were domiciled in a wretched log cabin, built in the days of the Revolution, on what is now the convent property. This bad but two rooms on the first floor and a miserable attic overhead. The school was opened, however, a notice having previously been inserted in the papers to this effect, viz.:

"St. John's Female Benevolent and Frederick Free School will be opened on the 3d of January, 1824. Reading, writing, and needle-work, etc., will be taught. All denominations admitted."

In 1825 it became necessary to build a larger establishment for the Sisters, to serve for a school and an orphan asylum. After strenuous labor the work was done and paid for, and provision was secured for the maintenance of the orphans. During this year (1825)
Father McElroy had as his assistant Father P. W.
Walsh, who was much needed, as the congregation in Frederick alone was enough for one priest. The help of another father became more imperative next year, when a church was built at Petersville. The land for this church was given by Mr. West, a Protestant gentleman. The fathers from Frederick still supply this congregation. A few years ago the old log building was enlarged. The colored people form the larger part of the congregation. Of late years a great deal has been done for the religious education of the colored children by the efforts of a young lady, who, though wealthy and admired by the world, has given herself entirely to this good work.

On Aug. 7, 1828, the corner-stone of St. John's Literary Institute was laid. In 1829 the classes were begun, and soon St. John's College became the rival of Georgetown, and remained so until 1853, when it received a check by the expulsion of a large number of students at one time.

St. John's has given many members to the society and to the legal and medical professions, including some of the most distinguished names in this city and State. The school is still in existence.
A charter was obtained from the Legislature in 1829, together with an annual donation of three hundred dollars. This sum is still paid by the comtroller of the State. The pastor had done a great deal towards finishing and beautifying the old church in Frederick, but on account of the increase in the congregation it was thought advisable to extend the front of the church fifteen or twenty feet and erect galleries. This plan was proposed to the people in 1830, and all readily agreed to contribute to the work.
Several builders were consulted about the contemplated addition, and were unanimous in expressing the opinion that it would be a waste of money, and advised rather the tearing down of the old church and the erection of a new one. The project was abandoned for some time for want of money. In 1832 the new plan was put before the congregation, and four thousand dollars were subscribed. To this amount was added a legacy of another thousand dols.

Very Rev. Father Peter Kenney, superior and visitor, was consulted, and after an interchange of opinions it was finally resolved, in January, 1833, that the work should be undertaken, and the site changed from that on which the old church stood to the lot on the opposite side of the street. Works on architecture were obtained from Georgetown, and with the aid of these Father McElroy and Mr. Teahan, a well-known builder of those days, fixed upon a plan for the new edifice. The form was to be that of a Latin cross, the nave to be one hundred and thirty-six feet in length and forty-nine in width, the transept ninety-four feet in length and forty-nine in width;
length of nave to transept, sixty-three feet; height from floor to ceiling, forty feet. The society's church in Gardiner Street, Dublin, was used as a model for the ground-plan, though St. John's is considerably larger.
The corner-stone was laid in the northeast angle of the nave on St. Joseph's day, 1833. The work went on amid the greatest difficulties, but subscriptions, loans, legacies, and contributions from the employees of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and Chesapeake and Ohio Canal enabled the pastor to finish the building by 1837. Among the presents recorded for the altar were a dozen candlesticks and two crucifixes.
These cost twelve hundred francs, and were sent by Very Rev. John Roothaun, general of the society.

On the 20th of April St. John's was consecrated with the usual impressive services of the Catholic Church. The steeple of St. John's was completed in 1854 by Father Burchard Villiger, and a few years ago the interior of the church was restored and beautified. During the erection of the church the Novitiate was transferred from White Marsh to the residence of the clergy in Frederick. The change was proposed almost jokingly by Father McElroy to Very Rev. Father Kenney in 1832. The latter received the suggestion in earnest, and determined to carry out the idea. He would have done so at the time but for his recall to Ireland. Very Rev. Father McSherry, the successor of Father Kenney, had the same views, and in 1833 a large addition was made to the residence. This addition consisted in placing another story on the old building, and the extension of the west end from what is now the rector’s sitting-room to the passage leading to the refectory. The wing now used by the novices, together with the chapel, was added by Father Samuel Barber. The east extension, from the pastor’s room to the alley, was made by the Very Rev. Father Brocord. The infirmary wing was added by Father Paresco in 1859. From time to time the establishment of the Sisters had been enlarged to meet the wants of the orphans and the school. A large addition was made about the year 1827, and this last effort of Father McElroy for the education of the young was attended with highly satisfactory results. The school building was burned down in 1845, but was soon replaced by another. In 1839 we find Father James Ryder acting as the assistant of Father McElroy in the church and in the school, where he was prefect and teacher of French and writing.

Father Thomas Lilly succeeded Father McElroy in September, 1845. The assistants were Fathers George Villiger, Stonestreet, Meredith, Jenkins, Finotti, and Bogue. During the three years that followed the church and college continued to flourish. Quite a number of colored adults were received into the church by Father Lilly.

In 1846 the Sisters of Charity withdrew, and were replaced by the Nuns of the Visitation from Georgetown. The convent of the Visitation is now among the finest establishments of education in the city. The school enjoys a fine reputation here and elsewhere. The Sisters also maintain an excellent free school.

In 1848, Father Charles H. Stonestreet became the successor of Father Lilly. The assistants at different times during the year were Fathers Bogue, Finotti, and Ciampi. During the presidency of Father Stonestreet the Very Rev. Francis Dzierezyński, who was looked upon by all as a saintly man, died at the residence. Father Dzierezyński was a native of Osani, in Poland, and was born on the 3d of June, 1777.

Father Thomas Mullaly was appointed the successor of Father Stonestreet at the end of 1850. Under his administration it became necessary to expel so large a number of students from the college that it began to decline, and has since been used merely as a school for the city. The president of the college was also the pastor of the church. The pastors after Father Mullaly were Fathers Villiger, Samuel Barber, Hippolyte, De Neckere, Blenkinosp, and McAtee. The assistants during this period, from 1853 to 1860, were at different times, Fathers Bogue, Duddy, and Tuffer.

In 1860 the residence on Church Street was rented out, and the fathers and brothers connected with the church and college took up their abode in the Novitiate, where they have since remained. The pastors who followed Father Sourin, who had charge of the church from 1860 to 1870, were Fathers O’Kane, Smith, Jenkins, Ciampi, Fulmer, and lastly Father Stonestreet, who, after an absence of twenty-five years, returned to the church as its parish priest.

The outlying missions during all these years have not been neglected. New churches have been built and the old ones enlarged. Five years ago the present pastor of the missions concluded to build a small church in Middletown, seven miles from Frederick. Recently a small church was built near the town of Urbana. It is intended principally for the use of a colony of colored people who have settled in that community.

German Reformed Church.—Under the ministration of Rev. John H. Smaltz, pastor of the Evangelical Reformed Church from 1829 to 1833, services in the German language ceased, and were conducted in English. From that time the Germans professing the Reformed faith had no regular preaching until 1843, in which year Rev. Isaac Gerhart was settled as pastor, and continued for six years. In 1849, Rev. E. W. Meister became the pastor and remained until 1851. He was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Reinecke, who continued until 1855. His successor was Rev. John Knelling, who preached about a year, and from that time to 1861 the congregation was without regular stated preaching. Rev. F. H. Schwartz then was pastor until 1863, and was followed by Rev. G. W. Glessner, who remained until 1867. Rev. J. C. Hauser was the next pastor, from 1867 to 1872, when he was succeeded by Rev. Herman Billfeld, the present pastor in charge. From 1850 to April, 1881, services were conducted in the old Reformed church, and since then in Kemp Hall, corner of Market and Church Streets. This church belongs to the German Synod of the Reformed Church of the United States. It has a prosperous Sunday-school, under Jacob Nottungel as superintendent. The church membership numbers eighty persons.

Methodist Protestant Church.—The Methodist Protestant Church in the United States was organized in the year 1829 in Baltimore.

Rev. Josiah Varden was a missionary of this church in Frederick City in 1850, in which year a society was organized there as the result of his labors. Nineteen members first constituted the Frederick Methodist Protestant Church, and the first regular pastor was Rev. Peter Lightfoot, who remained until 1860. His successor was Rev. Edward G. Drinkhouse, who continued two years, and was followed by Rev. David A. Sherman as pastor for the next two, and Rev. William S. Hammond for two more. Rev. J. K. Nichols was pastor for four years, succeeded by Rev. J. D. Wilson in 1870, who remained one year. The next was Rev. S. G. Vallant for one year, followed by Rev. C. H. Littleton until 1876, when Rev. W. W. White took charge. Mr. White was succeeded by C. O. Mervin, who remained about six months. There has been no pastor since 1878, when the church building on East Church Street, formerly the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was closed. In the spring of 1881 the church and parsonage were transferred by the four remaining trustees to the Conference Missionary Society. For four years preceding April, 1881, the parsonage was occupied by Rev. J. E. Maloy, who had a circuit in the country, but did not preach in this church, and since then by Rev. J. L. Mills, who has the circuit occupied by Mr. Maloy. When the church closed, in 1878, its membership was thirty, but the organization may now be said to have disbanded.

Trinity M. E. Church, South.—Until 1836 Frederick was in the circuit (except one or two years when found non-sustaining) embracing several appointments in the county. That year it was made a station by the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) Conference, and Rev. Samuel Bryson was appointed pastor. Under his ministry the work expanded, and the station has ever since been self-sustaining. At first the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) occupied the small brick church on West Church Street, now held by the Methodist Protestant congregation. The Trinity congregation now have a finer and more commodious building on East Church Street, built in 1865, under the pastorate of Rev. W. W. Hicks.

In 1860 the General Methodist Conference, at Buffalo, introduced into the discipline the new chapter on slavery. Its action was offensive to many members, who regarded it as an innovation upon Methodist usages. Some of these withdrew and united with other churches. The Baltimore Conference, which met in Staunton in 1861, by resolutions protested against the action of the General Conference, withdrew therefrom, and remained independent till 1866, when it formally united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Alexandria, Va. Those who withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church in Frederick City determined in 1865 (soon after the war) to form a society and join the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The first services were held in the beginning by Rev. John Hall, of Baltimore Conference, in private houses, and afterwards in the large three-story house occupied by Messrs. Shilling & Young as a bakery, situated on East Patrick Street, near the corner of Carroll. Junior Hall was temporarily secured as a place of worship, and services were held whenever ministerial help could be obtained. Rev. George G. Smith, of Georgia, and Rev. John Poisal, of Baltimore Conference, and others aided in this way till Dec. 16, 1866, when a society was regularly organized by Rev. Samuel Register, D.D., presiding elder of Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The following were the first fourteen and original members: William B. Shilling, Mary Shilling, Joseph Shawen, John R. Torreyson, James W. Pearre, S. Marion Pearre, John T. Sinn, Catharine C. Sinn, Robert H. Burton, Ann Burton, Jane Holland, William Eberts, Godfrey Koontz, and W. Nash Young. In order to have a permanent place of worship the hall belonging to and over the store of R. H. Maegill, corner of East Patrick and Market Streets, was leased. This place having been fitted up, was formally dedicated by Rev. S. S. Rozell, D.D., in January, 1867. The full cost of fitting up the hall was paid that day. Among the outside friends who helped in the work William Tregoe is mentioned as having painted the hall free, also R. Brown Henderson as having been active in securing a place of worship on former occasions. The first Quarterly Conference was held February 21, 1867, presided over by Rev. Eugene R. Smith, from Texas Conference, who had been appointed pastor of the work January 6th, and who was reappointed at the Annual Conference in March following. This year the congregation prospered greatly, and in March, 1868, sixty-six members were reported. The pastor for 1868 was Rev. Samuel Kepler. On Dec. 7, 1868, J. W. Pearre, Charles Howard, and Lloyd T. Maegill were chosen to select a site whereon to build a church. On Jan. 5, 1869, under an act of incorporation, Edward Howard, Edward Sinn, Godfrey Koontz, J. W. Pearre, D. G. Crise, Alexander A. D. Warfield, Thomas H. O'Neal, J. R. Torreyson, and W. B. Shilling were elected trustees. In 1869 the church had eighty members, and Rev. Samuel Kepler continued pastor. In 1870, Rev. Maybury G. Balthis was appointed pastor, but owing to ill health resigned, and was succeeded by Rev. J. C. Hummer, who supplied the charge until the Conference met. On Dec. 15, 1870, the trustees purchased of W. J. Duvall and wife a house and lot for eight hundred and thirty-seven dollars, and one adjoining from John A. Simmons for two thousand four hundred and thirty-seven dollars, situated on East Second Street, where the church now stands. Frederick Zumstein contracted to build the new church for eight thousand eight hundred and forty-five dollars according to the plans furnished free by John C. Harkness, an architect of Washington, D.C. The corner-stone was laid with Masonic ceremonies by Columbia Lodge, No. 58, A. F. and A. M., June 6, 1871, on which occasion Rev. William E. Munsey, D.D., of Baltimore, delivered the address in the German Reformed church, which had been tendered for the day. The new church was dedicated Sunday, Jan. 21, 1872. Rev. James A. Duncan, D.D., president of Randolph-Macon College, preached in the morning, and Rev. S. S. Rozell, D.D., of Washington City, in the afternoon, and Rev. Dr. Duncan again at night. In 1871 and 1872, Rev. J. C. Hummer was pastor, and in 1873, Rev. George T. Tyler, under whose ministrations thirty persons professed religion and thirty-five accesses to the church were made. Rev. George T. Tyler continued pastor in 1874, 1875, and in 1876. In 1877 the pastor was Rev. S. S. Rozell; 1878, J. Asbury Regester; 1879 and 1880, Rev. A. Ezra Brandenbaugh, and in 1881, Rev. H. P. Hamill.

Quin's African Methodist Episcopal Church.—This church was rebuilt in 1876, and is now a tasteful and commodious edifice.

Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church.—This church is on All Saints' Street. It was erected in 1818. An addition was made to it in 1850, and it was renovated in 1870. It stands well back in a large yard, part of which is used as a cemetery. Among the persons buried here we find Elizabeth, wife of Jonathan Murdock, born Aug. 1, 1796, died Aug. 3, 1878. Rev. Nicholas Smith, died Dec. 9, 1827, aged sixty-five years. Rev. Henry Cole, died Sept. 10, 1850, aged fifty-five, and Hannah, his wife, Feb. 23, 1871, aged seventy-eight. William Brown, born Sept. 29, 1800, died April 2, 1877. Rev. Solomon Snodden, born March 6, 1810, died February, 1852.

Cemeteries.—The cemeteries in and near Frederick City are those of the Lutheran Church, Mount Olivet, All Saints', the German Reformed Church, the Shriver Family Burying-Ground, and the Presbyterian and Catholic Cemeteries. Of these the principal one is Mount Olivet, and the oldest that of the Lutheran Church.

Lutheran Cemetery.—This cemetery lies in the rear of the Lutheran church, on Church Street, and is the oldest cemetery in Frederick. From its tombstones we gather the following:

Michael Reimer, born in 1715, died Nov. 25, 1809.
Christina Buckey, wife of Matthias Buckey, born July 18, 1752, died Nov. 10, 1868.
John Ebbert, born July 24, 1772, died April 1, 1851, and Rebecca, his wife, born July 21, 1776, died Oct. 30, 1822.
Jacob Font, born Sept. 9, 1763, died March 21, 1867.
Baltzer Font, born April 25, 1779, died March 24, 1839, and his wife Mary, born Sept. 24, 1757, died Nov. 25, 1821.
Adam Link, born 1721, died April 24, 1805.
Benj. Winter, Sr., born Dec. 10, 1761, died June 27, 1817.
"Frederick Birely, died 1866, aged 57 years.
"Verses on tombstones are but idle spent,
The living character's the monument."

Hannah Zeller, born April 3, 1779, died Aug. 27, 1797.
Anna Maria Zeller, born March 13, 1745, died March 28, 1814.
Daniel Miller, son of John and Magdalene Miller, born Sept. 5, 1796, died April 1883.
Sophia Kolb, wife of M. Kolb, born Sept. 15, 1772, died May 12, 1819.
Catharine, wife of John Kolb, died July 19, 1829, aged 65 years.
Catharine M. Kimball, born in Mayence, Germany, Sept. 19, 1745, died May 18, 1831.
Her daughter, Mrs. Anna Marie B. Morris, of Baltimore, died Dec. 2, 1834, aged 71.
Mary, wife of Francis Mants, born June 3, 1754, died May 12, 1815.
Peter Myerheffer, born Jun. 12, 1758, died April 28, 1831.
John Adam Rees, born October, 1757, died Feb. 27, 1819.
John Lambert, born Nov. 28, 1764, died Oct. 10, 1810.
Anna Margrethta, wife of John L. Hoff, born June 18, 1726, died Oct. 6, 1811.
Mary M., wife of Conrad Doyle, died April 5, 1829, aged 75.
Conrad Englebrecht, died Feb. 2, 1819, aged 61.
Margaret Englebrecht, died Sept. 8, 1836, aged 76.
Samuel Miller, born March 26, 1726, died April 18, 1808.
Christiana Lowe, born Feb. 14, 1772, died April 8, 1829.
Adam Hart, born Dec. 12, 1767, died Jan. 24, 1804, and his wife Elizabeth, born Nov. 19, 1770, died May 24, 1835.
"In sure and certain hope of the resurrection of eternal life, sleepeth here William House, a native of Elsass (Alsace), in Germany. He emigrated to this town Anno Dominii 1758.
He departed this life on the 1st of March, A.D. 1822, aged 89 years
3 months and 3 days."
Sophia Dorothea Brimm, born Feb. 16, 1755, died Feb. 22, 1826.
William Markell, born Feb. 26, 1760, died May 4, 1816, and Mary, his wife, born May 6, 1760, died Sept. 25, 1822.
Conrad Markell, born 1721, died Sept. 3, 1792.
Susan Emmott, born Nov. 19, 1764, died Nov. 15, 1877.
Jacob Shollman, born Feb. 6, 1757, died Nov. 29, 1814.
Henry Keiler, Sr., died July 14, 1851, aged 81, and his wife Mary M., died Nov. 2, 1841, aged 62.
Dorothea Koontz, born 1734, died March 4, 1798.
George Politz, born Nov. 12, 1786, died Aug. 12, 1802.
Jacob Duttenmann, born Dec. 17, 1781, died July 23, 1892.
Jacob Lowe, Jr., born Sept. 20, 1748, died Sept. 25, 1796.
Jacob Medhart, born May 11, 1752, died April 19, 1821, and his wife Mary Magdalena, died in 1802, aged 44.
Samuel Nixdorff, born in Bethlehem, Pa., April 18, 1745, died March 1, 1824.
David Freisch, born Oct. 9, 1764, died (not legible).
"In memory of John Adam Krug, born March 19, 1732, died
March 30, 1796, aged 64 years and 11 days. Pastor here for 25 years.
His wife, Henrietta Krug, born June 28, 1751, died March 26, 1829, and his son, Daniel Krug; born June 5, 1783, died July 2, 1850.
Sussana Barbara Hontschum, born April 6, 1728, died Jan. 3, 1774.
Sussana, wife of Michael Hauser, died April 18, 1826, aged 69.
Maria Barbara Derr, daughter of F. Riehl, born Nov. 3, 1772, died June 7, 1826.

All Saints' Cemetery.—Most of the bodies buried here have been removed to Mount Olivet Cemetery. We give nearly all yet remaining in this old graveyard:

Alexander Truescott, died April 10, 1846, aged 55 years, and Kate, his wife, April 15, 1846, aged 55, both natives of England.
George Abood, a native of Nottingham, England, died Dec. 15, 1832, aged 78 years.
Sarah Moffie, died Jan. 28, 1854.
One stone headed by a Masonic badge has this inscription: "William Sanders, died October 15, 1827, aged 41 years." Arm Sherwood, died April 5, 1829, aged 42 years, natives of England.
Mark Bishop, born Sept. 30, 1786, died Oct. 16, 1836.
James Brice, died Aug. 14, 1834, aged 27.
Margaret Howard, died March 7, 1844, aged 65.
Margaret, wife of Col. James Johnson, died Sept. 5, 1813, aged 64 years.
The tombstone of Gen. Roger Nelson, who died June 6, 1815, aged 56 years, is nearly illegible, and covered partially by bushes and briars. It records his services in the Revolution, his participation in the battles in the Carolinas, and his presence at the surrender of Yorktown, and notes his services in Congress and on the bench, but its words are not clearly legible. Beside him lies the youngest son of Roger and Eliza Nelson, who died Jan. 27, 1873, aged 19 years.

Mount Olivet Cemetery.—This beautiful cemetery, lying just south of the city and abutting on Market Street, has an attractive situation, and is kept in excellent order. It was incorporated Oct. 4, 1852, with the following incorporators: Richard H. Marshall, Richard Potts, William J. Ross, W. B. Tyler, James Whitehill, Charles E. Trail, Andrew Boyd, John Sifflord, John J. Boyd, John A. Steiner, George J. Fisher, Alfred J. Brengle, Grason Eichelberger, John Leats, Henry Lorentz, Lewis C. Coppersmith. Its first officers were William J. Ross, president, who continued as such up to May 2, 1876, when on account of impaired health he resigned. His successor was Valentine S. Bruner, who still holds that position. The secretary and treasurer, elected Dec. 2, 1852, was Lawrence J. Brengle, who held those offices until his death in 1874, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Thomas M. Markell. William S. Duvall has been its superintendent from its organization, and resides in the keeper's dwelling, at the main entrance to the cemetery. The directors for 1881 are V. S. Bruner, William J. Ross, Francis Markell, L. E. Hedge, Lewis M. Nixdorff, L. V. Scholl, Thomas E. Pope, A. H. Hunt, Jacob D. Haw. The interments up to May 7, 1881, were three thousand six hundred and eighty-seven, besides nearly four hundred soldiers of the opposing armies of the civil war of 1861-65. The Confederate dead are buried in the western portion of the grounds in a row, with neat tombstones, and number about three hundred and nine. The Federal dead are interred in the eastern part, and are of a smaller number, many having been removed by the general government to "Antietam Cemetery." Mount Olivet Cemetery was organized upon ten thousand dollars capital by a joint-stock company, but the capital was subsequently returned to the stockholders, and it is now operated and controlled by the lot-owners, each of whom has a vote and a voice in its management and in the election of officers. It was laid out by the well-known Baltimore surveyor, James Belden. It is subdivided into eighteen sections, marked on its plates by the letters of the alphabet, from A to R inclusive, and each of these sections is divided into lots, numbered consecutively from one up to five hundred or more, as the size of the division may warrant. Two graves are conspicuous in the cemetery, viz.: those of Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner," and his wife. On Mr. Key's slab is the inscription,—

"Francis Scott Key,
Born Aug. 9th, 1796.
Died January 11th, 1843."

And on that of his wife,

"Mary Taylor Key.
Born May 26, 1784. Died May 18, 1859."

In the rear are the graves of Francis Scott Key, Jr., who died April 4, 1856, and Simon Frazier Blunt, a son-in-law, deceased in 1854. Key's remains, with those of his wife, were removed from Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, after the war. It is a matter of some surprise that no monument has ever been erected over his remains.

German Reformed Church Cemeteries.—The site for this graveyard and the church was the gift of Daniel Dulaney. On May 11, 1831, the day the excavations of this graveyard were begun for removing all the remaining tombstones in it, preparatory to the erection of a chapel, the inscriptions of the following stones were obtained:

"Magdalena Schmidt, born 1707. Departed 1744. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, yes, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." The slab of Abraham Miller, with an angel and hour-glass beautifully carved at its head, says he was born Aug. 24, 1707, and departed Sept. 20, 1754, aged 47 years and 27 days. A well-preserved stone, with figures of two angels hovering over the tomb, with a scroll, shows that Jacob Steiner, born 1713, departed this life in 1748. Then follows the verse, "Blessed are the dead who die," etc., and at the bottom the words "seminus mori." Another tells that Valentine Schwartz, Jr., born May 25, 1772, died 12 February, 1808; and another that Susannah Schwartz, consort of Valentine Schwartz, died March 19, 1827, aged 89 years and 10 months. This is thought to have been one of the last stones put up in this burying-ground. One of the old black-slate stones, remarkably well preserved, has the following: "In memory of Mary Baer, daughter of John Kimball. Departed this life March, 1765, aged 32." One "to the memory of George Baer, Senior, a native of Germany," was illegible as to further words. One to the memory of Jacob, son of Jacob Mather and his wife Rachel, shows that he was born Nov. 19, 1776, and died March 21, 1778. Another, to Margareetha Schley, tells that she was born Nov. 5, 1779, died Aug. 10, 1850, daughter of John Jacob Schley and Anna Maria, his wife. This was made of sandstone, and had wreaths of flowers at its head. Another marks the grave of Anna Maria Bärin, born Aug. 25, 1780, died Aug. 18, 1878, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Bärin. A little double stone records that Peter Doffler, born Oct. 15, 1771, died Oct. 14, 1872; and Anna Maria Doffler, born Oct. 12, 1788, died Oct. 12, 1772. One tells of Margaret Gibbs, wife of Jacob Faubel, who died Feb. 22, 1795, aged 29 years, 7 months, and 9 days. The following two are only partially legible, viz.: John Schwartz, son of Valentine Schwartz, born Nov. 26, 1760, and Johann Valentine Schwartz, born in Martinheim, Jan. 8, 1725.

There were other stones, whose inscriptions were so faded and worn out as to be utterly illegible. The above are all that could be obtained, and most of these were in the German language. A great many were sunk deep into the earth, and their inscriptions were defaced beyond recognition.

On the western side of the city, and not exceeding a quarter of a mile from its centre, is another graveyard of the German Reformed Church, in which the members of that denomination have been buried for a great many years. It is surrounded by a stone wall about six feet high, which incloses a little more than two acres, very nearly square, having a frontage of about three hundred feet on Bentz Street, and sloping westward to the depression through which runs Carroll Creek. It is in full view of the Catottin Mountains. In the northeast corner there are two walled inclosures studded with evergreen trees of considerable size. There are two entrances, the northern and principal one being near West Third Street. From this a straight roadway runs to the western border of the grounds. Proceeding along this roadway to a point about half-way to the end of the road, and turning to the south, an inclosure is reached surrounded by an open-worked iron fence. Inside there are six mounds. The most prominent of the tombstones marks the resting-place of Harriet Youer, who died in 1874, aged 77 years. Next to this, on the south, is a low gray stone, on which is the inscription:

"Barbara Fritchie, died Decr. 18, 1862, aged 96 years." Another gray stone shows that John C. Fritchie, the husband of Barbara, died Nov. 10, 1849, aged 69 years. The other three occupants of the lot are Samuel Youer, born Dec. 3, 1776, and died July 31, 1819; Anna Maria, wife of Samuel Youer, born March 28, 1773 (date of death sunk below the surface of the earth); and Margaret Stover, died Nov. 23, 1857, aged 86 years.

Among others buried in this cemetery are the following:

Christiana Metzger, born in Lancaster County, Pa., July 14, 1766, and died Sept. 20, 1817, and her son, Jacob Metzger, born Jan. 1, 1759, who died Oct. 5, 1852.

Peter Bofer, born Aug. 15, 1731, died Oct. 31, 1803.

Henry Steiner, register of wills, died May 18, 1825, aged 40 years, 10 months, 25 days.

Richard Mills, born Aug. 4, 1760, died March 27, 1823.

Jacob Folger, born Oct. 17, 1788, died Nov. 20, 1818.

Henry Weinmiller, born Nov. 25, 1746, died Dec. 26, 1808.

Woodward Evitt, died Sept. 20, 1830, aged 71.

David Levy, died Dec. 16, 1806, aged 39.

Andrew Shriver, born Aug. 30, 1775, died Jan. 16, 1865.

Jacob Steiner, died Sept. 11, 1832, aged 70, and his wife, Margaret, died Dec. 8, 1834, aged 70.

Henry Koontz, died Nov. 29, 1831, aged 67, and his wife, Margaret, April 16, 1815, aged 50.

John Gephart, died Oct. 27, 1842, aged 82, and his wife, Elizabeth, April 3, 1818, aged 63.

Edward Salmon, born Aug. 19, 1747, died June 29, 1869.

Maria Phoebe Eno, died Nov. 18, 1811, aged 70.

Peter Hardt, died Jan. 6, 1821, aged 63.

Christian Steiner, born Jan. 14, 1797, died Feb. 25, 1882, and his wife, Rebecca, born April 20, 1802, died April 21, 1862.

Abraham Kemp, born Oct. 16, 1765, died May 26, 1868.

John Bruner, died Dec. 4, 1821, aged 47, and Catharine, his wife, April 17, 1863, aged 80.

Henry Thomas, born 1790, died Nov. 2, 1859.

David Senley, third son of John Schley, died Oct. 15, 1852, aged 55, and Anna Mary, his wife, Oct. 29, 1825, aged 24.

George Houck, died Oct. 22, 1867, aged 92, and his wife, Catharine, died July 4, 1838, aged 56.

Barbara Bruner, died Feb. 1, 1836, aged 84.

Nicholas Holtz, born June 10, 1765, died Aug. 3, 1849, and his wife, Susanna, May 22, 1840, aged 74.

Caspar Mantz, born April 8, 1715, died Feb. 28, 1791.

Francis Mantz, born Jan. 26, 1748, died May 29, 1823.

Caspar Mantz, born June 23, 1776, died Oct. 31, 1839.

George Baer, died April 3, 1834, aged 70, and his wife, Catherine, March 15, 1853, aged 55.

Daniel Hauser, died Aug. 18, 1852, aged 84.

At the head of a neat tablet is the figure of a man writing at his desk in his study, and below is this inscription:

"Erected by the members of the German Reformed Church of Frederick and vicinity in memory of the late Jonathan Helfenstein, for 17 years their esteemed pastor. He departed this life September 23, 1829, aged 45 years."

Jacob Weist, Sr., born July 17, 1788, died July 5, 1847.

Mary Levy, wife of Jacob Levy, born Jan. 8, 1769, died April 7, 1798.

Jacob Bents, born 1749, died Dec. 24, 1785, and his wife, Margaret, January, 1806.

George Trisler, died Sept. 9, 1845, aged 77.

Mary, wife of Michael Trisler, died April 5, 1828, aged 87.

Rosanna, wife of George Trisler, born Nov. 19, 1799, died Oct. 12, 1826.

John Ramsburg, born Jan. 29, 1807, aged 66, and his wife, Ann Mary, Jan. 14, 1825, aged 84.

Conrad Reichmeyer, born in Reading, Berks Co., Pa., March 14, 1762, died July 22, 1842, and his wife, Susanna, born Dec. 18, 1758, died Nov. 8, 1830.

Jacob Hitechew, born Feb. 14, 1760, died May 11, 1835.

Catherine, wife of Gideon Young, born July 10, 1786, died Sept. 8, 1863.

Frederick Getz, born in Lancaster, Pa., March 13, 1781, died Sept. 15, 1824.

Andrew Zimmerman, born Sept. 24, 1754, died July 19, 1826.
The Shriver Family Burying-Ground.—David Shriver married Rebecca Ferree, daughter of Abraham Ferree, who in 1736 married a Miss Eltinge, from Esopus, N. Y., her parents being Low Dutch. This Abraham Ferree (or Ferrie) was the son of Philip Ferree, and grandson of Mary Ferree, whose maiden name was Mary Warrinbuer. The latter died in Conestoga township, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1716. She had resided in Londyn, near the river Rhine, in France, but after her husband's death went to London with her children, and thence to America. The tombs in this graveyard are as follows:

Abraham Shriver, born in 1771, and died July 29, 1848. His wife, Ann Margaret, who died Dec. 26, 1840, aged 65. Dr. William Eltinge Shriver, their son, who died April 24, 1859, aged 46. Charles, their son, who died Feb. 17, 1849, aged 21. Abraham, infant son of above Charles and Ann Eliza Shriver, who died Jan. 4, 1849; Samuel S., another infant son, who died Aug. 11, 1841; Abraham, their third and infant son, who died Jan. 6, 1844; and Charles E., their last son, who fell in battle in the Confederate army, Aug. 22, 1863, in his 18th year. Elizabeth Lydia, wife of Edward Shriver, died Dec. 2, 1860, aged 52 years. Frederick Steever and Philip Abraham, sons of Edward and Elizabeth Lydia Shriver, the former dying Oct. 19, 1845, aged 11 months, and the latter Dec. 7, 1838, aged 4 months. Mary, wife of Charles Wilson, and daughter of Abraham and Margaret Shriver, died Nov. 5, 1853, aged 43. Ann Margaret Campbell and her infant daughter, Maris, wife and daughter of Charles A. Campbell, and daughter and granddaughter of Abraham and Margaret Shriver. The mother died April 29, 1832, and the daughter 234 July following.

Martha Snowden, the faithful colored nurse of Edward and Elizabeth Shriver, died Nov. 25, 1855, aged 28.

The following also appears:

"Here lies interred the body of Abe Brighton, who died Jan. 30, 1847, aged about 60 years, the early, continued, and much attacked servant of the Shriver family."

Presbyterian Cemetery.—This old burying-ground, on West Fourth street, was laid out nearly a century ago, but interments are rarely made in it now. Among those buried there are the following:

Henry McCleery, died Nov. 25, 1819, aged 70, and his wife, Martha, Dec. 12, 1813, aged 59. Andrew McCleery, born Nov. 21, 1777, died July 9, 1853. Thomas H. Howard, born Feb. 28, 1789, died Sept. 26, 1852.

Rev. Samuel Knox, died Aug. 31, 1832, aged 76, and his wife, Zeriah, July 26, 1839, aged 56.

John Bayly, born Aug. 16, 1775, died April 14, 1844, and his wife, Elizabeth, born Nov. 5, 1781, died Dec. 31, 1845.

James Robertson, a native of Scotland, died April 25, 1825, aged 54.

Catholic Cemetery.—This burial-ground lies on East Fourth Street, and is beautifully situated. Among those buried there are:

Col. James McSherry, author of the "History of Maryland," who was born July 29, 1819, and died July 13, 1869.

Outerbridge Horsey, who died June 7, 1842, aged 66 years, and his wife, Eliza D. Lee Horsey, who died July 5, 1862, aged 80.

William Lee, born June 23, 1775, died July 8, 1845.

Priests and Students.

Novitiate Scholars.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE PRESS OF FREDERICK.

During the Revolution no papers were published in the counties outside of Baltimore and Annapolis. But after the Revolutionary struggle was over and independence was achieved the first newspaper was printed in Frederick.

The first press or printing-office brought to Frederick County was introduced by Matthias Bartgis, of Philadelphia, and opened by him in North Market Street, Frederick Town, Md., in 1779. Mr. Bartgis served his apprenticeship to the printing business with Bradford, in Philadelphia, the contemporary of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, and removed to Frederick with the good wishes of Bradford and Franklin, as offering a good field for a printing-office and the establishment of a newspaper.

With the approbation and encouragement of Governor Thomas Johnson, Governor Thomas Sim Lee, Gen. Roger Nelson, Abraham Faw, George Murdoch and others, the first newspaper ever published in Frederick County was by Matthias Bartgis, Jan. 4, 1786, issued from his office in North Market Street, entitled the Maryland Chronicle, or Universal Advertiser. It was issued every Wednesday, at the rate of sixpence per copy, or eleven shillings and three pence per annum. It had a circulation of about one hundred and fifty copies to commence with. At that period there was no regularly established post-office, and the papers were sent to subscribers outside of Frederick Town, Baltimore, Hagerstown, Winchester, etc., by private post.

The following is the heading, etc., of the third number issued:

(No. 3.)

The MARYLAND CHRONICLE, or THE UNIVERSAL ADVERTISER.

Qui nova desiderat, perorodt vicera nostra: Affero delicias fortuitoque corum.

(Published every Wednesday.)

Wednesday, January 18, 1786.

Price six Pence.

Subscriptions for this paper are taken by Mr. Benjamin Maggrove, in Liberty Town; Mr. Nicholas Techudy, in Baltimore; Mr. John Morris, in York Town; Mr. Wendel Keller, in Hanover Town; Mr. Patrick McSherry, in Little's Town; Mr. William Renner, in Tawney Town; Mr. Frederick Stemple, in Middle Town; Mr. Frederick Geyger, in Funk's Town; Mr. John Ragen, in Hager's Town; Mr. John Hoeflich, in New Castle; Mr. David Harvey, in Sharpsburg; Mr. Cornelia Wynkoop, in Shepherd's Town; Mr. David Lash, in Leesburg; Mr. Alexander Rodgers, in Martinsburg; Mr. Henry Baker, in Winchester; Mr. Solomon Jones, in Prince William County; Mr. Hugh McDowell, in Staunton, Virginia; and by the editor, Matthias Bartgis.

P.S.—I purpose, should sufficient encouragement offer, to establish a Post from this place to Winchester, to carry my English and German News-Papers to Funk's Town, Hager's Town, Sharpsburg, Shepherd's Town, Martinsburg, and Winchester.

The title of the paper was subsequently changed to the Maryland Gazette, or Frederick County Advertiser, in 1792.

The first number under this title was issued May 22d, and was a folded sheet the size of letter-paper. Its price was seven shillings and sixpence per annum.

In 1794 the name was changed to the Federal Gazette, and in 1801 to the Republican Gazette, and continued with this title until 1820, when Mr. Bartgis sold out his interest in the paper and retired.

Mr. Bartgis, during the time of his connection with a printing-office and newspaper in Frederick Town, published for a number of years the "Poor Robin Almanac," Lutheran hymn and prayer-books, a "History of the Revolution in Scriptural Style," and sundry other books and pamphlets. He also printed and published from 1803 to 1813 a paper called The Hornet, in English and German, with the motto,—

"To true Republicans I will sing,
But aristocrats shall feel my sting."

When he retired from business, Mr. Bartgis sold his interest in the paper to Robert Ritchie and John Macgill, by whom it was continued for several years. During his connection with the office, Mr. Bartgis had for a partner in 1811 his son, Matthias E. Bartgis, and William B. Burke in 1817.

Mr. Bartgis was not a brilliant writer, but was a good printer, and was conversant with the English, German, French, and Latin languages. He was a liberal-hearted man, and a little eccentric at times. He was extensively acquainted in Frederick County, but did not accumulate great wealth during his connection with the printing business. He died about the year 1825, at his residence near the old paper-mill, on the Tuscarora, owned by himself, and was buried about three miles northwest of Frederick, in the old Trout (now Cronise's) burying-ground.

Robert Ritchie and John Macgill took charge of the Republican Gazette after the retirement of Matthias Bartgis, and edited and published it for three or four years. In the year 1823 the firm of Ritchie & Macgill was dissolved. Robert Ritchie continued the Republican Gazette until his death.

Rights of Man.—John Winter, who was a practical printer, schoolmaster, etc., published the Rights of Man in Frederick Town and County from 1790 to 1802. He also taught school in Bentzown, near the old market-house. He was a Washingtonian Federalist of the old school. He left Frederick Town for several years, but returned in August, 1806. He was very fond of attending barbecues on the banks of
FREDERICK COUNTY.

Monocacy and Bush Creek on the Fourth of July. Mr. Winter was a native of one of the lower counties of Maryland, and was said to be a distant relative of Henry Winter Davis.

He had a son, also named John Winter, as eccentric as himself, who carried around the Rights of Man and delivered them to the subscribers of that paper. He generally went bareheaded and barefooted.

The Key.—In 1798, 1799, and 1800, Dr. John D. Cary, of Frederick Town, published a small paper in book form, entitled The Key, in compliment to Gen. John Ross Key,—a Key to unlock the secrets of men's hearts. His nephew, Hon. George Cary, emigrated from Frederick Town to Georgia, and was subsequently chosen a member of Congress from that State. Its first number was issued Jan. 13, 1798, and was printed at the office of the Federal Gazette, in Market Street.

Frederick Town Herald.—In 1802, John P. Thompson, a practical printer, from Carlisle, Pa., at the solicitation of the late Judge Richard Potts, Col. William Campbell, Dr. Philip Thomas, Col. John McPherson, George Baer, Dr. Francis Brown Sappington, and other leading Federalists, removed to Frederick and established the Frederick Town Herald. Its first number was issued June 23, 1802. He published it for a period of about thirty years, and sold the office to William Ogden Niles, of Baltimore, son of Hezekiah Niles, of Niles' Weekly Register. Mr. Niles edited and published the paper for four or five years, and then sold it to Ezekiel Hughes, son of Jeremiah Hughes, of Annapolis, Md. Mr. Niles was a good writer, and especially upon the subject of the tariff, American tonnage, navigation, and commerce was well posted. He left Frederick and removed to Washington City, when he changed his notions upon the subject of a tariff, became a sort of free-trader, and obtained a situation in the Treasury Department under Hon. Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury in the days of James K. Polk's administration. Mr. Niles, Peter G. Washington, and Robert H. Bobardus, of New York, aided Mr. Walker very much in framing the free-trade tariff of 1816, which passed Congress. He died in Washington City some years ago.

Ezekiel Hughes succeeded Mr. Niles in the publication and editorship of the Herald. He published it for a number of years, and took into partnership with him Mr. Levely. It was published for eight or ten years by Hughes & Levely, and afterwards by Thomas Turner. From Mr. Turner it passed into the hands of George D. Miller, a practical printer, a native of Queen Anne's County, on the Eastern Shore, and Col. Thomas Sappington, at one time a member of the House of Delegates, State senator, and register of wills of this county. These gentlemen printed and published it for several years, and then sold the office to Lewis F. Coppersmith, son-in-law of the late Isaac Bangher, and projector of the Coppersmith building, corner of Market and Church Streets. From Coppersmith it passed into the hands of George W. Beekenbaugh and Charles B. Woodward, then to Beekenbaugh and William L. W. Seabrook, etc., and afterwards into the hands of the late Capt. John W. Heard. But in 1860 and 1861 it advocated the secession movement, for which, in 1861, it was suppressed by a military order of the department commander, and the materials, fixtures, files, etc., sold, and purchased by Elwin H. Rockwell, of Frederick.

Col. Sappington, Mr. Miller, Mr. Coppersmith, and Capt. John W. Heard died some years ago. Mr. Hughes, Mr. Seabrook, and Mr. Beekenbaugh are still living.—Mr. Hughes, at Washington, D. C.; Mr. Beekenbaugh, at Fairview, Washington Co., Md.; and Mr. Seabrook, at Westminster, Carroll Co., Md.

Republican Advocate.—In 1803, John B. Colvin, at the request of Gen. Samuel Smith and Hon. William Pinkney, of Baltimore, and Thomas Hawkins and Samuel Duvall, of Frederick County, commenced the publication of a paper in Frederick Town and County called the Republican Advocate. It was continued until 1808—9. Mr. Colvin was a native of Albany, N. Y., and during the contest in 1800 between Adams and Jefferson for President published the Daily Advertiser, in Baltimore, in support of Jefferson. In 1807 he left, Frederick Town and removed to Washington City, where he established and published The Monitor, National Register, and other papers. In 1824 he edited the Washington City Gazette, in support of William H. Crawford for the Presidency. He was a brilliant and forcible writer, and was the author of the letters signed "Nuua," addressed to John Randolph of Roanoke. He compiled the "Magistrate's Guide" for the use of justices of the peace in Maryland. He was a great linguist, and employed for a number of years in the State Department, Washington City, under Adams and Monroe. He was the confidential friend of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe during their administrations. In the years 1804, 1805, 1806, and 1807, when he resided in Frederick and published the Republican Advocate, the Federalists made no opposition to the Republican ticket, but in the next year, 1808, elected their ticket by four hundred majority to the Legislature.

Silas Engles, a practical printer, succeeded Mr. Colvin in the publication of the Republican Advocate. In 1811 the paper ceased to exist.

Independent American Volunteer.—In 1807 the Independent American Volunteer made its appearance in Frederick Town, edited and published by William B. Underwood. The Volunteer was continued for a year or two, then merged into the Republican Advocate, and in 1811 both papers were discontinued. Mr. Underwood then went from Frederick Town to Baltimore, where for a short period he published the Minerva, a literary and scientific paper. From Baltimore he went to Carlisle, Pa., where he commenced the publication of the American Volunteer as a Democratic paper, which is still in existence.

A German Paper.—March 14, 1810, a German Republican paper issued its first number, then suspended for two or three weeks to give the people time to subscribe, when it was to have been issued regularly.

The Genius of Liberty was published at Uniontown, in Frederick County, by Charles Sower in 1812. It was a paper devoted to the interests of the Federal party. It was published until 1815, when it took the name of the Star of Federalism, and the office was removed to Frederick Town. It was published in that place up to the year 1821, when Charles Sower died. In the faction fight between the two wings of the old Federal party in this county,—"Hansonites" and "Taneyites,"—Mr. Sower supported the "Hansonite" wing. He was a genial, clever gentleman and a good printer, and published several novels.

The Plain Dealer, by Charles T. Melsheimer, was published in Frederick Town from 1812 to 1815. It was an aggressive Federal paper, and was violently opposed to the war of 1812-14. The Hon. John Hanson Thomas and Hon. Alexander Countee Hanson contributed largely to its columns. The father of Mr. Melsheimer also published a German paper in Frederick Town.

The Westminster Chronicle, by ——— ———, was published for a year or two at Westminster, then in Frederick County, in 1818.

Family Gazette.—In 1820 a small paper, called the Family Gazette, was published in Frederick by George Kolb and William Daugherty. It was chiefly devoted to religious affairs.

The Family Visitor, a literary paper, was published in Frederick Town by George F. Stayman. It was edited in good part by the Rev. Mr. Harkey.

The Examiner was started in May, 1813, and edited and published by Samuel Barnes from his office in Patrick Street, under the title of the Political Examiner and Public Advertiser. Mr. Barnes was born in Queen Anne's County, and served his time in the printing business in the office of the Baltimore American. In 1811, in connection with Baptiste Irvine, he edited and published the Baltimore Daily Whip. At the request and instance of Gen. Samuel Smith and Hon. William Pinkney, of Baltimore, and Geo. Joseph Swearingen, Gen. Thomas C. Worthington, Thomas Hawkins, Dr. Grafton Duvall, Joshua Cockey, and other leading Republicans of Frederick County, he removed to Frederick, and commenced the publication of the Examiner. He was nominated a candidate on the Republican ticket for the House of Delegates in 1819, but was defeated. In 1824, 1825, and 1826 he was elected to the House of Delegates from Frederick County. He was a candidate in 1827 on the Adams and Clay ticket, but was defeated. Mr. Barnes was a warm friend and admirer of Henry Clay. After he sold the office in 1832 to George E. Woodbridge, he removed to Baltimore, where he edited the Daily Chronicle and Daily Clipper, papers published in that city. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and one of the old defenders of Baltimore in 1812. Mr. Barnes, David Schley, Frederick A. Schley, and Charles H. Kiefer, who were at one time connected as editors and proprietors of this paper, are all dead. Neilson Poe, John H. Williams, Thomas Haller, David M. Smith, editors and former proprietors, are still living; as also Messrs. Harry C. Keefer and Charles E. Krauf, its present editors and publishers. The Examiner is a weekly paper. The whole number of issues up to June 15, 1881, is stated at 3975, which number divided by 52 would give 76 volumes and 23 numbers over. In the opposite corner the volume is stated to be the 77th, No. 24, or 15, 1881, is stated at 3975, which number divided by 52 would give 76 volumes and 23 numbers over. In the opposite corner the volume is stated to be the 77th, No. 24. So that in that long period the paper has never failed to make its weekly appearance, and it now presents a hale and vigorous countenance. It is the largest and most widely-circulated paper in Western Maryland, and its advertising and job-printing were never more lucrative than now. Its editors and proprietors are constantly making it more useful, interesting, and entertaining. In 1816 it supported James Monroe and Daniel D. Tompkins for President and Vice-President (Lawrence Brengle and John Buchanan were then elected for this district).

In 1820 it supported the re-election of the same candidates; in 1824 it advocated the election of Henry Clay and Nathan Sandford for the two highest positions of the government (Dr. William Zolliekoffer, of Frederick, and William Gabby, of Washington County, being the electors of those districts); in 1828 it supported John Quincy Adams and Richard Rush. The county that year gave Adams about four hundred majority over Jackson. In 1832 it advocated the election of Henry Clay and John Sargeant, and in 1836 that of William Henry Harrison and Francis Granger; in 1840, Harrison and Tyler—"Tippecanoe and Tyler too"—were at its mast-head; in 1844, Clay and Frelinghysen were its candidates; in 1848, Gen. Taylor and Millard Fillmore; in 1852, Gen. Scott and William A. Graham; in 1856, Millard Fillmore and Andrew Jackson Donelson; and in 1860, John Bell and Edward Everett. Then came the great Rebellion, in which it espoused the side of the Union, and rendered great services to the government by its manly and patriotic course. It supported in 1864, Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson; in 1868, Gen. Grant and Schuyler Colfax; in 1872, Gen. Grant and Henry Wilson; in 1876, R. B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler; and in 1880, J. A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur.

It is scarcely necessary to add that it is thoroughly Republican in its political tone. It has always been conservative but outspoken, and its honorable history is closely interwoven with that of the county, whose best interests it has so ably advocated in the three-quarters of a century of its existence.

While in Frederick, in 1828, Mr. Barnes published a campaign paper at The Examiner office called the Anti-Jacksonian, the leading writers for which were Dr. Henry Staley, William V. Morgan, and Dr. Grafton Duvall.

In 1833, Mr. Barnes sold out his office to George Woodbridge, of Connecticut, a gentleman who afterwards became a prominent preacher at Richmond, Va. Mr. Woodbridge edited the paper for a short time, and then sold out the establishment to Mr. Neilson Poe, now judge of the Orphans' Court in Baltimore, the son of Jacob Poe, and a native of Frederick County.

In 1838 or 1839, Mr. Poe, who studied law in the office of the late William Gwyn, of Baltimore, tired of the editorial profession, after gallantly supporting the Whig party and the election of William Cost Johnson to Congress, removed to Baltimore City and resumed the vocation of the law.

John H. Williams and William W. Markell succeeded Mr. Poe in the publication of The Examiner. Mr. Markell shortly afterwards withdrew from the paper on account of ill health. Mr. Markell died soon afterwards, and Mr. Williams continued the paper on his own account until 1849.

In 1849, David Schley and Thomas Haller succeeded Mr. Williams. In 1852, David Schley died, and Frederick Schley purchased his interest, and continued up to 1858, when Charles H. Keefer purchased an interest, and the firm of Schley, Haller & Co. then commenced.

In 1863, on account of ill health, Thomas Haller sold his interest in The Examiner office to Charles E. Knauff, and the firm then was Schley, Kuefer & Co. In 1865, Frederick Schley retired from the paper, and David M. Smith purchased his interest, and the firm then was Keefer, Smith & Co., and continued so until Nov. 22, 1875, when Charles H. Keefer and Charles E. Knauff purchased his interest, and he retired. Charles H. Keefer was killed by a railroad accident June 12, 1877, and was succeeded by his talented brother, Harry C. Keefer.

During the years 1813 and 1814, in the months of August and September,—the war period,—the paper was published twice a week.

During the editorial career of Barnes, Woodbridge, Poe, Williams, David Schley, Frederick Schley, Charles H. Keefer, and others, as the advocate of the old Republican, Whig, American, and modern Republican parties, The Examiner has maintained a "bold front." It is now the oldest paper in the county, and has the most extensive patronage of any in the county.

The Republican Citizen.—The Republican Citizen and State Advertiser was commenced at Westminster in May, 1821, by George W. Sharp, who removed to Westminster from Marietta, Lancaster Co., Pa. After publishing the paper a short time in Westminster, Mr. Sharp removed the office to Frederick Town, Md. The paper while published there first supported Wm. H. Crawford for the Presidency as the "regular nominee" of the Republican party, but in 1828 and 1832 supported the claims of Gen. Andrew Jackson to the Presidency. Mr. Sharp continued to publish the paper until 1832, when he sold it to Dr. Samuel H. McKeeban, of Emmitsburg. This gentleman died in 1833, and the paper passed into the hands of Peter H. Brown, son of Matthew Brown, of Flecy Dale, Frederick County. When Mr. Brown retired from the Citizen office the paper became the property of Messrs. Frederick Rigney and Wm. M. B. McLanahan.

From Rigney & McLanahan, about the year 1843, the Citizen passed into the hands of John W. Baughman, who continued to edit and publish it to the day of his death. For a short period J. Lawson Norris was connected with Mr. Baughman as associate editor. Upon the death of John W. Baughman, in 1872, the Citizen passed into the hands of his two sons, L. Victor and J. Wm. Baughman, under the firm of Baugh-
During the Presidential campaigns the Citizen has uniformly supported the nominations regularly made according to the usages of the Democratic party,—Crawford, Jackson, Van Buren, Polk, Cass, Pierce, Buchanan, Breckenridge, McClellan, Seymour, Greeley, Tilden, and Hancock.

John W. Baughman was arrested by the Federal authorities in 1862, and incarcerated at the Old Capitol in Washington, and released on the day of the battle of Bull Run, through the intercession of his most intimate friends, Hon. Henry May and Robert J. Brent, of Baltimore City. In 1863 the Citizen was suspended from the United States mails for nine months, by order of Postmaster-General Montgomery Blair. In 1864, Mr. Baughman was arrested by Gen. Hunter, his paper suppressed, his property confiscated, and he sent beyond the Federal lines. A few days after, by order of Maj. John I. Yellott, provost-marshal of Frederick, Mrs. Baughman and her children were banished from home, and sent beyond the Federal lines, in Clark County, Va. The publication of this old-established journal was resumed in August, 1865, by John W. Baughman. For sixty years this paper has been the acknowledged organ of the Democratic party of the county, and in ability and in successful business management is not surpassed by any paper in Maryland. It is a four-page sheet of thirty-two columns, and makes a specialty of the latest and newsiest local events, while its reputation for well-written editorials gives it high rank among the journals of the State.

John W. Baughman was a native of "Merryland Tract" in Frederick County. At thirteen years of age he came to Frederick City. His father was a highly respectable farmer, his grandfather being captain of a vessel which brought many of the original settlers of Frederick County to this country. In early life young Baughman was thrown upon his own personal resources. He entered as a clerk the store of Francis Leuber, a merchant in Frederick, and a little later spent two years at St. John's Institution (now college), where he received all the academic education he ever obtained. He then returned to his commercial occupation, and was engaged for several years in Frederick and in Baltimore City. After reaching manhood he formed a partnership with a young merchant in Baltimore in the commission business, and by his untiring industry and strict integrity he succeeded in building up one of the largest trades in Baltimore. Though he did not acquire wealth, he won a reputation in Baltimore for honor, intelligence, and genial disposition which procured him troops of friends, who loved and honored him to the hour of his death, and who will long cherish his memory.

About 1841-42 he commenced (at the suggestion of the friend of his boyhood; ex-Governor Lowe) the study of the law under Gen. James M. Coale. Two years later he was admitted to the bar, and formed a law partnership with Governor Lowe, which continued until he assumed the editorial duties of the Republican Citizen in 1845. Having married most happily in 1844 (Mary Jane, daughter of Baker Jamison, one of the most prominent and well-known citizens of the county, who was connected with oldest Catholic families of Maryland, and whose daughter was regarded as one of the most attractive women in this section of the State), and finding the practice of the legal profession by two young beginners hardly adequate to the support of a family, he was persuaded by his friends to purchase the Citizen. His public life as a journalist for twenty-five years is too well known to the people of Frederick, of the county, and of the State, to need further comment than that he was at all times "a fearless champion of popular rights, the brave defender of civil and religious liberty."

During the administration of Mr. Lowe as Governor of Maryland, John W. Baughman filled the office of inspector-general of flour at Baltimore, then the principle flour mart of the Union.

Under the administration of President Buchanan, without solicitation, he was appointed appraiser-general of the port of Baltimore. He was averse to office-seeking and even to office-holding; in the two instances above mentioned his friends, knowing well his fitness and merits, fairly forced him to accept the places put at his disposal.

Mr. Baughman had always been a pronounced Democrat, and through his journal taken a leading part in the politics of the State.

During the civil war he passed through a stormy existence. After imprisonment in the Old Capitol, suppression of his paper from the mails, mobs at his office, insults to his wife and family, he was finally arrested, his property confiscated, and he banished beyond the Federal lines, his wife and four children (the eldest, Victor, being in the Southern army) sent to follow him a few days after. He was one of the boldest and most fearless writers in the State, and a true and ardent friend of the South. During his banishment he was placed in the Third Auditor's office in Richmond by his warm friend Gen. Breckenridge, then Secretary of War; his son William was with him, he being a member of the Richmond defenders. Mrs. Baughman, with her daughters, Mary Louisa, and Corinne, and her youngest son Charles H. S., spent their banishment with Col. Dearmont, a kind and well-known citizen of Clark County, Va. L. Victor, the eldest son, was a member of Capt. McAleer's company of the Maryland line, and remained with the infantry until the army crossed to the south bank of the James River. He participated in the battles of Malvern Hill and Gaines' Farm. He afterwards joined Company D, First Maryland Cavalry, under Capt. Welsh, and was with Early and Breckenridge in their raid through Maryland in 1864, as also the famous Chambersburg raid, and was captured at Moorfield, Va., and imprisoned in Camp Chase, Ohio, for nine months, being exchanged in March, 1865, just prior to the fall of Richmond. After the war Mr. J. W. Baughman and family returned to their home and friends, and he to his editorial duties. He was welcomed with open arms and glad hearts by the Democracy of Frederick County, who ever delighted to honor him. Only a few weeks before his death the party elected him as a delegate from his Congressional district to the National Democratic Convention in Baltimore (which convention nominated Greeley for the Presidency), but he was unable to attend, on account of an illness contracted in the South, from which he never recovered. He died July 31, 1872. His wife is still living in Frederick.

L. Victor Baughman, the eldest child, was colonel on the staff of Governors James Black Gроome and John Lee Carroll, prominent in the politics of the State, and a delegate to the Cincinnati Convention which nominated Hancock in 1880. He was married on the 27th of September, 1881, to Helen M. Abell, fourth daughter of Hon. A. S. Abell, the veteran publisher and proprietor of the Baltimore Sun. J. William Baughman is also well known in his county and State, is still single, and was unanimously elected reading clerk of the House of Delegates of the State in 1882.

Charles H. Stonestreet Baughman married in 1872 the eldest daughter of Capt. J. W. Heard, and is associated with his brothers. The two daughters are single, and live with their mother.

Lutheran Evangelical Intelligencer.—In 1824, '25, and '26, George W. Sharp printed the Lutheran Evangelical Intelligencer at the Citizen office, a paper edited by Rev. David F. Schaeffer, L.L.D., of Frederick.

The Reservoir and Public Reflector.—In 1824, John Magill commenced a paper called The Reservoir and Public Reflector, and advocated the introduction of a supply of fresh mountain water into Frederick Town. In other respects the Reservoir was a literary paper, but did not touch upon political matters.

Intellectual Regale and Evening Companion.—In 1824, '25, and '26 there was a small paper published in Frederick by the printer apprentices, called the Intellectual Regale and Evening Companion. It was devoted to fun and amusement. The publishers of the paper were George, Richard, Wm. Weber, Wm. Janvier, Samuel Davidson, B. S. Bullinich, Thompson Bennett, and others.

Political Intelligencer and Public Advertiser.—In 1825, Charles Nagle commenced the publication of a paper called the Political Intelligencer and Public Advertiser. It had a brief existence. Henry Bickley, then a schoolmaster of Frederick, chiefly contributed to its columns.

The People, a Jacksonian campaign paper, was published in Frederick in 1828, the chief contributors to which were Hon. Francis Thomas, Hon. Madison Nelson, David Schley, and others.

The Regulator.—In 1831, Samuel Davidson, a practical printer, son of the Rev. Patrick Davidson, of Frederick, commenced the publication of a paper at Taneytown, in Frederick County, called The Regulator. He published the paper for several years and then sold the office to Col. John K. Longwell, who published it a short time and then changed the name to the Carrolltonian, and removed it to Westminster to advocate the division of Frederick County and fornated of Carroll County. The paper is now called the American Sentinel, a Republican paper printed at Westminster. Mr. Davidson removed to the State of Ohio.

The Sentinel.—In 1833, James Maxwell, a printer, published a paper in Frederick Town entitled The Sentinel, devoted principally to the election of James Dixon, Esq., to Congress, and the defeat of Hon. Francis Thomas, but failed in the effort. The Sentinel did not last long.

Frederick Times.—In 1835, Col. James M. Shellman published a paper in Frederick Town called the Frederick Times. Edward A. Lynch, a well-known lawyer and Whig orator of the county, was connected with him for a short time as associate editor. Col. Shellman removed to Westminster.

Frederick Visitor.—The Frederick Visitor was published in Frederick by Thomas Haller in 1838. He also published a paper called the Olive Branch in 1843 in connection with Thomas C. Prince. It was edited by Revs. Daniel Zacharias, John L. Pettis, and Simon W. Harkey.

The Times and Democratic Advocate.—After Mr. Van Buren, in 1837, advocated the divorce of Bank and State, and the establishment of the Independent Treasury, the Conservative party in Congress, under the lead of William C. Rives, Nathaniel P. Tallmage, and others, commenced organizing throughout the country. In 1837 The Times and Democratic Advocate was commenced in Frederick by Barzelia Marriott, and published by him for several years. Christian Getzendanner succeeded him in the publication of this paper. It was regarded as a faction paper in the ranks of the Democratic party, and did not make much headway. Through the opposition of Hon. Francis Thomas and others, the paper soon ceased to exist.

Frederick News.—In 1845, Coombs & Wheeler published the Frederick News in Frederick. It was devoted to literary affairs and local topics, and claimed to be the cheapest paper published in the State: seventy-five cents per month.

Maryland Union.—The Democratic Union was established in Frederick City in 1853 by Col. William P. Maulsky, a member of the Frederick County bar, who continued to edit and publish it until August, 1855, when he disposed of the office to Dr. John W. Geyer, who changed its name to that of the Maryland Union. Dr. Geyer published the Maryland Union until June, 1857, when he sold the office to Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, Charles Cole, and Clarke Koontz. The health of Koontz failing he soon retired from the business, and died in less than a year after he started into it. His interest having been purchased by Mr. Cole, the paper was published and the business conducted by Johnson & Cole until shortly after the nominations of Stephen A. Douglas and John C. Breckinridge for President, when, as Johnson preferred Breckinridge, and Cole preferred Douglas, Johnson withdrew, and afterwards entered the service of the Southern Confederacy, where he soon rose to the rank of a brigadier-general. After the withdrawal of Johnson a young and promising lawyer, by the name of James T. Smith, associated for a short time with Mr. Cole in the publication of the Maryland Union. He was a man of high spirit and dauntless courage, and became first lieutenant of Capt. Faithful’s company of the Union army in 1863, and was killed in the battle of Gettysburg on the 4th of July of the same year. Since then the Maryland Union has been under the exclusive management and control of Charles Cole. It is a Democratic Conservative newspaper, firm in its political convictions, and bold at all times in the expression of its sentiments, but never running to extremes. Hence, in 1860, it supported Douglas for President, and when the war between the North and the South broke out it espoused the cause of the Union and rendered effective service. It could not, however, indorse all that had been done by authority of the government during the war, and its criticisms having offended some of those in power who entertained different views, its editor and his family, together with about twenty-five other families of Frederick City, were arrested by order of Gen. Hunter, to be sent South across the lines three days thereafter, but President Lincoln disapproved the order, and it was finally revoked. No Maryland Union was issued for that week, and it was the only week in which that paper failed to make its appearance from June, 1857, to the present time.

Frederick Republican.—In 1867 a small advertising and news sheet called The Advertiser, published by Marcellus M. Shaffner, John W. Ebert, and David H. Moberly, made its appearance in Frederick. For six or eight months it was published daily,—being the first daily published in the city.

In 1868 it was purchased by Col. George W. Z. Black, who changed the name to the Frederick Republican, advocated negro suffrage, and made it an uncompromising Republican journal. It did not succeed very well. In 1871 it was discontinued, the office being sold to a printing establishment in Philadelphia. Col. Black was appointed postmaster of Frederick at the commencement of Grant’s administration, held the position for several years, resigned, and went to Washington City.
Sunday Morning Visitor.—In 1870, John W. Ebert and Foster S. McBride started a printing-office in Frederick and published a paper called the Sunday Morning Visitor, devoted to temperance and Christianity. It was discontinued after a year or so.

Maryland Herald.—In 1870 the Maryland Herald, by Samuel L. Gouverneur, made its appearance from the office purchased from Ebert & McBride. It was started as an independent paper, "Independent in all things—Neutral in nothing." It warmly endorsed the Liberal Republican movement in 1872, and supported Horace Greeley for President. The paper did not survive long afterwards. Mr. Gouverneur, a grandson of President Monroe, now resides in Washington City.

The Frederick Times, a weekly paper, was commenced in Frederick and the first number issued on the 4th of January, 1876, by David M. Smith, previously connected for a few years with the Examiner office. Mr. Smith shortly afterwards sold out his interest in the office to the Frederick Publishing Company, John W. Kauffman, editor.

It is now published by Kauffman & Bouldin. Their daily paper, the only one in the county, and a sprightly, newsy, and enterprising sheet, is in its fourth volume.

The Moon.—This is a four-page weekly amateur journal, devoted to literature, poetry, local affairs, etc. Fifty cents per annum. It is in its second volume, and is published by P. & T. McCleery, No. 177 North Market Street.

Miscellaneous.—There were a number of ephemeral papers published in Frederick County, in old Federal and Republican times, merely as campaign papers for a month or two, and also in the election contests between Hon. Francis Thomas and his opponents. Notably, a so-called Democratic sheet published by Jacob Markell, John Sifford, Henry Boteler, and others, in support of Mr. Thomas as an Independent Democrat for Congress.

Several small sheets have been published for a short time by the young ladies of the Frederick Female Seminary, etc., and by other parties, as literary and juvenile productions.

The following persons are among the well-known and authenticated contributors to the Frederick County press, from the appearance of the first number of the Maryland Chronicle, or Universal Advertiser, Jan. 4, 1786, down to the present time:

The following is a list of poets native of or connected with Frederick County:

David Steiner, George Trisler, John Winter, Dr. John D. Cary, Francis Scott Key, Edgar Allen Poe, Benjamin S. Bulfinch, William V. Morgan, Mrs. Emily N. Maulsby, Mrs. Nellie Oyster, Miss Inez Bifer, Miss Jennie Waechter, Hon. George Cary, Prof. George H. Miles, Col. Charles E. Trail, Patrick O'Neill, Frederick Houck.

Notes on Frederick Printers and Members of the Press.—Overton Harne attained the greatest age of any printer connected with the press of Frederick County. He died in 1873, at the residence of his son, between Hagerstown and Williamsport, at the advanced age of ninety-seven. He served apprenticeship at the printing business with Matthias Bartgis, in Frederick Town, in the year 1797.

William Noland, who served his time with John B. Colvin at the printing business in Frederick Town Republican Advocate office, 1803-7, was one of the swiftest type-setters and most extensive tramp printers in the country. He was known all over the United States. Born near Noland's Ferry, Frederick Co. Died at Georgetown, D. C.

Matthew Brown, of Fleecy Dale, Frederick Co., was long connected with the press of Baltimore City and Frederick County. He wrote considerably, and devoted much of his time to agriculture and wool-growing.

John P. Thompson, the richest printer in Frederick County, was president of the Frederick County Bank, and worth about one hundred thousand dollars when he died.

John B. Colvin was considered the ablest editor, but poorest in a pecuniary point of view, ever connected with the press of Frederick County. He published the Republican Advocate in 1803-7. He died in Washington City in 1827.

John Porter died in Rockville, Montgomery Co., Md., where he published a paper and kept a hotel.
Wm. B. Burke published the Maryland Journal in Rockville in 1827. He warmly supported the re-election of John Quincy Adams in 1828. His paper was the organ of the party.

George Richard Weber, who served as apprentice with Ritchie & Magill in Frederick Town, published a paper called the Illinois Register, at Springfield, Sangamon Co., Ill., a paper still in existence. He was intimately acquainted with Abraham Lincoln. William Weber, his brother, who also served his time in the same office, published the Hagerstown Mail, was a member of the House of Delegates for Washington County, and published the Alleganian. He now lives in Cumberland.

John Rigdon, who served his time at the printing business with George W. Sharp, in Frederick, went West, and became a Methodist preacher, and succeeded very well.

George W. Sharp, editor of the Citizen, removed West to Delaware County, Ohio, started a woolen-factory in that place, was elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1842, and was made chairman of the Committee on Banks and Banking. He died in Ohio.

George F. Stayman, who served his time with Mr. Sharp, printed a Democratic paper in Delaware County, Ohio. He now resides in Piqua, Miami Co., Ohio.

William Ritchie, who edited and published the Republicon Gazette in 1823–24, etc., was clerk of the tax commissioners of Frederick County for many years, brother-in-law of Ezra Mantz, and son of William Ritchie, formerly clerk of Frederick County Court.

Augustus H. Krauth, who served an apprenticeship in Frederick with John Magill at the Reservoir office, went to New York, and was at one time one of the proprietors of the New York Sunday Mercury. His brother, Frederick Krauth, published a paper in Almeda County, Cal.

Charles Nagle, editor of the Political Intelligencer, afterwards worked in the office of the Vicksburg (Miss.) Sentinel, in 1839 and 1840.

Mr. Janvier was from Princeton, N. J. He served his time in the Frederick Town Herald office. Mr. John P. Thompson was his uncle.

John T. Jackson, who was an apprentice with William Ogden Niles, in Baltimore, and worked with him in Frederick, in the Herald office, went to California in 1849, worked in the Pioyune office in San Francisco in 1851, and at the time of the great fire, when the office was burnt up, went to the placer diggings, or gold-mines.

George D. Miller was born in Queen Anne's County, Md. He served with Capt. Matthews, editor of the Kent Bugle, in Chestertown, Kent Co., and worked in Philadelphia and New York as a journeyman printer. He was for several years connected with Col. John K. Longwell, of Westminster, in the publication of the Carrolltonian newspaper; and afterwards with Col. Thomas Sappington in the publication of the Frederick Herald.

Frederick Schley, who for a number of years was connected with The Examiner newspaper as chief editor, was a strong and vigorous writer. He died Jan. 24, 1875, and lies buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery. A beautiful monument of Italian marble has recently been placed over his grave.

Dr. John D. Cary, who published the Key in 1798–1800, was noted for many good qualities. Capt. Lewis Green and Capt. Henry Brish, who married two of his daughters, moved to Tiffin, Seneca Co., Ohio. Frederick Green, son of Capt. Lewis Green, and great-grandson of Jonas Green, of the Maryland Gazette, Annapolis, was elected to Congress from the Tiffin District, Ohio, some years ago. In 1846, or thereabouts, The Cleveland Herald published in its paper the contents (entire) of the Maryland Gazette, published at Annapolis in 1776.

Charles Hammond was a native of New Market District, Frederick Co., was a lawyer in Ohio, and at one time (during the war of 1812–14) published the Ohio Federalist, St. Clairsville, Belmont Co., Ohio, and afterwards the Liberty Hall and Cincinnati Gazette, published in Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Hammond was one of the ablest editors and lawyers in Ohio. He was a warm friend of Henry Clay. He was also a great friend of John Hanson Thomas, of Frederick Town.

Henry S. Geyer, son of John Geyer, saddler, of Frederick Town, nephew of Daniel Sheffey and Lawrence Bringle, first mayor of Frederick Town, wrote considerable for the Frederick Town papers. He studied law in Frederick, and had some knowledge of the printing business. He moved to Staunton, Augusta Co., Va.; from there to St. Louis, Mo., where he wrote considerable for the Missouri Republican, and in 1833 was one of the editors of the St. Louis Times. He was a member of the convention of Missouri which framed the first constitution of that State. In 1850 he was elected to the United States Senate from Missouri over the Hon. Thomas Hart Benton, defeating "Old Bullion," a senator of thirty years' standing, the first time he was defeated in Missouri for the United States senatorship. John Geyer, Daniel Sheffey, and Lawrence Bringle published a "Diary" of events in Frederick County from 1776 to 1795, after the manner of Jacob Engelbrecht. That "Diary" was last seen in the possession of Jonas Geyer, a son of John Geyer, brother-in-law of Lawrence Brengle, and brother of Henry S. Geyer.

William M. B. McLanahan, at one time connected with the Republican Citizen office as editor and publisher, went West, and became acquainted with Col. Theodore O'Hara, editor of the Frankfort (Ky.) Yeoman. With Col. O'Hara, Crittenden, and others he joined the "Lopez Expedition" against the city of Havana, Cuba, in 1851. With Narciso Lopez, the expedition was captured by the Spaniards, and Lopez, Crittenden, O'Hara, Victor Kerr, McLanahan were captured by the Spaniards, charged and convicted with being filibusters, and were "garroted."

Toler Wolfe, who worked for a considerable time as a journeyman printer in the Herald and Citizen office, and in Winchester, Va., and Washington, D. C., went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he worked for a considerable time, and then emigrated to the Rocky Mountains and Oregon. He was a great friend of George Trisler.

Alexander Sterett, printer, was last heard of at Natchez, Miss., working on the Mississippi Freetrader.

David F. Smith, a printer, keeps a variety store, the "Temple of Fancy," in Frederick City.

Silas Engels, printer and editor of the Republican Advocate, died in Frederick Town.

Robert Laird, for many years foreman of the Frederick Town Herald office, in the days of John P. Thompson, was a printer, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. When he left Frederick he went to Pittsburgh, Pa.

H. L. Brady, printer, formerly connected with the Valley Register office, Middletown, is now publishing and editing the Morgan Mercury, in Morgan County, W. Va.

Col. John K. Longwell, formerly connected with the Taneytown Regulator and Carrolltonian newspaper, is now president of one of the national banks of Westminster. He is also one of the directors in the Western Maryland Railroad.

Jerome Barney, son of A. Barney, formerly of this county, is now publishing a paper at San Rafael, Marin Co., Cal., The San Rafael Herald.

George Martin, printer, who served his time with Charles Nagle in the office of the Political Intelligencer and Public Advertiser, Frederick Town, went West many years ago, and his whereabouts are unknown. He is a brother-in-law of J. Alfred Ritter.

John Robinson and Scott Kennedy Young are working in the Government printing-office at Washington City.

George Baltzell is a teacher in the public schools of the city of Frederick.

Judge Jonas D. English, printer, is a farmer in Creagerstown District.

Thomas O'Leary, printer, is working in the Government signal-office, Boston, Mass.

John S. Zittle is publishing the Shepherdstown Register, at Shepherdstown, Jefferson Co., W. Va.

Thomas Turner is publishing a Democratic paper at Upper Marlboro', Prince George's Co., called The Prince Georgian.

Col. James McSherry, who contributed to the Olive Branch, Herald, and other papers of this county, was, as we said, the author of the "History of Maryland," and of several other works of marked interest.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

BANKS AND OTHER FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

In 1787, owing to the large amount of "Continental money" which had been issued during the Revolutionary war, and which had depreciated to such an extent that it became almost worthless, gold and silver became very scarce, in fact, almost disappeared from circulation. The House of Delegates of Maryland in order to relieve the stringency passed a bill for the emission of a large amount of paper money. It excited the community very much, as it was calculated to unsettle all the fixed values of land, houses, and stock, and other property in the State and county. The Senate rejected the bill as fraught with much mischief. At a meeting held at Frederick Town, which was largely attended, in February, 1787, the following action was taken:

"FREDERICK COUNTY, Feb. 14, 1787.

At a respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Frederick County, held at Frederick Town this day, at the request of their delegates, expressed by public advertisements: the abstract of the bill for an emission of paper money on loan, published by the House of Delegates with their address thereon; the message of the Senate accompanying the return of that bill, and their message of the twentieth of January being read, Thomas Sim Lee, Esq., in the chair, and Henry Williams, secretary, the following RESOLVES were entered into.

"This meeting having taken under consideration the abstract of the bill for an emission of paper money on loan, together with the address of the House of Delegates, are of opinion that an emission of paper money on the plan proposed would not be attended with any real advantage to the people of this country, or the community in general, but that it might ultimately plunge us into disgrace and ruin, by adding to the evils we already suffer.

"Therefore, Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Senate acted wisely in rejecting the bill in question, that the reasons assigned on the subject in their message to the House of Delegates clearly evince to us the propriety of their conduct, and proves that in their deliberation they possessed a firm regard for the welfare and happiness of the people at large, as well as for the dignity and honor of the State, which justly entitles them to the approbation and thanks of their constitu-

"Resolved, That this meeting highly approve of the conduct of three of the delegates of this county, in opposing the passage of the said bill, and that it is hereby recommended to the other delegate who voted in favor of it, to co-operate with them in the opposition should a similar bill be introduced at the next session.

"Resolved, That this meeting approve of the conduct of the Senate, in rejecting the bill for the relief of debtors; which we conceive would have had a direct tendency to destroy confidence between individuals, pervert the streams of justice, and give a fatal stab to our commercial interests.

"Resolved, That we also approve of the conduct of the Senate, in refusing the bill for suspending the law which justly secures permanent salaries to the chancellor and judges agreeably to the spirit of the constitution.

"Resolved, That it is the ardent desire of this meeting to see our excellent constitution preserved inviolate, it being happily calculated to diffuse the blessings of freedom and to secure equal rights—and therefore we are of opinion that every attempt made by either branch of the Legislature to infringe any constitutional privilege of the other ought to be dis- countenanced.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion and wish of this meeting that every reasonable exertion should be made by the Legislature at this critical period to succor and strengthen the Federal government of the United States, as well as the government of this State; that we will cheerfully render our assistance as far as our circumstances will admit, and that we have full confidence the necessary aids may be afforded without adopting oppressive measures, while the produce of our land sells for its real value in specie, provided the resources of the State are called forth and judiciously applied.

"Resolved, That this meeting will pay due obedience to the laws, and will endeavor to preserve good order in the community.

"Resolved, That this meeting will further make known our sentiments to our immediate representatives on the subjects proposed for our consideration by instructions.

"Resolved, That the chairman be requested to sign the proceedings of this meeting, and that they be published in the Maryland Chronicle, and Baltimore Journal.

"THOMAS S. LEE, Chairman.

HENRY WILLIAMS, Secretary.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the business men of Frederick had thoroughly mastered the leading principles of a sound system of finance, and to the continuous application of similar rules and methods through a long series of years the community in large measure is indebted for its present prosperity. To the banks of Frederick, indeed, the city may be said to owe its existence, for had it not been for them Frederick would in all probability have been burned by the Confederate forces during the advance into Maryland in 1864. Concerning this event the late Jacob Engelbrecht, in his diary, says:—

"Our old city of Frederick was captured by the rebel forces under Gen. Jubal Early on Saturday, July 9, 1864. They first entered about six o'clock A.M. from the west. We had no army to protect us except two or three thousand, while the rebels had from ten to fifteen thousand men. Gen. Early levied a contribution on the city of two hundred thousand dollars, which I am told was paid on Saturday."

The money was obtained from the banks, and the corporation became responsible for its payment. Thus by their assistance was averted the threatened destruction of the city at the hands of the enemy. The amounts contributed by the several banks were in proportion to their capital stock. By act of Legislature in 1865 it was provided that one-half of the amount loaned should be reimbursed with interest. As they were all in a sound condition, the unexpected assessment in no way affected their solvency or credit. The banks of Frederick, indeed, are remarkable for the systematic and careful manner in which their affairs are managed.

Ezra Houck is remembered now and will be long remembered as a prominent figure in the list of Frederick City's eminent financiers. For forty-six years he was closely associated with the administration of the affairs of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank, and for many years previous to his death he was a director in that institution, as well as its president from 1872 until he died in 1878. He was born in Frederick City, July 30, 1802. His father, George Houck, was born in Frederick County, Md., in 1775, and died in the county in 1867, aged ninety-two years. His grandfather came to Maryland from Germany during the latter half of the eighteenth century, and took a place among the pioneers of Frederick County. Ezra Houck's early school education was limited to a brief season at the Frederick Academy, and comprised in its benefits to him but little more than the rudimentary elements. While yet a school-boy he exchanged his school life for a life upon his father's farm, located a few miles from Frederick. There he spent a few subsequent years in rural pursuits, but at the age of twenty returned to the city and took service in the county clerk's office. In 1826 he married Catharine, daughter of Jacob Bentz, of Frederick County, and upon his marriage removed to his father's old farm, where until about 1832 he employed his time and energies in the cultivation of the soil. In the year named he determined to abandon farming, and accordingly removed to Frederick, where he entered the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank as book-keeper, having meanwhile briefly occupied the bench as judge of the Orphans' Court. From the day he entered the bank until the day of his death he devoted himself closely and unceasingly to its affairs, to the exclusion of participation in any other business interests. He was for many years a director of the bank, vice-president for a few years previous to 1872, and in that year succeeded Dr. William Tyler as president of the institution. His administration was conspicuous for the display of a signal ability, and until his death, April 8, 1878, he was the bank's president. Business interests were to him such absorbing matters that he steadily declined to take a prominent part in the conduct of public concerns, although he was frequently chosen as alderman. He was, moreover, president of the Mutual Insurance Company, and of the Frederick and Woodborough Turnpike Company. He was one of the founders of the Junior Fire Company, and for some years its president. He was during life a zealous member of the Reformed Church, and long one of its elders. In the erection of the present fine Reformed church edifice he acted as a vigorous member of the building committee.

In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and affiliated with the Democracy always. Mr. Houck's children numbered eleven, of whom nine are living, six daughters in Frederick City and three sons, Ezra, George, and James, upon their farms in Frederick County. Ezra lives upon the old homestead near Frederick City. Mr. Houck's home in the city was the stone mansion now the residence of his widow, with whom his marital companionship covered the extended space of fifty-one years. That mansion is reputed to be an hundred years or more old, and to have known as occupants but three families during all that time, although it has never been vacant.

Following are sketches of all the banks of Frederick, given in the order of their formation:

The Central National Bank was organized in 1808 as a branch of the Farmers' Bank of Maryland, whose principal office was located at Annapolis. The Frederick branch gradually became so prosperous that it determined to sever its connection with the Farmers' Bank, and accordingly it obtained a charter as the Central Bank, Jan. 2, 1854. It was organized as a national bank May 15, 1865. The officers are: President, Richard H. Marshall (for many years one of the judges of the Circuit Court); Cashier, Henry Williams; Directors, Richard H. Marshall, George M. Potts, Lewis M. Thomas, Wm. Downey, Wm. S. Miller, Fairfax Schley, Chas. W. Ross, John A. Lynch, Wm. G. Baker, and Wm. J. Worman. The following are the predecessors of the above-mentioned presidents and cashiers: president from 1808 to 1831, John Tyler; to 1850, Wm. Ross; to 1858, Richard Potts; to 1859, Wm. B. Tyler; to 1878, R. Y. Stokes. Cashiers: from 1808 to 1830, Thos. Shaw; of dividends is Johnson, upon Wm. H. Miller is the teller, a genial and accommodating gentleman, as well as an energetic and reliable business man. The bank's New York correspondent is the Park National Bank. In the adjustment of the Confederate loan the bank lost $27,000. The building owned and occupied by the bank is of brick, and is strong and substantial in appearance. It is pleasantly and centrally located, and is a very valuable property. The bank has a capital stock paid in of $200,000, a surplus fund of $40,000, and $10,546.61 of undivided profits.

The Farmers' and Mechanics National Bank was organized in 1817 as a branch of Westminster Bank, with the well-known Dr. Wm. Tyler as president, which position he retained for fifty-five years, until his death, April 26, 1872. The beneficial results of his management have been amply demonstrated by the unusual success which has attended the operations of the bank. In 1828 the institution received its charter as an independent concern, to be known as the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Frederick County. Continuing the policy upon which it was first conducted, the institution developed steadily in the volume of business and in strength and stability. In July, 1865, under the national banking act, it became the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank. Upon the death of Dr. Tyler, Mr. Ezra Houck, who had been connected with the bank for forty years, accepted the presidency, and directed the affairs with ability until his death, April 8, 1875. His successor is Col. Chas. E. Trail, a highly-respected citizen of Frederick. The high business standing of the institution and the fact that it has not paid less than twelve per cent. dividends since 1862 provide a sufficient commentary upon Col. Trail's qualifications as a financial manager. Mr. Samuel Nixdorf has performed the duties of cashier with tact and discrimination since 1877. His predecessors have been Ezra Mantz, Wm. M. Beall, Thomas W. Morgan, Thomas M. Markell, and John Wm. Bierly. The directors are Col. Chas. E. Trail, George Markell, A. H. Hunt, V. S. Brunner, W. Winebrenner, C. Staley, Samuel H. Brown, Wm. F. Johnson, Iton. M. G. Urner, George S. Greshon, Joseph G. Miller, and Philip Reich. By the Confederate raid the bank lost $17,000. Its New York correspondent is the Park National Bank. The bank is centrally located, and is a very popular institution. It has a capital stock of $125,000 paid in, a surplus fund of $10,000, and undivided profits to the amount of $225,560.79.

Charles Edward Trail, president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank, has all his life been a resident of Frederick City, where he was born Jan. 28, 1826. His paternal ancestors emigrated to America from Scotland more than a century and a half ago, and, with his maternal ancestors (the Ramsburgs), were numbered among the earliest settlers and founders of Frederick County. Their descendants have contributed largely to the peopling of the Frederick and Middletown Valleys, and to-day are numerous among the representative people of that section of the county. Mr. Trail's father (Edward) was born in Montgomery County, Md., in 1798, and died in 1876, aged seventy-nine, leaving his widow, Lydia Christine (Ramsburg), to survive him. She was born in Frederick City in 1802, and is still a resident of her native place, hale and active, at the age of eighty.

In 1851, Mr. Trail married Ariana, youngest daughter of Col. John H. McElfresh and Theresa Mantz, whose ancestors, the Mantzes, coming from Germany, were prominent in Frederick County's early settlement. He received a classical education at Frederick College, and in 1847 entering upon the study of law with Joseph M. Palmer, was admitted to the bar in 1849. Ill health compelled him to abandon his law practice after three years of arduous labor, and in 1851 he sought the recreating influences of a European tour. Upon his return he devoted himself to the care of his large landed interests, which embraced the ownership of a half-dozen of the most fruitful farms in Frederick County. In 1860 he was chosen president of the Isabella Gas Company, and became eventually the sole owner of the property of that corporation. In 1863 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates, and in 1864 to the Senate, in which body he served until 1867. Although urged to stand for a senatorial renomination, he declined.

Desiring a reform in the municipal administration of his native city, Mr. Trail successfully originated, in 1870, a movement in which he bore a large share as president of the board of aldermen for three years. During this time the present fine city hall was erected, Mr. Trail being chairman of the building committee. As a member of the board of trustees of the State Deaf and Dumb Institute, he was mainly instrumental in the adoption of the fine design for that edifice, and as chairman of the building committee, performed his duties to the entire satisfaction of the board and the Legislature of Maryland. In 1870 he became actively interested in the construction of the Frederick and Pennsylvania Line Railroad, and after serving as director for several years, was in 1878 elected president of the road. That position he still occupies. In 1876 he was called to be the president of the board of trustees of the Frederick Female Seminary, an institution under the supervision of the State. In 1878 he succeeded Ezra Houck as president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank, which under his prudent management enjoys a very high reputation, and is most successfully conducted.

In 1877 he was severely injured in a railroad collision, in which a number of persons were killed, but after several months' confinement entirely recovered.

Mr. Trail's inclinations have always been of a literary character, and in early manhood he was a frequent writer for the press and for the leading magazines of that day.

He built in 1855 a residence, then very far in advance of the prevailing architecture of Frederick, but the example he set bore bountiful results in its subsequent emulation by others and the present high standard of building improvements in the town. His children, three sons and four daughters, are all living. In religious faith he is an Episcopalian. Previous to the late civil war he was a strench Whig, stood firmly for the Union during that struggle, and since then has sustained the principles of the Republican party. To the cares and ambitions of a busy life he has added the useful purposes of a public-spirited citizen, and enjoys the satisfaction of occupying a prominent place among the promoters of the public welfare.

The Frederick County National Bank is justly ranked among the most solid financial institutions of Frederick County. Organized in 1818 as a State bank, its early affairs were conducted with marked ability. Its presidents were John Graham, 1818; John P. Thompson, 1833; A. B. Hanson, 1850. Its cashiers were George Baer, 1818, who had previously represented his people in the United States Congress; Henry Doyle, 1833; William B. Tyler, 1842; L. J. Brengle, 1845; Henry Schley, 1845; John H. Williams, 1850. Under these several managements the bank was enabled to disburse large earnings as dividends to its stockholders. Its management at the present time consists of the following officers: President, John H. Williams, elected in 1897, having rendered valuable services as cashier for seventeen years previous; Cashier, Perry B. McCleery, who was appointed at the same time; Directors, Lewis Bruner, Z. T. Gittenger, G. B. Hammond, P. L. Pyler, Calvin Page, John T. Quaynn, C. C. Smith, John H. Williams, and J. Alfred Ritter. This bank suffered a loss, with its contemporaries, from the invading Southern army to the extent of twenty thousand dollars. Its principal New York correspondent is the Importers' and Traders' National Bank. The building owned and occupied by the bank is attractive in appearance, and is well located on the principal street of the city. The interior appointments are exceptionally well arranged and substantial. Under its present management the bank is in a thoroughly healthy and prosperous condition.

It has a capital stock of $150,000 paid in, a surplus fund of $50,000, and undivided profits amounting to $9823.78.

The Frederick County Bank was entered on the last Saturday night in May, 1841, and robbed of nearly one hundred and eighty thousand dollars in specie, bonds, and notes. The specie taken was entirely in gold, and consisted of eagles, half-eagles, sovereigns, etc. Maryland six per cent. bonds, numbered from 1113 to 1118, inclusive, were also stolen, which, with the coupons attached, amounted to six thousand dollars. The rest of the plunder consisted of two certificates of six per cent. Maryland stock of three thousand dollars each, and two of four thousand dollars each, and eleven five per cent. sterling bonds of the State of Maryland, numbered from 865 to 875, inclusive, amounting to twelve thousand two hundred and twenty-two dollars. The notes of the bank taken were of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. Some fifty thousand dollars in silver which was in the vault remained untouched. The institution for a few days ceased doing business, and a statement from its affairs was as soon as possible laid before the public. The capital was but one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, so that the robbers took more than the actual capital of the institution. A key was found in the creek, near the city mill, on Sunday morning following the robbery. A dark-lantern of rude construction was also discovered. The key was filed off and filled up until it was made to fit the lock of the exterior door of the bank quite as well as the key which belonged to it. The lamp did not appear to be the production of an experienced workman, and looked as if it had been in service before. Two men were seen taking a box to the corner of the bank, where they seated themselves on the box, for the purpose, it is supposed, of keeping watch while the robbers were progressing with the work. A spur with the straps broken was found in the vault.

The progress of the robbers was impeded by seven locks, some of them of the most complex construction. The street-door must have been entered before, and the men doubtless worked for some weeks in discovering the secret springs in the three locks of the vault, and in taking impressions for the purpose of making suitable keys. All the contents of the iron chest in the vault were taken without any discrimination, including some of the issues of the Frederick corporation, notes that were laid aside as unfit for use, being worn out, etc. Of the silver, none of which was in the chest, they took but ten dollars.

Mr. Doyle, the cashier, swore to a statement, made before Judge Shriver, of the manner in which he always kept the keys of the institution, etc., and testified that when he went into the bank on Monday morning he found nothing disarranged, and was not made sensible of the robbery until, during the course of the morning, he opened the iron chest in the inner vault and found the contents gone. An extra from the Frederick Herald office said, "We would advise the public not to sacrifice their notes, as they will doubtless be paid in full," and in another paragraph offers to take them in payment for accounts at that office.

Nearly the whole amount of which the bank was robbed was recovered through negotiation by letter between the attorney of the robbers at New York and the officers of the bank. This correspondence was commenced by the attorney, who made a proposition in behalf of his clients, to which the officers were disposed to accede if nothing better could be done.
Accordingly, Dr. Tyler and Mr. Beall, directors of the bank, proceeded to New York during the week, and there concluded the negotiations with a compromise which, it is stated left the rogues in possession of all the gold they carried off, some ten thousand dollars, and nine thousand dollars paid by the bank for the recovery of securities and notes amounting in value to upwards of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars.
The particulars of the negotiation are given as follows:

"Some three or four weeks after the robbery the officers of the bank received a communication, postmarked Philadelphia, consisting of a sheet of letter-paper, on which were pasted printed letters, words, and phrases clipped from a newspaper, and so placed as to form intelligible sentences.

"At the head was an advertisement that had been published about five years previous, showing by what means the robbery of a jewelry-store had been compromised in New York. Beneath this was a communication, made up partly of words, but chiefly of letters, proposing negotiations for the return of the money and securities stolen, which, if the bank was disposed to enter into, it was to signify the same by an advertisement in the New York Courier and Enquirer. This proposition ended with the adage, 'Delays are dangerous.' On the margin the following inscription and significant hint was displayed, "$52,000! Wanted.
Upon the receipt of this letter Officer Ridgely was sent for,
and it was given into his possession by the officers of the bank. He took it to Philadelphia, and having consulted with High Constable Young, it was resolved to await another move. Soon after a publication appeared in the New York Herald reflecting on the officers of the bank, and a communication followed, postmarked Philadelphia, which referred to the article in the Herald, and suggested the means of shewing to the world that the robbery was not committed by the officers of the bank. In order to prove that the real robber was the respondent, this communication was accompanied by a correct sketch of the front-door key of the bank. This letter was also referred to the officers, Ridgely and Young, and the latter suggested the propriety of waiting a little longer before any action was taken, at the same time expressing the confident belief that the communication would speedily be followed by a letter from a lawyer. This opinion the officers delivered to the officers of the bank, with the request that if such a letter be received information should be given to them, and they would at once take measures that would insure the recovery of the money and the apprehension of the thieves. This the bank, it is stated, pledged itself to do.

"Nothing definite or satisfactory resulted until the 19th of June, when the following letter was received, postmarked New York City:

"'New York, June 16, 1841.

"'I. Doyle, Esq:"

"'Dear Sir,—My aid and assistance have been asked with reference to the loss of the Frederick County Bank on the 22d of May last. If you, or the president, or some person acting for the bank, could have a personal interview with me I have no doubt I could arrange matters in a satisfactory manner. It would afford me great pleasure to be the means of effecting a restitution of the heavy loss which the bank sustained on that occasion.

"Respectfully yours,

"'William Wiley.'"

"'P.S.—I can be seen personally or a letter may be adressed to me at 47 Howard Street.'"

"Upon the receipt of the above the board of directors appointed Dr. William Bradley Tyler and William A. Beall, of Frederick, both stockholders in the bank, to proceed to New York, with a view of conferring with Mr. Wiley, and gave to these two gentlemen a power of attorney to receive the funds, and pay the reward according to the amount given, if they should prove successful. Dr. Tyler and Mr. Beall on the same day started for the city of New York, and arrived there on the evening night about eleven o'clock. Early on Monday morning Mr. Wiley was seen by the agents of the bank, who found him engaged in the duties of his office, which were those of an associate justice of one of the inferior courts of the city of New York. He was also a lawyer, practicing in the courts of that city. The agents were received by Mr. Wiley with the assurance that no difficulty should be thrown in the way of a speedy recovery of the plundered funds of the bank. Mr. Wiley requested the delay of a few days, as the individual professing to know something about the funds was absent at the South.
Nothing was heard until Wednesday evening, when Wiley called on the agents, who agreed to pay eight per cent. for the restoration of the lost issues of the bank. Wiley went away, and in the morning notified the agents that he would accept their offer. It was still not in his power to say on what day they could come into possession, but pledged himself to deliver the notes and securities at the earliest possible moment. Nothing more was heard until Saturday morning, when Wiley called on Messrs. Tyler and Beall saying that he was prepared to deliver the property of the bank. Mr. Wiley then went to the New York Bank, and in the presence of Mr. Beall requested the cashier to go with them and assist in counting the money. He also procured the aid of Mr. Hearne, a respecta-bile merchant in Broadway, as: they passed along. The place of appointment was a front room in the hotel standing on the corner of Broadway and Howard Streets, where they all assembled, viz.: Dr. Tyler, Mr. Beall, Mr. Wiley, Mr. Seul (clerk to Mr. Wiley’s court), Mr. Halsey, cashier of the New York Bank, and Mr. Hearn, the Broadway merchant. Mr. Wiley then left the room for a few minutes, and returned with a leather valise, which was found to contain the recovered funds, all sealed up in a single package. The envelope was opened, and the money counted by the above-named gentlemen. This took place on Saturday morning. After the counting was finished the funds were delivered to Messrs. Tyler and Beall, who paid Mr. Wiley the percentage on the issues as agreed on, and by the evening cars they returned home with their lost treasure. The bank again commenced business. The robbers kept in their possession $16,049 in gold, $7822 in notes and bills, $2500 of canal scrip belonging to individuals, $1542 in Frederick County bank-notes, in all $21,143. In the transactions leading to the recovery of the money there was no promise of indemnity or impunity, no pledge to relax the efforts of justice, no intimations that exertions to apprehend the robbers and bring them to punishment would be in the slightest degree diminished, no permission to keep the funds not delivered, and, in a word, no compromise of any kind was made, nor was anything done or said by the agents of the bank that would not bear the test of public scrutiny. Wiley, the agent for the robbers, would give no information further than that the vaults were opened by false keys, and that six persons were concerned. The bank withdrew all former rewards, and offered a reward of five thousand dollars for the detection of the robbers and twenty per cent. for the recovery of the residue of the money, but it does not appear that anything was ever accomplished in that direction."

The Franklin Savings-Bank received its charter in 1856, and passed successfully through the great financial crisis of 1857. For eighteen years David Markell conducted the affairs of the bank as president, being succeeded by Andrew Boyd in 1874. Mr. Boyd served in this capacity for three years, and was succeeded by the present executive officer, A. D. O’Leary, who has had long experience in monetary affairs. William H. Nicodemus, the efficient secretary, has held this position for five years. His predecessors have been Andrew Henderson, previous to 1874, and William M. Hardt for the next year. No interest is paid on transient deposits, but special deposits are received, on which three per cent. is allowed. Weekly deposits become stock in six months, and dividends are disbursed on these. The demand by early, in 1864, cost the bank nineteen thousand dollars. The bank’s working capital is $200,000. Its Baltimore correspondent is the Third National Bank. The directors are well-known and prominent citizens, as follows: John H. Keller, A. J. Wileoxon, A. L. Eader, A. T. Rice, James Hergesheimer, Henry E. Hanshaw, G. W. B. Shreiner, Henry D. O’Leary.

The First National Bank was incorporated under the National Banking Act of 1865, with a capital stock of $100,000, and during its entire career has been rated among the best-managed monetary concerns in the country. So successful has it been that it has paid its stockholders a yearly dividend of twelve per cent., and has per its last report a surplus and profits of $30,629.28. The management has undergone comparatively few changes. Its first president, Lawrence J. Brengle, filled that position until his death, in 1874. His successor, Thomas Gorsuch, the cashier during the first nine months of the bank's existence, was elected a representative to the General Assembly, and was for some time assessor of internal revenue, and for six years previous to 1879 was clerk of the Circuit Court. Mr. Gorsuch still holds the position of president. In the last campaign (fall of 1881) he was the Republican candidate for comptroller of Maryland, but was defeated by Thomas J. Keating. The cashier is Thomas Markell, one of Frederick's most active business men. Ira Tyler has held the position as teller since Jan. 1, 1867, to the entire satisfaction of all connected with the bank. William K. Zimmerman has been the discount clerk for ten years past. The board of directors is composed of Thomas Gorsuch, Charles B. S. Levy, Lycurgus E. Hedges, William H. Falconer, George Joseph Doll, Charles J. Lewis, Joseph Rousten, John L. Nicodemus, and George Honck. Its New York correspondent is the Park National, and its Baltimore correspondent the First National. The bank has a capital stock paid in of $100,000, a surplus fund of $200,000, and undivided profits amounting to $10,629.28.

Among those who are identified with private banking interests of Frederick City may be named Thomas Clagett, who was born in Clarksburg District, Montgomery Co., Md., April 21, 1813.

Ninian M., his father, was a native of Maryland, being born in 1768, in Prince George's County. He married, after removing to Montgomery County, Margaret Burgess, daughter of Edward Burgess, a captain of the Continental army. He died in 1841, at the residence of his son Thomas, aged seventy-three years. She died about 1844, aged about seventy-two years.

Thomas Clagett moved from Montgomery to Frederick County in 1839, in Urbana District, and came to Frederick City in 1866. His maternal grandfather, Edward Burgess, was one of the first judges of Montgomery County. Several of his ancestors were prominent officials in the early days of Western Maryland. The Clagett family is of English, and the Burgess of Scotch descent.

Thomas Clagett married, 1837, Cynthia Norwood, daughter of Thomas Norwood, a native of Frederick County, Md., but of English descent. She was born April 25, 1815. Born of this union were the following children: Edward Thomas, Jan. 16, 1839, he went South during the civil war, and was never heard from; Sarah Ann, Sept. 30, 1839, married Henry O. Talbott, of Poolesville, and lives in Charlestown, Jefferson Co., W. Va.; Jane, born July 25, 1841, married Thomas N. Harwood, of Frederick County, and now living in Frederick City; Rebecca, born March 19, 1843, living at home with her parents; William Henry, Dec. 27, 1844, married to Jane Prater, of Greenville, Bond Co., Ill., where he now resides; Margaret B., born Sept. 26, 1846, married Charles T. Remsburg, a farmer of Middletown Valley, Frederick Co., Md., where she now resides; Louisa, born Oct. 6, 1848, married to S. Theodore Stanffer, of Walkersville, and died Feb. 18, 1870; Jesse, born May 15, 1851, married to Mary S. Price, daughter of Thomas W. Price, of Philadelphia, Pa., and resides in Baltimore; Mary, born Aug. 14, 1853, married to Dr. Edward Bowles, of Middletown, now of Frederick; Samuel M., born Aug. 12, 1857, living with parents.

Mr. Clagett's boyhood, and in fact the greater portion of his life, was passed in agricultural pursuits, except from 1835 to 1838, when engaged in a mercantile business in Damascus, Montgomery Co. From 1838 until 1866 he was an extensive and successful grower of tobacco, being one of the largest shippers to market of "up-country tobacco" in the State during those years, and since 1866 he has been engaged as a banker and broker in Frederick City; never has been an office-seeker or office-holder.

Of Mr. Clagett's four sisters and one brother none are now living. Rebecca, Ann, and Jane married and moved to Ohio, where they died; Mary died young, about 1821, aged sixteen; John was born Nov. 28, 1815, and died about 1829.

The Mutual Insurance Company of Frederick County was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly passed at its December session, 1843, with the following incorporators, viz.: William J. Ross, Patrick Torney, Lawrence J. Brengle, Lewis Med tart, Zachariah T. Windsor, Edward Trail, Hugh McAleer, William H. Albaugh, Calvin Page, Francis Leuber, Ezekiel Hughes, David Boyd, Joseph Deck, John Wilcoxon, William F. Johnson, John Ramsburg, Philip Hauptman, Robert Bomer, George Hoskins, George Dertzabaugh, Baldwin Albaugh. Its object was to insure against loss or damage by fire their respective dwelling-houses, other buildings, merchandise, household furniture, and other property.

On May 7, 1844, the following directors were elected: Lawrence J. Brengle, president; Patrick Torney, secretary and treasurer; and David Boyd, Lewis Medtart, Z. T. Windsor, William H. Albaugh, Calvin Page, Edward Trail, William J. Ross, Hugh McAleer, Francis Leuber, Ezekiel Hughes, directors. It has been in successful operation twenty-eight years, and annually writes the insurance of a large part of the best property of the county.

Its directors for 1881 (elected in May) are George Markell, president and treasurer; Philip Reich, Calvin Page, George W. Delaplane, James McSherry (counsel), David Frazier (agent), Francis Markell, Charles E. Trail, Joseph Cronise, Joseph G. Miller, Thomas R. Jarboe, James Houck, directors. Its secretary, George W. Cramer, has held that position for the past twenty years.

The Improvement Land and Building Association was chartered May 15, 1868, with the following charter members: David C. Martin, David M. Smith, Milton G. Urner, Charles W. Miller. Its first officers were—

President, J. William Birely; Vice-President, David C. Winebrenner; Secretary, E. A. Gittinger; Treasurer, John T. Quynn; Directors, J. William Birely, Daniel Getzendanner, Jr., David C. Winebrenner, John C. Hardt, A. H. Aubert, John T. Quynn, George W. Cramer, E. A. Gittinger, Augustus L. Eager, Jacob Hiints, Ethan A. Cramer, David H. Kolb; Solicitor, Milton G. Urner.

The officers for 1881 are—

The Mutual Aid Association elected the following officers in 1881:

Lloyd T. Maegill, president; Albert W. Burkhart, vice-president; Christian H. Eckstein, secretary; Thomas N. Harwood, treasurer; Dr. Thomas Turner, medical director; Charles T. Darner, Horatio Zittle, general agents; Examining Committee, Dr. Thomas Turner, Dr. Lloyd T. Maegill, Christian H. Eckstein; Board of Actuaries, A. W. Burkhart, Thomas Clagett, Joshua Ahalt, Horatio Zittle, Charles W. Miller; Directors, Dr. Lloyd T. Maegill, Albert W. Burkhart, C. H. Eckstein, Thomas Clagett, Charles W. Miller, Dr. Thomas Turner, Joshua Ahalt, Thomas N. Harwood, Horatio Zittle, Charles T. Darner.

CHAPTER XXIX.

SECRET ORDERS, BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES, ETC.

SCARCELY any other city in the country is better supplied than Frederick with organizations for the relief of distress, and for the mutual assistance, encouragement, and social enjoyment of their members. There are two Masonic lodges, one commandery of Knights Templar, a lodge of Knights of Pythias, a tribe of the Independent Order of Red Men, a lodge and encampment of Odd Fellows, a Catholic beneficial society, a Young Men's Christian Association, a lodge of Knights of Honor, a council of the United American Mechanics, a post of the Grand Army of the Republic, and several other deserving organizations.

Hiram Lodge, No. 28, A. F. and A. M., was the first Masonic lodge in Frederick County of which there is any authentic record. It was organized in February, 1799. Dr. John Fischer, of Frederick City, was the first Grand Inspector for Frederick County, and was a member of this lodge. He represented it in the Grand Lodge of 1808, the date of its last representation. The following citizens were members of Hiram Lodge: Henry Bair, Tobias Butler, George Baltzell, Nicholas Fridering, John B. Faulkner, Joseph McCully, Henry Schell, Henry R. Warfield, Elias Boteler, James Huey, William Robinson, Jacob Stephens, Samuel Harris, Samuel Sharp, Richard L. Head, John L. Harding, E. H. Stone, Mountjoy B. Lacket, Henry Bautz, Richard Butler, Francis Clarko, John Gant, James Neale, Adam Schisler, John Waters, Henry Ebbert, George Lipper, Joseph Hays, John Gibbony, Moses Shaw, Thomas C. Worthington, Robert Erskine, Benjamin Stallings, Samuel Philpot, Roger Nelson, Jacob Bayer, Jr., Dr. John Fischer, Ambrose Godlin, John Hinkle, James Phillips, John Tyler, Alexander Whittacre, John Houston, Samuel Woods, Morris Jones, Arthur Tansey, Frederick C. Tap, John M. Beatty, George Graff, Alexander C. Harrison, William Thomas Morris.

The house in which Hiram Lodge met cannot now be ascertained. Of these members of the lodge some were quite prominent in Masonry and distinguished in the State. George Baltzell was the tax collector of Frederick County for a number of years, and secretary of his lodge. Henry R. Warfield was a prominent lawyer and member of the Frederick bar. He represented the district in the Congress of the United States. James Neale kept a tavern in 1801, where the Central Hotel is now kept. Roger Nelson was a captain in the Revolutionary war, and received eighteen wounds. He was also a member of Congress from this district, was judge of the Frederick County Court, and afterwards clerk of the same court. He was the Grand Junior Warden in 1799; Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge from 1801 to 1805. Dr. John Tyler and Dr. John Fischer were prominent physicians. Henry Bayer, Henry Bautz, Arthur Tansey, Thomas C. Worthington, John Hoston, and Adam Schisler took an active part in organizing Columbia Lodge in 1815. Tobias Butler was at one time clerk of the County Court. Thomas C.
Worthington was a member of Congress from this district in the year 1824. Mountjoy B. Luckett was a prominent young physician, and died in New Orleans in 1809.

A lodge called Mark Lodge worked under a dispensation in 1817, but was not chartered.

Columbia Mark Lodge, No. 10, was chartered Jan. 11, 1820, and expired in January, 1824.

Columbia Lodge, No. 58, A. F. and A. M., was organized in 1815, on the petition of Joseph Swearingen, Jacob Bayer, Henry Bantz, Thomas C. Worthington, Adam Schisler, Matthew Murray, William Bantz, Adam Korn, and James F. Houston. The Grand Lodge of Maryland granted a charter hearing date Nov. 7, 1815, authorizing William Bantz, Adam Schisler, and Samuel Barnes to organize Columbia Lodge, No. 58, in Frederick Town. Under this warrant a number of Masonic brethren, on the 8th day of December, 1815, met at the house of James F. Houston in Frederick Town. There is some doubt as to the exact location of this house; one statement is that it is the house on the south side of East Patrick Street now occupied by Charles E. Worthington as a boarding-house, and by Messrs. Bessant & Knott as a grocery-store. This house was built by Job Hunt in 1811 or 1812. Another account is that it was the house on the southeast corner of Market and Second Streets, now occupied by the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank. The facts and statements gathered from the oldest inhabitants of Frederick seem to point to the bank property as the more probable location of the John Houston house. Arthur Tanzey acted as "W. M." from the time, Adam Schisler, S. W.; Samuel Barnes, J. W.; James F. Houston, Sec.; Joseph Swearingen, Treas.; Matthew Murray, S. D.; Thomas C. Worthington, J. D. The brethren present were William Bantz, John Houston, Adam Korn, John Houston, George Attie, Basil Murray. A lodge was then opened, and the following were installed as the first officers:

- William Bantz, W. M.; Adam Schisler, S. W.; Samuel Barnes, J. W.; James T. Houston, Sec.; Joseph Swearingen, Treas.; Matthew Murray, S. D.; Thomas C. Worthington, J. D.

Jacob Bayer was appointed Tyler for the next meeting. The lodge then closed to meet again on Dec. 17, 1815, when the by-laws were adopted and the above officers elected. The lodge next met on St. John's day, Dec. 27, 1815, in a room in Henry Bantz's house. This house is still standing on the south side of Second Street, between Market and Public Streets, and is owned by Judge William P. Maulsby. The officers elected at the previous meeting were installed on this occasion.

About the 1st of May, 1819, the lodge moved to the house of Henry Baer. This is the house on the north side of East Patrick Street, in which the Fessler family now lives. It is an old frame house plastered on the outside, and was built by John Shellman near the middle of the last century.

On the 15th of March, 1821, the lodge moved to the house of Samuel Webster. This house is on the northeast corner of Patrick and Market Streets. The lodge was held over the store-room, then occupied by Samuel Webster as a boot and shoe store, but now occupied by D. S. S. Thomas as a drug-store.

Some time during the year 1823 the lodge moved to a building on the east side of Market Street between Third and Fourth Streets, then owned by a Mrs. Smith. It is the building now occupied by the Degrave Brothers as a tobacco-store, and is the next house south of David C. Winebrenner's dry-goods and grocery-stores. The lodge met here until it dissolved, in 1830.

On Dec. 29, 1824, Gen. Lafayette was received by his Masonic brethren in the house of Henry Bantz on Second Street, where this lodge had its second place of meeting. William Baer presented this lodge a Masonic apron, which now hangs on the chair of the Junior Warden. To this apron is attached a cord with these words:

"This apron belonged to William Baer, and was worn by Gen. Lafayette when introduced to Columbia Lodge of A. Y. Masons at Frederick City, Md., in December, 1824, William Baer acting Marshal and Master of Ceremonies. He was introduced by Wm. Baer to W. M. Dr. Jacob Baer."

The lodge received Gen. Lafayette, with his son, George W. Lafayette, and his private secretary, in the west room of Col. McPherson's lower floor or parlor. The house is now owned by the Hon. Richard Marshall.

During this period Masonry was in a languishing condition, so much so that the brethren of Columbia Lodge thought it advisable to cease their meetings, and on June 7, 1830, held their last communication under the charter of 1815.

Robert W. Middleton, the secretary at this last meeting, renounced Freemasonry, and on July 8, 1830, one month after the meeting, went to Gettysburg, the hot-bed of anti Masonry in Pennsylvania, and printed a newspaper called The Anti-Masonic Star.

There is no evidence of the existence of any Masonic lodge in this county from the year 1830 to 1843.

In 1842, a number of Masons met in the old schoolhouse on the north side of Church Street, between Market and Public Streets, on the lot on which the new German Reformed church now stands, for the purpose of memorializing the Grand Lodge for a renewal of the charter of Columbia Lodge. The following signed the memorial, viz.: Thomas C. Worthington, A. B. Hanson, D. Rolls, Caspar Quynn, Adolphus Fearhake, David Boyd, John W. Dorsey, Thomas Carr, Thomas C. Brashear, Abodied Ukefer, Thos. W. Morgan, John Kefauver, of G., A. Barney, Ezra Bantz, Lloyd Dorsey, Henry Baer, John H. Fout, Jacob Rost, Nicholas Turbutt, Wm. D. Jenks, G. M. Eichelberger, Geo. Salmon, N. H. Owings,—23.

All the memorialists are now dead except A. Fearhake and John H. Fout. Oct. 23, 1843, a number of Masons met in the old Methodist Episcopal church on the north side of West Church Street, near Bentz Street. This building has lately been modernized and greatly improved, and is at present used and owned by the Methodist Protestant Church. At this meeting Caspar Quynn acted as chairman, A. Barney secretary. Anthony Kimmell stated the object of the meeting was the resuscitation of Columbia Lodge, and to secure a permanent house for its use.

Oct. 26, 1843, the brethren met, Caspar Quynn in the chair, and A. Barney secretary, and adjourned to a room prepared for them in the house of George Koonitz. This house is on the west side of Market Street, the second building south of Church Street. It is now occupied by Bernard Rosenour, and is used as a dwelling and shoe-store.

The present charter, bearing date Nov. 6, 1842, and empowering G. M. Eichelberger to act as W. M., David Boyd, S. W., Thomas C. Brashear as J. W., to open Columbia Lodge, No. 58, was produced and read. These officers were then installed by D. G. Master Kimmell, and the lodge opened in regular form.

The brethren present were A. Kimmell, A. Fearhake, Geo. Salmon, Geo. Zollinger, John Kefauver, Wm. D. Jenks, M. Bedtman, Rezin Stevens, John Sifford. A. Barney was chosen secretary and installed.

Dec. 18, 1843, the lodge met, and went into an election for officers to serve the next six months. Caspar Quynn was elected W. M., Thomas W. Morgan, S. W., and William D. Jenks, J. W. George Salmon was appointed S. D., and H. Fearhake, J. D.

Several of the meetings just mentioned were held in David Boyd's house on Market Street, on the south corner of Market Street. This building is now owned and occupied by A. C. McCracken. About this time the lodge moved to the hall which had been prepared for its use in the old Methodist Episcopal church on Church Street.

On July 6, 1857, the lodge rented a room in the McGill Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Patrick Streets, for five years, at seventy-five dollars per annum, for its use.

On June 9, 1865, the lodge held its first meeting in the hall in the old Episcopal church on Public Street.

Sept. 22, 1865. The lodge proceeded to the Methodist Episcopal church on East Church Street to lay the cornerstone of the new church, which was done with the usual Masonic ceremonies. D. G. Master John A. Lynch officiating.

May 31, 1871. The lodge assisted the Grand Lodge in laying the cornerstone of the "Deaf and Dumb Institute" in Frederick City. Grand Master John H. B. Latrobe officiating.

June 6, 1871. The lodge laid the cornerstone of "Trinity Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." A. Fearhake, Jr., officiating.

Nov. 6, 1871. The lodge sent to the sufferers by the great fire in Chicago the sum of eight hundred and forty-six dollars, contributed by the members.

Anthony Kimmell was Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Lodge in 1832, '33, '34, '35; Deputy Grand Master in 1842, '43, '44, '57; Most Worshipful Grand Master, 1859. John A. Lynch was Deputy Grand Master in 1864. C. N. S. Levy is now Grand King of the Grand Chapter.

From June, 1815, to 1830, eight Ancient Masons united with the lodge, one hundred and twelve were made Masons, and sixteen rejected. From 1843 to 1880, sixty-five Ancient Masons joined the lodge; one hundred and ninety-eight were initiated, passed and raised.

Columbia Lodge has had thirty-three W. M., forty-five S. W., fifty-three J. W., and, from 1843 to 1880, eleven secretaries and fifteen treasurers. From 1843 to 1880 there have been four hundred and forty-six applications for membership and initiation; of this number, one hundred and forty-nine were rejected. From 1843 to 1863, one hundred and sixty-nine applications, thirteen rejected; 1860 to 1880, two hundred and seventy-seven applications, one hundred and thirty-six rejected. In 1865 there were twenty-six rejections.

Lynch Lodge, No. 163, A. F. and A. M.—June 5, 1873, Grand Master Latrobe granted a dispensation to Benjamin H. Schley, W. M., Steiner Schley, S. W., and Peter S. Bantz, J. W., to make Masons and form a new lodge. Nov. 18, 1873, the Grand Lodge issued a regular charter to Lynch Lodge, No. 163, named in honor of Judge John A. Lynch.

The first officers were:

W. M., Benjamin H. Schley; S. W., Steiner Schley; J. W., Philip Stern; Sec., Charles F. Kreh; Treas., Julius Neuwahl; S. D., Harry C. Keefer; J. D., George A. Abbott; Tyler, F. T. Rhodes.

At a special communication of this lodge, Past Deputy Grand Master John A. Lynch, under authority from Grand Master Latrobe, constituted the lodge and installed the aforesaid officers. It holds its meetings in the hall of Columbia Lodge, and numbers thirty active and zealous Masons.

The officers for 1881 are:

W. M., Isaac Lowenstein; S. W., Isaiah N. Loy; J. W., Jacob J. Sahm; Sec., George E. Myer; Treas., Julius Neuwahl.

Jacques de Molay Commandary, No. 4.—This commandary commenced under a dispensation dated Nov. 23, 1867. The officers in the dispensation were George A. Hanson, E. C.; Peter S. Bantz, Gen.; and J. Alfred Ritter, Capt.-Gen.

Sept. 18, 1868, the Grand Commandary granted a regular charter to Jacques de Molay Commandary, No. 4, and its first officers were the same as in the dispensation.

The officers for 1881 are:

Enoch Royal Arch Chapter, No. 23.—Enoch Chapter, No. 10, was chartered Nov. 15, 1820, and was last represented in the Grand Chapter in 1827 by Daniel Kolb, Adolphus Fearhake, Sr., and Francis Thomas.

Enoch Chapter, No. 23, commenced under a dispensation dated in May, 1866. The officers named in the dispensation were George A. Hanson, High Priest, Allen G. Quynn, King, and William N. Young, Scribe. Nov. 13, 1866, the Grand Chapter granted it a regular charter, and the first officers under it were the same as in the dispensation.

The officers for 1881 are:

H. P., Philip Stern; K., William N. Young; S. W., W. V. Albaugh; R., F. A. Markley; Treas., H. Goldenberg; C. H., J. W. Griffin; P. S., A. Fearhake, Jr.; R. A. C., C. S. V. Levy; M. 2d V., I. Lowenstein; M. 2d V., C. C. Smith; M. 1st V., John A. Lynch.

Mountain City Lodge, No. 29, Knights of Pythias.—This lodge was instituted Feb. 12, 1869. The grand officers’ names affixed to the charter are:

Starwart Conclave, S. P. K., No. 3.—This conclave, formerly called Stoddard, was organized May 17, 1869. The grand officers who signed the charter were:

James Bond, G. C.; John J. Ward, G. Sec. The charter members were William A. Simmons, David M. Smith, James N. Walter, John Simmons, P. L. Hiteshew, C. W. Tabler.

Alpha Temple of Honor, No. 2.—Officers elected in May, 1881, for the ensuing term:

Chippewa Tribe, No. 19, I. O. O. R.—On the twenty-sixth Sun of the Buck Moon, in Grand Sun 5610, the Grand Council of the Improved Order of Red Men of Maryland issued its dispensation to form Chippewa Tribe, No. 19, to the following pale-faces:

The aforesaid dispensation was signed by

Its first officers, elected on the Third Sun of the Flower Moon (May, 1850), were:

In 1851, after one year’s organization, it numbered thirty-one members. This order is a beneficial institution, and in Maryland, with its thirty-five tribes, expended in charities in 1880, $10,153.46. This tribe has a present membership of one hundred and eighty, and meets every Thursday evening at its commodious and elegant hall on Market Street. Its officers for semi-annual term ending June 30, 1881, were:

S., Frank T. Davis; S. S., George W. Vanfossen; J. S., Charles Smaulwood; C. of R., John H. Bennett; K. of W., Casper Quynn, N. G.; William Slater, V. G.; John Kefauver, of G., Sec.; Ezra Bantz, Treas.

The Noble Grands have been:

The secretaries have been:

The officers for 1881 (2d term) are:

N. G., Francis Brengle; V. G., John H. Catshaw; Sec., William H. Zeigler; Treas., Albert T. Rice.

St. John's Beneficial Association.—The idea of forming a beneficial or benevolent association connected with St. John's Church was first entertained in 1852, and on the 12th day of December of the same year such a society was formed. Each member is entitled to four dollars per week as benefits while sick, and on the death of a member the sum of fifty dollars is paid his widow or legal representatives to defray his funeral expenses. It has other special benevolent features, and for more than thirty years has been engaged in benevolent works. Its incorporators were Col. James McSherry, William M. Merrick, John A. Smith, William Walsh, Lewis Logue, Hugh L. McAlee, Charles Smith, and Lewis B. McSherry, who obtained an act of incorporation July 6, 1854. Its officers have been:

1853.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., James Kerrigan; Sec., W. R. Sappington; Treas., John A. Smith.
1854.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., W. M. Merrick; Sec., A. W. Marriott; Treas., William Walsh.
1855–56.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., Henry Pampel; Sec., L. M. Ryan; Treas., William Walsh.
1857–58.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., H. A. Hazer; Sec., L. M. Ryan; Treas., William Walsh.
1859–60.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., H. A. Hazer; Sec., F. A. Whaner; Treas., William Walsh.
1861.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., James McSherry, Jr.; Sec., F. A. Whaner; Treas., William Walsh.
1862–70.—Pres., James McSherry, Jr.; Vice-Pres., Thomas Barry; Sec., F. A. Whaner; Treas., William Walsh.
1876–79.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., Lewis Burke; Sec., Joseph F. Eisenhauer; Treas., William Walsh.
1876–80.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., Lewis Burke; Sec., Joseph F. Eisenhauer; Treas., William Walsh.
1881.—Pres., James McSherry; Vice-Pres., N. J. Wilson; Sec., J. F. Eisenhauer; Treas., William Walsh; Messenger, Charles E. Bruchey.

It has had but two presidents,—father and son,—Col. James McSherry and Capt. James McSherry, the latter since 1867. It holds a stated meeting every month, and an annual meeting on the second Sunday of January, when the yearly election of officers takes place by ballot.

Its first officers were:

It has a membership of eighty-five, and meets every Friday evening in its hall in the Kemp Building, in the third story thereof. It pays four dollars per week benefits to sick members, and on the death of a member each member has to pay the family of the deceased one dollar. It has a library of three hundred and twenty-six volumes, purchased by penny assessments of a penny a week on each member. The officers for semi-annual term ending July 1, 1881, are:

Reynolds Post, No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic, was organized at the close of the civil war. Its commander for 1881 is Gen. John A. Steiner, and the chairman of its executive committee is Col. C. W. F. Vernon, surveyor of the port of Baltimore. May 30th is the national Decoration Day of Union graves, and it was attended in 1881 with ceremonies and exercises surpassing in extent those of any previous year. In Frederick the graves of the dead were covered with flowers, and the entire ceremonies were conducted under the auspices of Reynolds Post. A poem appropriate to the occasion was read by Hon. William H. Hinks, and an oration was delivered by Rev. S. V. Loech, D.D. Sacred anthems were sung by the choir, under the direction of Lieut. Geo. E. Greenwood. The “old flag” was planted over Barbara Fritchie’s grave, which was covered with flowers. Capt. Wm. Glessner was chairman of the committee on decoration of Mount Olivet, Gideon Staley of the committee on outside decorations, and Maj. O. A. Horner of the committee on flowers.

Confederate Monumental and Memorial Associations.—The first call for a meeting to organize a Ladies’ Confederate Monumental Association was responded to by a number of ladies, and the following were the proceedings of the first meeting held:

Aug. 7, 1879, in response to a notice issued by Capt. Owings, president of the Confederate Memorial Association, the following ladies met at the residence of that gentleman for the purpose of organizing an association, having the object in view of creating a fund of money sufficient to enable them to erect a monument to the “unknown” deceased Confederate soldiers interred at Mount Olivet Cemetery: Mrs. B. F. Brown, Mrs. A. J. Delashmutt, Mrs. L. M. Nixdorff, Mrs. N. Owings, Mrs. W. N. Young, Mrs. E. L. Eader, and Misses Davidson and A. R. Fout. The meeting was organized and the following officers elected: President, Mrs. John H. Williams; First Vice-President, Mrs. B. F. Brown; Second Vice-President, Mrs. J. H. Gambril; Secretary, Mrs. A. L. Eader; Treasurer, Mrs. Nicholas Owings. The meeting adjourned to meet Aug. 11, 1869, when there were present Mrs. John H. Williams, president; Mrs. J. H. Gambril, second vice-president; Mrs. A. E. Eader, Secretary; and Mrs.
The statue is of Carrara marble, and was made in Italy, the base being granite; height of monument fifteen feet from the ground, and cost fourteen hundred dollars, Mr. Batterson being the contractor. The inscriptions on the panels are as follows:

ON FIRST PANEL.

"Erected A.D. 1880, by the Ladies' Monumental Association of Frederick County, in honor of the soldiers of the Confederate army who fell in the battles of Antietam and Monocacy and elsewhere, and who are buried here."

RIGHT PANEL.

"Soldiers rest, thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Dream of battle-fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking."

LEFT PANEL.

"To the unknown soldiers whose bodies here rest. We cannot inscribe their names upon tablets of stone, but we may hope to read them in a purer and an unchangeable record."

REAR PANEL.

"Their praises will be sung
In some yet unmeasured tongue,
Far on in summers that we shall not see."

Ladies' Relief Association.—During the war of 1861–65 the ladies of Frederick organized the "Ladies' Relief Association," with Mrs. Gideon Bantz as president, for lending aid to the medical officers of the Federal forces quartered near the city in their treatment of sick and disabled soldiers, by preparing such delicacies as are most relished by invalids. It originated in a call published in the Examiner of Aug. 21, 1861, and on October 21st fifty ladies met and organized. Seven committees were appointed, who had each the duty of securing the articles required for the sick on a specified day of the week. They visited the hospitals in the morning, and saw that the articles furnished were properly disposed of. After the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, in September, 1862, Gettysburg, in July, 1863, and Monocacy, in July, 1864, with thousands of wounded soldiers here and in the neighborhood, this association performed an immense labor, and its deeds of good were engraved on many a suffering heart.

Various other Societies.—Eastern Star Grange, No. 5, was organized several years ago, and its Master is George William Smith, and its Secretary, James A. Brown. "The Mechanical Library" and "Young Men's Christian Association," both instituted years ago, are in a flourishing condition. The Knights of Honor have a good lodge, No. 603.

Protestant Episcopal Orphan Asylum.—This elegant structure was erected in 1840, by the aid of fairs and the public donations for that purpose, the lot on which the building is located having been presented for this object by Mrs. Eleanor Potts. The building cost nearly five thousand dollars, and for a short period after its erection was occupied by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company as their office. The office of this company was removed in 1840 from the city of Washington to Frederick, which from its central position was the most proper location. Great credit is due to the ladies of the Episcopal Church for the energy and patience displayed in the establishment of this institution, which for two decades has been doing a noble work.

CHAPTER XXX.

PROminent INstitutions And Events.

The Barracks, for many years one of the features of Frederick, were built during the Revolutionary war, and in the midst of a fine, green lot, beautifully located on an eminence overlooking the whole of Monocacy, or Frederick Valley. The city is spread out below it, the spires of its numerous churches and its more lofty edifices meeting the eye on the one side, while the rich and luxuriant fields of one of the most productive valleys in the world may be seen on the other. The Barracks were used as a place of confinement for prisoners taken with Burgoyne at Saratoga, and next for the Hessians who were captured at Yorktown. Numerous huts were erected in addition to the Barracks, all of which were removed before 1840. The Barracks were next occupied by the French prisoners of "L'Insurgent," captured by the "Constellation" during the quasi-war with France. While the Hessians were there some of the more intelligent became enamored with the beauty and the advantages of the country, and made their escape, so that they were left behind when their fellow-prisoners were marched off, and from this stock descended a numerous and vigorous progeny.

The Barracks were long partly occupied by the State armorer, and the rooms rented out to tenants. On the Barracks Hill lay the old cannon, which had been famous among the boys from time immemorial. It was brought here to celebrate the peace of 1783, and was used in 1841 as the "Great Baby Waker" by Dertzbaugh, and for the celebration of the Fourth of July and other popular rejoicings. This piece of ordnance was among the first cannon cast in Maryland during the Revolutionary war, and was an eighteen-pounder. It was cast at Mount Aetna Furnace, six miles north of Hagerstown. From 1868 for three or four years the State Deaf and Dumb Asylum occupied the Barracks buildings, until their present institution was erected on the Barracks grounds.

From 1840 and for several years afterwards a portion of the Barracks (which belonged to the State) were used by special permission of the Legislature by Messrs. Jenks & Ramsburg as a cocoony. They had a white mulberry orchard, consisting of ten acres, in an adjoining lot. The State granted them the use of the Barracks buildings to test the experiment of silk-culture, then creating so much discussion throughout the country. W. D. Jenks began operations and planted his trees in 1837. Feb. 28, 1840, the reels were put up. During the year sewing silk was made equal to that of foreign manufacture. After the flyer was in operation, gold-stripe vesting was manufactured in considerable quantities.

The Old Town-Clock.—In perusing the musty records of Frederick we find that the solemn tones of the town-clock first pealed forth in 1807. It was constructed by that faithful chronicler of local incidents in early days and "goody artisan," Frederick Heisley. According to a contemporary description, it was "a noble piece of mechanism, and doth greatly excite the curiosity of our town-folk." What interesting scenes the old clock must have witnessed during the seventy-four long years of its existence! It is a seven-day time-piece, and has been wound up by John Fessler and his son nearly ever since its erection.

Washington and Lafayette in Frederick.—Gen. Washington first visited Frederick Town in April, 1755, as one of Gen. Braddock's aides, and again in 1791, when on his way from Mount Vernon to Philadelphia, at that time the seat of the national government. During his second visit he was formally received and entertained by the people of Frederick. On reaching the hill near the farm now owned by Henry Scholl he was met by a company of horsemen from Frederick, headed by Maj. Mountjoy Bayley, chief marshal, and comprising many of the most influential and respectable citizens of the county. The President was conducted up to Barracks Hill, through the town and up Market Street to Brother's tavern, and then to Rich Hill, the residence of Gov. Thomas Johnson. There was a brilliant illumination in honor of the event. The following is the correspondence which passed between Gen. Washington and a committee of citizens of Frederick County. Referring to this correspondence, the Rights of Man, published in Frederick Town in 1791, said,—

"This illustrious character during his short stay in Frederick Town, in this State, was treated with marks of high respect and great affection by the respectable citizens of this flourishing town. Previous to his departure, which public business obliged him to hasten, the following address (drawn in great haste) was presented to him, to which he was pleased to return an answer exhibiting as usual fresh proofs of his greatness and goodness."

The correspondence is as follows:

"To the President of the United States:

"Sir,—The inhabitants of Frederick take the liberty of congratulating you upon your safe arrival at this place, and to assure you that it gives them sincere pleasure to have this opportunity of expressing that veneration and attachment which they have always felt, and still feel, for your person and character as a patriot, a statesman, a soldier, and a fellow-citizen. They have, sir, a lively sense of gratitude for that long series of services which you have so ably exhibited on the public stage."

In reply Washington said:

"Your assertion of my public services overrates their value; and it is justice to my fellow-citizens that I should assign the eminent advantages of our political condition to another cause,—to their valor, wisdom, and virtue. From the first they derive their freedom; the second has been proved by their independence in national prosperity; the last, I trust, will long protect their social rights and insure their individual happiness. That your participation of these advantages may realize your best wishes is my sincere prayer."

"George Washington."

"Messrs. Murdock, Beall, Potts, Thomas, and McPherson."

After leaving Frederick Town, in July, 1791, on his way to Philadelphia, Gen. Washington passed through Woodsborough, Ladiesburg, and York Road Station to Middleburg and Taneytown, Hanover, etc. In passing through what is now known as Carroll County he remained part of the afternoon and overnight at "Terra Rubra," the hospitable mansion of Maj. John Ross Key, near Middleburg, where a large concourse of people had assembled to greet him. Many who had seen service with him in the days of '76, and who knew him personally, and admired his military and civil career, hastened to take him by the hand and bid him welcome. He was escorted from Frederick Town by ex-Governors Thomas Johnson and Thomas Sim Lee, Maj. Mountjoy Bayley, and others.

After breakfast on the morning after the night spent at Maj. Key's, ex-Governor Johnson announced that the general would say a few words to his friends before he left.

"My countrymen," said Washington, deeply affected, "I am about to leave your good land, your beautiful valleys, your refreshing streams, and the Blue Hills of Maryland, which stretch out before me. I cannot leave you, fellow-citizens, without thanking you again and again for your kind greeting; for the true and devoted friendship you have shown me. When in the darkest hours of the Revolution, of doubt and gloom, the support and support I received from the people of Frederick County always cheered me. It always awoke a responsive echo in my breast. I feel the emotion of gratitude beating in my heart,—my heart is too full to say more. God bless you all."

Washington was a first-rate farmer and always took a lively interest in agricultural pursuits. At that time Frederick County (before it was divided) was the largest wheat-growing county in the United States, and its grain crop of 1791 was particularly fine. That and other facts which fell under his observation prompted Washington, in a letter written shortly after to Sir John Sinclair, of Great Britain, to state that "Frederick County was the Garden Spot of the United States."

A funeral tribute to Washington's memory was paid on the 22d of February, 1800, at Frederick, in conformity with the military orders received from Maj.-Gen. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, of Charleston, S. C., addressed to Brig.-Gen. Mountjoy Bayley, of Frederick Town, commanding the Federal troops in Western Maryland. There was an immense attendance from all parts of the county and from distant points of Frederick.

Gen. John Eager Howard, of Baltimore, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Col. William Washington, Maj. Paul Benton, and Sergt. Lawrence Everhart, were in the procession. Ex-Governor Thomas Sim Lee, Hon. Benjamin Ogle, Governor of Maryland, and Hon. George Baer, Jr., member of Congress, were seated with Thomas Johnson, orator of the day, in a carriage drawn by four white horses and decorated in mourning.

The exercises began with the discharge of sixteen guns from the artillery, commanded by Capt. William Clements, and half-hour guns were fired until the procession moved. About eleven o'clock the line of procession was formed opposite Capt. Valentine Brother's, and moved in the following order:

An advance guard of four dragons.
Federal Troops under the command of Capt. Val. Brother.
Federal officers.
Music.
Military officers in uniform.
Physicians.
Clergy.
The Bier and Pall Bearers.
Sixteen young ladies in mourning representing the sixteen States in grief.
Committee of Arrangements.
Masonic Brethren.

The procession moved down Market Street to the Square, and then up Patrick Street. When arrived in front of the German Presbyterian church the whole halted and opened to the right and left. The
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

In the summer of 1824, Lafayette, with his son, George Washington Lafayette, and Mr. Le Vasseur, his private secretary, sailed from Havre in the ship "Cadmus," Capt. Allyn, and arrived in the city of New York on the 15th of August of that year. His advent was the signal for universal rejoicing. Party spirit was hushed, patriotic ardor alone prevailed, and an era of good feeling pervaded the entire land.

Frederick County was one of the foremost communities to do him honor, and among the citizens who were particularly active in urging an appropriate reception were Messrs. William P. Farquhar, Samuel Barnes, editor of the Frederick Examiner; Joshua Cockey, Henry Kemp, Joseph M. Cromwell, John Lee, Henry Ridgely Warfield, Stephen Steiner, and John Kunkel. John Kunkel and his son Hon. Jacob M. Kunkel were in their day conspicuous men in the history of Western Maryland.

Hon. Jacob M. Kunkel was born in Frederick, July 24, 1822, and in that city died, April 7, 1870. His great-grandfather, John Kunkel, was a colonel in the army of Frederick the Great, and about 1732 emigrated to America. Soon afterwards he purchased of Richard and Thomas Penn, proprietors of the province, a tract of land in Lancaster County, Pa. The letters patent and the land itself are still in the possession of his descendants. He was an old man when the war of the Revolution opened, and although he himself could not go, he sent six of his seven sons to the Continental army. One of them fell at the battle of the Brandywine. Jacob, the fifth son, was a dragoon, and while upon detached service on the banks of the Delaware was with a companion suddenly surprised by a small command of British horse. The young dragoon, however, was equal to the emergency; shooting the commanding officer of the enemy dead on the spot, he leaped upon the latter's horse, and before the men could recover from their surprise was pushing on across the river, and so luckily escaped. In the holsters of his equine prize he found two silver-mounted pistols marked "J. P." One of the weapons is yet in the possession of the Kunkel family. The eldest son, William (grandfather of Hon. J. M. Kunkel), served at the defense of Fort Mifflin, on Mud Island.

Jacob M. Kunkel's father, John Kunkel, came to Frederick Town in 1809, and engaging first in business as a distiller, was later extensively engaged in distilling, which he followed until his death, July 13, 1861. It may suffice to show in what esteem he was held to say that he was known far and wide as "Honest John Kunkel." He was in the service a few months during 1812 as a light-horseman, and in 1820 was a member of the board of aldermen of Frederick. His wife was Elizabeth Baker, of Lancaster County, Pa., whose ancestors did valiant service in the Revolutionary struggle. One of her uncles was a colonel in the Federal army.

Jacob M. Kunkel's early education was obtained at St. John's Catholic Seminary. Ill health obliged him to desist from his studies, and in 1835, he journeyed to the West in company with Rev. Charles Reighly, a former pastor of the German Reformed Church of Frederick, and under his tuition pursued his education at Monroe, Mich., during the following two or three years. Upon his return to Fred- erick about 1838 he entered Frederick College, and completed his education at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, where he graduated with high honors. He was a member of the Jefferson Literary Society of the university, and one of its officers.

In 1844 he entered upon the study of the law with Joseph M. Palmer, and in October, 1845, was admitted to the Frederick bar. Later he became a law partner of ex-Governor Francis Thomas, and for many years conducted a successful legal practice. Jan. 3, 1848, in Frederick, he married Anna Mary, eldest daughter of Dr. John H. McClellan, of Frederick City, one of the wealthiest and most influential landholders of Frederick County.

In 1849, Jacob M. Kunkel was nominated by the Democratic party to the State Senate, having for his opponent the late Gideon Bantz, reputed at that time to be the most popular Whig in the county, and gaining the election, served during his four years' term with much distinction. In 1857 he was elected by the Democracy to the Thirty-fifth Congress, defeating Hon. H. W. Hoffman, the Know-Nothing candidate, who had himself in 1855 beaten Hon. W. T. Hamilton for Congress. In 1839, Messrs. Kunkel and Hoffman were again rival congressional candidates, and, as before, Hoffman was compelled to strike his colors to his old competitor. Mr. Kunkel participated in the exciting incidents of 1861, and true to the doctrine of States rights, vehemently opposed the theory of coercion and centralization. At the expiration of his congressional term, with the session of 1861, he found his health sorely impaired, and theneforward held himself retired from active political life, albeit he continued zealously to advocate, by such means as lay in his power, the principles of Democracy and the interests of his party's candidates. He was esteemed throughout the State as a conscientious politician of high integrity and patriotic purposes. In bearing he was the polished and scholarly gentleman, genial in his hospitality and warm and lasting in his friendships. The latter years of his life were mainly spent in literary and scientific pursuits, amid the treasures of a large and valuable private library. Until 1866 he was a partner with his brother, John B., at Catoctin Furnace, and found occupation for his leisure also in the management of his landed estates. He was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and at one time a vestryman therein. As already recorded, he died April 7, 1870. His widow survived him a little more than eight years, dying Dec. 12, 1878. Of their three children, a son and daughter died in youth. The remaining son, John I. Kunkel, resides with his family in the old Kunkel mansion in Frederick.
JACOB M. KUNKEL.

When it became definitely settled that Lafayette would visit Frederick, triumphal arches were erected, and the town was handsomely decorated with flags, bunting, etc. A handsome pavilion was also erected at the corner of Market and West Church Streets, the interior being tastefully ornamented with crimson silk, banners, etc.

Messrs. George Baer, Dr. John Tyler, Col. John McPherson, Gen. Thomas Counte Worthington, John L. Harding, and James F. Houston were appointed a committee to visit Baltimore and see Gen. Lafayette in order to perfect the arrangements for his visit. The day was fixed, and everything made ready for the demonstration. On the 29th of December, 1824, Gen. Lafayette, accompanied by his suite and Col. John H. Barney, Capt. Dubois, Mr. Matelin, Hezekiah Niles, Gen. Shepherd C. Leakin, John S. Skinner, and others, arrived in a stage at the Monocacy bridge late in the evening, where a large crowd was gathered to greet him. By the time Lafayette and his escort reached the city Frederick was thronged with an immense concourse of people. All sections of the county and adjoining counties were represented, and many had come from Virginia, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and other States.

On the following day a dinner was given Lafayette at Talbott's City Hotel, Col. John McPherson presiding. A grand ball concluded the festivities.

After the general had left the country and returned to France, John S. Skinner, of Baltimore, had a number of agricultural seeds, and a collection of fowls, live 'possums, partridges, 'coons, etc., forwarded to him by a ship laden with tokens of national esteem. Among others, Mr. Philip Reich, of Frederick, sent him four or five ears of corn of a fine variety. This was highly prized, as the general had heartily enjoyed some corn-bread which he had eaten at Talbott's hotel. The receipt of the corn was acknowledged in his own handwriting, as follows:

"LAFAYETTE, May 29, 1827.

"I am to acknowledge your kind letter of November 18th, and the welcome receipt of several precious kinds of corn, which are just arrived in time to be seasonably planted. While I feel as a farmer the merit of this gift, I have a particular pleasure in this obligation to you, and beg you, my dear sir, to accept my best thanks, with the assurance of my most sincere and friendly regard.

"PHILIP REICH, Esq."

The original of this letter is now in the hands of the Engelbrecht family, of Frederick.

The general left Frederick on the last day of December, 1824, accompanied by the mayor and some members of the committee of arrangements. He arrived at Rockville the same evening, and reached Georgetown on the 1st of January, 1825, where he was met by his old friend, James Monroe, the President of the United States. In a letter from Lagrange to a lady of Frederick, he declared that his reception there, on account of the incidents connected with it, was the most agreeable to his feelings of any he had received while in this country.

Gen. Lafayette was a very prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and the apron which he wore while here among his brethren was presented to him by the late William Baer, and is now in possession of Columbia Lodge, of Frederick.

Centennial Celebration at Frederick.—On the 28th of June, 1876, was celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the adoption by the Maryland Convention at Frederick of the resolution instructing the Maryland delegates to Congress to vote for the resolution declaring the provinces free and independent States. The convention assembled at Frederick on the 21st of June, 1776, and took the first decided action on the part of the colony looking to an armed contest with Great Britain. In the early part of 1876 a notice was issued calling for a meeting of citizens to take steps to commemorate the centennial anniversary of the county. On February 22d a meeting was accordingly held at the court-house. Gen. John A. Steiner was made temporary chairman, and the following permanent organization effected: President, Hon. John Ritchie; Vice-Presidents, James H. Gambrill and Col. Wm. Richardson; Secretary, H. K. Carmack; Treasurer, Wm. H. Falconer. A resolution was adopted authorizing the appointment of a County Centennial Committee, and the following persons were selected:

The district committees were:

Middletown, No. 3.—George C. Roderick, John W. White, Vincent Sanner, Pre. Backston, Dr. Chair Stern, B. Kingshaker.

Georgetown, No. 4.—John Biggs, John W. Shaw, John W. Staub, Charles Stevens, Jacob Miller.

Eminettown, No. 5.—James M. Dwen, Samuel Motter, Maj. Hornor, David Agnew, Isaac S. Annan.

Catoctin, No. 6.—John W. Hoover, James C. Clarke, Daniel W. Blickenstaff, Daniel Leatherman, Dr. Lamar.

Liberty, No. 8.—Henry Baker, J. S. L. Kohlerick, Peter Lu- genbeel, G. Gaither, Harry Boyle.

New Market, No. 9.—Dr. J. Downey, Grafton B. Hammond, Melville P. Wood, Hamilton Stier, William W. Ogborn.

Hauers, No. 10.—Harvey Duhman, Lewis Crawford, Val- entine Harbaugh, Peter Hauers, Jos. E. Brown.

Mount Pleasant, No. 13.—E. L. Cramer, Dr. Stone, Joseph Rentsch, James Biddlecome, David M. Scholl.

Jefferson, No. 14.—L. Culler, Columbus Hude, Ezra M. Thomas, Robert Boteler, George T. Whip.

Jackson, No. 16.—Upton Buhman, Joseph Brown, Daniel V. Harp, Dr. G. W. Boteler, Jonas Doub.

Woodville, No. 18.—Evans Wilson, Frederick S. Clary, William R. Dorney, Moses Dutty, Dr. J. Bronwell.

On the 25th of March (1876), the two hundred and forty-second anniversary of the landing of the Maryland Pilgrims, the committee met, and determined to hold the celebration in Frederick on the 28th of June, the hundredth anniversary of the order of the Convention of Maryland to her delegates to the Pro- vinicial Congress to vote for the declaration severing the connection of this with the mother-country.

At a subsequent meeting of the central committee, sub-committees were appointed to solicit contributions to defray the expenses necessarily incident to a proper observance of the day, and a programme was adopted, Col. S. Carmack being appointed chief marshal, with Col. Wm. Richardson and Lewis S. Clingan as aides, and Gen. Edward Shriver officer of the day.

It is needless to say that the citizens responded liberally to the solicitation for material aid, as they were determined to make their celebration in every way worthy of the event commemorated, and their patriotic efforts were crowned with the most gratifying success.

At three o'clock on the morning of the 28th the bells rang forth a merry halalchaj chorus, the rich diapasons of St. John's Catholic, the several fire-bells, the St. John's Reformed, and the chiming Steelt tones of the Evangelical Lutheran forming a perfect harmony with the dignified and majestic sub-bass of the Episcopal and Evangelical Reformed. All the public buildings and many private residences wore an aspect of floral loveliness at an early hour. Conspicuous in variety and beauty of ornamentation were the City and Central Hotels, Dill House, and Nativitate, all being profuse in loyal insignia. At the Nativitate a larger streamer bearing the inscription "Ad Te Omnes Gentes Venient" (To Thee all Nations Come) was suspended from a fourth story window to the opposite side of the street. St. John's College was also gayly dressed. At 8 A.M. the different fire companies, tradesmen, and various organizations assembled on North Market Street, the right resting on Sixth. About 9:30 A.M. the procession moved down Market Street in the following order:

Squad of Policemen.
Chief Marshal—Col. Samuel Carmack.
Aides—Col. William Richardson and Lewis S. Clingan.
Frederick Cornet Band.
Orators, Poet, Clergy.
Old Soldiers of 1812.
Judges of Circuit Court and County Officers.
Middletown Cornet Band.
Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council.
Independent Hose Company, No. 1

(having three engines drawn by horses, and two reels handsomely decorated with flowers, flags, etc., drawn by members of the company. An Indian chief in full costume, accompanied by a squaw, surmounted the first engine. On the second appeared a young lady representing the Goddess of Liberty; on the third four full-rigged sailor-boys. Eighty-six members of this company were in the line of march, each wearing a green budge.

Junior Fire Company.

(Engined drawn by four horses, and two hose-carriages, which had been recently painted, were all tastefully decorated. The engine was manned by four sons of America, dressed in Continental costume. Their uniform consisted of dark pantaloons, white shirts, straw hats, trimmed with pink ribbon, and red cuffs, inscribed “Junior.” Thirty-seven little girls in white, in an open wagon, supplemented the display of the Junior Fire Company.)

Chippewa Tribe, No. 19, L. O. R. M.,

With war-clubs, tomahawks, bows and arrows, etc.

Delaware Tribe, No. 10, of Berlin, Md.

Frederick City Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

The Harrugari Order.

Woodborough Band.

Fredonia Council, No. 46, O. U. A. M., followed by a large number of tastefully-decorated wagons, representing various trades and business interests of the city.

The programme of exercises at the Court-house Square was as follows:

Martial Music—“Hail Columbia.”

Organization.

Prayer—By Rev. Dr. George Diehl.

Centennial Hymn.

Martial Music—“America.”

President’s Address—Hon. John Ritchie.

Hymn—“Our Country.”

Martial Music—“Washington’s March.”

Reading of Declaration of Independence—By Dr. Lewis H. Steiner.

Hymn—“Star Spangled Banner.”

Poem—By Col. Charles E. Trail.

Hymn—“My Country ‘Tis of Thee.”

Martial Music—“Yankee Doodle.”

Address—By James McSherry.

Hymn—“Hail Columbia.”

Martial Music—“Marseillaise.”

Address—By Milton G. Urner.

Hymn—“Voices of Freedom.”

Martial Music—“Our Flag is There.”

Prayer—By Rev. E. H. Williams.

Hymn—“Before the Lord We Bow.”

Doxology—“Praise God,” etc.

Nearly every private residence in the city, as well as the stores and public buildings, were decorated with bunting, flowers, etc.

One of the interesting features of the day was the presence of a number of the veterans of the war of 1812, among whom were the following:

John Degrange and John Pampell, of Capt. Nicholas Torbett’s company; Frederick Hawman, of Capt. George W. Grit’s company; Reuben Grove, of Capt. John Brengle’s company; Daniel Heffner, of Capt. Joseph’s Wood’s company; Jacob Aubert, of Capt. Jacob Getzendorfer’s company; George Marquert, of Capt. Davidson’s company, D. C. Mr. Marquert is a native of Frederick Town, but was attached to Capt. Davidson’s company of the District of Columbia. Capt. Davidson’s infantry, Capt. Stoll’s rifles, and Capt. George Peter’s artillery formed a brigade of the District of Columbia militia. Francis Scott Key, of Georgetown, and George Peabody were high privates in Capt. Stoll’s company. Mr. Marquert mustered with Key and Peabody, and cherished a friendly recollection for the great philanthropist and the author of the “Star Spangled Banner.”

At night there was a handsome display of fireworks, followed by a brilliant centennial ball.

Cornelius Staley, one of the best-known of Frederick County’s citizens, was born near Frederick City, Oct. 22, 1808, and traces his ancestry back through at least three generations of Frederick County citizens, his great-grandfather having come from Germany shortly after 1740. His grandfather, Jacob, was born about 1747, and his father, John, in 1777. Frederick County was likewise the birthplace of his maternal grandfather, whose daughter Margaret, born 1780, was the mother of the subject of this notice. Cornelius Staley was married Nov. 17, 1829, in Washington County, to Ruanna, daughter of Adam and Catharine Snively, of the county last named. Their living children are Mrs. Marietta C. Doub and Mrs. Antoinette F. Gambrill. Mr. Staley’s life from birth has been passed almost exclusively upon the farm, and it is his boast that he has earned the right to be considered a true “son of the soil.” His education was limited to the benefits derived from the common schools of the day, and as he was trained in the religious faith advocated by the United Brethren in Christ, so in that faith he has ever steadfastly continued. Political honors have never been to his liking, for in the humble and quiet pursuits of his business as an agriculturist he has found the greater satisfaction of winning golden opinions as a citizen and neighbor. He was, however, persuaded in 1836 to accept from the Governor of Maryland an appointment for three years as justice of the peace. In 1841 he was chosen to the Legislature, and in 1843 a member of the board of county commissioners. Mr. Staley’s military record includes a brief experience in 1844 as first lieutenant of the Ringgold Dragoons, a famous military organization of that day. For many years he has been a staunch supporter of and laborer for the best interests of the County Agricultural Society. He served as president of the society in 1859 and 1860, and is at present a member of the board of managers.

Water-Works.—At an election held March 28, 1825, at “Talbott’s Hotel,” for directors of the Frederick Water Company, the following were chosen for the ensuing year: John McPherson, John Kunkel, Gideon Bantz, Stephen Steiner, John L. Harding, Abraham Shriver, William Tyler, and Henry Koontz. On the 31st they examined the neighboring sources of water, and on April 18th opened the subscription-books for stock at the Branch Bank. John McPherson was elected president of the board, and Thomas Shriver, superintendent of the works.

The directors were as follows:

The last election for directors, as far as learned from the minutes of this company, was held March 23, 1838, when the following were chosen: Richard Potts, William Tyler, George Baltzell, Gideon Bantz, W. R. Sanderson, Frederick Nursz, John C. Fritchie, Lewis Meitart. The water was brought partly in wooden pipes from a spring two and a half miles northwest of the city to a reservoir one mile distant from the corporation, and thence supplied to the town. It was very inadequate to the public wants.

In 1839 the city took into consideration the question of building works, and an act of the Assembly of that year granted it the franchise for a lottery of $75,000, which it sold to parties in Baltimore for the benefit of its water-works fund. In 1844, by act of December of that year, the city borrowed $30,000 to aid in the construction of the works, and in October of 1845 made another loan of $8000 to complete them. These works cost about $90,000. From the receiver at the foot of the mountain to the works proper is a distance of two and a half miles, and from thence to the city about one mile.

The building of the water-works began Sept. 19, 1844, and were completed Nov. 22, 1845.

The principal engineer was F. Erdman; assistant engineer, Geo. Erdman; and superintendents, Winchester Clingan, Wm. Baltzell, and Samuel Carmack.

The following were the aldermen and counsellors under whose administration they were built:

Aldermen, Gideon Bantz, Ezra Houck, Peter S. Storm, Calvin Page, David J. Markey; Counsellors, Jacob Keller, Henry Boteler, Geo. Koontz, Wm. Kolb, Peter Goodmann, Daniel Derr, Henry Young.

Gas-Works.—In October, 1849, Geo. R. Fischer prepared to furnish Frederick City with illuminating gas. A large number of hands were put to work in laying pipes on Patrick, Church, and Court Streets. The entire work was completed in a few weeks, and gas was used in the city before New Year's. This was the feeble beginning of the Isabella Gas Company, which during an existence thus far of thirty-three years has passed beyond the most sanguine expectations of its organizers, and proved untrue the evil predictions of those who first prophesied its failure. Hon. Charles E. Trail has been its president for many years. The Citizens' Gas Company was organized in October, 1878. Its officers have been from its organization as follows: President, G. J. Doll; Treasurer, C. V. S. Levy; Directors, F. P. Carlin, Calvin Page, C. V. S. Levy, G. J. Doll. Its works are on East Patrick Street.

Among those who have been identified with the material interests of Frederick, and who have aided by their capital and influence works of public improvement, is William Michael Feaga. He comes of Revolutionary stock, and boasts an ancestry in Frederick County extending back to 1783, when his grandfather, Philip Feaga, a German, located a farm near Frederick City. He was one of the Hessian allies in the British army during the Revolution, and in common with hundreds of his fellow-countrymen, resolved, upon the termination of the campaign, to make America his home. In 1788 he purchased the place now owned by Wm. M. Feaga, rebuilt the mill he found there, and resided upon the property until his death, which took place about 1827. His son George—born in May, 1786, and deceased in 1865—was father to the worthy gentleman whose name heads this article, and whose birth occurred on the old homestead June 4, 1820. Mr. Feaga's maternal grandfather was Jacob Trout, himself born in Frederick County, whither his father came from Germany and made his home in the then dense wilderness. Jacob Trout was a captain in the war of the Revolution, and as a further instance of how the Feaga blood flowed bright and quickly in the stormy days, it may be remarked that old Philip Feaga walked from Frederick to Baltimore, determined to enlist for the fight, but, unfortunately for his hopes, was rejected because of his extreme age. One of his sons (Frederick) fought in that war, while of Jacob Trout's sons John entered the war of 1812, and Jacob, Jr., the campaign against the Indians, in which he was doubtless killed, since he was not heard of afterward. William M. Feaga received his school education from the district pedagogue, and from his youth to the present day has milled and farmed upon the old homestead, save for a period of two years, 1866-67, when he filled the office of collector and and when the war closed he gave his adherence to the Republican party. Trained in the Lutheran faith, he has steadily upheld it by his influence and countenance. In 1844 he married Susanna Maria, daughter of Frederick Ramsburg, a veteran of the war of 1812, and one of Frederick County's early settlers. By his marriage with Miss Ramsburg, Mr. Feaga had nine children, of whom six are living. The sons are Edmund Pendleton, Elmer Butler, and Josiah Ramsburg. After a union of thirty-three years, Mr. Feaga lost his wife, Dec. 20, 1877. Oct. 18, 1881, he married again, choosing for his second consort Miss Hester Ann Rogers Preston, daughter of Charles Preston. Her father was born near Frederick City in 1789, where his father, Francis (an Englishman), made a settlement many years before. Mrs. Feaga's maternal grandfather was Thomas Baldwin, a native of Annapolis, and a descendant of one of the earliestcomers to the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

The Great Flood.—On July 24, 1848, occurred the most terrible flood ever experienced in Frederick City. Fortunately no lives were lost, but the damage to property amounted to nearly half a million dollars. The rain commenced falling on the night previous, and continued some time, soaking the ground to a considerable depth, but on the next morning (Friday) about eight o'clock it fell in torrents, and rained without intermission until after dinner, and in less than half an hour Market Street was covered with water, and by ten o'clock it was sweeping through the lower part of the city at a fearful rate, carrying off bridges, stables, tuna-yards, outhouses, and even dwellings. The water in Carroll Creek rose so rapidly that the people in that section of the city did not have time to remove a thing from their houses, and the consequence was a great many lost everything they had. Among the heavy losers were John Loats and Gideon Bantz, the damage to their yards being very great, as they both lost considerable quantities of leather and bark, independent of the injury done their buildings and machinery. Messrs. Hardt & Keefer lost a large amount of lumber. The residents in the vicinity of the creek suffered heavily. The house of Mr. Beckley was washed away as the last member of his family was leaving. The livery-stables, confectionery-shops, millinery-stores, and other places of business on South Market Street from the corner of Patrick to car corner suffered terribly, Hood & Crane losing a number of buggies, with many other valuable articles. On West Patrick Street the damage was equally as great. All the houses from George Smith's, on the other side of the Bentztown bridge, to Lewis H. Doll's tobacco store were flooded, causing a great injury to furniture, carpeting, etc., and sweeping away the contents of gardens and fences, pavements, porches, and numerous back buildings. The corner of the house adjoining the creek on the south side of the street was carried away, and other buildings in the immediate vicinity were so much damaged that they had to be torn down and rebuilt. Ramsburg & Bro. were heavy sufferers. The water in their store ran over the counter and destroyed large quantities of groceries and other articles. The boot and shoe store of L. M. Nixdorf suffered considerably, as did all in that neighborhood. The beer establishment of John Lips was so damaged as to necessitate rebuilding. Farther up the same side of the street the rush of the water was fearful, and on the opposite side it reached the second story of some houses, knocking topsy-turvy everything it came in contact with. In Brewers' Alley the destruction was very great. Mr. Peter Beur was a heavy loser. The bridge over the creek at this point was swept away, together with seven other bridges in different sections of the city, which cost over $20,000 to rebuild. Following the creek from Brewers' Alley down to Market Street, and thence to Carroll Street, nothing... but ruin and destruction met the eye. The barrel-factory of G. Koontz, on Carroll Street, together with a lot of barrels and cooper stuff, was washed away, involving a heavy loss to the proprietor, and throwing many employees out of work. The house of Joseph Nelson was completely flooded, and it was only by the timely assistance rendered that his family were saved from drowning. That part of S. G. Groshon's warehouse adjoining the creek was swept off, also the back building of the house occupied by Mrs. Dayhoff.
Many valuable horses were lost, among them two of Gideon Bantz', one of Mrs. Norris', one of Dr. Fairfax Schley's, one of Oliver Myers', one of Jacob Schmidt's, one of L. M. Hildebrand's, and one of Peter Bear's. It is impossible to give a list of all who suffered. F. Y. Rhodes and family, finding the water about to inundate their premises, started to find a place of safety, and had scarcely got across the bridge ere it fell into the sweeping current. His store was drenched from the floor to the ceiling, destroying the major part of his confectioneries, with other injuries to carpets, etc. Charles E. Myers, while attempting to rescue some horses in the stable of his brother across the creek, was obliged by the rising waters to seek refuge on the top of the stable, and was only relieved from his perilous position by a rope thrown to him. A. M. Baughman, employed at the foundry of McClintock Young, started home, wading in the water, but was caught up and carried down on driftwood to the stone bridge on the Baltimore pike, where the drift lodged. In this way he was enabled to escape. Mrs. Pampel, seeking to escape from her house on West Patrick Street, was barely rescued just as the advancing waters were about to carry her off.
Mrs. Paris Corey, of West Patrick Street, came near being lost in escaping from the lower to the higher part of her house. The damage in Middletown Valley was immense, being over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; also along the Linganore, where not a mill-dam was left. Capt. John Spargo, a merchant at New London, was accidentally drowned while attempting to save some property. For over a week following all railroad communication with Baltimore was cut off, and the mails were greatly impeded and delayed.

Notable Storms.—The first week of March, 1767, was remarkable for its heavy storms. On Monday evening, the 2d, it rained hard; on Tuesday, the 3d, there was another heavy rain and high, destructive wind; on the 4th, 5th, and 6th there was more rain and a severe wind from the northeast. By these heavy rains the rivers and streams were swollen so much above their usual height that many bridges, mills, and dams were swept away, and much other damage done. The tide rose at Annapolis to a very great height. On Saturday, the 7th, two persons attempting to ride across Patapsco Falls were drowned, and Joseph Goodman, a blacksmith, while fording a stream was also lost. In one part of the Potomac the river rose forty-five feet higher than it had been in the summer, and the Monocacy rose about fifteen feet.
Many houses, cattle, horses, etc., were carried away and lost. In the sugar-lands the flood made prodigious havoc, about four hundred hogheads of tobacco being destroyed. There was another flood on the 5th of October, 1736, the creek which runs through the town rising suddenly in the night, many persons not being apprised of the danger had their stock carried away by the current. Several persons whose dwellings bordered on the creek, and who were confounded to their beds with sickness, came near perishing before assistance could be afforded them. People who had resided near the Monocacy for sixty years stated that the waters of that creek rose ten feet higher than was ever before known, and the inhabitants sustained considerable losses, as many dwelling-houses, grist-mills, and saw-mills were destroyed or carried off.

May 16, 1885, there was a tremendous hail-storm, accompanied with thunder and lightning. The weather during the previous six weeks had been unusually cold, and the fruits were destroyed by the frost. Some of the hail-stones measured three and a half inches in circumference.

June 26, 1826, there was a freshet in Carroll's Creek, and considerable damage was done to the gardens of Jacob Englebrecht,
Mr. Retmyer, Joseph Tulbott, and Dr. Duvali, with others.
Along the Monocacy hay, wheat sheaves, rye, logs, fences, etc., were swept away.

April 26, 1828, another flood in Carroll's Creek.

May 26, 1828, another severe hail-storm, hail falling as large as pigeon-eggs.

Sept. 29, 1837, freshet in Carroll's Creek.

March 5, 1838, another flood in the creek; gardens overflowed, and many houses full of water.

Nov. 2, 1846, there was a flood in Carroll's Creek, the highest since 1821.

Oct. 7, 1847, there was another fearful freshet; bridges were swept away, gardens washed out, and buildings damaged.

Aug. 12, 1848, there was another great freshet in the creek.

Aug. 6, 1855, high water in the Monocacy within five feet of the tops of the abutments of the bridge.

Feb. 2, 1876.—The wind-storm which passed over the county and city of Frederick between two and six o'clock A.M., and which came directly from the west, was one of the most terrible and destructive ever experienced in that section of the country.
For several hours it raged with unabated fury, and created the greatest consternation in almost every household. Quite a number of houses, stables, etc., in the city were unroofed and otherwise damaged, and the debris scattered in the streets and gardens. The steeple of the Episcopal church, one hundred and thirty-five feet high, was blown down, and in falling crushed a portion of the roof of the Central National Bank building, occupied by Col. C. E. Dennis, the president of the bank, and his family as a residence. Fortunately no one was injured.
The damage to both buildings was between three thousand and four thousand dollars.

The State Deaf and Dumb Institution had a number of window-glasses broken and the roof slightly injured, and considerable damage was done to Montevue Hospital. In the country a great deal of loss was incurred. At Jefferson a church steeple was blown down, and at Mechanicstown the Lutheran church was completely unroofed. Numerous houses also were damaged at these and other towns, and a number of fine stables and barns in the country were partially demolished. Among the latter were those of Nelson E. Ransburg, Rev. A. E. Wallis, and Thomas Anderson. The destruction of fencing, etc., was very great, and at various places the roads were blockaded by large trees which had been torn up by the roots.

Record of Events.—In July, 1757, Alexander McKeafy and Samuel Wilson were shot and killed near Frederick Town. This was probably during the Indian war. On the 22d of October, 1773, four convicts who had murdered their master, Archibald Moffar, were executed at Frederick.

In December, 1798, Upton Bruce, a member of the House of Delegates from Frederick County, asked leave to bring in a bill entitled an “Act for the gradual abolition of slavery.” There was some opposition developed, and Mr. Bruce withdrew his motion.

In November, 1763, about twenty Indians made an inroad into the “Great Cove” and killed Christopher Fiddler, Charles Stewart, and Thomas Enery, burning the house of William Nox, taking him and his family of eight persons prisoners, and murdering one of his children. They were pursued but escaped.

1819.—Methodist Episcopal Church camp-meeting began on Mr. John Devilbiss’ farm, near Lewistown. Oct. 4th.—Great Masonic procession.

1820.—German Reformed Synod met, in May.
The Catoctin Mountain, northwest of town, on fire, extending ten miles, and was extinguished by a heavy snow falling, April 2d.

August 27th.—Annual Methodist Episcopal Church camp-meeting in progress on land of John Devilbiss, near Lewistown, November 18th.—Officers of First Frederick Dragoons elected, viz.: Captain, John McPherson, Jr.; First Lieutenant, John Rigney; Second Lieutenant, Thomas J. Graham; Cornet, George McLane.
Artillery: Captain, Lewis Green; First Lieutenant, John Backey; Ensign, Matthias B. Bartgis.
First Frederick Guards: Captain, James F. Houston; First Lieutenant, Samuel Webster; Ensign, William Russell.

1821.—January 30th. Samuel Frey, the “converted Jew,” preached in Reformed church.
March 21st.—The jury in the case of Abraham Shivers vs. the Political Examiner, for libel, returned a verdict of “not guilty.”
July 2d.—Freshet carried off part of the stone bridge on Market Street, at Hallerstown, and was very high on Patrick Street as far as Reitmyer’s on the turnpike.
July 23d.—The water in Carroll Creek was higher than it had been for thirty-three years, and William Perry lost two horses in the flood while attempting to cross the road between Ezra Dill’s and William Springer’s. The water in Market Street was as high as George Bents’, and in Patrick up to Jacob Scale’s.
September 1st.—Two large Republican barbecues held, one on Maryland Tract, the other at Trout’s place, four miles north-west.
September 3d.—Lutheran State Synod met in Frederick.

1822.—January 1st. The “Malthesian Association” selected the following managers: Cyrus Mants, George Englebrecht, William Jenkins, Jr., Edward Trail, Philip Reich.
February.—The attempted impeachment of Judge Abraham Shriver, of the Fifth Judicial District, by the Legislature resulted in his acquittal.
March 24th.—Doctor Horwitz was giving lessons in Hebrew.
May.—Capt. Thomas W. Morgan commanded the “Independent Blues.”
August 3d.—“Harmonic Band” organized.
September 6th.—Camp-meeting began on land of John Lar- kin, seven miles from town.
December 17th.—The dwelling-house of Jacob Weinbremer burned with all the contents, and family barely saved their lives.

1823.—January 20th. Col. Steiner circulated a petition to have a bridge built over the Potomac at Harper’s Ferry.
April 25th.—Roger Brooke Taney had a public sale of his household goods, preparatory to his departing to Baltimore to locate.
May 31st.—William Patterson (negro) was publicly whipped at court-house for stealing from his master.
June 25th.—A fire in the house of B. P. Piggum, on Court Street, occupied by A. Bladen as dwelling, and by Francis Thomas and Benjamin Price as law offices.
July 14th.—General celebration, reading of Declaration of Indepen- dence by James M. Shelmian, and an oration by Benjamin Price.
July 12th.—Lutheran Church purchased of Worthington Johnson twenty and three-quarter acres of land at the east end of Church Street for a graveyard, at five hundred dollars.
July 15th.—Col. A. Fenwick, Dr. William Howard, and William Price, canal commissioners, left Frederick for Poplar Springs to locate the canal. The cavalcade consisted of two wagons and sixty hands.
August 5th.—Mr. Jenkins and his horses were killed by lightning at Mr. Kephart’s tavern during a hail-storm, in which hail fell larger than hen’s eggs.
August 13th.—Meeting of canal delegates from different cities at court-house to organize for Ohio and Chesapeake Canal. The committee from Frederick were John Graham, John McPherson, Grafton Duvall, William Goldsborough, B. S. Pigm- an, William Tyler, and Singleton Duvall, who was secretary of the meeting.
September 4th.—Col. John McPherson purchased the mill of the late James Robertson, at the mouth of Linganore Creek, near Monocacy bridge, for thirty-five thousand five hundred dollars.

1824.—January 7th. Great excitement about ghosts seen in the tavern-stand lately kept by Charles Humrichhouse, but none of the spirits were caught.
May 1st.—Militia parade-officers: Captains, James S. Weaver, Jacob Beare, Samuel Houston, Samuel Webster, David Springale, Winchester Clingan, Philip Pyphert; Lieutenants Thomas Dean, Henry Stowell, Daniel Kohl, George Lowe, Eli Moberly, Thomas Dean, Levi Davis; Ensign, J. J. McCully; Augustus P. Ebert, William Doherty.
May 25th.—Gen. Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, passed through Frederick.
October 4th.—“Warren Green,” “Frederick Blues,” artilery, and a troop of horse marched to Baltimore to welcome Lafayette.

December 7th.—An attempt made to rob the Winchester mail four miles from town.

December 29th.—Marquis de Lafayette arrived in Frederick at four p.m. He was received with as much pomp and parade as in any other city.

1825.—January 1st. At election of officers of "Mathenian Association," George Englebrecht was chosen president, J. N. Hoffman secretary, and John Cook treasurer.

April 9th.—In the Lutheran graveyard, at the east end of Church Street, recently laid off in lots twelve feet square and sold at twelve dollars a lot, was buried Miss Prudencea Evert, daughter of John Evert, the first interment in this burial-ground.

April 20th.—Corner-stone laid for the rebuilding and enlarging of Lutheran church.

May 27th.—William Peter Poulpi appointed letter-carrier and penny post for Frederick Town and vicinity.

May 26th.—Cattle-show at Mrs. Cockeyer's tavern, Monocacy bridge, at which Geo. M. Conant was awarded five dollars for best piece of carpeting, Geo. Wissinger two dollars for best linen, and John Hall two dollars for best piece of diaper.

June 13th.—The addition to Frederick at west end of Patrick Street was laid out by Col. Stephen Steiner and Stephen Ramsburg. It is now called "Battle Town," from a small encounter between Col. Steiner and Stephen Klein, the first resident of the addition. The people first called it "Stephensburg," from the three Stephens connected with it as aforesaid. After that it was called "Rataville," from the great number of rats in its vicinity.

June 17th.—Anthony St. John Baker, British consul-general; Hon. Mr. De Malitz, Russian secretary of legation; and Mrs. Huribide, ex-Empress of Mexico, passed through town.

July 4th.—Richard II., Marshall delivered the oration at the court-house. There was a barbecue at "Beztz' Pump."

August 15th.—Lewis Medart appointed postmaster, vice Col. James Fisher Houston, resigned, and removed the office to his dwelling next the market-house.

August 24th.—Francis Scott Key delivered an address at the Reformed church.

November 18th.—The Duke of Saxe-Weimar was in Frederick; called on Rev. D. F. Schaeffer and John Schley; then went to Washington.

1826.—June 24th. All Saints' Church used its new organ for the first time, made by Wilfred Hall, of Philadelphia, for seven hundred dollars.

July 4th.—The day celebrated by addresses by L. P. Welth and Rev. D. F. Schaeffer.

July 24th.—General meeting of "Saxony" in memory of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, who died on July 4, 1826. Suspension of all business. Oration at Lutheran church by Dr. John Tyler. The citizens all wore caps on their left arms for thirty days. All the military companies and various orders and societies marched in the procession from the court-house to the church. All arrangements were made by a committee appointed at the "town-meeting" on the 16th. viz.: Geo. Baer, Col. John McPherson, Col. John Ritchie, Maj. John Graham, Maj. Peter Moutz, John Schley, William Ross, Grafton Durval, John L. Harding, John Kunkel, Stephen Steiner, Geo. Baltzell, and Geo. W. Evitt.

September 17th.—Carter, a young Cherokee Indian (half-breed), addressed the Sunday-schools.

1757.—January 23d. "Orphan Society" organized; officers elected, President, Charles Careini; Secretary, Aug. F. Evert; Treasurer, John Englebrecht.

July 6th.—The oldest man in Frederick was Daniel Hauer, Sr., born in Lutheringen, Germany, Aug. 24, 1769. He came to America a passenger on the same ship with Baron DeKalb, and settled in Frederick in 1771.

October 25th.—"The Young Men's Bible Society of Frederick County" elected the following directors: from Lutheran church, Geo. Englebrecht, A. P. Egbert, John Hanshaw, Jacob Englebrecht; from Episcopalians, Clowthower Birnie, Jr., John A. Deane, Wm. J. Ross, Thos. Shriver; from German Reformed, Dr. Henry Staley, Lewis Ramsbough, Wm. Hellenstein, Seth Thomson; from Presbyterian, J. M. Sherman, Dr. Albert Ritchie, Robt. McLaid, J. G. McNeely; from Methodist, Godfrey Koons, Geo. Koons, Geo. Seamon, and Wm. Marvin.

1828.—April 19th. A black man of Dr. Tyler's, while digging clay in the doctor's brickyard, found a box of money, containing, as supposed, about two thousand dollars in specie.

July 4th.—James M. Cole delivered the oration. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad formally commenced at Baltimore by Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and at Washington the Ohio and Chesapeake Canal begun by President J. Q. Adams."

December 5th.—Jonathan Edwards Woodbridge opened a school at Prospect Hill, one mile west of town, at Schnertzel's old building.

1839.—January. Balloon ascension.

February 8th.—Andrew Jackson, President-elect, arrived in Frederick en route to Washington, and stayed over-night at Talbott's tavern.

February 23d.—Municipal vote at election: for mayor, Thomas Carlson 324, Geo. Kolb 208; for aldermen, Geo. Schultz 257, Jacob Faubel 257, Geo. W. Evitt 223, Samuel Carmack 223, John Kunkel 206 (all five were elected); Henry Kemp 294, Frederick Stoner 294, Jacob Englebrecht 294, Daniel Hist 30, Geo. Hauser 144, Geo. Huckle 150, David Boyd 116, John McDonald 104, Jacob Brunner 83, Peter Kephab 51, N. Tarbutt 15.

March 16th.—Henry Clay arrived in Frederick, and on the 18th the Adams men gave him a dinner.

May 16th.—Jacob Rohr appointed postmaster by President Jackson, vice Lewis Medart.

July 2d.—Very cold, and on June 29th light snow.

About 1829 an entire family named Newby, seven in number, residing on the South Mountain, Frederick County, near Smithsburg, was murdered by a man named Markley, who was tried before Chief Justice John Buchanan, and convicted and hung in Frederick County.

1830.—June 7th. Work on the branch of the railroad from Frederick to Frederick Junction began.

August 4th.—Methodist camp-meeting began on land of David Bowins, near High Knob.

August 17th.—The troop of horse under Capt. W. S. McPherson called out to suppress a rebellion of laborers on the railroad. Capt. Carmack's company of infantry also went.

September 17th.—Laying of track on the railroad began near the depot.

October 31st.—United States General Synod of Lutheran Church met at Frederick.

John Nelson appointed in October special minister to Nipples by President Jackson.

December 1st.—Baltimore and Ohio Railroad opened as far as Frederick.

December 3d.—Trains began running regularly to Baltimore.

1832.—February 27th. Municipal election: for mayor, Thos. Carlson 298, Lewis Medart 220; for aldermen, Daniel Kolb 200, Abraham Kemp 208, Casper Quayen 176, Jacob Faubel 117, Geo. W. Ent 108, Samuel Carmack 106, Andrew Heim 93, Wm. Kolb,
Frederick County.

Sr., 77, John Kunkel 76, George Shultz 69, William Fisher 62, Henry Nixdorff 59. John S. Miller, Frederick Goebler, Lewis Birely, N. Turbott, John McDonald, John Fressler, and Philip Hauptman each had less than 59. The councilmen elected by wards were: 1st, George Wissinger; 2d, Wm. Small; 3d, Jacob Keller; 4th, Philip Rohr; 5th, Samuel B. Lewis; 6th, George B. Shope; 7th, William Ely.

April 18th.—Railroad from Monocacy Viaduct to Point of Rocks finished.

April 23d (Easter Monday).—The “Columbus” car went from Frederick to Point of Rocks, first trip, with fifty passengers.

May 21st.—The streets lighted for the first time with lamps, and Clement Hilton and John Haller appointed lighters.

July 6th.—The day was one of humiliation and prayer, with services in the churches, on account of the cholera prevailing all over the land.

July 5th.—Jacob Hart purchased of the Leovy Court the old almshouse in Bentzontown for two thousand four hundred dollars.

August 5th.—Camp-meeting in progress near Lewistown, on Mr. Devillis’ land.

October 17th.—Jacob Iams killed on the railroad by being run over by the engine while asleep on the track near Crum’s farm.

In September and October, 1832, the cholera prevailed to an alarming extent in Frederick City. There were sixty-two deaths recorded in fifty-two days, and there were probably others not recorded.

That dreadful scourge, scarlet fever, prevailed for over two months, and during the time of the cholera mostly. It proved as fatal to children as the cholera among the grown people. It subsisted in the latter part of November.

December 4th.—Lawrence Noland run over by the cars, between Frederick and Point of Rocks, and instantly killed.

1833.—April 22d. The celebrated Indian chief Black Hawk, his two sons, the Prophet, and two warriors stayed at Frederick all night.

August 23d.—Eight hundred and sixty-seven houses in Frederick, a gain of two hundred and twenty since June 27, 1817. November 15th.—Falling stars in greatest profusion.

1834.—April 4th. A negro preached in Lutheran church.

April 15th.—A woman preached in Methodist church.

April 17th.—Rev. John Newland Maffett preached.

May 13th.—A sailor painted Reformed church steeple, and on the top of steeple fired off a pistol and drank a health to the town. On May 25th lightning struck above the steeple, splintering the top.

September 12th.—Mr. Simpson ascended in a balloon from academy yard and went three-fourths of a mile.

September 20th.—Lutheran camp-meeting in London County, Va., at which hundreds from Frederick attended.

November 4th.—Sale of the estate of the late John Erien at public vendue, viz: Ritchie’s farm south of town, 328 acres, to Wm. Lorman, $86.50 per acre; the mansion-house fronting the court-house to F. A. Schley, $700; the four houses (or block), the corner to Dr. R. E. Dorsey, $220; second to James Raymond, $1710, third to J. M. Cale, $1690, fourth to A. E. Lynch, $2200; lot in Second Street, next to Presbyterian church, to Mahlon Talbott, $1700; “Hermitage Farm,” of 745 acres, to John Schley, $26,567; (Lilly’s) triangular farm south of town, 35 acres, to E. B. McPherson, $2400; and the mountain land to Wm. Lorman at $6.60 per acre.

December 10th.—Dr. Lewis Weltsheimer, an apothecary in 1800, died.

1836.—July 4th. Celebration: two companies, under Capts. Hoekins and Small, one from Baltimore, and one from Winchester, marched in the procession; oration by Wm. P. Mauzy, and in the afternoon barbecue at Monocacy.

August 23d.—Mill Alley, or Bents’ Street, paved with stones. September 21st.—Hallertown bridge built.

October 27th.—Railroad accident near Henry Doyle’s plantation; ten persons injured, but none killed.

Gen. Santa Anna stopped at Robert’s tavern.

1837.—February 13th. Duel fought at Baltimore between Wm. Cost Johnson and Wm. Schley, the former wounded in the knee, and the latter receiving merely a flesh wound.

March 8th.—Ex-President Jackson passed through Frederick Town en route to Tennessee; was received by two companies of militia.

United Brethren’s camp-meeting at Cornelius Shiley’s began.

September 20th.—Some forty Fox and Sac Indians, with Keokuk, Black Hawk, and other chiefs, passed through town to Washington.

October 27th.—President Van Buren at Robert’s tavern.

1839.—January 1st. At the County Temperance Convention, Dr. Lloyd Dorsey was chosen president, and Dr. William M. Kemp secretary.

June 26th.—New bridge built over the creek in Brew House Alley.

August 26th.—“Junior” Fire Company got its new engine, it was tried, and threw water over the steeple of German Reformed church.

1841.—President elect, Gen. Harrison, arrived February 5th, and stayed all night at Dorsey’s City Hotel. On a rostrum before the hotel he addressed a vast crowd, and caught the cold that caused his death April 4th following.

A military convention composed of delegates representing thirty-one uniform volunteer companies of Maryland was held in Frederick on the 20th of October, 1841. Maj.-Gen. George II. Stewart was president.

August 1st.—New Methodist Episcopal church corner-stone laid, with an address by Rev. John Rice.

1842.—May 21st. First public procession of Adams Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F.

1847.—June. First use of ether in Frederick by Dr. Samuel Tyler on a colored man.

May 25th.—The German Reformed Church celebrated its centennial anniversary, with an address by its pastor, Rev. Dr. Daniel Zacharias.

1849.—April 24th. Jacob Fauble appointed postmaster, c/o John Rigney, in office since Jan. 1, 1829.

1850.—Vote for mayor, February 25th: James Bartgis 567, John Bender 213, William Lowe 90, George Salomon 88.

June 24th.—Frederick Schley brought from China a Chinese boy, “Mock Alton,” to be educated, but he returned to Canton, China, March, 1852.
April 29th. —The "Junior" Hall finished.

1853.—February 28th. Vote for mayor: James Bartgis 358; David J. Markey 194; John Bender 184; Jacob Hart 78.
April 11th.—John Jacob Smith appointed postmaster.

1854.—March 31st. Water at the artesian well in the mountain came out at the surface.
May 30th.—The first corpse buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery was that of Mrs. Ann Crawford.

September 29th. Basil E. Doney and F. M. Granius purchased the City Hotel of N. B. Harding for twenty-one thousand dollars.

1855.—May 24th. Bethel church, colored, was commenced in East Third Street, William S. Bennett the builder.

1856.—February 25th. Vote for city officers: Mayor, Lewis Brunner 467; Ormond P. Butler 463; Aldermen, Ezra House 489; Henry Butler 485; George Smith 469; J. Alfred Ritter 469; William S. Bennett 463; Thomas H. O'Neil 460; D. H. Haller 438; James Whitehill 425.
May 14th.—Twelve cases of smallpox.

May 25th.—The old Catholic steeple built in 1860 taken down.

1860.—Frederick's population: white males, 2980; white females, 3377; free colored males, 558; free colored females, 696; colored slaves, both sexes, 443. Total, 8034.

Fires.—1763. Capt. Evan Shooby's house, together with his furniture and a large store of provisions, was burned accidentally early in December.
May 3, 1786.—Alms-house in Bents Town burned.
June 26, 1797.—The right wing of the Barracks entirely destroyed.
May 31, 1801.—Stables of Capt. James Neall's tavern burned.
Feb. 1, 1829.—Log house of Joseph Payne, on Sixth Street, burned.
June 1, 1826.—Fire broke out in stable of Francis Kleimert, on Second Street, and consumed all his and Joshua Dell's property, Lewis Wethetheimer's house, and stable, the late George Kessler's two houses, the dwelling occupied by Mrs. Reynolds, masking altogether six dwellings, with other buildings attached. Mr. Dell lost six hundred dollars in currency, and Mr. Kleimert between three and four thousand dollars in specie.
June 3, 1826.—John Schindler's mill in Middletown burned.
July 30, 1829.—William Motter's barn, near Middletown, struck by lightning and burned, together with all his crop of grain, etc.
April 1, 1850.—Talbott's tavern (City Hotel) damaged by fire.
Nov. 23, 1856.—George Broadrup's paper-mill burned.
Feb. 28, 1858.—Moses Warman's large barn, one mile from town, burned.
Sept. 24, 1859.—Fire in factory of George M. Conraitt, head of Patrick Street.
March 22, 1841.—Fire in stable back of lecture-room of Reformed church, and by severe work a conflagration prevented.
Jan. 25, 1853.—Fitbush & Snyder's iron-foundry burned; twenty hands thrown out of employment.
June 21, 1834.—John Bartholomew's tannery burned.
Aug. 14, 1845.—Delaplane's mill, near Buckeystown, burned; rebuilt, and again burned for third time June 28, 1858, the first fire having been Aug. 7, 1841.
Dec. 7, 1857.—Michael Keefer's mill and distillery burned.
May 8, 1861.—Court-house burned.
Sept. 13, 1862.—The jail burned.

Barbara Freitchie.—Sept. 10, 1862, a portion of the Confederate army, under the command of Gen. Thomas J. ("Stonewall") Jackson, marched through some of the streets of Frederick on their way to the battle-field of Sharpsburg. An incident, real or assumed, of that march led to the poem of John G. Whittier, called "Barbara Freitchie," which, no matter what happens, will always be quoted in connection with Frederick City. This poem is as follows:

"Up from the meadows rich with corn,
Clear in the cool September morn,
The clustered spires of Frederick stand,
Green-walled by the hills of Maryland.
Round about them orchards sweep,
Apple and peach-tree fruited deep,
Fair as a garden of the Lord!
To the eyes of the famished rebel borde.
On that pleasant morn of the early fall
When Lee marched over the mountain wall,
Over the mountains, winding down,
Horse and foot, into Frederick-town,
Forty flags with their silver bars,
Forty flags with their silver stars,
Flipped in the morning wind: the sun
Of noon looked down, and saw not one.
Up rose old Barbara Freitchie then,
Bowed with her fourscore years and ten.
Bravest of all in Frederick-town,
She took up the flag the men hauled down.
In her attic window the flag she set,
To show that one heart was loyal yet.
Up the street came the rebel tread,
"Stonewall" Jackson riding ahead.
Under his slouched hat, left and right
He glanced: the old flag met his sight.
"Halt!"—the dust-brown ranks stood fast;
"Fire!"—out-blazed the rifle-blast.
It shivered the window, pane and sash;
It rent the banner with seam and gash.
Quick, as it fell, from the broken staff
Dame Barbara snatched the silken scarf;
She leaned far out on the window-sill,
And shook it forth with a royal will.
"Shoot, if you must, this old gray head,
But spare your country's flag," she said.
A shade of sadness, a blush of shame,
Over the face of the leader came;
"The nobler nature within him stirred
To life at that woman's deed and word:

"Who touches a hair of you gray head Dies like a dog! March on," he said.

"All day long through Frederick Street
Sounded the tread of marching feet;

"All day long that free flag flew
Over the heads of the rebel host.

"Ever its torn folds rose and fell
On the loyal widoes that loved it well;

And through the hill-gaps sunset light
Shone over it with a warm good-night.

Barbara Freitchie's work is o'er,
And the rebel rides on his raids no more.

Honor to her, and let a tear
Fall, for her sake, on 'Stonewall's' bier.

Over Barbara Freitchie's grave
Flag of freedom and union wave;

Peace and order and beauty draw
Round thy symbol of light and law;

And ever the stars above look down
On thy stars below in Frederick-town."

1 Such poetry is not only above criticism, it is of no use to criticise it. Occasions equally with places are enbalmled by it. As long as the name of Frederick City bats the poem of Barbara Freitchie will be quoted in connection with it. This is immortality,—not of place, but of the poet's gift. It is part of the poet's power. He suffers, starves, is ignored, condemned, but something in his lines survives him, and that something, be it correct or incorrect, is too strong for criticism. Byron's satire on immortality, "die on the field of glory and have your name spelt wrong in the Gazette," exactly suits the sort of notoriety which Frederick City has earned by Mr. Whittier's poem of "Barbara Freitchie." We do not propose to quarrel with it. What sense would there be in doing that, any more than in quarrelling with the flow of Niagara Falls or the contour of the Chesapeake Bay? But we do propose to set the facts right about "Barbara Freitchie," and we are sure that Mr. Whittier will thank us for so doing. His conscience is almost as strong as his poetic vigor, and he would rather not write poetry at all than take for his themes events not only improbable in themselves, but which, under the circumstances, had be known them, he would perceive could never have happened.

For example, had Mr. Whittier studied the history of the Antietam campaign closer he would have known that at the hour when Jackson marched through Frederick nobody was up, and Barbara Freitchie could not have seen whether her flag was flying or not. In the second place, at this time the rebel horde was not "finished."

In the third place, it is not only a great piece of nonsense, but very unjust, both to "Stonewall" Jackson and his men, to assume, as Mr. Whittier unconsciously seems to do, that Gen. Jackson was not sincerely, loyally, ever fanatically, a believer in the righteousness of his cause. To suppose that a shade of sadness or a blush of shame could or would overcome his cheek or arrest his purposes at sight of the "old flag" is almost as ridic-
The term was adopted at an early date in this country, and is still in use in the State of Delaware. It was also used in Maryland in the early days of the province, to denote battle-field of Antietam, "over the mountain wall," which does not exist. It was one of the famous general's inescapable "faks" movements, the object being to invest and capture Harper's Ferry. Consequently we know that he was coming eastward, and that when he penned the note to Mrs. Ross, at her door, he was passing down Second Street, north of Patrick Street, his command having entered Frederick by way of Mill Alley from the north, reaching Patrick Street on the west side of Carroll Creek. It thus happens that there was a mill-stream, to say nothing of other inconveniences, between Gen. Jackson's line of march and Barbara Freitchie's residence, which was on Patrick Street east of the bridge. If Jackson's command did not pass the spot at all, if the hour when he went through Frederick was too early for even large objects to be distinguishable, if Jackson was no such man at all as the story assumes, what becomes of the legend?

But there is more of it. Miss Eunemilda Boyle has set to work systematically to investigate the matter, as if it really were of some importance. She records the fact that she was "a rebel," and thought so much of Lee and his army that she got up in time to see them pass through. Lee's column, in her words, halted in front of her house, which was on West Patrick Street, "directly opposite Mrs. Freitchie's," long enough to permit Jackson's column to pass through. This took quite a time, and Miss Boyle says, "All the time that Gen. Lee stopped in front of Mrs. Freitchie's house I saw no flag waving. If there had been I certainly should have seen it; and as for Gen. Jackson, he did not pass over the bridge, but passed up another street."

Miss Boyle rather intimates that Mrs. Barbara Freitchie would have been the last person to do such a conspicuous act, and that she would have disclaimed the notoriety which Whittier has pinned upon her name. But upon this point it is best to give her own language, or rather that which she quotes, the words of Jacob Engelbrecht, once mayor of Frederick-town, and for thirty-six years opposite neighbor of Barbara Freitchie, and a strong Union man. She was always "a nice old lady," he says, "born in Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 5, 1766, and died in Frederick, Md., Dec. 15, 1862. She lost her husband in 1846, never had any children, and her neighbors seem never to have heard about the flag-raising, one way or another, until the publication of the poem. She was a 'Union woman,' and it is their impression that she did use a small flag some days after, when McClellan's army came through the town."

Mr. Engelbrecht further says, "When Gen. Lee passed through our city with his army, I was very anxious to see all I could. I therefore posted myself at one of the up-stairs windows, where I had a full view of all that passed below in the street. When Gen. Lee got in front of Mrs. Freitchie's house, and also in front of mine, he and his whole army halted, and I afterwards ascertained (this, you know, was in West Patrick Street) that Gen. Stonewall Jackson and his army had passed. All the time that Gen. Lee stopped in front of Mrs. Freitchie's house I saw no flag waving. If there had been I certainly would have seen it; and as for Gen. Jackson, he did not pass over the bridge, but passed up another street. . . . I was at the front window up-stairs nearly the whole time the invading troops were passing; hardly ate my meals, except when one corps had passed; there was a stoppage of sometimes an hour or two; moreover, I was anxious to know what length of time it would take them to pass."

Dr. Samuel Tyler (the biographer of Chief Justice Taney) says "Stonewall" Jackson never "passed Barbara Freitchie's house, but passed down Mill Alley from the north of Frederick, and entered Patrick Street on the west side of Carroll Creek, while Barbara Freitchie's house was out of his way from his encampment. He and his staff passed down Second Street, north of Patrick Street, and he dismounted from his horse and wrote on a card the note given above, and rode off to Mill Alley, and down it to Patrick Street."

In regard to the flag which Mrs. Freitchie did wave when McClellan's army passed through the town he says,—

"While Gen. Reno, who was killed at South Mountain, was passing Barbara Freitchie's house with the United States troops, as I have heard, a little girl held at the window a small United States flag. Barbara Freitchie was at the window then, about ninety-six years old, and it is likely out of these facts the imaginative informant gave Whittier the ideas of the poem. All that relates to the Confederate general and his troops is pure fiction."

Maj. H. Kyl Douglas, now a leading member of the Hagerstown bar, and who was during the late war on Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson's staff, says,—

"Jackson's corps crossed the Potomac into Maryland Sept. 5, 1862, and on that day an admiring civilian of Western Maryland presented the general with a large gray horse. The next morning, when he tried to ride him, he became unmanageable, and in retiring fell backward upon the general, who was so severely hurt that it was some time before he sufficiently recovered to be moved. He was then placed in an ambulance, and turned his command over to Gen. D. H. Hill. Jackson stopped about three miles short of Frederick, and established his headquarters in Best's Grove, as also did Gen. Lee and Longstreet. He did not go into Frederick that day, and certainly was not 'riding ahead' of the 'rebel tread' which passed through Frederick to the other side. While encamped near Frederick he kept closely to his tent, seeing very few of the many citizens who called on him. On Sunday night he asked Maj. Douglas and Morrison of his staff to go to church with him, and was taken to town in an ambulance. There being no service in the Presbyterian church, he went to hear Dr. Zacharias at the Evangelical Reformed church, and, as usual, went to sleep. On the morning of the 10th Jackson's corps was put in motion, and the general went to Frederick in an ambulance, and then mounted his horse. While the army was passing through, he rode with Maj. Douglas to the house of Dr. Ross, the Presbyterian pastor, and left a note for him with a servant, with instructions to deliver when the doctor got up, but not to awake him for the purpose. This being done, he went directly, and by the shortest cut, to the Hagerstown pike, and put himself at the head of the column. Nothing like that which is related by Mr. Whittier ever occurred, and Gen. Jackson and Barbara Freitchie never saw each other."

There is nothing more to say in regard to this matter, we think, except to quote the Mr. Whittier himself. In a card of his, published in the Boston Advertiser, he says he has no wish to prolong a doubtful controversy. "It seems to be admitted by those who deny the main incident of the ballad that the venerable Union woman did not hesitate to make a way through the Confederate soldiers at her door, applying to them epithets more derogatory than polite, and that she had a Union flag in her house. If she did not show it on that occasion, so much the worse for Frederick City." And so say we all.
At first, and for thirty years, the "hundreds" were divisions simply for road supervisors, constables, tax collectors, etc., and the elections were not held in them, but at the "county-seat." They lasted four days. Afterwards the elections were held in the "hundreds," and on one day only. The election districts now are:

In order to avoid confusion we will take them in numerical order as above.

BUCKEYSTOWN DISTRICT. No. 1.

Buckeystown, or Election District No. 1, was originally bounded as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of Monocacy River; thence up Potomac River to the highest ridge of Catoctin Mountain; thence along the top of said mountain to the main road leading from Frederick Town to Newtown (Trap); thence with said road to the North Branch of Ballenger's Creek (above John Hoffman's mill); then down said creek to Monocacy River; then up said river to the main road crossing from Frederick Town to Georgetown and the city of Washington; then with said road to the line of division between Frederick and Montgomery Counties; then with said line to the mouth of the Monocacy, aforesaid." In 1848 its eastern limits were curtailed by the formation of Urbana District, No. 7, and it is at present bounded by the Monocacy River on the east, by the Potomac on the south, the Catoctin Mountain on the west, and Ballenger's Creek on the north. Jefferson District, No. 14, adjoins it on the west, Frederick District, No. 2, on the north, and Urbana District, No. 7, on the east. The district is situated in the southern part of the county. The first land taken up in the district was by the father of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and was known as "Carroll's Manor," a name by which this part of the district is still distinguished. Carroll's Manor originally contained fifteen thousand acres, and embraced a wide area of extremely rich and fertile territory, extending from Catoctin Mountain and the Potomac River on the west and south to the high ground and Monocacy on the east. For many years the manor remained almost exclusively in the hands of descendants and collateral branches of the Carroll family, and as late as 1840 the greater portion of it was still owned by the Tuckers, Jacksons, Lees, the Marchioness of Wellesley, and Mrs. Harper. At that date Mrs. Harper's revenues from the rent of her portion of the estate amounted to eight thousand dollars a year. Some of the Carroll heirs still retain an interest in portions of the old manor. Among the earliest settlers were the Buckeys, from whom the district took its name, the Thomases, Luckettis, Delashmutts, Kemps, Harwoods, Dutrows, Johnsons, Michaels, Palgetts, Snouffer, Spechts, Trundles, Whites, Sinns, Besants, Stunkles, Duvalls, Delphanes, and the Nicodemus family.

The Luckettis were of English extraction, and were prominent in the early history of the district. One of the family, Capt. Wm. Luckett, commanded a company of Frederick militia during the French and Indian war, and in 1758 was stationed at Fort Frederick, with his command, by order of Governor Sharpe. Levin Luckett, the only grandson of Capt. Wm. Luckett, married Miss Letitia Peyton, of Loudon County, Va., whither he subsequently removed. Some of the pioneer settlers were of English extraction, but at least half of them were Germans or of German descent.

BUCKEYSTOWN VILLAGE. — Buckeystown Village, which owes its name to the first settlers on the site which it now occupies, is situated on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, about six miles from Frederick City, and is near the old United States road, over which Braddock marched to his famous defeat, and which was formerly the great thoroughfare between the North and the South.

The first actual settlers, George and Michael Buckey, were of German origin, and both took up lands in the neighborhood of the village in 1775. George Buckey owned the land which the village now occupies, and may be regarded as its founder. He built the first tannery in the district, which remained in his family until 1834, when it was sold to Daniel Baker. It is now owned by Daniel Baker & Sons, and consumes more than eight hundred tons of bark annually. Although it has been in operation for more than a hundred years, its ownership has been confined to the Buckey and Baker families. The three large limekilns of F. C. Thomas & Co., O. J. Keller, and M. J. Grove, are situated in the vicinity of the village, and give employment to seventy-five laborers. They ship large quantities of lime to Montgomery and Howard Counties.
The village contains two churches, one of the Methodist Protestant and the other of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. The former was dedicated Sept. 15, 1867, and cost five thousand dollars. Its pastors have been:

- William S. Hammond, two years; J. K. Nicholls, three and a half years; J. L. Kilgore, six months; Jacob Wilson, one year; C. H. Littleton, four years; J. E. Maloy, four years; W. B. Mills, called in 1881.

Its Sunday-school superintendent is Judge A. W. Nicodemus.

The Methodist Episcopal church was completed and dedicated in 1839 by Bishop Beverly Waugh. It had been erected years before by Ignatius Davis, a zealous member of the denomination, but was not entirely finished until the above date. Before its dedication its pastors were:

- John A. Gere, two years; Francis McNeill, one year; Robert Cudden, one year.

Since then it has been under the charge of the following pastors and assistants:

Pastors.—William Butler, two years; Jonathan Cleary, two years; Henry G. Dill, two years; Isaac Collins, two years; — Holland, two years; John N. Hening, two years; John G. Brooke, two years; James Brads, two years; David Trout, one year; David Thomas, one year; John Anderson, William Taylor, J. M. Spangler, John P. Hall, George Stevenson, Charles F. Thomas, M. L. Smizer, A. R. Miller, J. W. Smith, W. H. Reed, D. G. Miller, G. W. Pedenyer, Reuben Kolb, D. M. Browning.

Assistants.—Joseph Parker, two years; B. Doll, one year; L. M. Consr, one year; — Brent, one year; John M. Jones, one year; — Dulin, one year; John Boggs, one year; — Fulton, one year; J. H. Duhrow, two years; G. W. Cooper, one year; Mone器 D. Conway, one year; W. H. Waring, one year; L. M. Gardner, one year; Ellis T. Teal, one year; John Geyer, one year; J. W. Kelley, B. G. W. Reed; — Eisenberg, C. D. Smith.

In 1863 the circuit was divided, and it is now composed of Urbana, Ijamsville, Point of Rocks, Koontz Chapel, and Buckeystown.

Between the village and the Monocacy there is a rich deposit of marl, composed of lime and earthy substances.1

The physicians are Drs. B. Poole and H. J. Boone, and the merchants J. H. Delashmut & Bro. and A. J. McKenna. No intoxicating liquors have been sold in the village for nearly forty years.

Adamstown is a thriving village on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, nine miles from Frederick, and sixty-four from Baltimore. It is situated on a portion of the fertile territory of the old Carroll Manor, and was named in honor of Adam Kohlenberg, who settled there in 1840. The first white settler was Daniel Rhodes, who laid out lots south of the railroad. Mr. Snouffer was the next settler, and he was followed by Mr. Oswell and Thomas Thomas.

The Sugar Loaf and Catoctin Mountains can be plainly seen from the village, and the Monocacy and Tuscarora Rivers flow in the vicinity. The Reform church, built in 1869, is the only place of worship; its pastors have been Revs. W. F. Colliflower, eight years; Simon S. Miller, eight; and N. H. Skiles (present incumbent), six. Its physicians are J. D. Thomas and W. H. Johnson. The latter is a grandson of Maj. Roger Johnson, of Revolutionary fame, and grand-nephew of Governor Thomas Johnson. The merchants are John P. Hess and Thomas Hayden.

Point of Rocks is at the southwestern boundary of the district, upon the Potomac River and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and at the junction of the main stem and the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The situation is one of romantic beauty, and the place is associated with some of the most memorable events of the late war. The village was formerly situated about a mile from its present location, on the Washington and Hagerstown roads, and was called "Trummelstown." It was partially destroyed by fire, but was recalled to life by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, removed to its present location, and rechristened Point of Rocks. It was laid out Aug. 23, 1835, by H. G. O'Neal for Charles Johnson. It contains three churches,—Catholic, Methodist Episcopal, and African Methodist Episcopal church,—two hotels,—the American and St. Charles,—and several stores and restaurants.

The Catholic church was erected in 1881, and is a neat and commodious structure, under the charge of Father Do Wolf. The Methodist Episcopal church was built in 1865, and belongs to the Buckeystown and Urbana circuit. Its present pastor is Rev. D. M. Browning. The merchants are Thomas & Spalding and B. D. Chambers, and the physician, Dr. D. W. Trapnell. St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church is situated about a mile from Point of Rocks, on the old Hagerstown road. St. Paul's Parish was created in 1814, with the following boundaries:

1 Monocacy is an Indian name, signifying "right ear," in contradistinction to Linganore, the "left ear." It is usually a gentle and quiet stream, but in time of freshets rises suddenly, and to a great height.
with said creek to its junction with the Monocacy River, and down therewith to its mouth; thence up the Potomac River to the place of the beginning:"

Its ministers since 1841 have been:

Greenfield Mills is two and a half miles from Tuscarora Station, on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and four from Adams-town. The well-known Greenfield Mills are located here and operated by Roberts Brothers. James F. Beall is postmaster and merchant.

Licksville is one mile from Tuscarora Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and near the Potomac River and Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. J. C. Lamar is the postmaster and merchant, and S. H. Hempstone station agent.

Lime Kiln, a station of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, is four and a half miles from Frederick City, and sixty and one-quarter miles from Baltimore. It is the largest manufacturing and shipping point of lime in the county. In its vicinity are several of the finest dairies in the State. It contains but one store, the proprietors of which are M. J. Grove & Son.

Among the points of interest in the district is the family residence of Henry A. Johnson, which was built before the Revolutionary war. On his farm is the family burying-ground, which is the oldest in the district, and in which repose the remains of Thomas Johnson, uncle of Hon. Wm. Cost Johnson, John Johnson, and John Johnson, of John.

The public school-teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 32 pupils, Carrie V. Higgins; No. 2, 82 pupils, W. R. McDaniel, G. W. Blessing, assistant; No. 3, 20 pupils, H. R. Bier; No. 4, 32 pupils, W. T. Ennis; No. 5, 64 pupils, F. R. Neighbors; No. 6, 60 pupils, C. W. Wright; No. 7, 40 pupils, Katie E. Weeking; No. 1 (colored), 63 pupils, J. H. Robinson; No. 2, 45 pupils, Charles Lyles.

The magistrates are:

Ezu Michael, of Adamstown; Wm. P. Allmuth, of Licksville; Dr. J. Boone, of Buckeystown; Wm. F. Galton, of Point of Rocks.

The constable is:

William H. Krantz.

The Tuscarora Creek Region.—A pleasant drive of about five miles in a northwesterly direction from Frederick City, through a rich and fertile country, and over a splendid turnpike road, places one in the "Tuscarora" region, whose principal stream yet bears the name of the once powerful but now extinct tribe of Indians who inhabited that section. From this stream, Tuscarora Creek, the city of Frederick receives its principal supply of water, which is conveyed through pipes to the receiving-house at the base of the Catoctin Mountains, and thence to the reservoir at Frederick. This improvement was completed in 1870. Here also during the latter half of the eighteenth century was established the first paper-manufactory in Maryland, and within a quarter of a mile distant, on the Tuscarora, were erected by Nicholas Zimmerman, George Barkhart, and George Boyer, respectively, three paper-mills, all once doing a brisk business in the manufacture of wrapping, printing, and writing-paper; bank-note paper also was made at them. The ruins of these mills are still to be seen. The region is abundantly supplied with numerous springs of excellent water. Here also are the celebrated "Yellow Springs," "Montonqua," or medicine-water, as it was called by the Indians. These waters were held in great esteem by the red man, and on account of their reputed virtues in healing the sick, inspiring their warriors with strength and courage, and endowing their hunters with luck for the chase, they were regarded as the fountain of the "Great Spirit."

It is said that previous to going to battle, or on the hunt, and upon various other occasions, the Indians resorted thither and practiced, in conjunction with a free use of the waters of the Montonqua, various charms and incantations to aid them in their enterprises. And here, tradition says, once a year during the "Flower's Moon" (May) the diseased Indians were brought for cure, and were subjected by the "medicine-men" of the tribe to a variety of ceremonies, such as bathing three times a day (sunrise, meridian, and sunset) in the waters of the Montonqua, drinking the blue oily substance floating on the surface, and having their bodies anointed with a deep orange-colored pigment made from its thick and slimy yellow deposits.

Here also is said to have been located a kind of general "headquarters" for the various tribes when great events were to be celebrated, a council of war held, or a treaty concluded. The Indians held sacred the ground near the "Fountain of the Great Spirit," and a treaty there ratified was regarded as doubly binding. An Indian village once occupied a site near by, and many relics of its rude inhabitants, such as stones for grinding meal, stone hatchets, arrows, etc., have been found. During the times of the first white settlers (the first half of the eighteenth century) and in later years the springs were a place of general resort for social gatherings from the region round about.
On holidays and various festive occasions persons came from many miles, and it is said to have been no uncommon thing to see gathered beneath the abundant foliage of the surrounding forest scores and even hundreds of the pioneers, together with no inconsiderable sprinkling of friendly red men, who frequently came to gaze in wonder and astonishment upon the advancing tide of civilization which was destined to so soon sweep them from their favorite hunting-grounds. Wrestling was a favorite sport, in which the savages also took part.

There are several other mineral waters near by, one of them being a sulphur spring of considerable virtue. Doubtless in course of time the vicinity will become a favorite summer resort, for the salubrity of the climate, the beautiful scenery, easy accessibility, and close proximity to our Eastern cities combine to make it a delightful spot for health and pleasure.

The Tuscarora region is also supposed to contain valuable mineral deposits, such as stove-coal, iron ore, copper, lead, graphite, and silver and gold, small quantities of each having been discovered at various times and by different persons within the last quarter of a century. Considerable efforts were made by the late William C. Hoffman and several other enterprising gentlemen to discover a workable vein of stove-coal, but as yet without any great success, the quantities found being too small to justify the expense of mining. A copper-mining company was formed some time since, but after sinking several shafts in the vicinity of "High Knob," on the Catoctin Mountain, it finally abandoned the effort. A similar failure attended the experiments of a company prospecting for gold in the vicinity of "White Rock."

In this connection the following tradition survives, viz.: "A Mr. Hedges, one of the first settlers of this region, was an excellent shot with the rifle and a great favorite with the Indians. While out with them on a hunting expedition on one occasion his supply of bullets became exhausted, and one of the Indians after a short absence returned with a 'chunk of lead,' apparently clipped from a rock, from which 'slugs' were made and the chase resumed." A number of searches have been made in recent years for the supposed "lead rock" in this vicinity, but as yet without success. Although some of the land in this region was taken up in the early part of the last century (as shown by some of the parchment "grants," sealed with the provincial seal of Maryland, and still extant in the hands of the descendants of these hardy pioneers), the tide of immigration did not set in very strongly until about the middle of the century.

On the crest of the "Catoctin Range" we find the "High Knob," a peak of fifteen hundred and thirty feet in altitude. This knob is an abrupt termination of one of the spurs of the mountain, and is distant about seven miles on the west from Frederick City. It commands a beautiful view of Harper's Ferry gap, and a large portion of both Frederick or Monocacy and Middletown or Catoctin Valleys, and during the late war was used by the Federal army as a signal-station. A few miles farther northward, on the eastern slope of the same range, is the "White Rock," a huge pile of granite, rising almost perpendicularly from a ledge of rocks on the mountain-side to more than twice the height of the tallest trees in the surrounding forest. The Indian name of this rock is Koona-wauwa, or Thunder Stone, from a superstitition prevalent among the red men that here the "Great Spirit" stands upon the rock and pounds the skies to produce thunder. The White Rock is a place of considerable local notoriety, and is a favorite spot for picnics, excursions, etc., from many miles around. From its summit the beholder is at one glance enabled to obtain a sublime view of the entire valley of the Monocacy, Towns, villages, forests, fields, roads, and bridges, the courses of the streams, etc., are plainly delineated, the landscape being dotted with bright-colored barns and pleasant farm-houses. The distant "Sugar Loaf" and the winding Potomac may also be seen, with the far-off mountains of Virginia on the south, the low blue hills of the Linganore on the east, and the region of Gettysburg, Round Top, and the dimly-outlined peaks of Pennsylvania on the north. In the rear towers silent the lofty range of old Catoctin.

On the summit of these rocks the declaration of peace with England after the war of 1812 was celebrated by the inhabitants of the neighboring country with martial music, speeches, and feasting throughout the day, and a grand "bon-fire" and "mountain illumination" which lasted through the entire night.

The spot, tradition says, was once the scene of a terrible tragedy. About a quarter of a century before the white settler had made his first entrance into this part of the country two young warriors became enamored with the daughter of their chieftain. A quarrel and deadly feud arose. The Indian maiden finally made a decisive choice and gave the coveted pledge of love's acceptance—the "keousa," a milk-white arrow decorated by her own deft hand with fanciful festoons of hair from her locks—to the favored swain. The rejected suitor determined to revenge his failure on his rival. He had not long to wait ere chance afforded him an opportunity to gratify his passion. The maiden and her lover, now betrothed, repaired, as was the custom of their tribe, to the rock to celebrate the nuntial rites and invoke the smiles of the "Great Spirit" on their union. The discarded suitor placed himself in ambush near by, and when the opportune moment arrived sprang upon him and hurled the maiden over the cliff. A desperate combat ensued between the two warriors, who struggled to the edge of the cliff and tumbled over. All three were killed.

Another tragedy occurred here during the latter half of the eighteenth century. On a beautiful summer morning a gay group of young men and maidens of the vicinity met at the "Yellow Springs" for a sort of picnic. After enjoying themselves for some time in dancing and other amusements, a trip to the White Rock, about two miles distant, was proposed and acceded to by a number of the party, who at once wended their way up the mountain. The rock was reached, and after spending some time there they started homeward. Before proceeding on their way one of the young ladies discovered that she had lost her handkerchief, which she supposed had been left on the rock. Her companion, a young man named Hedges, to whom she was betrothed, volunteered to go back, and the party waited by the wayside. A considerable time having elapsed without his return, several of the young men started back to see what detained him, and to their horror discovered his lifeless remains lying under a large rock which had rolled down on him, crushing him to death. It was supposed that he attempted to climb upon the rock by a nearer way than the usual ascent, and in some manner loosened the rock, which fell upon him and killed him. His companions having procured assistance removed the rock, gathered up his body in a sheet as best they could, and conveyed it to his home near the foot of the mountain. The young man was the descendant of one of the first settlers in this region. His body was buried in the old burying-ground of the Hedges family, near the Yellow Springs.

FREDERICK DISTRICT, No. 2.

Frederick, or District No. 2, originally had the following boundaries:

"Beginning at the mouth of Ballanger Creek; thence up Monocacy River to the mouth of Fishing Creek; then by a straight line to Stephen Stoner's saw-mill on said creek; thence up said creek to the Big Spring, the head-water thereof; thence by a west course to the highest ridge on the Catoctin Mountain; thence with the top of said mountain to the main road leading from Frederick to Jefferson; thence with said road to Ballanger's Creek, above John Hoffman's mill; thence down said creek to the beginning."

Among the earliest settlers were immigrants from Germany, among them John Thomas Schley, the Brunners, Shellmans, Kemps, Rayners, Grosches, Foutses, Houcks, Holtzes, Steiners, Reichs, Bentzes, Brengles, Mantzs, Conradts, Youngs, and Kolbs. Monocacy Manor was settled by persons from Southern Maryland, and it is more than probable that English immigrants and Maryland pioneers were established in this section some years before the Germans came. Frederick District, as it existed before the formation of Lewistown, was bounded by Cresserstown District on the north, Woodsborough, Mount Pleasant, and New Market on the east, Urbana and Buckeystown on the south, Jefferson, Middletown, Jackson, and Catoctin on the west. Lewistown District is north of it. It is divided from the districts on the west by the Catoctin Mountains, and from thence on the east by the Monocacy River. It is centrally located with reference to other portions of the county, and its soil is very productive and its scenery highly picturesque. The city of Frederick is situated in the southeastern portion, and there are the following villages in the district, viz.: Hamburg in the north, Shookstown and Fairview in the west, and Frederick Junction in the southeast. The country is thickly studded with farms, and is traversed by numerous roads.

George Houck's residence, near Harmony Grove, in Frederick District, is one of the finest and most costly in Frederick County. It is a red-brick structure of Romanesque architecture, set in the midst of expansive and well-kept grounds, and affording from its observatory a magnificent view of Frederick Valley, the Catoctin Range, Sugar-Loaf Mountain, and South Mountain. It is supposed that on a clear day the eye may reach from the elevation mentioned to a distance of at least forty miles up and down the valley. The house was erected in 1851, and contains all the modern improvements that judiciously-expended wealth could obtain or refined taste suggest. The work was all done by home mechanics, and was under Mr. Houck's personal supervision and direction. It has a front of forty-five feet, and a depth of forty-two feet six inches, with an attached building thirty-two feet deep. There are nineteen handsomely-finished and roomy apartments, each especially designed for comfort and convenience. There is a fine brick stable, forty-five by twenty, with ample room for four horses and four cows. This residence stands upon Mr. Houck's farm, which contains two hundred and six acres of cleared land, but forms no portion of the farm buildings. These, some distance beyond, include a substantial and handsome red-brick house and red-brick barn, with other surroundings in keeping with the high architectural standard sought to be observed. Mr. Houck's farm adjoins the farms of his brothers.
Ezra and James, the three making an aggregate of seven hundred acres of some of the most valuable farming lands in Maryland.

In the western portion is High Knob, a spur of the Catoctin Mountain, fifteen hundred and thirty feet in height. Nearly all the local history of this district has already been given in the chapters of Frederick City.

The teachers for the term ending April 13, 1881, were:

District No. 1, 58 pupils, A. B. Holtz; No. 2, vacant; No. 3, 69 pupils, E. Oliver Belt; No. 4, 62 pupils, H. F. Leving; No. 5, 47 pupils, E. L. Molinax; No. 6, 75 pupils, A. B. Forney; — 43 pupils, Annie Bartgis; No. 7, 45 pupils, D. R. Stauffer; No. 8, 22 pupils, Sue M. Garrett.

From Aug. 28 to Sept. 3, 1810, was held the first camp-meeting, at Francis Hoffman's farm, between Frederick and New Town (" Trap"), about seven miles from the former and two and a half from the latter.

Just outside of Frederick City, on the Jefferson road, is W. O. De Negre's house, said to have been built of brick imported from England by one of the Dulany's, but not finished for occupancy until the beginning of the present century. On the Georgetown turnpike, about half a mile south of Frederick, at "Locust Level," is the beautiful residence of the late Jacob Lewis. He was born April 7, 1804, in Gloucester township, Chester Co., Pa., but at the time of his death, Sept. 15, 1873, resided at Locust Level. His father was also named Jacob Lewis, and married Hannah Meredith. His grandfather was David Lewis, a relative of Dr. Benjamin Rush. His grandmother was Mary Cloyd. His paternal ancestors came from Wales, and those of his mother from England.

In 1838 he married Delia Smith, daughter of Elisha Sandford and Elizabeth (Burtsall) Smith. Their children are John S., who resides in Harrisonburg, Va.; Hannah More, now Mrs. G. W. M. Crook, lives in Baltimore; William Reese, died aged twenty in 1865; H. Thorpe, lives in Cumberland, Md.; Francis Irwin, lives in Frederick City, Md.; Mary Elizabeth, now Mrs. S. M. Hartsue, lives in Washington, D. C.; Martha L., now Mrs. J. W. C. Sitz, lives in Baltimore; Sandford I., lives in Chicago, Ill.; Charles Lee, died in infancy. Delia Lewis, wife of Jacob Lewis, died Oct. 18, 1853.

On the 3d of April, 1862, Jacob Lewis married Elizabeth Winger, daughter of Joseph and Esther (Buckwall) Winger. Karl M. Winger, great-grandfather of Elizabeth Winger Lewis, came from the canton of Zurich, Switzerland, in 1736, and purchased lands of William Penn, one of which tracts is now owned by unbroken title by his descendants. Their children are Anetta Esther, Rush Ransom, Emogene E., Jacob, who died in infancy in 1863, Cloyd, and J. Winger and J. Latta, who died in infancy in 1874.

Jacob Lewis was educated in Chester County, Pa., and in Baltimore County, Md. He was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, which he joined in 1826 in Baltimore County, and was one of its trustees. In Frederick County, however, he and his family attended the Protestant Episcopal Church. In politics he was a Democrat, and during the war was a Union man. He was a successful farmer, and is a large land-owner. Jacob Lewis was the youngest of three children. His father died while he was an infant; afterwards his mother married Benjamin Reese, whose ancestors were English Friends. He was an extensive miller, but failing in business the family removed to Baltimore County in 1814. Jacob did much towards supporting his mother, and was untiring in his efforts to purchase her a home, which he succeeded in doing. In 1831 he went to Genesee County, N. Y., where he was a successful farmer, and in a few years was able to buy a good farm. He bought and sold land with profit. After living there seventeen years he moved to Frederick, Md., and in the Urbana District bought several tracts of land, together over one thousand acres. After a residence there of seven years he sold the land for twenty thousand dollars, more than he paid for it. At the time of his death he was a large land-owner in Frederick County, and also owned a farm near Baltimore City. As a man of business he was energetic and successful. He was jovial and possessed much native wit. He was kind and generous to the poor, no one of whom ever appealed to him for aid unheeded. During the civil war voters were questioned as to whether they had aided the Southern troops in any way, if they had fed them, and when this interrogatory was put to Mr. Lewis he replied that he had. The judge said, "I presume you were compelled to?" "Oh, no!" was his reply, "I will feed a hungry man without any compulsion." At which there was an outburst of laughter, with the hearty response from the judge of election, "Come on and vote! Come on and vote!"

In his family he was kind, sympathetic, and indulgent, a Christian in deeds more than in words. He died suddenly of heart-disease, on Sunday morning, Sept. 18, 1878.

In 1872, H. C. Brown removed from Clinton County, Pa., to Frederick County, Md., having purchased in the latter section the old Gen. Brengle
JACOB LEWIS

"LOCUST LEVEL."

RESIDENCE OF THE LATE JACOB LEWIS, FREDERICK DISTRICT, FREDERICK CO., MD.
property, lying in the Frederick Valley, on the Monocacy, one and a half miles distant from Frederick City. The farm-house, a small brick structure, had been built by Gen. Bringle, and well-authenticated report made its age date from 1816. In 1878, Mr. Brown materially improved and enlarged it to its present proportions. It is now a two-story, roomy brick edifice, of attractive appearance, occupying a gentle elevation about three hundred yards removed from the public highway. The numerous and well-constructed farm-buildings include a barn, measuring seventy-five by fifty-six feet. It was built in 1879. Mr. Brown has in his farm two hundred and thirty acres, of which all are cleared and excellently well watered. Its close proximity to Frederick City makes it, of course, more than ordinarily valuable. The staple crop is wheat, of which from ninety to one hundred acres are sown each year. Mr. Brown is one of the model farmers of Frederick County, and is reckoned among the most successful. He was bred an agriculturist, and that he has shown what spirited energy and experienced judgment can do for a farmer, illustrates forcibly the value of keeping abreast of the times and employing the fruits of the advanced ideas of the age.

Montevue Hospital is situated in this district. The first almshouse was in Bentzown, and was built before 1770. It burned down May 3, 1786. The next one was built on West Patrick Street, Frederick Town, just opposite the market-house, and situated on the site of what is now J. H. Ramsburg's carriage-factory. On April 13, 1832, the inmates of the old almshouse in the city were removed to the new one, about two miles in the country, northwest of the city. This building was erected in 1830-31, by John Shipman (carpenter), who contracted to do the work for thirteen thousand dollars. Henry Steiner was appointed its overseer.

Montevue Hospital was built in 1870, at a cost of about one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The following have been the superintendents since 1862:

1862-68, Lewis Yonson; 1868-70, George Hinkle; 1870-72, V. H. Freaner; 1872-76, George P. Ramsburg; 1876-80, C. P. Flemig; 1880, Henry Snider.

The number of inmates May 21, 1881, were:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Males</th>
<th>Females</th>
<th>Total</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>County</td>
<td>77</td>
<td>59</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colored</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transient</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Travelers</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>2</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Among the handsome residences in this district is that of Col. C. K. Thomas. The fine brick mansion occupies a handsome elevation overlooking the Monocacy, about three and a half miles from Frederick City. The farm tract was in the possession of the Marshall family upwards of one hundred years ago, and in the patent is called "Araby," by which name it is still known. James Marshall (a Scotchman) built the house now occupied by Col. Thomas, and according to the best obtainable evidence must have erected it as early at least as 1780. Not only historic in respect to age, Col. Thomas' mansion is doubly historic as a landmark in the chain of stormy events that marked the progress of the civil war of 1861-65, for it was upon and about the farm that the battle of Monocacy was fought, July 9, 1864.

Col. Thomas (a native of Frederick County, and a merchant in Baltimore to 1860) removed from that city in the year named to "Araby," in search of a spot where the turmoils and distractions would not be felt. As it turned out he found considerable distraction at "Araby" after a while. The farm mansion was a position that both Federal and Confederate forces strove for. The Federals occupied it at the opening of the action, but were dislodged by the enemy after a severe cannonading. During the bombardment, which lasted from 9.30 A.M. to 3.30 P.M., the house was much battered. A portion of the wall of the dining-room (in which latter apartment the Union sharpshooters were posted) was beaten down, and in that room, as well as in the library and dining-room, are still visible great indentations made by shells and rifle-shots. The west side of the structure suffered the most damage, but altogether the injury was by no means as great as it was feared it would be. Eight shells penetrated the interior, and the marks they left, as well as the shells themselves, are preserved as eloquent relics of that eventful day. During the fight Col. Thomas' family, with the family of Mr. Gambie, occupied safe quarters in the cellar. After the Confederates abandoned the position, Gen. Grant and eight major-generals (including Hunter, Ricketts, Wright, Crook, and Sheridan) assembled in an upper room of the mansion over the library and held a council of war. Mrs. Thomas breakfasted with Gen. Grant the morning after that council, and remembers how Grant said to her the war would last at least a year longer, but not more. Events proved the correctness of his prophecy. The forces engaged at the battle of the Monocacy are reported to have aggregated twenty thousand, and the guns about forty. Something like seven hundred prisoners were taken, and five hundred men killed. About three hundred were buried upon Col. Thomas' place, and afterwards removed. Among those buried on the farm were early settlers were Abraham Miller, who died in 1836, Mr. Litter, Michael Bickenbaugh, Valentine Bowlus, Daniel Rhodes, Michael Keller, Caspar and Adam Herrig, Aaron Suman, and Jacob Alexander. The first blacksmith was Thomas Powell. The first physician was Dr. Lewis Creager, who was succeeded by Drs. Thomas Springer and Jacob Coblenz. The first teacher was Horatio O'Neal, and the second a Mr. Dorcas. The first tavern was kept by Jonathan Levy, on the site now occupied by the residence of Adam Smith. The earliest wagon-maker was Thomas Murray; cabinet-maker, Christian Sifford. The first tannery was owned by Michael Motter. The two oldest houses are those of Lloyd Hitt and Adam Herrig. The first stone-mason was Jacob Kritzer. Frederick Steemple kept the first store, and Frederick Staley had a distillery four miles distant. Bowlus' mill and cotton-factory was near "Spoonsville."

Middletown and the district in which it is situated were largely represented in camp and field during the war of 1812. Among those who raised companies and participated in the battle of Bladensburg were Capts. Jacob Alexander, Thomas Murray, Daniel Shawen, and Daniel Marker. Abraham Miller, father of Daniel Miller, married, in 1792, Susan Creager, daughter of Capt. Daniel Creager, distinguished in the Revolution. Daniel Miller was born in Middletown in 1806, and married Catherine, daughter of Perry Herbert, a soldier in the war of 1812. He is the father of C. W. Miller, postmaster of Frederick.1

The battle of South Mountain was fought in plain view of Middletown. Gen. Rutherford B. Hayes, who was severely wounded in this engagement, was conveyed to the house of Jacob Rudy, a resident of Middletown, where he remained for several weeks.2

On the 4th of March, 1834, an act was passed by the General Assembly by which "the citizens of Middletown, Keller's addition to Middletown, Grove's addition to Middletown, and Wise's addition to Middletown, in Frederick County," were constituted a body corporate "by the name of the Burgess and

---

1 The method of raising money by lottery for public enterprises was a favorite one in Middletown, as in other parts of the State, in former times. Thus, in February, 1863, a lottery was held to raise four hundred dollars to purchase a fire-engine. There were two thousand tickets at one dollar each, and sixteen hundred dollars were distributed in prizes. The managers were Frederick Steemple, Esq., Thomas Powell, Peter Suman, Henry Stemple, and Samuel Shoup.

2 In February, 1831, a large meeting was held at Middletown in favor of forming a new county out of the southwestern part of Frederick and the southeastern part of Washington County, and committees were appointed to memorialize the Constitutional Convention on the subject, but after some agitation of the matter the effort was abandoned.
Commissioners of Middletown." Since the incorporation the town officers have been:

1834, Burgess, Jacob Hoffman; Clerk, S. G. Harbaugh. 1836, Burgess, John Sifford; Clerk, Jacob Hoffman. 1838, Burgess, John Appleman; Clerk, James Williamson; Commissioners, Adam Keller, S. L. Geisinger, Peter Wise, Jacob Lorentz, J. H. Miller. 1840, Burgess, George Baer; Commissioners, James Cook, Van Swearingen, Michael Keller, Jacob Young, Joseph Wise. 1841, Burgess, J. T. C. Miller; Commissioners, Jacob Wise, D. Middlemoss, Thomas Nottingham, Jacob Young, Geo. Baer; Clerk, D. C. Herring. 1845, Burgess, Jacob Weaver; Commissioners, S. Trigg, M. Rhoderick, Henry Cochran, Peter Young, Joseph Powers; Clerk, Wm. Ervin. 1843, Burgess, J. T. C. Miller; Clerk, J. W. Walker. 1845, Burgess, J. G. Protzman; Clerk, A. Keller; Constable, John Kisselring; Commissioners, S. L. Geisinger, W. T. Ervin, Peter G. Schlosser, P. H. Thomas. 1846, Burgess, P. G. Schlosser; Commissioners, J. T. C. Miller, James Stevens, Joshua Kerrick, Jacob Kuhn. 1845, Burgess, Peter Young; Clerk, A. P. Ingram; Commissioners, D. H. Herring, Townsend Barber, L. H. Herring, James Stevens. 1850, Burgess, J. T. C. Miller; Commissioners, Lawson Alexander, J. Cullen, Henry Lighter, Wm. Zittle, S. L. Geisinger; Clerk, C. P. Young; Constable, Robert Thomas. 1851, Burgess, P. H. Thomas; Clerk, A. Keller; Commissioners, L. H. Herring, T. Barber, Christian Remsburg, J. Cullen, C. J. Baer. 1852, Burgess, P. H. Thomas; Commissioners, H. Herring, Alex. Weaver, P. G. Schlosser, G. Bowles, Joseph Wise. 1853, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, L. H. Herring, S. L. Geisinger, C. J. Baer, H. Lighter, Wm. Kefauver. 1854, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, D. C. Herring, S. L. Geisinger, H. Lighter, Wm. Kefauver, C. J. Baer, P. Young. 1855, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, P. Young, Allen Sparrow, Joshua Crick, Jonathan Biser, P. G. Schlosser. 1856, Burgess, H. Boyer; Commissioners, G. W. Crouse, Samuel Toms, Joseph Wise, Joshua Carrick, Wm. Kefauver. 1857, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, Wm. Kefauver, Samuel Bowles, P. G. Schlosser, Joseph Wise, C. Ramsburg. 1858, Burgess, Joshua Carrick; Commissioners, H. Lighter, Samuel Toms, C. J. Baer, Wm. Kefauver. 1859, Burgess, H. Boyer; Commissioners, Jonathan Biser, John Derr, Wm. Boteler, W. T. Ervin, Joseph Wise. 1860, Burgess, P. G. Schlosser; Commissioners, T. Barber, James Chamberlin, Jacob Culen, L. Alexander, Wm. Kefauver. 1861, Burgess, P. G. Schlosser; Commissioners, L. Alexander, Joseph Wise, Alex. Weaver, John Derr, James Chamberlin. 1862, Burgess, Ezra Minnick; Commissioners, Jonathan Biser, Joseph Wise, David Cohlentz, Jacob Rudy, John Derr. 1863, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, D. Coblentz, J. Biser, Allen Sparrow, John Derr, Joseph Wise. 1864, Burgess, W. T. Ervin; Commissioners, John Alexander, Alex. Weaver, Samuel Toms, J. M. Brandenburg, Wm. P. Winbigler. 1865, Burgess, John W. White; Commissioners, Jonathan Biser, L. H. Herring, E. Minnick, Adam Keller, Jacob Rudy. 1866, Burgess, Peter W. Shafter; Commissioners, John Linthicum, W. N. Wachter, Carlton Rudy, Geo. Kesselring, Andrew Bosit. 1867, Burgess, P. W. Shafter; Commissioners, Adam Keller, Thos. H. Williams, J. D. Fink, J. E. Young, J. Toms. 1868, Burgess, W. W. Perry; Commissioners, J. H. F. Rudy, T. H. Williams, J. D. Fink, John Derr, Alex. Weaver. 1869, Burgess, Ezra Minnick; Commissioners, Asa Bowles, Samuel Leaver, J. F. Chamberlin, C. W. Koogle, Arthur McQuade. 1870, Burgess, George Ingram; Commissioners, Wm. Cullen, Joel Brandenburg, J. E. Young, H. Kefauver, Jacob Rudy. 1871, Burgess, George Ingram; Commissioners, John Alexander, Joel Brandenburg, J. E. Young, H. Kefauver, John Cutler. 1872, Burgess, P. W. Shafter; Commissioners, C. E. Wise, J. E. Young, T. C. Rudy, C. A. Heagy, J. Alexander. 1873, Burgess, Geo. Ingram; Commissioners, C. A. Heagy, C. W. Koogle, J. E. Young, J. Alexander, V. G. Crouse. 1874, Burgess, Geo. Ingram; Commissioners, G. H. Kefauver, C. W. Koogle, John Alexander, Vincent Sanner, G. V. Crouse. 1875, Burgess, Allen Sparrow; Commissioners, G. H. Kefauver, C. E. Wise, Joseph Gaver, C. A. Heagy, C. W. Koogle. 1876, Burgess, Allen Sparrow; Commissioners, C. E. Wise, Samuel Leaver, Geo. Shaver, Arthur McQuade, P. W. Shafter. 1877, Burgess, Allen Sparrow; Commissioners, J. W. Damer, Joseph Gaver, John Tracy, Samuel Leaver, Henry Miller. 1878, Burgess, Allen Sparrow; Commissioners, C. A. Heagy, John Tracy, D. S. Kapler, J. W. Damer, John Derr. 1879, Burgess, C. A. Heagy; Commissioners, D. S. Kapler, G. W. Gaver, C. E. Wise, F. K. Stone, John Tracy. 1880, Burgess, Allen Sparrow; Commissioners, Samuel Leaver, S. S. Thompson, Ezra Derr, Charles Gaver, Charles Nienmeyer. 1881, Burgess, H. S. Stephens; Commissioners, Samuel Leaver, D. S. Kapler, C. E. Wise, E. V. Bollea, G. W. Tracy; Clerk, S. N. Young.

Zion Lutheran Church.—The southern part of Middletown Valley was settled by persons from Prince George's County and Calvert, but a few German families occupied the lands around Middletown. These families belonged to the Lutheran and German Reformed denominations, and formed the nucleus of Zion congregation. Its first place of worship stood two miles west of the town, on the lands of Daniel Ahalt. There is still a graveyard partially inclosed about this primitive church, where lie many of the ancestors of those who worship in the present edifice. The first church was a joint one used by the Lutherans and German Reformers. It was a rude log structure, thirty by thirty feet, and was erected about 1755. It was taken down in 1790. It was used both for religious worship and as a parochial school. The fifty acres on which the church was built were either purchased of or given by Henry Kefauver. The land was deeded in trust to Jacob Flook for the German Reformed congregation, and to Conrad Young, father of Henry Young, for that of the Lutherans. But inasmuch as there was then no law in Maryland allowing churches to hold over two acres of real estate, forty-eight acres of it fell into the hands of James Shaw. He was sued for it, but gained the suit, and held it and sold it for eighty dollars per acre. The two congregations occupied the church some twenty years. Conrad Young served fifteen years as trustee, and lived to be ninety-seven years old and his wife ninety-three. About 1775 the German Reformed congregation left the church and built a log edifice in Middletown, near the site of its present church, and gave the privilege to the Lutherans to worship in it jointly with them. This second church was jointly occupied by the two congregations until it needed repairing. Then it was used as a school-house, and was afterwards sold. The German Reformers built a third church, a log structure, near the second one, and gave permission to the Lutherans to occupy it jointly with them, but the latter determined to erect a church of their own. After considerable discussion as to the site, the Lutherans built the fourth church, but first Lutheran church proper, in Middletown, on a lot presented by Conrad Crone.

It had a steeple, bell, and organ. The bell was purchased by Conrad Young from a man-of-war ship. It became broken, and a second one was bought by the young men of the congregation, which was presented in 1841 to the Jefferson Church. For the building of the church many farmers made contributions of wheat, which was made into flour and sold. The church was built during the pastorate of Rev. John Andreas Krug (about 1783), and was taken down during the ministry of Rev. Johann George Graeber, having stood about thirty-five years. The second Lutheran church proper, or fifth church from its organization, was built during Mr. Graeber's ministry. It had a steeple made at Shepherdstown, Va., which was hauled to Middletown by George and Michael Bowlas and Jacob Crone. It was a brick structure, and the wife of Rev. Mr. Graeber lies buried under it. This church cost over nine thousand dollars, and was built in part by lottery. It was repaired in Rev. Mr. Wachter's ministry, which extended from 1836 to 1843. The bells, purchased in Philadelphia during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Schnee, weighed over eleven hundred pounds. The sacramental cup, lined with gold, was presented by Mrs. Hiestern as a memorial of her husband. This church was consecrated Sept. 24, 1815, and called Zion. The clergymen present, besides the pastor, were Rev. Mr. Kurtz, of Baltimore, and Rev. Dr. Schaeffer, of Frederick. Mr. Kurtz preached to a congregation of twelve hundred people. The first Lutheran preacher known to have been located in the valley was Rev. Neodemas. The following have been the regular pastors of this church:

1. Rev. Frederick Gerreshohn, who lived in Middletown. He arrived Dec. 16, 1779, and resigned in July, 1782. Previous to his ministry the congregation had had occasional supplies from various preachers, but only with long intervals between them.
2. Rev. John Andreas Krug arrived Sept. 18, 1782. He lived in Frederick, but served this congregation.
3. Rev. Jacob Geering, who lived at Hagerstown. He served one year, and was called to York, Pa. He was an eloquent and learned man and a distinguished Oriental scholar.
4. The name of the fourth pastor, who remained six months, is not given on the church records.
5. Rev. Dr. John George Schmucker, father of Prof. S. S. Schmucker, of Gettysburg College, and author of a work on Revelations.
6. Rev. Johann George Graeber arrived June 2, 1796, and resigned July 1, 1819. During his ministry the stone parsonage was built. His charge was composed of Middletown, Boonsboro', Ringers' Church, Jefferson, London County, Va., near Lewistown, and Schaal's school-house, between Jefferson and Burkittsville.
7. Rev. Johannes Kasher took charge July 1, 1819, and resigned Oct. 18, 1821.
8. Rev. Jacob Schnee arrived March 15, 1822, and departed April, 1827.
11. Rev. Charles A. Hay, from Jan. 11, 1841, to Nov. 5, 1844, when he was called to a professorship at Gettysburg, where he yet remains.
12. Rev. David F. Bittle, from May, 1845, to 1852. He was the founder and president of Roanoke College, and largely identified with educational matters in Maryland and Virginia.
15. Rev. Philip Riter, from October, 1835, to August, 1837.
16. Rev. C. M. Klink, from October, 1837, to June, 1838. During his ministry the present church edifice, seating fully fifteen hundred people, was erected at a cost of thirty thousand dollars. The cornerstone was laid in 1839. It is one of the largest, finest, and best-arranged churches in the country.
17. Rev. Lloyd Knight, from Dec. 29, 1861, to June 28, 1862.
22. Rev. L. A. Mau, the present pastor, born in London County, Va., graduated at Roanoke College, studied theology at Gettysburg, pastor eight years at Marion, Va., six at Burritsville, and came to this church April 25, 1876. In 1872 the church had 86 communicants, and in 1879, 155. During Rev. Mr. Bittle's pastorate the lecture-room and second parsonage was built, also the Mount Tabor church, in this district. During Mr. Mau's ministry a church has been erected at Harmony costing three thousand dollars, which was dedicated on Ascension Day, 1880. Mount Tabor and Harmony are only stations, both being parts of the Middletown congregation. Zion Sunday-school was organized Dec. 2, 1827. Its first superintendent was Rev. S. G. Harbaugh, a native of Middletown, and for many years State librarian of Ohio. The second was Daniel Reamsburg, and the third and present one is Samuel Derr.

Evangelical Reformed Church.—The records of this church go back to 1755. An account of the first three churches occupied by the Reformed congregation has already been given in the preceding sketch of the Lutheran Church. The first teacher in the parochial school was Mr. Mintz, in 1755, and the first burying-ground was called "Gott's Acker." The present church was erected in 1818 and 1819. The corner-stone was laid July 2, 1818, the spire put up October 27th of the same year, and the building was consecrated June 27, 1819. It was built under the superintendence of Peter Coblentz, and during the pastorate of Rev. Jonathan W. Helfenstein. The following members of the Frederick Singing Society were present at its consecration and song:

The Sunday-School Union was organized at a meeting held Dec. 29, 1830, of which Peter Coblentz was chairman, and S. G. Harbaugh secretary. Its board of managers were:

First class, Benjamin Rountree, Jacob Baer, W. H. Harbaugh: second class, H. G. O'Neal, Peter Coblentz, David Smith; third class, S. G. Harbaugh, Henry Fite, Jacob Meinel.

Each of the above took his turn and served a month in course. The present superintendent is Charles H. Coblentz. Until 1830 the ministers in charge were the Frederick pastors, who officiated in the following order:

1. Rev. John Conrad Steiner, from 1756 to 1759. He died in Philadelphia, July 1, 1762, aged fifty-five years.
2. Rev. William Otterbein, from 1760 to 1765.
3. Rev. Charles Lange, from 1766 to 1776. He administered the sacrament "across the first mountain," at a school-house, to Adam Ryell, Elias Williard, Franz Oster, George Cost, and others.
4. Rev. Frederick L. Henop, from 1779 to 1783.
5. John W. Runkel, from 1784 to April 1, 1802. Mr. Runkel officiated at Middletown Jan. 11, 1799, at the funeral of Melchior Gessier, aged one hundred and ten years.
6. Rev. Daniel Wagner, from 1802 to October, 1810.
7. Jonathan Helfenstein, from 1811 to 1828. In 1822 he introduced English into part of the services.

In 1830 this congregation became a separate charge and church by itself, and since then its pastors have been:

2. Rev. A. P. Freese, from Aug. 1, 1842, to 1845.
5. Rev. F. A. Rupley, from June 27, 1861, to 1874.
6. Rev. T. F. Hoffmeister, from 1874 to the present time.

Rev. Mr. Bucher in his ministry of twelve and a half years baptized seven hundred and forty-five persons, confirmed four hundred and eighty-four, buried two hundred and sixty, and married two hundred and one couples. The elders elected April 17, 1843, were Jacob Thomas, Peter White; deacons, Jacob Kooge, Jonathan Keller. In April, 1844, the elders elected were Peter Shaffer; the deacons, Samuel Bowlin, Philip Coblentz, P. C. Wise.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This church was organized about the beginning of the century. The first edifice was burned. The second one, a brick structure, was erected about 1830, and was occupied in conjunction with the United Brethren. In 1853 was begun the construction of the present edifice, a substantial and neat building. It was dedicated on the last Sunday in May, 1855. The clergymen present were Revs. John A. Collins, presiding elder of the Cumberland District, Littleton F. Morgan, and J. P. Cook, of Baltimore, and James Brads, of York, Pa. The dedicatory sermons were preached by Rev. Mr. Cook in the afternoon, and Rev. Mr. Morgan in the evening. The collections during the day reached two thousand four hundred dollars. The old church was transferred to the United Brethren. In 1829 Frederick Circuit embraced Middletown, and continued until 1858, when Middletown and Jefferson were formed into a circuit, and in the same year Berlin, Knoxville, and Sandy Hook were attached. There were then one hundred and fifty-nine members. The pastors since 1858 have been:

1858, John Anderson; 1859, Revs. Meminger and Gray; 1860-61, A. A. Eskridge and Savage; 1862, L. D. Heron; 1863, Charles Kaffus and J. B. Van Meter; 1864, C. F. Thomas and C. D. Smith; 1865, H. C. Pardee, J. D. Moore; 1866, H. C. Pardee (a parsonage was built this year costing fifteen hundred dollars); 1867-69, A. M. Kester; 1870-72, S. M. Hartsock; 1873 to 1876, A. J. Bender; 1876 to 1879, W. G. Herbert; 1879-80, J. H. Marsh; 1881, John L. Walsh.

The circuit is now composed of Middletown, Jefferson, and Petersville. The superintendents of the Sunday-school are L. H. Herring and L. W. Wright.

United Brethren Church.—This congregation bought the old Methodist Episcopal church edifice in 1853, in which it had up to then a part interest, and which it had helped to build a quarter of a century previous. Its preacher is Rev. C. H. Mott.

The Catholic Church is a commodious edifice which was built several years ago, but has no resident pastor.

Rev. G. W. Jenkins is the pastor of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Cemeteries.—In the old Lutheran cemetery the tombstones show that

Thomas Castle, born Oct. 24, 1729, died Oct. 24, 1805; Adam Rountree, died May 5, 1827, aged 99 years, 7 months, and 29 days; Catherine Rountree, born 1756, died June, 1831, and left 9 children, 63 grandchildren and 150 great-grandchildren; John Philip Sheffer, born July 28, 1776, died Dec. 9, 1844; John Floyd, Sr., born 1766, died April, 1826.
In the new Lutheran graveyard the following are buried:

Christiana Weire, born 1765, died July 1, 1852; John Kepler, born January, 1775, died July 28, 1849, and his wife, Mary Maghalen, born Nov. 22, 1770, died June 28, 1840.

German Reformed cemetery:

Jacob Smith, born 1761, died Dec. 17, 1819; Jacob Crone, born 1759, died Sept. 23, 1834; Jacob Schedt, born June 28, 1724, died Aug. 22, 1794; Peter Cobeltens, born Feb. 28, 1732, died June 9, 1808; John H. Oldfather, born near Lewisburg, Preble Co., O., and fell at South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862. He was a member of Company I, Twelfth Ohio Regiment U.S.A.

In the Methodist Episcopal graveyard are:

In this burying-ground lie the remains of Sergt. Lawrence Everheart, whose career in the Revolutionary war has been narrated in a preceding chapter. Above his grave a monument has been erected by his relatives. It is of marble, and is about twelve feet high. On the front of the base is the inscription,— “Lawrence Everheart, ordained a minister of the gospel of the M. E. Church by Bishop Asbury, A.D. 1808.”

And on the right side of the base is the following:

“Sergt. Lawrence Everheart, born May 6, 1755, died Aug. 6, 1840, in his 86th year.

“A veteran of the Revolution, the rescuer of Washington at the battle of the Cowpens, he assisted at the most remarkable battles during the war, and in the battle of Brandywine, when Lafayette was wounded, he and Sergt. Wallach rescued him from perilous situation, and carried him about two miles to the house of a friend. He served from the beginning to the close of the Revolution. He was generous and just in all the relations of life.”

On the front of the shaft is carved a shield bearing the Stars and Stripes, and on the opposite side of the shaft is a cluster of roses. Beside him lies his wife, whose tombstone has this inscription:

“Mary Everheart, born Oct. 1753, died July 3, 1847. Our conversation in Heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior.”

About a mile from the cemetery, near Middletown, and on the pike to Frederick, lives the surviving child of Sergt. Lawrence Everheart by his wife Mary, viz., Mrs. Col. Henry R. Smeltzer, a venerable lady of eighty-two years.

Catoctin Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F.—This lodge was instituted May 8, 1868, by Grand Master John Q. A. Herring and Grand Secretary J. B. Escaville. The date of the charter is May 6, 1868. The charter members were Jacob Rudy, G. L. Routzahn, W. N. Wachter, Thomas H. Williard, Horatio Zittle, William H. Young. Its first officers were:

The first four initiations were Lloyd H. Herring, Rev. A. M. Kester, George Kesseling, Isaiah Toms. The following have been the Noble Grands:

The office of secretary was filled from 1865 to 1875 by P. W. Shafer, and since then it has been occupied by W. N. Wachter. The officers for the term ending December, 1881, are:

The number of members is 116, and the aggregate of accumulated funds is $1872.23. The lodge meets every Saturday night. The district deputies are W. N. Wachter, Dr. J. E. Beatty, H. Zittle. It has a library of three hundred and sixty volumes.

Valley Encampment, No. 34, I. O. O. F.—This encampment was instituted Feb. 6, 1877, by William L. Schley, Grand Patriarch, and John M. Jones, Grand Scribe, assisted by Joseph Hoffstetter, G. J. W., and Charles H. Gatch, P. G. P. The charter members were W. N. Wachter, John H. Grove, W. T. Grove, R. S. Delaughter, John F. Shafer, G. C. Shafer, Dr. J. E. Beatty. Its officers have been:

The number of members is 13, and the encampment meets on the first and third Tuesdays of every month in I. O. O. F. Hall. W. N. Wachter is R. W. District Deputy Patriarch.

Middletown Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W.—This lodge was instituted Jan. 18, 1881, by Deputy Grand Master Isaac Lowenstein, assisted by P. M. W. J. W. Griffin and George E. Myers. Its charter members and officers are:

P. M. W., Rev. L. A. Mann; M. W., Dr. J. R. Beatty; G. F., John D. Main; O., George C. Roderick; Recorder, W. N. Wachter; Financial, A. C. Dregnonier; Receiver, C. L. Gaver; Guide, H. E. Sparrow; I. W., Dr. E. M. Bowles; O. W., T. C. Rudy.

The number of members is 13. The lodge meets on the first and third Friday evenings in every month at I. O. O. F. Hall.

Independent Order Good Templars.—This lodge was instituted in 1867, by Rev. Mr. Ackerman, of Hagerstown. The first Chief Templar was W. W. Cunningham; Vice Templar, Mrs. Rev. Pardoe. It maintained its organization some four years. Subsequently it was rechartered as "Good Samaritan Lodge, No. 15," by Rev. Mr. Poulson, of Baltimore, and remained in existence till about 1880.

The teachers in the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 46 pupils, Joseph Remsburg; No. 2, 49 pupils, T. F. Gaver; 33 pupils, Clara Pettingall, assistant; No. 3, 175 pupils, Thomas J. Lanter, S. N. Young (first assistant), J. W. Castle (second assistant); No. 4, 40 pupils, J. H. T. Rudy; No. 5, 59 pupils, David Ansherman; No. 6, 41 pupils, L. M. Kepler; No. 7, 34 pupils, L. W. McRide; No. 8, 44 pupils, C. L. Grove; No. 9, 27 pupils, C. T. Gayton; No. 10, 22 pupils, L. M. Warrenfeltz. No. 1 (colored), 24 pupils, Bette Coleen; No. 2 (colored), 31 pupils, J. R. Bruner.

The magistrate for the district is Ezra Minnick, and the constable is Samuel Leaver.

In 1839, Jacob T. C. Miller commenced at Middletown the publication of a paper called the "Catoctin Enterprise." He published it for several years, and it then passed into the hands of H. L. Brady. It is now called the "Valley Register," published by G. Carlton Rhoderick. It is decidedly Republican in its politics. It is a very good local paper, well conducted, and claims to have the largest circulation in Middletown Valley of any paper published in the county.
four acres, and has seven children. In religious connection John Culler is a Lutheran, and in politics has been a Whig, and afterwards an American, during the war a strong Union man, and is now a Republican.

John Culler.

While residing the greater part of his life in Maryland, he has traveled very extensively over the States of the Union. For thirty-eight years he pursued farming, and since 1846 has been engaged until 1881 in mercantile business. Having been successful in both he retired from business, May, 1881.

Creagerstown is situated at what was formerly the junction of the Baltimore and Pittsburgh road with the Washington and Buffalo road. It was a great stage point until the building of the Frederick and Emmittsburg Railroads, and in its palmy days supported four well-kept taverns. The first German Reformed church was built in 1791, and the present edifice in 1834. The Winebrennerian church was erected in 1866. Before the organization of the districts of Hauver’s, Emmittsburg, Mechaniestown, Lewistown, Catoctin, and Woodboro’, all created out of its original territory, people had to go to Creagerstown from a distance of ten or fifteen miles to vote, and often at these large gatherings serious fights occurred. A very large tannery was in operation here between 1785 and 1810. Among the first settlers in the village were the Eckmans and Housemans. Three-quarters of a century ago a large brewery was operated where now is the property of Dr. Zimmerman. Michael Rimike, a wealthy old bachelor, was one of the large land-owners. John R. Curtis, up to 1854, was for long years a magistrate and one of the leading citizens of the district. The village was in olden times the great centre of militia musters, cornstalk trainings, wrestling matches, and fistfight encounters. The stages that ran through the place were those of Thompson & Tate, of Gettysburg, Pa., Mealy & Sim, and Ulrich & Son. The physicians have been Drs. Johnson, James Liggett, in 1834; Watters, Hull, and William Zimmerman. Maj. Head, a Revolutionary soldier, died in 1834. Col. Cramer, an officer in the Revolution, lived between the village and Utica; Capt. Shryock served in the war of 1812. Samuel Grunis, of English descent, was an early pioneer of note. The village is pleasantly situated on the Emmittsburg road, twelve miles north of Frederick, one and a half from Monocacy River, and two from Loy’s Station, on the Western Maryland Railroad. The merchants are J. L. Miller (postmaster) and William J. Cramer & Son. H. J. Krise keeps a good hotel. The magistrates of the district are H. J. Krise, Creagerstown; A. T. Norris, Rocky Ridge.

In the old graveyard at the village are a few graves of old pioneers, of which we notice:

John Flowers, born June 24, 1781, died Jan. 5, 1805; Frederick Eichelberger, born 1763, died Aug. 7, 1833; Frederick W. Shriver, born Feb. 8, 1744, died Feb. 27, 1820; Charles Shreff, died Oct. 15, 1822, aged 75 years, 9 months, and 20 days; Eva Catharine Beckinsbaugh, born Sept. 3, 1780, died Dec. 6, 1854.

Col. Jacob Creager used to relate many incidents derived from his father of the conflicts of the Tories and Whigs in the days of the Revolution. All that section of country leading from Frederick to Catoctin Furnace and Harman’s Gap and the Creagerstown District was studded with a thick belt of woods. But few roads were open, and persons had to be very cautious how they made their way through the tangled thickets. Robbers and Tory emissaries were known to invest many of these secret hiding-places, and the champions of the Whig cause were begirt with danger on every side. Col. Creager was authorized to watch the Tories, and succeeded at length in breaking up the gang who had for two years annoyed the patriots by their midnight warfare of pillage, and by carrying information to the enemy in distant States.

The teachers for the term ending April, 1880, were:

School No. 1, 57 pupils, Marian E. Eichelberger; No. 2, 47 pupils, J. H. Seabrook; No. 3, 52 pupils, John M. Parrell; No. 4, 31 pupils, James W. Robinson.

Rocky Ridge Village is at the junction of the Emmittsburg with the Western Maryland Railroad, fifty-one miles from Baltimore, seven from Emmitsburg, and sixteen from Frederick. W. H. Albaugh is postmaster. The Lutheran and German Reformed Churches are respectively supplied by Revs. W. C. Wise and Henry Wissler, of Mechanistown. The Baptists have a neat church and a good congregation. Among the oldest and most prominent settlers in this neighborhood, and in fact in Frederick County, are the Biggs family. Joshua Biggs, who has been so closely identified with the best interests of Western Maryland, was born Jan. 1, 1821, in what was then a part of Frederick County, on a farm within a few miles of his present residence, Rocky Ridge, on the Western Maryland Railroad, in Creagerstown District. His father, William Biggs, of Jacob, was born Sept. 24, 1793, on a farm on the east of the Monocacy, and now in Carroll County, about three miles from Rocky Ridge. His mother was Sarah Haines, born July 4, 1794, near what is now Lenwood Station, Western Maryland Railroad. His grandfather, Jacob Biggs, died many years ago; the grandfather of his mother was William Haines, a member of the Society of Friends. His ancestors on both sides emigrated to this country from England. His wife, Phoebe S. Morrison, to whom he was married on the 11th of November, 1856, was of Scottish descent; her grand-parents came to this country during the war of 1812; her maternal ancestors derive their origin from the Bruce of Scotland. Joshua Biggs was inspector of public schools of Frederick County from 1851 to 1865, and he has been a director of the Western Maryland Railroad since 1866. In early life he devoted several years to teaching and the study of medicine, but engaged in agricultural pursuits in 1856, and commenced operating a merchant mill, and gained reputation as a miller by the introduction of improved machinery and in the manufacture of high grade flour. In 1870, on the completion of the Western Maryland Railroad to Rocky Ridge, he built a residence and warehouse at that point, which is on his paternal estate and at the junction of the Emmitsburg Railroad, and is now engaged in superintending the business at that point, together with the merchant mill, and cultivating a large landed estate of five hundred acres surrounding his residence.

His children are William Haines, Robert Bruce, James Sheridan, and David Morrison. William H. is married, and in business at Rocky Ridge. Robert Bruce is a student of law at the University of Maryland, and the other children are with their parents.

His education was obtained in the schools of the county and at Gettysburg College. He is a member of the Reformed Church. He was before the late war a Whig; during the war he was a Union man, but differing from his political friends on questions of reconstruction of the Union, he became and continues a Democrat. He was elected to the House of Delegates from Frederick County by the Union party for the sessions of 1861 and 1862, and was re-elected and served in the session of 1864. He was elected to the Senate by the Democrats in 1867, and served in the sessions of 1868 and in 1870.

Owen's Creek Village is near Loy's Station, on the Western Maryland Railroad. The postmaster is C. W. Loy, dealer in agricultural implements. Dra. J. L. Miller and J. W. Devilbiss are the resident physicians. The industries are: G. W. Shaw, J. Martin, millers; John Campbell, D. S. Loy, M. D. Loy, blacksmiths; James Dorsey, A. Hines, Walter Carl, carpenters.

EMMTITSBURG DISTRICT, No. 5.

Emmitsburg, or Election District No. 5, has the following boundaries: "Beginning at that ford on Monocacy River formerly called Price's, but now Knoof's Ford; thence with the main road until it intersects the main road leading from Creagerstown to Emmitsburg, near Benjamin Ogle's old place; then by a division line drawn towards a wash-house on Owing's Creek, above the ford on said creek, formerly built by James Ogle, deceased; thence up said Owing's Creek to the south branch thereof; then up the said south branch to the lines of No. 10, and with the lines of No. 10 reversed to the Pennsylvania line; then with said line to Rock Creek; then with said creek to Monocacy River; then down said river to the beginning." Its boundaries, therefore, are Pennsylvania on the north, Carroll County on the east, Creagerstown and Mechanistown Districts on the south, and Mechanistown and Hauver's on the west. The district is situated in the northeastern portion of the county. The only town is that of Emmitsburg, besides which are the villages of Bridgeport and Motter's. The western section near Carrick's Knob is the most thickly settled portion of the county. Near by is Round Top, seventeen hundred feet high.

William Elder, a Catholic, who emigrated from St. Mary's County and was the first white man who settled in the district, gave the name of "St. Mary's Mount" to a portion of Carrick's Knob. He located himself at the foot of the Blue Ridge in 1734, then the abode of numerous Indians and the haunt of wild beasts. He called his place "Pleasant Level." Here he built a house, reserving one room for religious services, which he called a chapel. This room was equal in size to all the rest of his house. He was there joined by his family and a few friends from St. Mary's County. Mr. Elder was a devout Catholic, and his chapel was the home for all weary travelers and a delightful resort for all professing his faith. Hospitality was religiously practiced by this good family and their descendants. The little congregation was often visited by priests from St. Mary's, and later from Conewango and Frederick, and sometimes by Father Matthew Ryan, from Path Valley, Pa., until 1807, when St. Mary's church was built. The old mansion stood until about 1852.

Mr. Elder was born in Lancashire, England, in 1707, and emigrated to St. Mary's County not earlier than 1728, and not later than 1732. In 1739 death invaded the home of this pioneer, taking from him the mother of his five children. Her maiden name was Ann Wheeler, and she was married to Mr. Elder in England. She bore him four boys and one daughter. The first son, William, married a Miss Wickham. The second, Guy, was twice married, and by his second wife had thirteen children, viz., Joseph, Judith, James, Polly, Benjamin, Patsey, Ellen, Rebecca, Guy, Priscilla, Edward, Thomas, and George, of whom the first four went to Kentucky. Charles, third son of the emigrant, married Julia Ward, of Charles County. The fourth child, Mary, married Richard Lilly, of Virginia, and through her children the family became connected with that of the McSherry's of Virginia. The fifth child, Richard, married Phoebe Delovier.

In 1744, William Elder married Jacoba Clementina, daughter of Arnold Livers. This gentleman, an Englishman by birth, had been an active and noted partisan of James II. Upon the collapse of that monarch's cause he had been obliged to flee from his native land, and became the proprietor of a large estate in Maryland, called "Arnold's Delight," on Owing's Creek. It is said of Arnold Livers, in explanation of the singular name given by him to his daughter, that he had registered a vow that his first child, whether boy or girl, should be called James. The good priest to whom the child was presented for baptism found no difficulty in complying with the father's wishes, and so the babe was christened Jacoba Clementina. Livers in his flight from England carried this child with him. She bore to William Elder four sons and two daughters, named Elizabeth, Arnold, Thomas, Ignatius, Ann, and Aloysius. It was from the second named that the title for the farm upon which now stands the structure known as Mount St. Mary's College was derived. In the old Catholic cemetery, about half a mile below St. Mary's College and near the town of Emmittsburg, three stones mark the graves of William, Ann Wheeler, and Jacoba Clementina Elder. The inscriptions, which are still distinct, record their names and dates of births and deaths: William Elder, born in 1707, died April 22, 1775; Ann Wheeler Elder, born 1709, died Aug. 11, 1739; Jacoba Clementina Elder, born 1717, died Sept. 19, 1807. Thomas, the third child of William Elder by his second wife, was born Jan. 4, 1748, and married, in 1771, Elizabeth Spalding, a sister of Basil Spalding, of Charles County, and shortly after that event removed to and occupied a farm in Harbaugh's Valley, where he lived for twenty-eight years, and where his family of eleven children were born. The names of these in the order of their birth were:

1. Anne, or Nancy, born July 1, 1772, lived single, and died in 1844.
3. Catharine, born March 7, 1776, was the second wife of Joseph Gardiner, of Nelson County, Ky. Three of her step-children became Sisters of Charity, of the Nazareth Community, and of these the late Mother Frances Gardiner was for many years superior of the sisterhood.
5. Clementina, born June 16, 1780, married Richard Clarke, and died Aug. 21, 1851.
8. Thomas Richard, born June 14, 1789, married Caroline Clements, and died July 11, 1855.
10. Mary Elizabeth, born May 15, 1794, married John Tarbox.
11. Maria M., born April 11, 1791, married John Howell. To the second of the above—Basil Spalding Eker and his wife Elizabeth (Snowden)—were born thirteen children, of whom three died in infancy. Of the other ten, Eleanor became a Sister of Charity; another daughter, Mrs. Jenkins, died in Havana in 1846; another, Mrs. Baldwin, in Baltimore, in 1872. Of their male children seven survive,—Francis W., in Baltimore; Basil T., in St. Louis; James C., in Baton Rouge, La.; Joseph E., in Denver, Colo.; Thomas S., in New Orleans; William Henry, Bishop of Cincinnati; and Charles D., in New Orleans.

It was in 1799 that Thomas Elder broke up his establishment in Harbaugh's Valley and removed to Kentucky, accompanied by all his children except Basil S., then engaged in business in Baltimore.

James Elder, the first Catholic of his name to emigrate to Kentucky, was born in this district in 1760, and was the son of Guy, and grandson of William Elder. He married Ann Richards, and immediately went to Kentucky, where he settled on Hardin's Creek. His brother William in a few months joined James in his Kentucky home. James Elder died Aug. 15, 1815, and Ann, his wife, Jan. 8, 1857. Ann Wheeler, the wife of William Elder the emigrant, died in her thirty-fourth year, of consumption, the hardships of her husband's pioneer life proving too much for her frail constitution. There being no undertakers, necessity compelled them to hollow out a chestnut-tree, and in this rude coffin the remains of this good woman were deposited.

After the Elders the first pioneers were Scotch-Irish, then Irish and German settlers began pouring in. Among the earliest settlers were the Emmitts, Shields, Williamses, Baughers (Isaac and Joseph, successful merchants), Grovers, Troxells, Hayses, Harrits, Welys, Weavers, Danners, Agnews, Zimmers, etc.

The Biggs and Troxell Families.—The first member of the Biggs family in Maryland came from England and settled in New Jersey. He afterwards removed to Frederick County, about 1750, and settled where Biggs' Ford on the Monocacy now is. After some time he sold his farm and settled on the Monocacy, between the mouths of Pipe Creek and Tom's Creek, where he bought fifteen hundred acres of land, extending from Pipe Creek to the mouth of Tom's Creek. He lived here with two of his sons, William and Benjamin Biggs. Benjamin sold his interest to his brother William and moved to Western Virginia, where he raised a large family. His eldest son, Benjamin, resided near West Liberty. He became a general, and with his brothers was engaged in the Indian wars. His brother, Zachariah Biggs, laid off Ohio into sections, and kept the land-office in Steubenville, Ohio. Frederick, the seventh son of William Biggs, and grandson of the emigrant, bought the farm called "Rich Revel," owned by William, on the Monocacy, opposite the mouth of Stony Branch, of Lieut. George Need, an officer in the Revolution in the company of Capt. Benjamin Ogles.

Frederick Biggs married Mary Wilson, daughter of Joseph Wilson, and died in 1840, aged seventy-one years and nine months. He was the father of the late William Biggs, the great-grandson of the emigrant.

Prior to the Revolutionary war Peter Troxell, Sr., bought of Indian Tom—from whom the well-known creek derived its name—the tract of land of which Richard Offut now owns part. Near this tract Mathias Martin, from Germantown, Pa., settled. Mr. Martin's farm in later years was owned by Peter Sebold. Mr. Martin married a daughter of Peter Troxell, and their daughter, Mary Magdalena, became the wife of Lewis Motter. John Troxell was the eldest son of Peter Troxell. To him is ascribed the building of Troxell's mills, which stand near the junction of Tom's Creek and Flat Run (now the property of Mr. Eisenhart), and which have a historic interest. Before and during the Revolutionary war political meetings were held in the mills. William Elder, the second son of the old pioneer, was a leading spirit at these gatherings. He was an orator by nature, and many a stirring appeal in behalf of the colonies was made by him. In 1779 we find William Elder captain in the Revolutionary army. Many of Mr. Troxell's descendants are now residing in Emmitsburg. He and his wife died there, and are buried in the graveyard attached to the Elias church. John Troxell died in 1836, in his eighty-third year.

Tom's Creek Presbyterian Church.—Some years before the founding of Emmitsburg, a thrifty colony of Scotch-Irish Presbyterians located themselves near Mason and Dixon's line, in what was then called York County, Pa., now Adams. These men were used to hardships, and were robust and healthy, and of industrious and economical habits. They soon crossed the border into Frederick County, and built a church on Tom's Creek Hundred, about a mile and a half from the then embryo town of Emmitsburg. These settlers were ardently attached to the doctrines of their forefathers, and it is a singular coincidence that the two creeds most bitterly opposed to each other in Scotland and Ireland, the Catholic and the Presbyterian, should have been planted side by side in the Emmitsburg District of Frederick County before they were established in any other portion of Western Maryland.

The minutes of the Presbytery of Donegal show that the Rev. Robert McCordie was appointed to supply at "Monokasy" on the second Sabbath of September, 1760. This is the first notice of preaching within the bounds of the congregation. There was also a congregation at Pipe Creek, and we find that the Presbytery being in session "at Mr. Duffield's meeting-house," in Carlisle, April 27, 1761, a "supplication" for supplies was presented from Tom's Creek. The response, if any, of the Presbytery is not recorded. On June 24th, Tom's Creek again asked for supplies. A similar request was at the same time presented from Pipe Creek. The Presbytery thereupon appointed Rev. John Beard to preach at Tom's Creek on the first Sabbath in October. The service held at Tom's Creek in accordance with this appointment, early in October, 1761, was most probably the first within the bounds of the congregation. In November, 1761, Rev. Robert McCordie was appointed to supply Tom's Creek once each in the months of December, February, and April; and at the spring meeting a further appointment was made for the month of May. In November, 1762, it was ordered that the Rev. Samuel Thompson supply Tom's Creek Church on the second Sabbath of that month, and that the Rev. Robert Smith supply Tom's Creek on the second Sabbath of April. Robert Smith was one of the pioneers of Presbyterianism in the southern part of Pennsylvania and the adjacent portions of Maryland. He came from Londonderry, Ireland, in 1730, and became the pastor of the churches of Pequea and Leacock, Pa. He also founded and maintained a classical school at Pequea, where his life was chiefly spent.

April 17, 1763, Tom's Creek and Pipe Creek asked leave to apply to the Presbytery of New Brunswick for a young man to supply them. The answer to this request is not recorded, but the Rev. Samuel Thompson was appointed to preach at Tom's Creek on the third Sabbath of June, and the Rev. Robert Smith on the first Sabbath of September.

This church was supplied during the next autumn and winter by William Edmiston and John Slemons, licentiates of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and by the Rev. Robert Smith. For the summer of 1764, Mr. Slemons had three appointments at Pipe Creek and two at Tom's Creek. The Rev. Samuel Thompson also preached at the latter place in October. Messrs. Edmiston and Magaw subsequently renounced Presbyterianism and took orders in the Episcopal Church. The former became rector of St. Thomas', Frederick Co., Md., and the latter rector of St. Paul's, Philadelphia.

At a meeting of the Presbytery, Oct. 24, 1764, a controversy began respecting the boundary line between the two congregations of Tom's Creek and Pipe Creek. Each church charged the other with encroaching on its territorial limits. After hearing their mutual complaints the Presbytery advised the parties to maintain harmony, and appointed the Rev. Messrs. John Roan and Samuel Thompson, with Elders James Murphy and Samuel Eddy, a committee to meet at Tom's Creek on the second Wednesday of November to determine the bounds between said congregations. Accordingly a meeting was held, at which the following agreement was entered into:

“We, the subscribers, commissioners of Lower Marsh, Tom's Creek, and Piney Creek congregations, being met this 25 of April, 1765, in order to treat respecting the division lines between said congregations, have agreed that a line being drawn straight from Marsh Creek meeting-house to that of Tom's Creek, a line crossing that line at right angles at the end of four and a half miles from Marsh Creek meeting-house, and extended on the one side to Tom's Creek, and on the other till it intersect Piney Creek congregation, shall be the division line between said congregations; and that the division line between Marsh Creek congregation and that of Piney Creek shall be midways between the meeting-houses of said congregations. Witness our hands this day and year above written. Et sic subscribatur."

“JOHN ALEXANDER, WILLIAM COCHRAN,

“SAMUEL McFARLAN, JOHN MCKINLEY,

“WILLIAM SHIELDS, JAMES McGINLEY,

“ANDREW HART, WILLIAM PORTER.”

During the next five years Tom's Creek and Piney Creek had occasional supplies, appointed chiefly at the stated meetings of the Presbytery in April and October. Andrew Bay, John Sneimers, John Craighead, Hezekiah James Balch, Samuel Thompson, and Robert Cooper were among their preachers.

Hezekiah James Balch was born in Harford County, Md., in 1746. He graduated at Nassau Hall, 1766, and was licensed the following year by the Donegal Presbytery. After ordination by the same Presbytery, in 1769, he went on a mission to the South, and became a pastor of Rocky River and Poplar Tent Churches, in North Carolina. He was a member of the famous Mecklenburg Convention, held May 19, 1775, and was one of three Presbyterian ministers appointed to prepare resolutions for the action of the convention. The other two were Dr. Ephraim Bravard and William Kenyon, and all three were graduates of Princeton. The “declaration” framed by this trio of Presbyterian ministers, and adopted by the patriotic citizens of Mecklenburg, contained in it the germ of the grander national act of July 4, 1776. Mr. Balch died in the summer of 1775. He was an elder brother of the Rev. Stephen Bloomer Balch, D.D., for many years pastor of “Georgetown on Potomac,” and who preached at an early day in Frederick. The committee met at Tom's Creek on the fourth Tuesday in June, 1771, all the members being present except Mr. Craighead and Elder Dill. Mr. Cooper was chosen moderator, and Mr. Duffield clerk. The commissioners from Piney Creek were Patrick Watson, Abraham Heytor, Benjamin McKinley, James Galt, and James Hunter; from Tom's Creek, William Blair, William Shields, William Brown, and Samuel Enmit.

When the committee and parties came together there were two subjects of dispute to be considered. The first was that Piney Creek desired a separation from Tom's Creek and the settlement of a pastor of their own, whereas Tom's Creek favored the continuance of the previous union and the joint settlement of a pastor. After a patient and full hearing of the arguments on both sides, the committee decided this first question in favor of Piney Creek and dissolved the union.
The second subject of controversy was that of the boundary line between the two congregations. In April, 1765, this question was considered and apparently settled by agreement of the commissioners of the three congregations of Lower Marsh Creek, Tom's Creek, and Piney Creek, but a closer inspection of the terms of that agreement shows that the lines then determined were those between Marsh Creek and Piney Creek, and between Marsh Creek and Tom's Creek respectively, and not the line between Tom’s Creek and Piney Creek, which the committee was now called to consider. The settlement of this long-continued dispute involved the question of priority of organization, it being conceded that the older congregation had the right to have its wishes respected as to the line of division. The committee decided that the claim of Tom’s Creek to priority was valid, and hence gave judgment in favor of making the Monocacy the dividing line instead of Stony Ridge.

The first pastor of Tom’s Creek was the Rev. Hezekiah Balc. The call was placed in his hands Aug. 15, 1775, and was accepted the next day. It was accompanied with subscriptions amounting to £112 9s. 6d., the congregation agreeing to pay a salary of £100. The installation services took place Oct. 16, 1775, and were conducted by the Rev. Amos Thompson and the Rev. John Slemons.

In April, 1775, the Rev. Mr. Balc, pastor of the Tom’s Creek Church, assigned as a reason for absence from the previous meeting that he “was at camp.”

After being released from his charge, Mr. Balc took a dismissal to the Presbytery of Hanover, in Virginia. Rev. Hezekiah Balc, D.D., was born in Harford County, Md., in 1741. He entered the College of New Jersey in 1758, graduated there in 1762, and was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle in 1765 or 1766. He labored for some time within the bounds of the Hanover Presbytery, and was ordained as an evangelist by that body March 8, 1770.

The pulpit again being vacant, the Presbytery appointed supplies for Tom’s Creek for the next six months, and regularly thereafter while without a pastor.

In October, 1780, a paper signed by forty members of the Lower Marsh congregation was presented to the Presbytery, asking leave to unite with Tom’s Creek in forming the same pastoral charge. Action upon this paper was deferred until the next April, when the proposed union was effected with the concurrence of Tom’s Creek.

The following year, 1781, the congregation called the Rev. Matthew Woods to become its pastor. This call Mr. Woods declined, and accepted one from Hanover, Dauphin Co., Pa. The same congregation called on, April 8, 1783, Rev. John McKnight. It was accompanied with subscription papers amounting to £180; Marsh Creek agreeing to pay £85, and Tom’s Creek £95, but each congregation claiming a discharge upon the payment of £75 per annum. Each congregation also promised a gratuity of fifty bushels of wheat upon Mr. McKnight’s acceptance of the call. Overtures were at the same time made to Mr. McKnight from South Branch, Del., and Patterson Creek, Va., and from Bullskin and Coal Spring Churches, but after consideration he formally accepted the proposals of Lower Marsh Creek and Tom’s Creek. His installation took place on the second Wednesday of November, 1783, at the Lower Marsh Creek Church, the Rev. James Martin and the Rev. John Block conducting the services. Mr. McKnight’s labors continued nearly six years, and were eminently acceptable to the people of his charge. In 1789 he was called to be a colleague of the Rev. Dr. John Rodgers, pastor of the United Presbyterian Churches of New York City. The salary offered was £400.

The Presbytery met Sept. 8, 1789. Dr. Rodgers appeared as the commissioner of the congregations, and urged the Presbytery to put the call into Mr. McKnight’s hands. The commissioners from Marsh Creek (James McAnesby, Benjamin Reed, and Reynolds Ramsey) and from Tom’s Creek (William Shields, William Porter, and John Withrow) protested very earnestly against Mr. McKnight’s removal.

After mature deliberation the Presbytery determined to place the call in his hands. He accepted it, and the pastoral relation was thereupon dissolved.

He was dismissed October 7th, and was installed December 2d over his new charge in New York. Dr. McKnight’s pastorate in New York continued twenty years, at the end of which time he removed to a small farm which he had purchased for a residence in the neighborhood of Chambersburg, Pa. He continued to preach as a supply until 1822, but declined any regular settlement after leaving New York.

He was born near Carlisle, Pa., Oct. 1, 1754, graduated at Nassau Hall, under the presidency of Dr. Witherspoon, in 1773, and studied theology under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Robert Cooper. He was licensed and ordained by the Presbytery of Danegal, and labored in Virginia before his settlement in Lower Marsh and Tom’s Creek congregations. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Yale College in 1791, and in 1795 he was moderator of the General Assembly. He became president of Dickinson College in 1815, but resigned the office after having held it for a little more than a year. Two of his sons entered the ministry. His death occurred Oct. 21, 1823, in the seventeenth year of his age.

After a vacancy of two years, Lower Marsh Creek and Tom's Creek applied to the Presbytery for leave to prosecute a call for William Paxton, then a licentiate under the care of the Presbytery of New Castle. The request was granted, and the services of Mr. Paxton secured. He was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Carlisle, at Upper Marsh Creek, on the 7th of June, 1792, and was ordained and installed at Lower Marsh Creek on the 3d of October, 1792. Dr. Robert Davidson preached the ordination sermon, the Rev. James Long presided and gave a charge to the candidate. The services were held in a grove near the Marsh Creek church, where a temporary pulpit and seats were provided for the accommodation of an assembly exceeding the capacity of the house of worship.

Mr. Paxton ministered to the united congregations with great assiduity for four years, when Lower Marsh Creek became desirous of obtaining his undivided time and labors. Application was made Oct. 4, 1796, to have the connection with Tom's Creek dissolved, Marsh Creek alone offering to raise a support of one hundred and fifty pounds. Tom's Creek earnestly remonstrated against any disturbance of the existing relation. After a full and patient hearing of Mr. Paxton and of the commissioners on both sides, the Presbytery decided to grant the request of Marsh Creek. The pastoral relation with Tom's Creek was accordingly dissolved. Mr. Paxton was the son of a respectable farmer of Lancaster County, Pa. He was born April 1, 1760, and his early life was devoted to agricultural employments. He served in the Revolutionary war, and was in the battle of Trenton. He prosecuted his studies, literary and theological, at the Strasburg Academy, under the direction of Rev. Nathaniel W. Sample. His pastorate at Marsh Creek lasted forty-nine years. He was a man of decided ability, and a faithful preacher. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Dickinson College in 1826. His death occurred April 16, 1845. The Rev. William M. Paxton, D.D., pastor of the First Church of New York, is his grandson.

From 1796 to 1800 Tom's Creek was without a pastor. Among the supplies who preached during this period were Mr. Francis Herron, Mr. David McConaughy, and Mr. Matthew Brown. The two last named became respectively presidents of Washington and Jefferson Colleges in Western Pennsylvania. The next pastor of Tom's Creek was the Rev. Patrick Davidson, who was born in 1775. He graduated at Dickinson College, was introduced to the Presbytery of New Castle as a candidate by the Rev. Nathan Grier, Oct. 5, 1796, and was licensed by that body Oct. 5, 1797. He was ordained and installed pastor at Fagg's Manor, Pa., April 3, 1799. Owing to some "disagreeable circumstances rendering his situation uncomfortable" among that people the pastoral relation was dissolved, April 2, 1800. In the afternoon of the same day he obtained a dismissal to the Presbytery of Carlisle, by which he was received Oct. 7, 1800, just two days before his acceptance of the call from Tom's Creek.

Mr. Davidson was elected principal of the Frederick Academy, Aug. 15, 1809. This position he accepted, and removed to Frederick in the autumn of that year, although the pastoral relation with the Tom's and Piney Creek Churches was not dissolved until Sept. 26, 1810. Out of this premature removal grew the complaint that he had left his congregations unsupplied during the winter of 1809–10. Mr. Davidson was dismissed to the Presbytery of Baltimore, Sept. 28, 1814, and remained in connection with that body until his death, which occurred Oct. 9, 1824. During his principality of the Frederick Academy he supplied the Frederick Church, and preached occasionally at Pipe Creek and Creagerstown.

He accepted a call to Tom's Creek, Oct. 9, 1800, upon a salary of one hundred and fifty pounds. He was installed on the third Tuesday of the same month. The services were conducted by the Rev. John Slemmons, who was appointed to preside; the Rev. William Paxton, who preached the sermon; and the Rev. David McConaughy, who gave the charge.

In October, 1801, the Piney Creek Church extended a call to Mr. Davidson, offering him £87 10s. for one-third his ministerial and pastoral services.

A commissioner informed the Presbytery that Tom's Creek had been consulted and had agreed that Mr. Davidson's services should be divided between the two congregations. The call was accordingly presented to Mr. Davidson, and upon his acceptance of it the arrangement was consummated.

Tom's Creek and Piney Creek were now, for the first time in a period of forty years, united under the same pastor. The union then established has been continued with entire harmony through successive pastorates for three-quarters of a century. Mr. Davidson's labors were continued in the two congregations until the autumn of 1809. The next pastor was the Rev. Robert Smith Grier. When Mr. Grier came into this region he was a licentiate of the Presbytery.
of New Castle. He appeared at Gettysburg, April 14, 1813, and obtained leave to labor in the bounds of the Presbytery of Carlisle. On April 12, 1814, he accepted calls to Tom's Creek and Piney Creek, each church promising him a salary of three hundred dollars.

In January, 1824, there were four ruling elders in the Tom's Creek Church, viz.: James Crocket, John Witherow, William Long, and William Bigham. In October of the same year John Stewart, Nathaniel Randolph, Joseph Kerr, and John Nichols were added to the Session, making eight in all. There were at this time one hundred and seven communicants. In 1839 the church edifice, which had stood one mile north of the village, was taken down and rebuilt in Emmitsburg, where the Tom's Creek Church has since worshiped.

The pastorate of Mr. Grier, though covering more than half a century, was a quiet, uneventful one. He lived during a large part of his ministry upon his farm, three miles north of Emmitsburg, and over the line separating Maryland and Pennsylvania. Conducting farming operations himself, he was in full sympathy with his parishioners, who were largely engaged in agricultural pursuits. At the close of the fiftieth year of his pastorate he preached a semi-centennial discourse, reviewing the history of his labors. On this occasion his brother, Rev. Dr. John C. Grier, and his two sons, Smith and Laverty, both of them Presbyterian ministers, were present and took part in the exercises.

Rev. Robert Smith Grier was the elder son of Rev. Nathan and Susannah (Smith) Grier. He was born at Brandywine Manor, Chester Co., Pa., May 11, 1790. His father was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at the Forks of the Brandywine. His preparative studies were pursued at the Brandywine Academy. He graduated at Dickinson College, Carlisle, September, 1809, and united with the church in 1810. He studied theology under his father's instruction, and was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle in September, 1812. He was received under the care of the Presbytery of Carlisle, April 12, 1814, and the same day accepted calls to Tom's Creek and Piney Creek Churches. He was ordained Sept. 25, and installed Nov. 14, 1814. This was his only charge. Mr. Grier was buried in the Tom's Creek graveyard, which is one mile north of Emmitsburg. Mr. Grier was married three times. His first wife was Elizabeth Laverty, by whom he had two sons and three daughters, Susan, Mary, and Jane. Susan married Rev. John R. Marsden, an Episcopal minister. Mary is unmarried and a resident of Emmitsburg.

The other daughter is dead. Mrs. Grier died Sept. 25, 1830. Mr. Grier's second wife was Sarah Jane Annan, by whom he had one son and one daughter. The son died in early life. The daughter, Ann Margaret, became the wife of Maj. O. A. Horner, of Emmitsburg, and died Aug. 14, 1872.

His third wife was Mrs. Margaret Stewart, who still survives, and is an active and useful member of the Emmitsburg Church.

After the decease of Mr. Grier both churches were supplied for a few months by Rev. Daniel B. Jackson, then a licentiate, but now the pastor of Black River Falls Church, Wisconsin. Early in the summer of 1866 they were visited by the Rev. Isaac M. Patterson, pastor of the Annapolis Church, and a member of the Presbytery of Baltimore. This visit resulted in a call to the pastorate of both churches. Mr. Patterson commenced his labors early in August, and was installed at Piney Creek, November 13th, and on the next day at Emmitsburg. The Session of Tom's Creek consisted of the following elders: David Gamble, Nathaniel Grayson, John Witherow, William C. Landers, John J. Neeley, and Alexander L. Horner. Mr. Patterson's ministry lasted seven years, during which a parsonage property was bought and enlarged and improved at an outlay of four thousand six hundred and fifty dollars. Both houses of worship were remodeled and refurnished, involving a further expenditure of three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars. In April, 1867, the Session of Tom's Creek applied to the Presbytery for a change of ecclesiastical name. In response to this application the designation "Emmitsburg" was substituted for the well-known but less euphonious title of "Tom's Creek."

In the summer of 1873, Mr. Patterson resigned his pastoral charge, in order to accept a call to Milford, N. J., which is his present field of labor. The relations of the present pastor to the united churches of Emmitsburg, Piney Creek, and Taneytown were constituted in December, 1873, by a committee of the Presbytery of Baltimore.

Emmitsburg is situated in a beautiful section of Frederick County, on the east side of the Blue Ridge Mountains, one and a half miles from Mason and Dixon's line, and adjoining Adams County, Pennsylvania. The foundation of Emmitsburg dates back to 1786. It was then known by the name of Poplar Fields. The original population consisted of seven families, viz.: Richard Jennings, merchant; Adam Hoffma, hatter; John Rogers, tavern-keeper; Michael Smith, blacksmith; Frederick Baird, carpenter; James and Joseph Hughes, merchants and architects.
At that time the village consisted of only a few buildings, and was called “Silver Fancy.” Subsequently William Shields built a house where Peter Hoke’s store now stands, and this was the beginning of “Shields’ addition.” Capt. Jennings built the first house in the village. It was a one-story frame structure. The first brick house, adjoining the former, was also built by Capt. Jennings. This was taken down some years ago, and rebuilt by Isaac S. Annan & Co. In 1786, James and Joseph Hughes built the two houses on the northwest corner of the square at present occupied by their descendants. They also built houses on the lot now owned by George W. Rowe and John O’Donohue. They then built the Eagle Hotel (on the site now occupied by the Western Maryland), where many a weary traveler found rest. In after-years it was managed by Mrs. Margaret Agnew, who fell a victim to the cholera in 1853. James Hughes built the second brick house, on the northeast corner of the square, which, with many others, was burned in 1863, and rebuilt by Dr. Robert L. and J. C. Annan. This old mansion was the cradle of the Catholic Church in Emmittsburg, containing a room where the Catholic service was recited whenever practicable. It was visited at this period by Father Suffremont, of Conewago, and afterwards occasionally by Father Dubois, of Frederick. The third brick house was built by Frederick Baird, and is now the Presbyterian parsonage. Mr. Baird was a first-class mechanic, and his work in carving was of a superior character. The first tan-yard was built and owned by Christian Plunt, and sold by him in 1798 to Lewis Motter, of York County, Pa., father of the present owner. Mr. Motter came to Emmittsburg, Sept. 5, 1798. Here he raised a large family, and accumulated a considerable amount of property. He also filled many important positions of trust. John Ropley was at that time (in 1786) justice of the peace for three districts, Taneytown, Pipe Creek, and Emmittsburg. The first schoolmaster of the village was Thomas Cocklin. At the beginning of the century Martin Corcoran taught here, and there are some still living who are indebted to Miss Margaret Corcoran for their knowledge of “A, B, Cs.” Mr. Sanders was a subsequent teacher, and some of his descendants reside in the county. There is no one living who can recall the days spent under the guidance of a Cocklin or Mallady, and few indeed remember Master William Mullien and his mathematical academy on Church Street, or Isaac Burbank, whose daughter became the wife of the late distinguished Governor and senator of Indiana, Oliver P. Morton. But many can remember the amiable and gentle-minded Robert Crooks, also Oliver McClain and Mr. Walters. The town now has three schools, two public and one parochial. A large public school building has been erected lately at the West End. The colored school is taught in Lincoln Hall. St. Euphemia’s Academy, conducted by the Sisters of Charity, has passed through its third year successfully, giving great encouragement to the devoted teachers, and a large and commodious building is about to be erected on St. Vincent’s Avenue for this school. There are six flourishing Sunday-schools.

In the year 1786 the male inhabitants of the village and vicinity assembled at Hocking’s tavern, one and a half miles from town, now the home-place of David S. Gilliland, to deliberate concerning a change of name. Hon. John McGurcan being called to preside, proposed to change the name from “Poplar Fields” to “Emmittsburg” in honor of William Emmitt, one of the largest landholders in the district. All present threw up their hats, clasped their hands, and hurrahed for Emmittsburg. The company had quite a merry time, and having drunk the health of the newly-baptized town, returned home full of sanguine expectations as to the rapid growth of the infant settlement.

The name of the post-office was also changed from Poplar Fields to Emmittsburg. William Greenmeyer, who died in 1802, in the thirteenth year of his age, was the first postmaster. He was a son-in-law of John Troxell, who built the brick house adjoining the Eagle Hotel. This house was burned in 1863, rebuilt by Joshua Shorb, and is now owned by Isaac Hyder. The second postmaster was Patrick Reed, at the same time landlord of the Eagle Hotel. The third was a German by the name of Louff; the fourth, Joseph Hughes, Sr.; the fifth, Joachim Elder; the sixth, Dr. Augustus Taney; the seventh, Joachim Elder again, who was succeeded by Robert Crooks, James Knouff, Maj. O. A. Horner, and Samuel N. McMillin.

In the year 1790 society in Emmittsburg was in a very crude state. Playing long bullets was the general exercise. The ladies excelled in spinning the cloth which served as garments for their families and servants. After the population increased, dancing-masters were introduced, and manners grew more refined, sociability became the order, and charity the ruling principle. On Saturday afternoon farmers came to town to transact their business, and after business devoted themselves to pleasure, visiting their friends, etc., and making it quite a holiday.

The Elias Church.—It is probable but by no means certain that the original building of Elias Church was erected in 1797. It was conjointly owned, and on alternate Sundays and other occasions used by the Evangelical Lutheran and the Reformed Church congregation.

The German Reformed and Lutheran Churches in this neighborhood were from the start, by reason of relationships existing among their members and the unity of language (both being German), so intimately associated that they held their church property in common, and in the main recognized but one form of government. Their first church was located on Tom's Creek, about two and a half miles from the town, where the Tom's Creek Methodist Episcopal church now stands.

The Elias church, which was built in 1797, enlarged in 1835, and remodeled in 1870, had at first a small spire, framed into the timbers of the roof, on the eastern gable. This was subsequently shattered by lightning, and the present steeple was built in 1814, Peter Troxell being the architect and George Smith doing the carpenter work. The principal portion of the funds were provided by a lottery. The charter and constitution of the organization was changed in 1850, when each congregation assumed its own government, the two still holding the buildings and grounds in common. The first Lutheran pastor was the Rev. Jonathan Ruthroff, who resided in Greencastle, Pa. The Rev. John G. Groph succeeded him. He resided at Taneytown, where he died March 27, 1829, aged seventy, having been pastor for twenty-seven years. In 1826, Rev. John A. Hoffman became the associate of Rev. Groph, and preached occasionally in the English language. On the resignation of Rev. Groph in 1827 or 1828, Rev. Hoffman succeeded him. He resigned in 1833, and was succeeded by Rev. S. D. Finckle in 1834, who resigned in 1836, and was followed by Rev. Ezra Keller in 1837. Mr. Keller remained only one year, and was followed by Rev. Solomon Sentman, who continued from Jan. 7, 1841, to July 4, 1852. About this time the congregation was separated from the Taneytown charge, and was constituted the Emmitsburg charge, of which Rev. John Welfry became the first pastor. Mr. Welfry entered upon his duties Nov. 5, 1852, and resigned after serving two years. He was followed by Rev. George S. Collins as supply for six months from Nov. 6, 1854, when declining health necessitated the relinquishment of his charge.

Rev. Henry Bishop took charge Sept. 1, 1855, and served over seven years, resigning Dec. 8, 1862. He was followed April 1, 1863, by Rev. W. V. Gotwald, who continued until Feb. 2, 1866. Since then the Rev. E. S. Johnston has been pastor. During his ministration a parsonage has been purchased, and the general advancement of the charge has been greatly promoted.

Reformed Church.—The Reformed congregation, which occupied the Elias church conjointly with the Lutheran, had for their first pastor Rev. Valentine Nichodemus, who died at Taneytown at an advanced age about 1758. Rev. Lewis Heinrich was the next. Rev. J. Ranhauser succeeded him, and was followed by Rev. Frederick Ranhauser, who preached his first sermon June 19, 1806, and resigned in 1816. The Rev. William Runkel commenced his ministry Nov. 3, 1816, and closed April 20, 1821. He died in the year 1832, aged eighty-four, and his remains repose in the Elias Church graveyard. Rev. David Bossier became pastor in 1821, and continued as such for a period of eleven years. Prior to this time the services were conducted almost exclusively in the German language. Rev. Elias Heiner began his ministry Oct. 20, 1833, and during his pastorate and since the English language has been used, with only occasional services in German. Dr. Heiner was for many years afterwards well known as pastor of the old Second Street Church in Baltimore City. Rev. Samuel R. Fisher next succeeded, and remained three years, closing his term Aug. 25, 1839. Dr. Fisher has long been known as the able and highly-efficient editor of the Reformed Church Messenger. Rev. A. P. Fraze followed Rev. Mr. Fisher, and remained from June 14, 1840, to July 24, 1842. Rev. William Philips was chosen pastor in 1842, and resigned in 1846. Rev. G. W. Aughinbaugh succeeded him in that year, and continued ten years. During his pastorate the town was visited by the cholera, and he evinced no small degree of courage and self-sacrifice in ministering to the suffering throughout the continuance of the epidemic. Dr. G. W. Aughinbaugh has been for several years past the president of Palatinate College in Pennsylvania. For several years following the church was without a regular pastor. During the year 1858, however, Rev. Elamath E. Higbee officiated as supply. He has since become well known as a successful educator in classical and theological science, as a pulpit orator, and as president of Mercersburg College. Rev. Walter E. Krebs began his ministry Sept. 26, 1858, and remained four years. Rev. John M. Titel entered upon his duties Nov. 16, 1862, and preached his farewell sermon on the third Sunday after the Epiphany, Jan. 26, 1873. On Easter-day of the same year Rev. A. R. Kremer was elected pastor, and was installed in his office on Whit-Monday, June 2d, following, and continued until 1881, when he was succeeded by Rev. William A. Ying, the present incumbent. In 1868 the Reformed congregation, having sold their interest in the Elias church to the Lutherans, began the erection of the building now known as the Church of the Incarnation, which was finished and dedicated July 31, 1869. On the 31st of March, 1873, the church spire was blown down during a violent wind storm, and preparations for rebuilding it commenced at once, and before many months had passed, the bell, which was uninjured by the fall, was again in place.

St. Joseph's Catholic Church.—Towards the close of the last century Rev. Matthew Ryan, passing through the village, on his way to Path Valley, suggested to Mr. Hughes the idea of building a church, and gave him ten dollars as the first subscription. Mr. Hughes went to work with a will, and in 1793 soon raised sufficient funds to commence the erection of the church. He was the architect and contractor, under the supervision of four trustees, viz.: Richard Jennings, Henry Arnold, Joseph and James Hughes. The two last gentlemen presented the lot upon which the church is built, including the cemetery where their bones now rest. Richard Jennings is also buried there. Father Frambach, from Frederick, and Father Sufremout, from Coneywago, were the first priests who ministered to the wants of the people. They were also visited by Father Dubois, Father Dubois was succeeded by Father Matthew Ryan, a native of Kildare, Ireland, who was the first resident pastor of St. Joseph's Church. Father Ryan died on the 5th of January, 1817. Father Duhamel, who died in 1818, also administered to the congregation for some time. He was followed by Father Simon Gabriel Bruté, Rev. John F. Hickey, Father Thomas McCaffrey, and other zealous priests. In 1852 the church was taken in charge by the Lazarist Fathers, an order instituted by St. Vincent de Paul. In 1831, Father John Hickey enlarged the edifice, and in 1841, finding the congregation still increasing, determined to erect a larger structure. On the day that the old church was torn down Father Hickey was transferred to Baltimore, to the lasting regret of his flock. The labor of completing the new church devolved upon Rev. John McCaffrey, of Mount St. Mary's College, who entered upon it with zeal and energy. It was finished in 1842 (Mr. Tehan, of Frederick, architect), and dedicated on the feast of St. Michael of that year by Most Rev. Archbishop Ecleston, the sermon being preached by Rev. Father Ryder, of the Society of Jesus. A handsome steeple was erected in 1869, the design of which was furnished by the Rev. Father Burlando. The name of this church was St. Mary's until in 1808, Bishop Dubois having given that name to his mountain sanctuary, the church in town was placed under the patronage of St. Joseph. Ever since the foundation of St. Joseph's Church, excepting six months, the choir has been composed of the descendants of the original choir of 1793, a period of eighty-seven years.

On the 15th of January, 1851, the chapel was robbed of property valued at one thousand dollars, including a crucifix, golden chalices, etc.

Mount St. Mary's Catholic Church.—In 1807, James Hughes was appointed architect for Mount St. Mary's Church. To transport building materials over roads covered with brambles and whortleberry-bushes was a laborious undertaking, but the task was lightened by the cheering influence of Father Dubois. Some neighbors, not of the faith, gave their labor voluntarily; among these were John Rowe and Robert Fleming. The latter used to relate many amusing anecdotes of his friend Father Dubois.

The land was given by Joseph Elder, a grandson of the pioneer. In 1824, Father Dubois built a large seminary, which was unfortunately burned down. In the words of Dr. McCaffrey,—

"A noble edifice, the fruit of so many years' unparalleled exertions, was on the point of completion, and a hundred youthful students were ready to occupy it. The feast of Pentecost, on the 6th of June, 1824, came and passed away. The last rays of a bright sun, ere it set behind Mount St. Mary's Mount, had gilded the cross which rose from the cupola of this majestic structure. When the sun again appeared in the east it threw its cheerless beams on blackened walls and smouldering ruins. Startled by alarming cries at the dead of night from the tranquil slumbers which visit the good man at the close of a well-spent day, Mr. Dubois beheld at a glance the ruin of his hopes. His characteristic fortitude did not forsake him. Conquering the agonies of despair, he calmly gave directions or observed in silent grief the progress of destruction. Soon he pointed out some defects in the floor of the flaring edifice which he would remedy in the next; and this, too, though the snows of sixty winters had whitened his head, and he had gone beyond his present means in erecting the building which was destroyed. And again he realized his prediction. He had the public confidence and sympathy. God prospered all his labors, and a new college arose from the ashes of its predecessor."

Father Dubois not only finished it, although he remained only two years longer here, but he also presided over the erection of a still more spacious academy at St. Joseph's. Father Dubois was called away from his work in order to be consecrated Bishop of New York in 1826. He died in 1843. "All things whatsoever he did," says Father McCaffrey, "were fertilized by the dews of heaven, were watered from the fountains of divine grace, and prospered under the blessings of the most high God."

Mount St. Mary's College.—The appearance of this famous institution and its surroundings afford abundant evidence of the zealous efforts of the Fathers, who have labored unremittingly to make it a leading college of the church. From its lofty height Carrick's Knob looks down with majestic mien upon the extensive fertile plains outstretched below, and Tom's Creek winds its clear, silvery thread between its grassy banks. The Indian graves, the Grotto, the Devil's Den, and the Hermitage are the same as of yore, and the autumnal leaf on Mary's Mount displays all the gorgeous colors of autumn as when the early student first gazed upon the enchanting scene. But in place of the lowly log farm-house now stands an elegant mansion, bequeathing the comfort and competence of its inmates. Lime and deep plowing have made the soil generous in its yield. Orchards have grown up, and even vineyards are gladdening the heart of the thrifty cultivator. In 1808 the college opened in a small farm-house with seven scholars, gathered together by the Rev. John Dubois; now a cluster of spacious stone buildings form the material part of this famous college. Nearly two hundred students are annually trained within its walls, and thousands have gone forth from it in bygone years, and still bear an affectionate remembrance of their Alma Mater. It has sent forth, including the founder, thirteen bishops and archbishops, and more than one hundred and fifty priests.

On "Pleasant Level," near Hayfield, stands an old house, long used as a store, and now occupied by L. Diehlman. This ancient building was converted by Father Dubois into a school, and was the beginning of the noted St. Mary's College. The school was removed a few years after to its present site by the advice of Bishop Dubourg. The present spacious and substantial buildings form a striking contrast with their humble beginning. The first students were John Lilly, of Conewago, James Clements, of Littletown, Rev. John Hickey, of Frederick, and Dr. James A. Shorb. In 1809 the pupils at the Pennsylvania School, sixteen in number, were transferred to St. Mary's. In 1810, Father Dubois' pupils increased to forty, the next year to sixty, and in 1813 to eighty-five. Father Dubois' duties as a priest were partially relieved by the arrival and assistance of Mr. Duhamel, a French priest exiled to French Guiana, but who escaped and in 1809 came to St. Mary's.

In 1812, Rev. Simon Gabriel Bruté, a native of France, was stationed at St. Mary's as the spiritual director of the sisterhood of St. Joseph's, and filled the post of professor at St. Mary's College, which he held until 1815. He was the guiding spirit of the place. In recreation hours this indefatigable man laid out roads in the mountains with his own hands, even clearing off the stones. He also constructed the "Grotto" in a romantic part of the mountain above the college, where nature is seen in all her beauty. Huge rocks, overgrown with moss and projecting over a ravine, and crystal streams gurgling down the hillside in the midst of dense foliage and wild-flowers of various hues, combine to make a picture as lovely as it is unique. Father Bruté in 1815 was elected president of St. Mary's College of Baltimore, but resigned this position in 1818 to return to assist Father Dubois. Here he remained until consecrated Bishop of Vincennes, Ind., in 1834. He was born March 29, 1779, in the province of Little Brittany, France, and died June 28, 1839. The log houses of the school, increased to two rows, became too small, and new buildings were erected. As already stated these were destroyed June 6, 1824, by fire. In 1826, however, the new and larger building was completed, and Father Dubois opened the studies of the scholastic year within its walls. Father Dubois was succeeded as president by the Rev. Michael De Burgos Egan, who from his youth had been trained in the institution, over which he ruled with a spirit worthy of the teachings and example of his venerated master. Declining health, however, soon interrupted his labors. His successor was another pupil of Dubois and Bruté, the Rev. John B. Purcell, afterwards Archbishop of Cincinnati. In 1830, Dr. Purcell obtained the first charter for the college from the Maryland Legislature, making the institution a regular college; and in June, 1831, the first diplomas under the charter were given to the graduates. In 1832, Father Purcell was consecrated Bishop of Cincinnati. The college continued to progress under the direction of Rev. Francis B. Jamison and Rev. Thomas R. Butler until 1838, when Rev. John McCaffrey took the helm, to guide it to a still higher degree of prosperity than it had yet attained. In 1858 occurred the fiftieth anniversary of the college, and October 6th and 7th were days of jubilee and rejoicing by its assembled alumni from every part of the globe. Addresses were delivered by President McCaffrey and Hon. James McSherry, and poems were recited by George H. Miles and Rev. Charles C. Pise, D.D., the latter a Latin ode. President McCaffrey retired in 1871, and was succeeded by Rev. John McCloskey. The very Rev. Dr. John McCaffrey, for many years president of Mount St. Mary's College, died at two o'clock on the morning of Sept. 26, 1881, aged seventy-six years. Dr. McCaffrey was widely known throughout the United States from his long connection with Mount St. Mary's. He was born in Emmitsburg in 1805, and entered Mount St. Mary's College in 1821. After spending some years in the study of theology in the ecclesiastical seminary, he was ordained deacon in 1831. Through humility he remained in this order for seven years. He was advanced to the order of priesthood by Rt. Rev. Samuel Eccleston in 1838. The Archbishop of Baltimore was then a member of the college council, and nominated Dr. McCaffrey for the presidency of the college left vacant by the resignation of Rev. Thomas R. Butler. He assumed his place in the council and the presidency of the college March 19, 1838. This office he held continuously for over thirty years. In consequence of failing health he resigned in 1871. His first associates in the council were Rev. John Hickey, Rev. H. Xaupi, Rev. Philip Borgna, Rev. George Flaut, and the Rev. P. Corry. His brother, Rev. Thomas McCaffrey, was also associated with him till he died, Aug. 5, 1853. He taught theology in the seminary for several years while president, succeeding to the chair of theology previously held by Bishop Brute and Rev. Philip Borgna. In 1856 he began a new church on the college grounds, which financial embarrassment prevented him from completing. After his resignation of the presidency he continued to reside at the college, and occasionally, as his health would permit, taught his favorite classics. He left in MSS. some very valuable sermons, of which only three have been preserved in print. These are an oration on the landing of the pilgrims of Maryland, and funeral discourses relating to Bishops Dubois and Brute. His funeral took place at the college church on Thursday morning, Sept. 29, 1881. President McCloskey resigned in 1877, and Rev. John A. Watterson was elected president, and served until 1880, when he was made Bishop of Columbus, Ohio. Rev. John McCloskey then again resumed the presidency, but only for a few months, as death closed his labors on Christmas eve, 1880. His successor was Rev. Wm. Byrne, but in the spring of 1880 the institution became involved in serious financial difficulties, and was placed in the hands of Capt. James McSherry, as receiver. Father Byrne, however, still has charge of the educational administration. The college is situated at the base of the Blue Ridge Mountains, and is about a mile and a half from St. Joseph's, and nearly the same distance from the town. Its commencement exercises, held June 22 and 23, 1881, were unusually interesting, and were attended by large audiences, gathered from various portions of the country.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

St. Joseph's College.—In 1809 the foundation of St. Joseph's institution of the Sisters of Charity and school for young ladies was begun by Mrs. Eliza Seton in a plain dwelling and with humble surroundings. Here Mother Seton and her band of devoted followers labored for years in their high and holy calling. Mrs. Seton died in 1821, in her forty-seventh year, regretted by all who had the happiness to know her. This incomparable woman was very beautiful, but cheerfully relinquished the world to devote herself to religious work. St. Joseph's to-day is undoubtedly one of the finest educational establishments in the United States. Its charter of incorporation was obtained in 1817 from the Maryland Legislature, through the influence of Robert Goodloe Harper. Among the many spots rendered interesting by legends of the past is a favorite resort in the grounds of this college, called the "Indian burying-ground." This spot, surrounded by forest-trees, has been converted by the Sisters of Charity into a lovely grotto, in which stands an image of the Virgin Mary.

This mother-house of the Sisters of Charity, like the acorn, has grown to a large tree, whose branches overshadow the most distant States of the Union, numbering one hundred and ten mission-houses. The Sisters also have charge of hospitals, orphanages, and schools. There are over eleven hundred members of the community belonging to St. Joseph's. It was in June, 1890, that Mother Seton removed a portion of her little community from Baltimore, and while the plain dwelling was being finished for them on their land in the valley they occupied the house in which Mr. Dubois had first resided, and which he vacated for the log college below it.

St. Joseph's now forms a magnificent cluster of buildings, located on a healthy, beautiful spot, and surrounded by lovely grounds. These, with its several hundred Sisters and nearly two hundred girls in the college, speak in no feeble voice of the beneficent results which may follow the self-sacrificing efforts of a single individual.

The commencement exercises of June 23, 1881, were the most successful in the long and eventful history of the institution.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.—In 1831 the Methodist church was erected, during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Moreland, a native of Ireland, who settled at the base of the Blue Ridge Mountains, under the shadows of Carrick's Knob. Mr. Moreland was found dead in his gig one Sunday morning in August as he was on his way to officiate in the Methodist chapel on the banks of Tom's Creek. His remains were interred in the cemetery adjoining the new church in Emmittsburg, which he caused to be built. The first sermon delivered in this edifice was the funeral panegyric of Rev. Mr. Moreland. The present pastor is Rev. E. O. Eldridge.

Physicians.—The first physician in Emmittsburg was Dr. Reneh, who is buried in Tom's Creek graveyard. Dr. Brown settled on the banks of Tom's Creek some years before Dr. Reuch came to the village. Among those who became popular as medical practitioners was Robert I. Annan, who though not a pioneer was early on the ground. Dr. Annan was a pupil of the renowned Dr. Richard Rush, of Philadelphia, from whom he received his certificate of admission to the medical faculty on the 29th of April, 1789. He began the practice of his profession in Carroll's Lower Tract, where he was married, Nov. 29, 1790, to Mary Cochran (granddaughter of Wm. Cochran, who made the first purchase of that tract), and subsequently removed to Emmittsburg.

Dr. Annan's son, Dr. Andrew Annan, secured a practice almost equal to that of his father, and on retiring from professional life he transferred his business to his son, Robert L. There was also the "old doctor's" brother, Dr. Samuel Annan, distinguished as the founder of a medical school in Baltimore, and as a professor of medicine in Kentucky. The highly-esteemed and successful physician Dr. Jefferson Shields and Dr. Alexander Stewart, of Shippensburg, Pa. (Dr. Andrew Annan and Dr. Shields were partners for some time), also had a lucrative practice in this section. Dr. James W. Eichelberger, Sr., was also associated with Dr. Andrew Annan for a number of years. He has but recently retired, in a green old age, from the regular and active work of professional life, leaving as his successors his sons, Drs. Charles D. and James W. Eichelberger. Dr. William Patterson was early associated in the practice of his profession with the well-known Dr. James A. Shorb, who came here from Littlestown, Pa., and was one of the first students of Mount St. Mary's College. Dr. Patterson died on the 27th of May, 1876, at the age of seventy-four years and three days. Dr. Augustine Taney, whose father was an uncle of the late Chief Justice Taney, read medicine with old Dr. Swope, at Taneytown, and settled when a young man in Emmittsburg, where he became a highly-influential citizen. In the midst of his usefulness and prosperity he fell a victim to the cholera in 1853, at the age of fifty-six years. In addition to Dr. Shorb and Dr. Patterson, Dr. Wells, whose son and grandson are both physicians, Drs. Robert and Daniel Moore, Dr. John R. Brawner, Dr. Felix McNeal, Dr. John J. Grover, and Dr. Timothy Sweeney have been attending physicians at Mount St. Mary's and St. Joseph's at different times.

The present incumbent of this position, the well-known Dr. Brawner, is a lineal descendant of the first settlers of the neighborhood, the Elders and Lives. Dr. J. G. Troxell, though but recently settled here, has won the confidence and respect of a large circle, and resides between the college and Clairvaux, the summer resort.

Various Local Events.—Emmittsburg was incorporated by the General Assembly of Maryland, Jan. 13, 1825. Subsequently quite a number of amendments were added, and a revised, amended, and enlarged charter was passed March 10, 1854, which remains in force without any important change.

The town being so near the border suffered a great deal during the late war from the depredations of both armies, but was happily spared from being the scene of any conflicts.

On the night of June 16, 1863, however, a fire broke out in the livery-stables of Beam & Guthrie, which spread with terrible rapidity over a large portion of the village, and rendered many of its inhabitants homeless. It was not long, however, before new buildings arose from the ashes, and there are few vestiges of the conflagration now to be seen. The fire was discovered about eleven o'clock, in the loft of the stables, which were soon destroyed. The flames communicated to the dwellings of Mr. Adelsberger and Dr. Eichelberger, directly in front, and then laid waste the whole side of the street going east for about ten doors from the Square, when the houses directly opposite took fire and were also destroyed, the last one being the hotel of Mr. Wile, one of the largest in the State outside of the city of Baltimore. It was four stories high, and erected four years previous to its destruction. Messrs. D. and J. Adelsberger owned the first dwelling and store burned. They had built it but a few years before, and occupied it as a tin and house furnishing store. Dr. Eichelberger's, next door to them, was a large two-story brick building, directly on the corner of the Square and the road to Gettysburg. The next was the large dwelling on the opposite corner, occupied by Dr. Patterson, then the merchant tailor store of Patrick Kelly, together with his dwelling. The other houses destroyed were occupied by Messrs. Frank Magraw, James Hospelhor, and Upton Koontz, Miss Zimmerman, Jacob Horner, Simon Metzer, John Miiller, James L. Wise, Mr. Winter, Mr. Morrison, Jesse Seabrooks, Jesse Nusser, Joshua Shorb (store-house and dwelling), and the City Hotel of D. Wile. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Most of the houses consumed were built of wood, and many of the occupants barely escaped with their lives, losing all their furniture and clothing. The burning of the City Hotel of Mr. Wile proved a great inconvenience at that particular time to the many visitors and friends of Mount St. Mary's College and St. Joseph's Academy, whose annual commencements took place the following week. There was one fire-engine in the place, which was worked and managed by the citizens when it was required, the water being supplied in buckets filled at the different wells and cisterns. Some years ago Block's old tavern, which stood at the head of Main Street, was torn down, and a new hotel, the Emmits House, was built in its place. A long, fine, wide street has been opened northward from this hotel, and has been built up mainly through the enterprise of Isaac Annan.

In October, 1838, a celebration was held in Emmitsburg by the Democratic Reformers in honor of the election of their Governor and majorities in both branches of the State Legislature. A dinner was given, at which John Jones presided and Dr. William Patterson acted as secretary. Among the guests was Hon. Francis Thomas. In the evening Mr. Thomas addressed the company, after which a procession was formed, under command of Maj. Harritt as marshal, and marched through the town.

The telegraph was introduced in 1866, and its wires have ever since been under the efficient management of the Misses Helman.

In 1875 a railroad connecting with the Western Maryland Road at Rocky Ridge was completed, but not until after the death of its first president, Joshua Motter. His successor was John A. Dwin, and in a few years, he having died, Rev. F. Goedry was elected, but his clerical duties preventing his giving the necessary time and labor to the road, he resigned, and the present incumbent, J. Taylor Motter, was chosen.

There are four large public halls,—Annan's on the Square, the band hall on Church Street, St. Vincent's, and Lincoln. The town has several stores, including one general merchandising establishment, two tin and stove-stores, three dry goods, three furniture establishments, three undertakers, three hotels, five shoe-shops, two tailors, one jewelry-store, two apothecaries, two confectioneries, three milliners, seven general stores, one gunsmith, two carriage-factories, two saddlery-shops, one clothing-store, one photograph-gallery, with many groceries, a marble and tan-yard, and several mechanical shops of various industries.

The town is a favorite summer resort, owing to its healthfulness and the lovely scenery by which it is surrounded.

Filial Lodge, No. 62, A. F. and A. M., was located here. It was never represented in the Grand Lodge, and the record of its proceedings (if any ever existed) cannot be found.

Massasoit Tribe, No. 41, I. O. R. M., kindles the council fire every Saturday evening, 8th Run. Officers:

Emerald Beneficial Association, Branch No. 1.
—Monthly meetings, fourth Sunday in each month.

Officers:

J. Thomas Bussey, Pres.; Thomas J. Henley, Vice-Pres.; Geo. F. Rider, Sec.; F. A. Adelsberger, Asst. Sec.; Dr. J. B. Brawner, Treasurer.

Junior Building Association.—The officers are:

Sec., J. Thomas Bussey; Directors, J. T. Hayes, Pres.; W. S. Guthrie, Vice-Pres.; John Witherow, W. H. Heke, Daniel Lawrence, James A. Rowe, Charles J. Rowe, Joseph Waddles.

The town officers are:

The first newspaper published in Emmitsburg was edited and printed by E. S. Riley, now of Annapolis, about 1841, and was called the Emmitsburg Banner. After publishing it for three months he sold out the paper and office to Troxell, Duhforne & McTate. In 1844, Mr. C. Grate published the Emmitsburg Star, a very interesting and useful sheet, which he continued several years. The Mountain Echo, a small paper, was published by young Lagarde in 1860 at Ingleside. The Emmitsburg Chronicle was established June 14, 1879, by Samuel Motter, a graduate of Princeton College, and is still edited and owned by him. It is an independent journal, fearless and outspoken, and one of the best local papers in Maryland. About 1845 a paper was started called the Emmitsburg Gazette. It took no active part in political affairs, but was chiefly devoted to local matters. It was published by Robert F. Crooks. It claimed that as Samuel Enunit spelled his name with only one "t," Emmitburg should be spelled in the same way.

The teachers for the term ending April, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 45 pupils, C. N. Stern; No. 2, 55 pupils, J. F. Adelsberger; No. 3, 77 pupils, C. D. Hoover, Emma E. Motter, assistant; No. 4, 47 pupils, E. F. Smith; No. 5, 54 pupils, S. P. Ambrose; No. 6, 47 pupils, George Leyfols; No. 7, 38 pupils, W. C. Kriese; No. 8, 42 pupils, F. C. Fox; No. 9, 20 pupils, Columbia Frayle; No. 10, 33 pupils, W. F. Miller. No. 1 (colored), 45 pupils, Cornelius Lamb.

The justices of the peace are Michael C. Adelsberger, Henry Stokes, James Knuff, Eugene L. Rowe; Registrar, James A. Elder; Constable, Wm. H. Ashbaugh; School Trustees, Henry Stokes, E. R. Zimmerman, U. A. Lough.

Bridgeport is five miles from Emmitsburg, and near the Carroll County line. M. E. Correll is postmaster. Its industries are represented by Amos Bishop, Joseph Hobbs. John Long, George Ohler, carpenters; Sylvester Fink, Thomas Hawks, John Ohler, blackssmiths; William Gingell, William Starner, millers; Samuel Linally, Benjamin Pool, merchants; Samuel Switzer, wool-manufacturer.

Motters is on the Emmitsburg Railroad, and is three and a half miles from Rocky Ridge. Its location is pleasant, and the country about is fertile and productive. Among its business men are T. L. Naill, auctioneer and postmaster; J. T.CRETIN, WILLIAM SHRIVER, and Mrs. J. Walters, hotel-keepers; Lawrence Deilman, Naill & Fisher, merchants; W. H. DORSEY, Henry Lindsey, J. & W. Sheekey, masons; William Eisenhart, Henry Maxwell, millers; Dr. J. W. Hickey, dentist; Joshua Hobbs, David Waechter, Walters & Taylor, carpenters; R. S. Knodle, harnessmaker; Philip Stansberry, David Weaver, blacksmiths; Dr. James Troxell, physician; George W. Worthen, wheelwright; and James Worthen, plasterer.

Catoctin District, No. 6.

By an act of General Assembly, passed Feb. 3, 1848, George Shuttt, Jacob Young, of D., and Hiram H. Mullen were designated commissioners to lay out an election district out of those parts of Hauver’s and Middletown contiguous to each other. On May 9, 1848, they laid out Catoctin, or Election District No. 6. Catoctin thus took the place of District No. 6 (Taneytown), which had been added to Carroll on the formation of that county.

From the boundaries established in 1848 it will be seen that Hauver’s is on the north, Mechanistown, Creagerstown, and Frederick on the east, Jackson on the south, and South Mountain on the west. The settlers were nearly all Germans, with some Swiss, who came into this district just prior to the French and Indian war. Among the first to settle were the Wols, Blessings, Hoovers, Grofts, Kuhns, Brandenburgs, Crouses, Myers, Stottlemayers, Leathermans, Buzzards, Markers, Harshmans, Shufts, Hoffmans, Freys, and Reckers. They were a religious people, thrifty and hard-working, and soon opened up good farms and acquired comfortable homes. Many of the earliest settlers were Dunkers, or Tunkers, people of strong religious convictions and of a sturdy pioneer stock. This religious denomination arose in 1708 in the Palatinate, from eight persons who entered into a covenant with each other to meet regularly, to carefully and impartially examine the doctrines of the New Testament, and, by the help of God, to ascertain what are the obligations it imposes on professed followers. The result of these meetings was the formation of the society now generally known as the Dunkers. As stated in a preceding chapter, a settlement of the Dunkers was made in 1725 on the banks of the Coaleco Creek, in Lancaster Co., Pa., where the Reading road and Downingtown turnpike intersect in, it Ephrata township, and is well known by the name of “Kloster,” or “Ephrata,” or “Dunkertown,” a nickname from the word Dunker, or Tunker, a corruption of Taenfer, Baptists. About twenty-five years after the settlement at Ephrata a number of the Tunker families removed to Frederick County and located in this district, among whom the Hoover family was most prominent.

The villages in this district are Wolfsville and Ellerton.

Wolfsville is six miles from Smithsburg, and near Catoctin Creek. It derives its name from the Wolf family, one of the earliest to settle in this neighborhood. On Feb. 6, 1851, a public meeting was held here to consider the propriety of forming a new county out of portions of Frederick and Washington Counties. The meeting was unanimously opposed to the new county project. Other districts falling within the range of the contemplated new county also held meetings and expressed themselves favorable to its formation, but the object was never accomplished.

South Mountain Lodge, I. O. O. F., No. 125, was instituted Oct. 28, 1873, of which H. S. Myers is secretary. John H. Mangans is postmaster at Wolfsville, and Dr. Lewis Lamar the resident physician. The merchants are Holter & Pheleger, J. W. Hoover, and F. Leatherman. The industries are D. Biser, N. Eccard, millers; G. H. Barkdall, John Myers, Lawson Kline, blacksmiths; A. W. Bargs, J. G. Smith, shoemakers; J. A. Grove, carpenter; J. O. Hays, cooper; Mrs. E. Hoover, boarding-house; Scott T. Martin, huckster; Amanda S. Recher, Mrs. A. C. Stottlemeyer, dressmakers; and J. N. Wolf, butcher. The churches are the Lutheran, German Reformed, Dunker, and United Brethren. Rev. Wm. R. Coursey, for many years in charge of the latter, died on July 1, 1881, in his seventy-eighth year, having preached in this neighborhood for over a third of a century.

Ellerton is near Catoctin Creek, and is nine miles from Smithsburg. The postmaster and merchant is Thomas F. Bittle; physician, Dr. L. Waechter. The industries are Josiah Harp, miller; Israel Delander, J. E. Palmer, undertakers; D. Walster, Aaron Shipley, shoemakers; J. H. Moses, J. C. Palmer, Joseph Palmer, M. L. Weddle, James Weddle, carpenters; H. Poffenberger, Isaac Poffenberger, blacksmiths.

William Poole, one of the oldest citizens of the Valley, died on July 4, 1881, near this village, in his ninety-first year.
The teachers for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 52 pupils, John O. Hays; No. 2, 63 pupils, M. A. E. Bizer; No. 3, 66 pupils, S. E. Grove, Hezekiah Harper, assistant; No. 4, 41 pupils, M. V. Easterday; No. 5, 25 pupils, C. L. Waechter; No. 6, 37 pupils, H. O. Biddner; No. 7, 56 pupils, D. Gibson; No. 8, 24 pupils, C. J. Stolburger; No. 9, 36 pupils, W. E. Schiblinek.

URBANA DISTRICT, No. 7.

By an act of General Assembly, passed Feb. 28, 1848, John F. Simmons, James F. Johnson, and John H. Worthington were appointed commissioners to lay out an election district out of parts of Buckeystown (No. 1) and New Market (No. 9). On June 16, 1848, they established Urbana, or Election District No. 7, to fill the vacancy or number which Westminster once held before the creation of Carroll County, of which it formed a constituent part.

The district is in the southern portion of the county. Frederick and New Market Districts are on the north, New Market on the east, Montgomery County on the south, and Buckeystown on the west. The district was settled as early as 1730 by the Bealls, Murdoch, Cockeys, Worthingtons, Donalds, Duvalds, etc., who were followed by the Johnsons, McPhersons, Fearbakes, Rines, Brashears, Henrys, Mobertys, Simmons, Dioxes, and others. The first pioneers were of English origin, but afterwards many Germans came in.

Nathaniel Beall was among the first to locate, and married Ann Murdoch. Their son, Elisha Beall, was born in the district Jan. 4, 1745, and died Dec. 17, 1831. Elisha Beall’s first wife was Susanna Murdoch, by whom he had no children. His second wife was Jane Perry, of Montgomery County, by whom he had eleven children, to wit:

1. Mary, born July 21, 1784.
3. Eliza, born Aug. 15, 1787, died Nov. 28, 1840.
4. William Murdoch Beall, born March 16, 1789, died March 1818, was sheriff of the county.
5. Perry Wilson, born July 29, 1799, died Sept. 8, 1821.
6. Cassandra, born March 22, 1792, died Oct. 9, 1839.
11. Jane Margaret, born July 6, 1804, died Sept. 25, 1821.

Jane Beall, mother of above children, died Sept. 11, 1819. Of the above, George W. Beall is the only survivor. He married Caroline Cockey, a daughter of William Cockey, by his wife, a Miss Graft, of Green Spring Valley, Baltimore Co. George W. Beall was born on the old Beall homestead, where William Johnson now resides.

The old stone mansion was built about 1810 by his father, Elisha Beall, and took the place of the old log house built by Nathaniel Beall before 1744. Geo. W. Beall’s residence is a mile southwest of Ijamsville, and is on the survey called “Duvall’s Forest.”

Early Glass-Works.—In the Maryland Journal of May 22, 1789, appeared the following:

“The American Glass Manufactory at New Bremen.—

The subscriber having completed his glass manufactory near Frederick Town, State of Maryland, on an extensive plan, is now able to furnish Glass, not only sufficient for the Consumption of this State, but also in great Part for the neighbouring States. He makes Window-Glass transparent and substantial, equal to the London Crown, an inferior Quality equal to the Bristol Crown; all kinds of Flint Glass, such as Decanters and Wine Glasses; Tumblers of all Sizes, and any other Sort of Table Glass. He also cuts Devices, Cyphers, Coats of Arms, or any other Fancy Figures on Glass, and in a short time hopes to be able to furnish Looking-Glasses of all Sizes. He takes this opportunity of returning his hearty and sincere Thanks to a patriotic Public for the Encouragement he has received in giving a Preference to the American Manufactured Glass, and hopes by due Attention to merit a Continuance of their favor.

“For the Convenience of Gentlemen who wish to purchase Glass either by the small or large Quantities, the Subscriber has provided a Warehouse in Frederick Town for the Reception and sale of his Glass, of which he has a large Quantity of all kinds on hand, and has appointed Mr. Abraham Faw his Agent for the Sale thereof, who will dispose of the same as low as possible, in payment of which he will receive Cash, good Bills on Phila., or Balt., or will Barter for assorted Merchandise, either in the Dry or Wet Good Line, or any Kind of Country Produce, and if required, will deliver Glass at any of the Sea-Port Towns in this or the neighbouring States; and any Orders for Glass received by Mr. Faw will be punctually attended to and speedily executed by the Public’s obedient and humble servant,

“John Frederick Ameeling,”

“New Bremen, May 16, 1789.

“N.B.—The said Glass may also be had of Messrs. Thomas and Samuel Hollingsworth, Merchants, Balt.”

These works were on Bennett’s Creek, near “Park Mills.”

Urbana Village.—Sixty years ago where this pleasant village stands (near the centre of the district) there were but two buildings, “Zion” Protestant Episcopal church, and the tavern kept by John Rine, which was on the lot now occupied by Thomas Dixon. John Rine was born Feb. 16, 1786, and married Mary Rine, a daughter of Casper Rine, a tenant on the Johnson farm. She was born Aug. 11, 1787. John and Mary Rine’s daughter married William B. Dorsey, a son of Joshua Dorsey. The old Georgetown (D. C.) road passed through Urbana to Frederick. This village is three miles from Ijamsville and seven from Frederick. The merchants are Thomas A. Smith (postmaster) and J. J. Jamison & Sons; physician, Dr. E. E. Mullinix; millers, A. K. Simmons, Thomas Peters; saw-millers, G. Busard, J. C. Keller.
The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized and built in 1833, and its erection was mainly due to the efforts of Mrs. Richard Thompson, formerly a Miss Gore, of Freedom, Howard Co. It is a part of the Buckeystown Circuit, and the present pastor is Rev. D. M. Browning.

The Catholic Church was originally an outlying mission of St. John's Church at Frederick, but subsequently the present elegant and commodious edifice was erected. The congregation is very large and constantly increasing, many of its members coming for ten miles around to attend services.

Zion Parish.—Zion Protestant Episcopal Parish was organized in 1802 out of All Saints' Parish. The first vestrymen were elected April 2, 1802, viz.: William Brashear, Elisha Beall, Thomas Sprigg, John Montgomery, Roger Johnson, John H. Simmons, Adam Kramer, and George Kesler. The limits of this parish were not definitely fixed until April 2, 1804, at which time the following were made to constitute its metes and bounds, viz.: "Beginning with the mouth of the Monocacy and running with the Frederick County line to the plantation of the late Wm. McCoy; from thence to Clarksburg; thence with the Georgetown road to Little Seneca; thence up Little Seneca to its source; thence to the head of the three runs; thence to the waters of the Linganore, and with the waters of said creek to the month; and from thence down the Monocacy to its mouth." The present stone structure was commenced in 1802, and when completed was consecrated by Bishop Chaggett.

From 1832 to 1840 there was a parochial school. The rectors have been the following, viz.:

March 25, 1804.—John H. Reynolds; 1806, parish united with St. Peter’s.
1810.—Chandler; parish united with St. Mark's.
1812.—William Gibson, resigned 1815; parish united with St. Peter’s.

During the vacancy Charles Mann, a candidate for lay orders, acted as lay reader until 1817.

1818.—John Armstrong, resigned 1819; parish united with St. Peter’s.
1819.—Wm. Armstrong, resigned 1820 to go to England; parish united with St. Peter’s.
1820.—Spencer Wall, resigned 1821; parish united with St. Peter’s.
1821.—Wm. Armstrong, united 1822; parish united with St. Peter’s.
1832.—Mervin Allen, united 1833; parish united with St. Peter’s. Mr. Allen’s remains lay in the graveyard until 1850, when they were removed to Frederick, but the tombstone is still standing.
1833.—Bean; parish united with St. Peter’s.
Feb. 7, 1836.—Jos. Trapanell, resigned 1844; parish united with St. Peter’s.

March 22, 1844.—R. H. Phillips, resigned Feb. 8, 1817; parish united with St. Paul’s.
Sept. 1, 1847.—Joshua Peterkin, resigned September, 1849; father of the bishop of West Virginia.
March, 1851.—Am. S. Colton, resigned 1852; parish united with St. Peter’s.
September, 1854.—Wm. Armstrong, died April, 1857; buried in the graveyard.
October, 1857.—William Smallwood.
September, 1863.—W. F. M. Jacobs, resigned March 10, 1865.
Aug. 10, 1866.—Enoch Reed, resigned Sept. 2, 1866.
October, 1867.—James D. McCabe, resigned Aug. 16, 1873.
No date.—James Stephenson: parish united with New Market.

"Zion" Burying Ground.—This cemetery adjoins the church. In a remote portion of the ground is the grave of a Confederate soldier, marked only with a slate stone now nearly hidden from view, on which is scratched, in a primitive manner,

This officer was mortally wounded at the battle of Monocacy. By his side lies his comrade in arms, a Maj. Smith, of the same regiment, who was shot in a skirmish at Urbana just after the battle of Monocacy, and who died a few days later. Over his grave a neat marble stone has been erected by his friends, bearing the inscription,—

"Frederick F. Smith. Born at Ripley, Va. Died July 12, 1864."

At another place is a tombstone inscribed to

This stone is broken off at the word "of," but it is highly probable that Col. Montgomery participated in the Revolutionary war. His descendants are worthy and respected citizens of Urbana District. Another inscription reads as follows:

"Sacred to the memory of John Porter Sloan Born at Guiness near Ballynahinch County Down, Ireland. Died June 24, 1845, aged 42 yrs. As teacher of Urbana Primary School he was beloved by the children. As a citizen he was devoted to the Institutions of his adopted Country. Reared to both the profession of law and medicine with a mind of no ordinary cast he commanded the admiration of his friends and the respect of his enemies. By one who knew him well this small tribute is erected." Another stone bears an inscription to

"Rev. Wm. Armstrong, for 22 yrs rector of St. Matthew's parish.
Wheeling, W. Va., and 14 yrs. rector of Zion parish. He died April 1, 1857, aged 99."

Quite alone in one corner of the churchyard is a tombstone with a ship grave on it and the following inscription:

"Sacred to the memory of John S. Ordeman."

Mr. Ordeman is said to have been a brother of Capt. Herman D. Ordeman, of Frederick County, who commanded vessels.

Urbana Masonic Lodge.—Some time between the years 1790 and 1799 there was a Masonic lodge at "Fleecy Dale Factory," near the old "Glass-Works." The lodge meetings were held in a house kept by a Mr. Stanley as a tavern. This lodge is supposed to have been organized under the auspices of a John Frederick Amelung, an emigrant from the city of Bremen. Amelung came over to this country with two hundred German mechanics, as the agent of a company that commenced the manufacture of glass near Fleecy Dale. George Fearhake, the father of P. M. Adolphus Fearhake, Sr., was a member of this lodge, and came to this country in company with Mr. Amelung. A gentleman named Frew or Faw was the Master of the lodge. The records of this lodge cannot be found.

Iron Furnaces, Factories, etc.—In the southwestern part of the district, near the Monocacy, was the "Johnson Iron Furnace," built in 1774 by the four Johnson brothers,—Thomas, Baker, Roger, and James. This was in operation over a quarter of a century, and the remains of the establishment yet exist and show it to have been a very large furnace. On Bush Creek, in the northern part of the district, the Johnson brothers had a forge which was worked for many years. Extensive deposits of rich iron ore still exist in the district. During the Revolutionary era these furnaces were in active operation and proved of great benefit to the patriot cause, in behalf of which the Johnsons took a most active part in the field, in the cabinet, and in furnishing munitions of war for the Continental army.

Fountain Mills.—This place is situated near Bennett's Creek, two and a half miles from Monrovia. The large Price distillery is located here. The merchants are J. M. Davis (postmaster), Reuben Engle, and Samuel Hobbs. W. T. Turner and S. B. Davis run a flouring-mill, and Jonathan Jacobs has a carriage manufactory.

Park Mills.—This thriving point is on Bennett's Creek, three miles from Buckeystown, nine from Frederick, and sixty from Baltimore. A Methodist Episcopal Church, of Urbana Circuit, is located here. The merchants are Justus Martin (postmaster), S. H. Anderson, Brook Jamison, Moberly & Bro., Thomas Smith, and J. Sims. The other industries and professions are represented by Dr. E. E. Mullinix, physician; O. A. Millard, miller; Charles Dronenberg, D. M. Howard, John Moore, Horace Peters, blacksmiths.

Ijamsville.—This place was named after John Ijams, who owned the land on which the village was erected. It is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, nine miles from Frederick. Most of the village is in New Market District, which is separated from that of Urbana by the railroad track. The mills, T. L. Crawford's store, and the blacksmith-shops of David Case and J. C. Dronenberg are in the Urbana part.

The Ijamsville Flour-Mills, located at Ijamsville, have been in existence for nearly a century under various proprietors. John Ijams was the original owner, and formerly conducted the business. The mill passed into the ownership and control of Mr. McComas in 1874, and was considerably enlarged and improved. It is now furnished with two sets of burrs. The power is supplied by Bush Creek, on the banks of which the mill is situated. Mr. McComas' son has lately been made a member of the firm. With a capacity of twenty-four barrels per day, the mill not only furnishes the local trade, but its brand is well known in the Baltimore market. The finest grades of choice family flour are made at these mills. The proprietor, Mr. McComas, is one of the most influential and enterprising men in the district and county.

The "Araby" Mills, at Frederick Junction, were founded in 1830 by Col. J. McPherson, who sold them to Jas. Gambrill in 1856. Mr. Gambrill is a characteristic American merchant, active, thorough, and full of energy and vim. A native of Howard County, Md., he removed to Frederick in 1849, and soon obtained a place in the front rank of its merchants and manufacturers. Immediately on coming into possession of the mills he added many improvements. The mills now consist of two buildings. The machinery is run by two overshot water-wheels, with a maximum of thirty horse-power each. Six or eight cooper are employed at the mills, whose capacity is about sixty barrels of flour per day.

In 1878, with characteristic energy, Mr. Gambrill enlarged his business by the purchase of the Frederick City Mill, thus increasing his production to forty-five thousand barrels per annum. The latter mill, with five run of burrs, is situated near the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad line. The power used is a sixty horse-power steam-engine, and the machinery is not excelled in the State. The mill produces the finest and best flour that can be made, having the advantage not only of improved machinery but of the grain of Frederick County, than which there is no better in the world. The special brands which are most popular are the "Best Araby" and the "Unpassed." The increase of business at the Frederick Mills has been from fifty to sixty per cent. Mr. Gambrill has as his assistants in the business his two sons,Messrs. Richard and C. P. Gambrill.

Araby, sometimes called Frederick Junction, is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, three miles from Frederick. W. T. Mullinix is postmaster; F. B. Miller, assistant postmaster and dispatcher; W. T. Mullinix, railroad and express agent; Frank Mants, train superintendent; John O'Brien, railroad foreman; Charles Reach, merchant; J. E. Devilbiss, cooper; Harry Hartman, blacksmith; W. H. Kemp, carpenter; J. H. Gambrill, Thos. Kenna, and C. Stanley, millers.

The teachers for the year ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 13 pupils, M. Virginia Ryan; No. 2, 52 pupils, J. W. Dixon; No. 3, 58 pupils, Georgia D. England; No. 4, 31 pupils, W. R. Winchell; No. 5, 30 pupils, Louisa Dutrow; No. 6, 26 pupils, J. V. Silanse; No. 7, 48 pupils, J. H. Shipley, No. 1 (colored), 65 pupils, John H. Griffin; No. 2 (colored), 55 pupils, D. R. Hall.

The constables are Joseph Moberly, Francis Knott, and Isaac Davis.

In the southwestern portion of the district is the Sugar-Leaf Mountain, thirteen hundred feet in height. Bennett's Creek flows through the district from east to west, and the Monocacy River forms its western boundary. Bush Creek flows along the northern edge.

LIBERTY DISTRICT, No. 6.

Liberty, or District No. 6, originally had the following boundaries:

"Beginning at the fork of the Liberty and Annapolis road, and running down the old Annapolis road by Sheets' place and Hobbs' mill on the Linganore to a gate-post at the going into Dorsey's old quarter; thence east to the south branch of the Linganore; thence up said branch to Clary's mill; thence east to the Baltimore (now Carroll) County line; then with said line to the main branch of Sam's Creek; thence down it to Little Pipe Creek; thence down said creek to the mill formerly owned by Roop; thence with a straight line to Pine Tree, on the main road from Woodsborough to Liberty, and from said tree with a straight line to the beginning."

It is situated in the eastern portion of the county, and has Linganore District on the north and east, Woodville on the east, New Market on the south, and Mount Pleasant and Woodsborough on the west. Settlements were made in this district as early as 1732. "Gaither's Chance" of ten hundred and sixty-four acres was surveyed July 24, 1732, and "Hammond's Strife," of twelve hundred and thirty acres, Aug. 10, 1753. Among the earliest pioneers were the Howards, Dorseys, Upton Shererdine, Sollerses, John Wagner, the Hobbs, the Hammonds, Gaithers, John Young, Coales, Crabsters, Swadeners, Abram Jones, Clemsons, Thomas Warfield, Brashears, and Grafton Shererdine.

The Gaithers of Maryland came to America from Wales at a very early period. William Gaither, born Feb. 15, 1745, was an early settler in Montgomery County, and soon after that year purchased a tract of land in Frederick County called "Pleasant Fields," which is now the home and property of his grandson, Henry Chew Gaither. William Gaither married Elizabeth Davis, who was born Nov. 21, 1745. Mrs. Gaither resided before her marriage at "Greenwood," the family-seat of the Davises, and now the property of her grandson, Hon. A. Bowie Davis. After her marriage William Gaither removed to "Pleasant Fields," proposing to reside there permanently, but a short stay convinced him that he liked it less than he had expected, and accordingly he returned to Montgomery County, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying there May 1, 1804. His son, William, Jr., decided, on his father's return to Montgomery, to remain on the Frederick County farm, and continued to reside there. In the troubles growing out of the political agitation preceding the war of 1812, William Gaither, Jr., warmly espoused the cause of the anti-war party, and assisted Alexander Contee Hanson, Gen. Henry Lee, Gen. Lingan, and others in the defense of the Federal Republican office at Baltimore against the mob which afterwards broke into the Baltimore jail, killed Gen. Lingan, and maltreated Lee, Hanson, and others. On this occasion Mr. Gaither was seriously injured, and was left as being dead in the street. In order to satisfy himself that life was extinct, one of the rioters thrust a knife into his hand, and finding that he gave no sign of life abandoned him for some other victim. Mr. Gaither was finally rescued by friends, and after a tedious illness recovered. On becoming convalescent he returned to "Pleasant Fields," and spent the rest of his life there as a planter and farmer. He died suddenly on the 10th of April, 1834, and his widow died on the 29th of March, 1844. William Gaither, Jr., was one of eleven children,—seven daughters and four sons,—and was born Oct. 12, 1789. His wife (born April 22, 1796) was Margaret Ann, daughter of John Dorsey, whose ancestors were among the earliest settlers of that portion of Anne Arundel now known as Howard County. Their children were seven in number,—five sons and two daughters,—of whom one daughter and three sons are living. The latter are Henry C., John D., and George. Henry Chew Gaither, brother of William Gaither, Sr., was a colonel in the Revolutionary war, and was distinguished for his courage and patriotism. The small sum which he received in coin on account of his pay he had melted down and made into a large silver cup, on which was inscribed the history of its origin.

Henry C. Gaither, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, is the son of William Gaither, Jr., and the great-nephew of Col. Henry C. Gaither. He was born on the homestead Feb. 19, 1824, and was educated in part at the Brookville Academy, and completed his studies at the academy at Frederick. He then engaged in agricultural pursuits, in which he has continued ever since. Mr. Gaither has been eminently successful in his business, and in private life is one of the quietest, most unassuming, and kindliest of gentlemen. He is a man of great moral and social force, an intelligent observer of men and things, and a potent factor for good in his community. Mr. Gaither attached himself to the Methodist communion quite early in life, and about the beginning of the late civil war became a member of the Methodist Church South. He was a stanch Whig as long as the Whig party remained in existence, and when it became extinct transferred his allegiance to the Democracy, to whom he has ever since adhered. On the 18th of May, 1852, he married Juliet E., daughter of Ephraim H. Maynard, of Frederick County, a descendant of one of Maryland's oldest families. Juliet E. Maynard was born Aug. 28, 1830. Ephraim H. Maynard was born May 29, 1794, at the Maynard homestead, in the vicinity of "Pleasant Fields," where he lived and died. Mr. Gaither's mother, Juliet Higgins, born Oct. 3, 1803, was a daughter of Rev. James Lee Higgins, and her grandmother was Sophia Dorsey, afterwards Mrs. Sheredine. Her great-grandfather was Henry Maynard, who married Eleanor Howard.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Gaither's children have been William Maynard Gaither, Juliet Elizabeth, now Mrs. Henry Norris, Margaret Anne Gaither, Richard Dorsey Gaither, lately deceased, Clara Gaither, Henry Chew Gaither, Jr., Thomas Hodgekiss Gaither, and Emma Maynard Gaither. Among Mr. Gaither's prized possessions is the silver goblet made of Revolutionary coin which Col. Henry C. Gaither left as an heirloom to the member of the family who should bear his name. One of Mr. Gaither's sons is also named Henry Chew, as stated above, and to him the goblet will be transmitted in accordance with Col. Gaither's wish.

Mr. Gaither's eldest brother, John D., was a member of the Maryland Constitutional Convention of 1851, being associated with the Hon. William Cost Johnson and ex-Governor Francis Thomas. The Gaither family is one of the most influential and refined in Western Maryland, and the old homestead, "Pleasant Fields," continues in the present, as in the past, to dispense a generous and charming hospitality. Mr. Gaither owns two fine farms, aggregating three hundred and fifty acres, and at one time was reckoned among the most extensive tobacco-growers of the county.

Liberty District at a very early period was strongly Federal in politics, and afterwards the Whigs had a preponderance of three to one of the votes. During the Revolutionary war, and for a long time afterwards, it was the largest slave-holding district of the county. On Dec. 18, 1760, "The Fountain Copper-Mines," the first discovered in Maryland, were successfully carried on.

The following notice appeared at the above date:

"Whereas Captain John Thompson and William Tipple each hold a part in the said mines in Frederick County, and as the same is now carried on by the said owners of the said mines, therefore, agreeable to articles, the said Thompson and Tipple are hereby requested to pay their arrears to our manager, Herman Husband, on the premises, without delay.

"By order of the Company.

"Herman Husband."

On the 20th of November, 1765, a copartnership was entered into by Stephen Richards and John Stevenson, to raise copper ore from a tract of land of Stevenson's, called "Spring Garden," lying in Frederick County, under certain stipulations set forth in the agreement, to which Upton Sheredine and Christopher Carman were witnesses. James Smith was appointed manager, and having hired some hands, soon got to work, but with very little success until the year 1767, when some ore was shipped to London. On Aug. 17, 1779, an advertisement appeared in the newspapers stating that a plantation in Frederick County known as "Stevenson's Copper-Mine" was for rent, and that applications should be made at the "Deer Park" to John Stevenson. A vein of copper was discovered Nov. 4, 1837, on the lands of William C. Hobbs, between Liberty and New Market, which was worked by Isaac Tyson, Jr. In June, 1839, a rich and valuable copper-mine was opened on the land of Gen. James M. Coale.
In 1864 the following prospectus of the "Liberty Copper Mines" appeared:

"It is proposed to reopen the 'Liberty Copper-Mines,' situated in Frederick County, Maryland. These mines were formerly worked by Messrs. Evan T. Ellicott and the late Isaac Tyson, Jr. The smelting-furnace erected on these premises was a sufficient assurance that the mines were of no ordinary richness in their yield of ore, yet the stagnation in all manufacturing enterprises at the time (1839), together with the low price of copper, then 17 cents (now 42 cents), the great difficulty and expense of transportation to a distant market, more than forty miles over country roads (now six miles to railroad), compelled them to abandon these works. The late Isaac Tyson, Jr., one of the most sagacious and successful mining men in this country, always regarded these mines as of great value. His executors have been induced to dispose of this property for the purpose of reopening and mining, on condition of their retaining a large interest in the same. The property of the company, independent of the $30,000 cash working capital, consists of about fifty acres of mineral land in fee, and the mineral rights to fee to about five hundred acres adjoining, the engine-house, furnaces, the allt or funnel, more than half a mile in length, which drains the mines to the depth of sixty feet, and is said to have cost upwards of $40,000 to construct, together with thousands of dollars' worth of ores now on the surface, all go with the mines. The great peculiarity of this property consists of an immense and, from appearances, almost inexhaustible deposit of a black mineral earth, covering about thirteen acres, and containing more or less copper. But the shaft which is said to lead to the deposit of rich sulphorates, which, from testimony taken on the ground, is believed to exist at the depth of one hundred feet below the surface, will be at once reopened (samples of which, and also of the mineral earth, are seen at the counting-room of the undersigned), and should it but half realize what tradition assigns to it, will place these mines among the most profitable in this country.

"Gilmore Sleeve & Whitridge,
No. 61 Second Street, Baltimore."

These mines, now called "The Maryland Copper-Mines," are in full operation, and are owned by Pope & Cole, of Baltimore. Capt. Samuel Hoskins is the superintendent. On them are large "Mill Concentrating Works." They lie two and a half miles from Liberty, the same distance from Johns ville, and three and a half from Woodborough.

The old "Dollyhite Copper-Mills," just east of Liberty, have not been worked for many years, and the zinc-mines in the same neighborhood are not now in operation.

Among the most successful agriculturists of this beautiful country is Edward Hobbs, who was born at the "Downey" homestead, on property inherited by his mother, on July 4, 1838. The Downey homestead is in Liberty District, about a mile and a half northeast of New London, Frederick Co. The homestead of Edward Hobbs is called "Oakland," and his adjacent properties are "Spring Garden" and "Black Castle." His father, William Hobbs, was born Dec. 6, 1793, and died Sept. 15, 1871, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Laura Dorsey, near New Market. He was born at a homestead known as "White House," on Parr's Ridge, near Mount Airy. The mother of Edward Hobbs was Susan Dorsey, who was born at Drummie, a homestead near the village of New London, Nov. 26, 1804, and died in New Market, Sept. 10, 1861.

William Hobbs, Jr., father of Edward Hobbs, was a son of William Hobbs, Sr., who was a son of Samuel Hobbs, one of three brothers who settled near Mount Airy. William Hobbs, Sr., was the first superintending school commissioner of Frederick County. He married twice,—by the first wife there was no issue; by the second wife, who was a daughter of the Hon. Basil Dorsey, then on the bench for Frederick County, he had six children, of whom William Hobbs, Jr., the father of Edward, was the youngest son. William Hobbs, Jr., was a gentleman of liberal education, and was not only conversant with the literature of the day, but was a ripe historical scholar. He commenced life in Baltimore as a dealer in tobacco, and was an intimate personal friend of Mr. Peabody and the Riggins. His health compelled him to return to the country, where he engaged in agriculture with very great success. He studiously avoided politics, although a man of pronounced principles.

Susan Hobbs, the mother of Edward Hobbs, was the daughter of Evan Dorsey and Susannah Lawrence. She was a lady of great refinement and culture. Added to her great sweetness of disposition, her constant charities made her greatly beloved.

Edward Hobbs, the subject of this sketch, was the fifth son of William Hobbs, Jr. At an early age he evinced a special fondness for agricultural pursuits. Having completed the ordinary course of mental training afforded by the system of primary schools, he completed a liberal course of studies at Calvert College. Upon his return from college he immediately entered upon an agricultural life. He had a natural fondness for the chase, an inherited trait of character, and for years he kept a fine pack of hounds. With this single diversion he has permitted nothing to interfere with his agricultural pursuits. He is a man of restless and indomitable energy, of quick intelligence and observation, and stands to-day in the very front rank of agriculturists in this part of the State. He has always taken the liveliest interest in all schemes looking to the advancement of agriculture, and for years has been prominently connected with the Agricultural Society of Frederick County.

Though a very decided Democrat, he has had neither the leisure nor the inclination to engage in political life, his time being thoroughly occupied in Looking after his handsome estate, and with such other considerations as might tend to advance the agricultural interests of the State. He is unmarried.

Liberty Town. — "Duke's Woods" was surveyed Aug. 29, 1739, and contained six hundred and thirty-three acres. On it Liberty Town was laid out by John Young, June 13, 1782. The plat consisted of two hundred and forty-six lots, each fifty by three hundred feet. All the lots between Nos. 47 and 69, inclusive, belonged to John Cochran, to whom Mr. Young had sold them as land before the town was laid out. Mr. Young sold these lots at eight dollars each, subject to a yearly ground-rent of one dollar, with the condition that each purchaser should build a house within two years or forfeit his lot. There are four principal streets,—Main and North, running east and west, and Walnut and Sycamore, north and south. John Young died without any family, and left all his estate by will to Richard Coale, who died in 1834. Of Richard Coale's three children, Richard, Dr. William, and Gen. James M. Coale, the latter only is living. He is an attorney-at-law, and is reputed to be the wealthiest man in the county. He has never married.

Ellihu H. Rockwell was born in Middletown, Conn., July 15, 1790. In 1814 he came to Mount Pleasant, where on May 14th he began teaching school, in which he continued until November, 1820, when he removed to Liberty Town. He was sent to Frederick County by the father of Bishop Huntington. He taught at Liberty from November, 1820, to April, 1824, and was then for two years engaged in surveying. He then taught from April, 1826, to June, 1837, when he was appointed county surveyor. He removed to Frederick City in 1855, where he now resides in his ninety-second year, a hale and vigorous old man. He was married in July, 1837, to Mrs. Rachel Wiestling, widow of Rev. J. H. Wiestling.

Liberty District was in early days called, in common parlance, "Little Britain," a name given it in derision by the opponents of the Federalists, then largely in the majority. The three oldest persons living who were born in the town are Basil Swedner, his brother, and Richard Galliver. One of the oldest houses is that of Basil Swedner, built by Filley Markman. The earliest store-keepers were Abram Crabster, Abram Jones, Thomas Sappington, Henry Stevenson, and David Fount. Among the first tavern-keepers were John M. Daniel, Enoch Taylor, and John Prinkman. On May 15, 1807, John Ringland, formerly of Frederick, removed to Liberty and opened a tavern at the noted tavern-stand where Jacob Kiler lived. In 1819, Samuel Merritt kept the "Indian King" at the old stand previously occupied by William Myers. Of the earliest mechanics there are remembered Henry Swedner, Mahlon Davis, and Mr. Bowhorn. Dr. Sappington practiced from 1775 to about 1815, and was succeeded by Dr. John Dorsey. Among the old-time preachers are Rev. Daniel Reese and Rev. Reynolds. The pioneer schoolmasters were Crosby, Joseph Penn, and Elihu H. Rockwell. In the year 1821 the Catholic church was erected, and Rev. Father Malevie, the priest at Frederick, was the first to hold services. The lot on which it was erected was presented by Richard Coale. A few years ago the old building was torn down and a new one built, at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars, by Gen. James M. Coale, who bore all the expense. "Lovers' Rock Graveyard," near the town, has a tradition that under the rock, long years ago, an old woman used to live, and on Horse-Head Rock, high in the air, is seen one of nature's most singular freaks, a perfect image of a horse set in the rock. "Fairview Cemetery" is one of the most tasteful and best-kept burying-grounds in the county. A Mr. Glissan gave the land for "Lovers' Rock Graveyard," and was buried in the solid rock, which was hollowed out for his tomb.

"Banner of Liberty."—In 1851, Alfred Schley, son of David Schley, started the Banner of Liberty at Liberty Town. He was not long connected with the establishment. It went into the hands of J. S. L. Roderick, by whom it is now conducted. The Banner is a newsy local paper, Republican in politics, and is conducted with marked skill and ability. It is in a flourishing condition. Mr. Roderick was postmaster from 1869 to 1880, when Edward Mitchell was appointed.

Another of the old families who emigrated to this district at an early period were the Clemsons. John Clemson, the present honorable representative of the family, was born July 17, 1826, upon the old Clemson estate, in Frederick County, known as "Ashmead," which Mr. Clemson still owns and occupies. His paternal grandfather, a veteran of the war of 1776, moved from Lancaster County, Pa., about 1775, to the present Clemson farm, and by various purchases speedily became possessed of one thousand acres in one tract. Upon that place he had his home ever after, dying at the age of ninety in 1846. His wife was a daughter of Mr. Haines, of Frederick County.

One of Mr. Clemson's nephews was Col. Clemson, of the war of 1812. Another nephew, Thomas Clemson, married one of John C. Calhoun's daughters, and was at one time chargé d'affaires at Belgium.

John Clemson had seven children, of whom John, Jr., was born on the homestead, Feb. 12, 1789. He "CLEMMONT"
Residence of JOHN CLEMSON Johnsville Dist., Frederick Co., Md.
was a lifelong farmer, and died Jan. 10, 1860. He married Sophia, daughter of Thomas Price, of Baltimore County. She was born in Baltimore County, Dec. 5, 1798, and died April 13, 1872. Their children were two in number, of whom the only one cut regiment, was complimented by the Governor of Connecticut with the present of full side-arm equipments, in recognition of the fact that he (Cross) was the only Southern man in the command. Mrs. Clemson's grandfather, Col. Bartholomew Von Schauburg, came from England as one of the Hessians in the British army in 1776, but upon reaching America, and satisfying himself as to the merits of the conflict, went over to Washington's army, and was by Washington commissioned a lieutenant. He rose to be a colonel, and served with much gallantry through the campaign. Another of Mrs. Clemson's ancestors, Lt. Joseph Cross, took part as an officer on board the frigate "Constitution" in the fight maintained by that vessel against the "Guerriere," and for his heroic services on that occasion was presented by the Legislature of Maryland with a sword, now in the possession of Miss Elizabeth Cross, of Baltimore.

In 1857, Mr. Clemson engaged in business in Alexandria as miller and distiller. He continued therein until the outbreak of hostilities in 1861 forced him to abandon his undertakings in that section and despoiled him of all his possessions there. In 1861 he returned to his farm in Frederick County, and since then has made it his home.

The old manor-house is a fine specimen of substantial stone architecture. Its walls are fully three feet in thickness, and although the structure is approaching its hundredth year, it seems, in its strength and solidity, likely to last another hundred years. Like the old-time mansion-houses, its apartments are roomy and sturdily embellished. A spirit of broad hospitality dwells within its ample recesses, and good cheer is mutely heralded in all its surroundings. Of Mr. Clemson's five children four are living. His political faith has always found him with the Democracy. Although trained in the Episcopal Church, he became a Catholic during his term at Mount St. Mary's College, and has thus since remained.

The school-teachers for the year ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 127 pupils, G. M. Thomas, teacher; Ada Roederick, first assistant; S. Spurrier, second assistant; No. 2, 51 pupils, Mollie A. Biggers. No. 1 (colored), 55 pupils, J. A. Low.

The fine brick school building at Liberty was erected in 1878, at a cost of some $5000.

The magistrates for the district are John E. Unkefever and Sidney Sappington.

Lafayette Lodge, No. 79, A. F. and A. M., was chartered in 1823, and was last represented in the Grand Lodge in May, 1831. Gen. Anthony Kimmel was at one time one of its active members.
Churches.—Before 1860, when Liberty Circuit was created, the Methodist Protestant Church was a part of the Pipe Creek Circuit.

Its pastors since 1860 have been:

Rev. William H. Koontz is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"Dollyhide" Creek was named in honor of Miss Dolly Hide, daughter of an early settler named Hide, whose lands embraced two surveys,—"Hide and Seek" and "I Spy."

NEW MARKET DISTRICT, No. 9.

New Market, or Election District No. 9, has the following boundaries:

"Beginning at the fork on Monocacy where the main road crosses from Frederick to Georgetown; thence with the Monocacy to the mouth of Israel's Creek; then up said creek to the road leading from Frederick to Liberty; then with the said road to the old Annapolis road; then with the said road by Shields' place and Hobbs' mill, on Linganore, to a gate-post at the going into Dorsey's old quarter; thence east to the south branch of Linganore; thence up Linganore to Carey's mill; thence east to the Baltimore County line; thence with said line to Parr's aforesaid main road, passing from Frederick Town to Georgetown; thence with said road to the beginning."

The district was taken from Liberty District. As now constituted it has Mount Pleasant and Liberty Districts on the north, Woodville on the east, Montgomery County and Urbana on the south and west, and Frederick and Mount Pleasant on the west. It is situated in the southeastern portion of the county. The Linganore Creek runs along the northern and the Monocacy along the western edge. The villages are New Market, Ijamsville, Bartonville, New London, and Kemptown.

Among the earliest settlers were the Dorseys, Hammonds, Plummer, Halls, Ballengers, Brushers, Howards, Shipleys, Owens, Maynards, Norris, Johnsons, Griffiths, Poultenes, Jameses, Hobbes, Burketts (Burchards), Moberlys, and Hollands.

The Griffiths, who figure so prominently in the history of Western Maryland, were among the first settlers in the county. Lebbeus Griffith, Sr., who lives in this district, is the lineal descendant of the first settler. He has been a lifelong farmer of Frederick County and a widely-esteemed citizen. He was born in Montgomery County, Feb. 11, 1804. There also was his father, Howard Griffith, born in 1757, and there died Jan. 4, 1834. Lebbeus Griffith's grandfather was one of Montgomery County's pioneers. Howard Griffith was married in 1782 to Jenima, daughter of Mordecai Jacobs, of Prince George's County; she died Jan. 21, 1831. They had nine children. The only one living is Lebbeus Griffith, Sr., of Frederick County. He came to Frederick County in 1827, and married Mary Ellen, daughter of Philemon Griffith, a pioneer in Prince George's County, but then a dweller on the place now owned by Lebbeus Griffith, Sr. On that farm Philemon Griffith died in 1839, aged eighty-two. By his marriage with Miss Griffith, Lebbeus Griffith had three children; two of them are living, June 30, 1855, Mr. Griffith's wife died. March 5, 1859, he married a second time, taking to wife Sarah Ann, daughter of Rev. John Wood, a native of Frederick County. By this second marriage there were six children; of them only one son and two daughters are living. The second Mrs. Griffith died Jan. 29, 1853; and Jan. 26, 1858, Mr. Griffith married his present wife, Ruth S., daughter of Seth W. Warfield, of Howard County, where he was born, as well as was his father before him. Eight children blessed the third union, and of the eight the living number five, three sons and two daughters. Mr. Griffith is therefore, as has been seen, the father of ten living children, of whom six reside in Frederick County. Three of Lebbeus Griffith's brothers, Mordecai, Howard, and Greenberry, fought on the Federal side in the campaign of 1812. His first wife's father, Philemon Griff-
FREDERICK COUNTY.

605

Sixth, was one of Washington's soldiers in the Revolution, and being taken prisoner by the British on Long Island was kept in confinement twelve months.  Mr. Griffith has been a farmer from his youth up, and in the manifold cares consequent upon his arduous labors as a tiller of the soil has had but little inclination and less time to mingle in political strife or office-seeking, although he was for two years a valued and useful member of the board of county commissioners.  In politics he has always been an unflinching Democrat.  During the war he held himself aloof from advocacy of either side of the question, and in common with many others was compelled to endure such spoliations of property at the hands of Federalists and Confederates alike.  In religion he has always been a Baptist.  For upwards of thirty years he has been an honored and prominent member of Fidelity Lodge, No. 154, I. O. O. F., of New Market.

The first tract of land patented in Liberty District was granted by Lord Baltimore in 1743 to John Dorsey, Jr., father of Basil and Samuel Dorsey.  The first house built was erected for Basil Dorsey by a carpenter named McElfresh, and is still standing, having been remodeled, and is the residence of John T. Meredith.  The descendants of many of the first settlers are yet remaining in the district, and several of them own the lands granted to their ancestors.  Among the soldiers of the Revolution who achieved distinction were Col. Philemon H. Griffith, Green Tree, Holland, and several of the Hammonds and Dorseys.  In an old graveyard on the farm of Mr. Quynn lies Nathan T. Hammond, buried in 1754.  The first mill for grinding flour was built by Anthony Poulney, and is on the site of the mill now owned by John D. Shearer, at Monrovia.  Benjamin Johnson operated a glass manufactory on the property now owned by Messrs. Ramsbaugh, Detrick, & Sinn.  The material for manufacturing the glass was procured on the land.  The first tannery was that of a Mr. Garrison.  Anthony Poulney conducted a button-factory, where were made metal and bone buttons.  The first settlers lived in liberal style, many of them owning one and two hundred slaves, black and white.  The district is separated from that of Mount Pleasant by Linganore Creek, named after an old Indian chief, the last of his tribe, who lived and died on its bank.  The word Linganore means "left ear," and signifies the left ear of the Potomac, as the Monocacy does the "right ear."  The other streams are Bush Creek and Ben's Branch.  The New London flour-mill was built in 1804 by Evan Dorsey, and is on Ben's Branch.  The Linganore mills were erected about the first of the century by a Scotchman named Robinson, who was afterwards killed by being thrown from his buggy.  Delashmutt's mill, on Bush Creek, was built by a Mr. Reel.  Upton Sheredine, the representative of this congressional district in Congress, married a daughter of Basil Dorsey, Sr., and died in 1800 without issue.  He took a very active part in the war of the Revolution, and was buried near Liberty, on the farm of Luther Welch.  John Dorsey, Jr., entered a tract of over six hundred acres of land, called "Dorsey's Search," and the Hammonds a large tract on what is called Long Branch.  About 1780 there was an emigration to this district from Wrightsville, Pa., of the families of Davis, Wright, and others.  During the "Whisky Insurrection" of 1794 the insurgents planted a "liberty pole" at Hagerstown, which was fearlessly cut down by a Revolutionary soldier, John Downey.  Mr. Downey was going from his home, near Charlestown, Va., to a farm he owned in Franklin Co., Pa., and stopping at dinner in Hagerstown, observed the pole, and boldly, in the presence of those who had put it up, he cut it down, saying "he had fought through the war for independence, and now that it was secured he would not countenance any rebellion to the laws."  He came out of the Revolution as a captain, having enlisted in his sixteenth year.  He was one of the guard to escort to Frederick Town the Hessian prisoners captured by Washington at Trenton, N. J.  His son William settled in New Market in 1814.  The latter married a daughter of Basil Downey, and was the father of William Downey, the present large land-owner in the district.  Before settling in New Market he had graduated at Princeton College, where he was a room and classmate of John J. Crittenden, and he subsequently read law with the distinguished Henry St. George Tucker, of Virginia.  John James, prominent among the first settlers, entered large tracts of land on the head-waters of Ben's Branch and Linganore, and his granddaughter became the wife of the noted "Linganore Farmer," and one of Maryland's ablest men, Gen. Anthony Kimmel.  In the war of 1812, Capt. Basil Dorsey commanded a company, with Benjamin Wright and a Mr. Hamilton as his lieutenants.  About 1750 to 1770, William Hobbs was one of the leading men, and was popularly called "King Billy, king of the Convicts."  He received this sobriquet from the fact of his constantly going to all the vessels arriving from the mother-country with transported convicts on board.  These convicts were sold for a term of years, and Mr. Hobbs bought numbers of them, as also a number of "redemptioners."  He thus secured his schoolmaster, shoemaker, blacksmith, tailor, fuller, wheelwright, carpenter, scrivener, etc. New Market continued up to the war of 1861–65 a very large slaveholding district, and next to Frederick has the largest population of any district in the county.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

The last tract of land taken up and patented in the district was that of "Pleasant Valley," which was very heavily wooded. For this reason it was passed over by the pioneers, who sought land more easily cleared up. The first persons in the county to use lime for agricultural purposes were Basil Downey and Maj. S. P. James. In 1838 the real estate of Mrs. Cordelia H. Downey, consisting of two thousand three hundred and seventeen acres and twenty-four poles, was divided into six parts. These lands embraced parts or all of the surveys called "Peace and Plenty," "Resin Shipley's Discovery," Resurvey of "Darby's Delight," "Dorsey's Search," "Omission," "Good Meadow," "The Middle," "Well Timbered," "Outland," "Pleasant Valley," "Moab," "Hall's Choice," "Shingle Timber," "Hunting Lot" (granted to John Howard, of Gideon, Feb. 16, 1745), "Drummire" (granted to Basil Dorse, Sr., May 18, 1798). "Darby's Delight" originally belonged to Joshua Waddington, of New York. Basil Dorse, Sr., father of Cordelia H. Downey (formerly Dorse), died in 1800. The dwelling—one and a half miles east of the town, in sight of the Baltimore and Frederick turnpike and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and owned by the heirs of H. W. Dorse Waters—was built on a very high hill by Mr. McElfresh, the maternal ancestor of the Trails and Kunkels.

Nearly seventy-three years ago Eli Davis, now of this district, was born, in New Market District, Frederick Co., Nov. 5, 1809. His father, George Davis, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., Feb. 3, 1775, and removing while yet a young man to Montgomery County, Md., he engaged in mercantile business at Hyattstown, and from that place enlisted for the war of 1812. There he married Elizabeth, daughter of Eli Hyatt, and upon his marriage bought and made his home upon a farm in New Market District. He died May 10, 1850, upon the present Eli Davis' place. His widow died May 13, 1855. Of their twelve children eight are living,—four sons and four daughters. Eli Davis was the second son. His school education was gained in rural temples of learning. Aug. 18, 1831, he was married in Clarksburg, Montgomery Co., to Rachel, daughter of William Morsell, a member of the Society of Friends, and a native of Frederick County. Mr. Morsell was born on the present Eli Davis home farm April 13, 1778, and died there May 17, 1846. His father, William, came from Calvert County to Frederick County before the opening of the Revolution. Mr. Davis' marriage with Miss Morsell was a little romantic. The young pair conceived the notion that their marriage would be opposed by parental authority, and so they, deciding to brook no obstacle to their happiness, walked away to Clarksburg one fine morning and were wedded. As it happened they misjudged parental authority, and might have been married with numberless fatherly and motherly blessings had they but spoken out. The worthy old couple tell with much enjoyable zest the story of their elopement, and the trouble they might have saved themselves if they had been more trustful toward the old folks. Mrs. Davis was her father's only child, and upon his death inherited a considerable estate, which upon her marriage she deeded to her husband. He has added to the property, and ranks now among the large landholders of the county, his farming lands aggregating about eleven hundred acres. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have had eleven children,—nine sons and two daughters. Two of the sons and the two daughters are dead. Five of the living sons now occupy and work as many of their father's farms. Mr. Davis was bred a Baptist, but for many years has been a member of the Protestant Methodist Church. He has never taken part in public life, never served on a jury, and has ever given his closest attention to his agricultural duties. He has now, however, retired from active participation in the conduct of his farms, since he can count safely upon his sons' prudent care and management thereof. He was an old-line Whig. When the war came on he joined the Democracy, of whose principles he is a sterling advocate. During the war he occupied strictly neutral ground. Besides his farms he owns the Fountain mills property, earlier owned by William Mor- sell, in which he labored in his younger days.

Where the Monrovia mills are now located was once the seat of a woolen factory. George Burkett was a very early pioneer and very wealthy. He entered a great body of land, one survey of which was called "Peace and Plenty." When a member of the General Assembly at Annapolis, while at a party to which he had been invited, he was about to relate the fact of his having raised that year twenty-five hundred bushels of wheat, but having incidentally learned that Col. Lloyd, a member from the Eastern Shore, had produced twenty-five thousand bushels, he kept quiet, and did not tell of his prodigious feat.

Rachel Plummer, who resides in the village, is a lineal descendant of Samuel Plummer, who took out his patent for land in this district from Thomas Bladen, Governor of the province, on June 17, 1743. Samuel Plummer died suddenly in Prince George's County, and was found by one of his slaves sitting under a tree dead. Soon after his widow and children removed to Frederick County. His will, executed Jan. 13, 1754, devised his Frederick County lands as follows: to his eldest son, Thomas, "Hunting Lot," two hundred and twenty-six acres on Linganore; to his second son, Joseph, one hundred and eighty-seven acres on Bush Creek; to his third son, Samuel, "Food Plenty" and "Rocky Hill," of three hundred and eighteen acres, on Bush Creek; to his son Abraham, two hundred acres, part of "Hickory Plains," on Bush Creek; to his daughter Cassandra Ballinger, two hundred acres, of "Hickory Plains," on Bush Creek; to his daughter Sarah, one hundred and fifty-four acres, part of "Hickory Plains" and "Help," to his son-in-law, Richard Holland, one hundred and ninety-eight acres, called "Rich Hill." Samuel Plummer had twelve children, and owned other lands in Frederick County besides the tracts above given. In 1747 the heirs of Samuel Plummer gave four acres to the Society of Friends (Quakers) for the erection of a meeting-house, which was immediately built of logs. The old log structure was taken down and replaced by the present edifice in 1852, on the same lot. It is situated near the railroad depot at Monrovia. The Plummers were Friends, and during the Revolutionary war suffered much from their adherence to their ancient principles. On one occasion the family was visited by British soldiers who took almost all the necessities of life from them, but providentially for the family missed a roll of linsey just taken from the loom and placed behind the door. Thus the family soon converted into blankets, as the weather was very cold. Samuel Plummer was a large slave-holder, and his children retained their slaves until a rule was passed in their Society commanding all members to liberate them. The early proprietors were wealthy men who passed their time in fishing and hunting, as the streams abounded in trout and the forest in game.

John T. Williams, of this district, also ranks among the leading and most successful farmers of Frederick County. He was born in Urbana District, Dec. 23, 1825, where also his father, William A., was born in 1788, and died 1854. The ancestors of Mr. Williams came from England, and, as can be best ascertained, his grandfather, John Williams, was the pioneer of the name in Frederick County. Mr. Williams' maternal grandfather was James Hood, a native of what is now Howard County, as was his father before him. William A. Williams' wife (mother of John T. Williams) died in 1856, aged sixty-two. They had six children, and of them five are yet living. The book education acquired by John T. Williams was such as he obtained at the district school, and the practical training in life a useful and substantial experience upon his father's farm under his father's tuition. That his instruction yielded ample and profitable results his subsequent history and present station have abundantly testified. Oct. 27, 1853, he married Jane Elizabeth, daughter of Charles and Eleanor Hendry, of Frederick County. Mr. Hendry was a native of Virginia, where his ancestors were among the founders of the country. Mr. Hendry died in Frederick County in 1877. His widow is still living. Of Mr. Williams' six children, five survive—two sons and three daughters. Anthony K. (a son) occupies and manages one of his father's farms. The other children reside under the parental roof. Mr. Williams owns three farms and a null property. Aside from a few years' experience as a silent partner in a mercantile house at Ijamsville, his attention has been exclusively devoted during life to his large agricultural interests. Those interests have fully occupied his time, and although county school commissioner in 1879-71, he has otherwise rigidly held himself aloof from participation in political or public life. Indeed, had he had even such inclination he esteemed his private business of too much value to neglect for other issues. In religious convictions he has always been a supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Early in life he was a Whig. The war made him a Democrat. At the outbreak of hostilities he was a pronounced Union man, but circumstances forced him to espouse the Confederate cause, and, as a consequence, he was called upon to suffer the loss of much property.

New Market.—The following advertisement appeared in the Maryland newspapers of the spring of 1788:

"Laid out for a Town, to be called New Market, on Public road. Gradling from Frederick Town to Baltimore about 9 miles from Frederick: Two principal streets in the Town are 66 ft., the other 50 ft. wide, three others 33 ft. wide. Lots are 66 ft. front, 165 feet back. There is reserved a lot of ground for a Market House and a church."

"The lots are to be sold by Nicholas Hall, living near Premises. Lots bounding on Main st. will be sold for 33 current money each. The lots back at Forty Shillings each; all subject to an annual ground rent of 5 shillings, to commence May 5, 1788."

It is supposed that this sale failed to be a success, as the town was really laid out June 1, 1793, by said Nicholas Hall, when the lots were leased for sixty-six and two-thirds cents each, with the privilege of buying the fee at any time. It has been asserted that William Plummer, in conjunction with said Hall, laid out the town in 1792, but the authority for this statement is not given. Rachel Plummer, the daughter of William, granddaughter of Thomas, and great-granddaughter of Samuel Plummer, the patentee and early settler, resides now in the house built by her father in 1790, before the town was laid out, it being then William Plummer’s farm-house, and being in that part of the town known as “Plummer’s part” of “New Market Plains.” In 1830, Rachel Plummer sold the farm, which had never been out of the possession of the family, but reserved the dwelling and lot on which she lives.

The first house built in the village was put up by George Smith, a German, and was used for a tavern. It was located on the lot where Rev. Jesse Shreve now lives, and is still standing, and in good repair for a frame structure. Several of Smith’s descendants still live in the district. William Downey’s residence is on the site of the old button-factory, and that of Charles Roekly is where the old wrought-iron nail-factory stood. Dr. Belt Brashears was the first physician. In 1878 the Legislature incorporated the town by a special act.

The first five commissioners were elected in 1879, to wit: Isaac S. Russell, Dr. H. H. Hopkins, Dr. H. W. Dorsey, John T. P. Mount, Adam Boyer. In 1880 there were elected Francis Lickle (vice Boyer), Edward Houck (vice Dr. Hopkins, resigned), Thos. U. Lease (vice Mount, resigned), John T. Smith (vice Lickle, resigned). In 1881, F. Waltz was elected (vice Dr. H. W. Dorsey). The officers for 1881 are John T. Smith (president), Thomas A. Lease (secretary), F. Waltz, Edward Houck, Isaac Russell (commissioners), and George Burgess (halliff).

Churches.—The first Methodist Episcopal church, an old log structure, was erected about the last decade of the preceding century, and in 1821 gave way to the present commodious edifice. Revs. John Pitts and James L. Higgins were among the first preachers. The present pastor is Rev. W. A. Koontz, with Rev. J. C. Nicholson as assistant. The trustees are M. P. Trayer, John T. Lorne, John W. Rinehart, Joseph Molesworth, Thomas M. Walls, Thos. U. Lease, and James P. Molesworth. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is J. P. Molesworth.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South was organized in 1867. Its pastors have been:

1867, J. P. Hall; 1868, W. A. McDonald; 1870, J. T. Maxwell; 1871, A. Q. Flaherty; 1873, David Bush; 1876, W. R. Stringer; 1879, M. G. Balthie.

Grace Protestant Episcopal church was built in 1872. Its pastor is Rev. James Stevenson, S.T.D., who preached here before the building was erected.

The wardens are Dr. Harry W. Dorsey (senior) and Dr. J. W. Downey (junior). Vestrymen, Dr. H. W. Dorsey, William Downey, Dr. H. H. Hopkins, Dr. E. W. Moberly, Capt. J. W. Dorsey, John D. Shearer, J. Johnson Downey, George Schell.

The Methodist Protestant Church was organized and its church edifice erected in 1831. Up to 1846 it formed a part of Pipe Creek Church Circuit. Its pastors have been:

1831, T. Hbertron; 1832, I. Webster, C. W. Jacobs; 1833, W. Sexsmith; 1834, J. Warden, H. Doyle; 1835, H. Doyle, J. W. Everlett, A. A. Lipecomb; 1836, J. S. Reese, W. J. Porter; 1838, E. Henke; 1839, D. G. Hamilton; 1840, B. Appleby, G. D. Hamilton; 1841, J. S. Reese, J. T. Ward; 1842, J. R. Reese, J. Elderidge, P. L. Wilson; 1843, J. S. Reese, S. L. Rawleigh; 1844, W. Collier, J. L. McLean, J. J. Brooks; 1845, P. L. Wilson, J. K. Nichols; 1846, P. L. Wilson; 1847, H. P. Jordan; 1849, L. W. Bates, W. Reinecke; 1850, A. Baker; 1852, P. L. Wilson; 1834, A. Hammond (assistant); 1853, T. M. Wilson; 1856, C. Eversole (assistant); 1857, A. Baker (assistant); 1858, W. T. Wright, J. Clay (assistant); 1859, J. W. Charlton (assistant); 1860, A. D. Dick (assistant); 1861, J. K. Nichols, A. S. Eversole (assistant); 1862, D. Wilson, M. E. Hyson (assistant); 1863, J. D. Kinzer (assistant); 1864, S. T. Graham (assistant); 1865, J. Roberts, F. M. Hawkins (assistant); 1866, J. C. Stewart (assistant); 1867, J. E. Darby (assistant); 1868, G. S. Norris, G. D. Edmondson (assistant); 1869, H. G. Cushing, J. B. Butler (assistant); 1870, W. T. Dumo; 1872, S. F. Ferguson; 1873, G. F. Fanning; 1874, C. T. Cochlit; 1875, W. J. D. Lucas (assistant); 1876, T. A. King (assistant); 1877, S. J. Willey (assistant); 1878, J. Creve, A. J. Walter (assistant); 1880, A. D. Murray (assistant); 1881, W. H. Stone (assistant).

This church is in a circuit of eight congregations, viz.: New Market, Mountain View, Mount Carmel, Kempstown (Providence), Central, Fairview, Pleasant Grove, and Montgomery County.

Total membership of circuit, 514; value of church property, $14,000.

The Asbury Methodist Episcopal church was built several years ago. Rev. Mr. Spredle is the pastor.

Masonic Lodges.—The first information we have of Masonry in this county comes from New Market, and dates back to a period antecedent to 1776. Since that time there have always been zealous Masons in this district. In the dwelling-house on the farm now owned by William Downey, near New Market, the first lodge of Freemasons in Western Maryland was held, prior to the American Revolution of 1776.

The meetings were held in a room up-stairs, which was painted blue, and the chart was painted on the chimney above the mantel-piece, with a frame of woodwork around it. Mr. Downey states that he has this from “reliable tradition,” and that the chart was painted as described he has no doubt, as he heard it again and again from old inhabitants, who if now living would be more than a hundred years old. The land on which the house stands was granted to a man named Turner, and was afterwards purchased by George Burchard (sometimes called Burkett). Subsequently it was purchased by Basil Dorsey, the grandfather of William Downey, and has been in his family for eighty or ninety years. Gen. Anthony Kimmel, in his lifetime, thought it was the first Masonic lodge in Western Maryland.

This house stands on a little tract anciently called "Turner's Forest," and said to have been the rendezvous of the Tories in the Revolutionary war. George Burchard subsequently purchased this tract, surveyed it, and had it called "Peace and Plenty," the name it now retains.

William Downey, who is mentioned above, was born on the homestead farm which he now owns near the village of New Market in the Ninth Election District of Frederick County, on the 8th December, 1825. His father, William Downey, was born near Charles-town, W. Va., on the 18th of May, 1789, and his mother, Cordelia H. Dorsey, was born on the 19th day of February, 1798, on the old Dorsey homestead, near New Market. The paternal great-grandfather of William Downey was William Downey, of Scotch-Irish descent, who emigrated to this country and settled in Cumberland Valley, Pa. In religion he was a Presbyterian. John Downey, the grandfather, was born Aug. 20, 1753, and died 26th September, 1825. He enlisted in the army at the beginning of the Revolution, and served through the entire war, coming out with the rank of captain. He was detailed with his company to guard the Hessian prisoners taken at Trenton and sent to Frederick. He would never receive any pension for his services, considering that he fought for the liberty of his country, and that it would be a reproach to receive pay after the war was over. He was a man of great force of character. During the "Whisky Insurrection" the whisky boys planted a pole in Hagerstown. John Downey was passing through the town, and seeing the pole, he borrowed an axe, and, though threatened with death, cut the pole down. He married Rubany Stockdale, of Baltimore County.

There were three brothers by the name of Dorsey — Edward, John, and Thomas — who emigrated from England about 1670 or 1680 and settled in Anne Arundel County, Md., from whom are descended the Dorseys of Maryland and Kentucky.

John Dorsey, Jr., of Anne Arundel County, to whom was granted in 1741 a large tract of land then in Prince George's County, now in Frederick County, and known as "Dorsey's Search," was the maternal ancestor of William Downey. Among the children of John Dorsey, Jr., were Basil Dorsey, Samuel Dorsey, and John Dorsey.

Basil married Miss Crockett, of Baltimore County, and left four sons and two daughters. His second son, Basil, the grandfather of William Downey, married a daughter of Nathan Harris, who was born in St. Mary's County, and was the son of Thomas Harris and Sarah Offutt. His wife was a Mrs. Dorsey, the widow of Capt. Philemon Dorsey; her maiden name was Lawrence, a descendant of Sir Thomas Lawrence, at one time secretary of the province of Maryland. By this marriage Basil Dorsey left one child, a daughter, Cordelia H., who married William Downey, the father of the subject of this sketch. Basil Dorsey, the great-grandfather of William Downey, was at one time a justice of the County Court of Frederick, and took a very prominent and decided part in favor of the colonies during their struggle for independence, and occupied many prominent positions in forwarding the cause of independence.

William Downey married, Feb. 11, 1847, Margaret Jane Wright, the daughter of Jesse Wright, of New Market. She was born Dec. 3, 1825. Her father's ancestors emigrated from the north of Ireland and settled in Pennsylvania, and founded Wrightsville, Pa. Her mother's ancestors were Germans, and settled at Frederick City. Her grandfather was Maj. Peter Mantz, of the Maryland Flying Camp of the Revolution, and he was for a number of years a judge of the Orphans' Court of Frederick County. Their children are Dr. Jesse W. Downey, born March 24, 1848; Frank Downey, born April 15, 1859; Margaret Mantz Downey, born Aug. 27, 1850; and Eliza Downey, born June 17, 1867.

William Downey, Sr., died in 1828, and William Downey, the subject of this sketch, then but three years old, resided with his mother. In 1839 he boarded with Nathan Nelson, and attended school at the Central School for one year. In 1840 he went to Dr. Francis Waters, D.D., who was the principal of Franklin Academy, in Baltimore County. Afterwards he went to the Light Street Academy, conducted by John Lang, and from thence to Dickinson College, Pennsylvania, thence to St. Mary's College, in Baltimore. He was clerk in the tobacco warehouse until 1845. In religion he is an Episcopalian, and in politics a Democrat. He has been a director of the Central National Bank of Frederick since 1861, and was a charter member of Philanthropic Lodge, A. F. and A. M., No. 168, and secretary since its organiz-

1 Dr. J. W. Downey married a daughter of Maj. Denton Hammond, of New Market.
2 Margaret Mantz Downey married Dr. Howard H. Hopkins, of Baltimore City.
tion. He took possession of his farm in 1845, and in four years brought the farm up to a high state of fertility by the use of lime burned on the farm. In 1849 he removed to the village of New Market, and in 1851 engaged in merchandising, in which he continued until 1865, when, having purchased Monrovia Mills, he engaged for four years in milling, with decided success peculiarly. Since 1869 he has been engaged in looking after his estate, which by repeated purchases has become very large, aggregating over twelve hundred acres. His mother divided her estate, which was some two thousand three hundred acres of land, among her children, the great bulk of which William Downey has purchased, and he is now of the sixth generation of his race that has owned it. It has now been in the family since Lord Baltimore granted it to his ancestors. William Downey has always been very diligent in business, and has always regarded real estate as the safest and most independent investment. In the midst of a busy life he has kept himself well read in general literature, and has always taken an active part in politics, but never would accept any office or nomination for an office.

Philanthropic Lodge, No. 50, was in operation at New Market to 1815. It was represented in the Grand Lodge in 1814 by Arthur Tansey and J. H. Burgess. In 1817, Wm. Downey was W. M., Arthur Tansey, S. W., and Ambrose Ingman, J. W., of this lodge. It was last represented in the Grand Lodge by Ambrose Ingman in 1829.

Philanthropic Lodge, No. 168, now working at New Market, is the successor to Philanthropic, No. 50, and took a new number only because a sufficient number of the old members could not be found to resuscitate the lodge under its original number. On Jan. 14, 1874, a dispensation was granted to William Downey, Geo. E. Talbott, Hamilton Steir, Thomas P. Mullinix, Dr. H. H. Hopkins, William R. Dorney, Dr. Jesse W. Downey, Henry S. Lansdale, and D. W. Duvall to form a lodge at New Market. Dr. Jesse W. Downey was appointed W. M., Henry S. Lansdale, S. W., and William Downey, J. W. On the 12th of May, 1874, a regular charter was granted to Philanthropic Lodge, No. 168, and the same officers were retained as under the dispensation. The next Master elected was Dr. H. H. Hopkins, who has been successively followed by M. P. Wood, John D. Lickle, D. W. Duvall, and again by Dr. Jesse W. Downey. The officers for 1880 were:

The officers for 1881, first term, were:

The officers elected for term ending December, 1881, were:

W. M., M. P. Wood; S. W., Frank Downey; J. W., G. D. Edmonson; Sec., Wm. Downey; Tres., John D. Shearer; S. D., Dr. J. W. Downey; J. D., D. W. Duvall; Tyler, John T. P. Mount.

The lodge numbers 36 members. It meets on the first and second Wednesdays of each month.

Independent Order of Odd-Fellows.—Fidelity Lodge, No. 54, was instituted in 1847. Charter members, William P. Anderson, Hamilton Stier, Caleb Dorsey, Joseph Kemp, and Thomas Cleggett. Its charter was signed by Grand Master John A. Thompson and Grand Secretary G. D. Tewksbury.

Its officers for term ending December, 1881, were:

N. G., Wm. H. Baker; V. G., N. M. Waters; Sec., James M. Rice; Tres., J. W. Downey, M.D.

Number of members, 57. It owns a fine hall valued at $2000, and has $600 surpluses accumulated funds.

John E. McCahan, of this lodge, has been Grand Master of the State Grand Lodge.

Linganore Mill is the oldest in the county, having been in existence for over a century. There is no record of its earlier operations in existence. The present owner, C. C. Anders, received it as an inheritance from his father, who, in connection with Mr. Reifsneider, conducted it for some three years. Mr. Anders has had the mill since 1877. It is situated about three miles from Frederick, on the Monocacy Creek, and about half a mile from the National pike. It is five stories high, built of brick, and very substantial, having six runs of burrs, and three overshot-wheels twelve feet in diameter. The mill, which requires the attention of four millers, is run by water-power, and has a capacity of two hundred and forty barrels per day. In connection with the Linganore mill a farm of three hundred acres is cultivated, on which a portion of the grain used in the mill is grown. Only wheat is ground, and nothing but the best family brands is produced. Forty thousand barrels annually of fine flour are sent out from Linganore mill, and so wide-spread is its popularity that Mr. Anders finds a ready market for all he can produce in Frederick County and in Baltimore. The firm has an office and salesroom on Patrick Street, Frederick, where all orders are attended to. Linganore mill is an interesting local feature of Frederick County, as well as an important factor in its industrial prosperity.

The Monrovia Mills are situated upon the main stem of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, fifty miles from Baltimore, and while occupying a position unexcelled for the shipping of goods to any desired market, is no less accessible for the reception of the fine products of the agricultural region by which it is surrounded. The mill was originally built by Mr. Anthony Poulteney, about a century ago, and afterwards rebuilt by D. Rinchart. Coming into Mr. Shearer's possession in 1869, it had the misfortune to be totally destroyed by fire in 1873. With the least possible delay it was rebuilt, and under the present management of Mr. Shearer it has enjoyed a steady and rapidly-growing business. The machinery, which is of the latest and best pattern, is operated by both steam and water-power, the former being obtained from a twenty-five horse-power engine, and the latter from Bush Creek, close to which the mill stands. There are two twelve-feet overshot-wheels and five runs of burrs, which give to the mill the capacity of one hundred barrels per day of twenty-four hours. The flour here produced is of a remarkably fine quality, and has a popularity which is not only local, but extends through this and the neighboring States to Rio Janeiro, Liverpool, and other points.

Monrovia is nine miles from Frederick. The station agent on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is W. W. Ogboro, and his assistant is J. W. Sullivan, who is postmaster. M. P. Wood is the merchant, and George D. Page the blacksmith. The celebrated lawyer, Charles Pitts, a grandson of Nicholas Hall, the original proprietor of New Market, was born here. On the old "Hall patent land" Anna W. Plummer still resides, the granddaughter of William Plummer, who was the grandson of Samuel Plummer, who in 1743 entered over two thousand acres of land at Monrovia and New Market.

Cromwell is three miles from Ijamsville, five from Frederick, and forty from Baltimore, and is pleasantly situated near Linguaore Creek. It has one church, the Methodist Protestant, of which Rev. Jesse Shreeve is pastor. R. J. Starr is the postmaster and merchant; Eden Sheets and Jacob Brady, cooper; A. J. Carpenter and Zachariah Dailey, blacksmiths; Samuel Kolb, mason; and J. W. Duvall & Sons, wheelwrights.

Ijamsville is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, fifty-two miles from Baltimore, and nine from Frederick. H. R. Lowderman is the merchant, station agent, and postmaster. The railroad divides the village, all south of the track being in Urbana District.

The Methodist Episcopal church was dedicated July 25, 1858, with appropriate ceremonies, and sermons by Revs. Thomas B. Sergeant and T. M. Reese. It is on the Urbana and Buckeystown Circuit. Its present pastor is Rev. D. M. Browning. The Sunday-school superintendent is J. T. McComas.

New London is four miles from Monrovia, and near Ben's Branch. It has two churches,—the Methodist Protestant, of which Rev. Jesse Shreeve is pastor, and the Methodist Episcopal, of which Rev. D. M. Browning is the preacher in charge. The merchants are Noah Barnes (postmaster), J. S. Maxwell, Mrs. R. Spargo, and Mrs. M. A. Webb.

Kemptown is situated near Bush Creek, four miles from Monrovia. It has one church,—Providence Methodist Protestant, of which Rev. Jesse Shreeve is pastor. The merchants are O. T. Font and M. R. Lewis; postmaster, W. T. Lewis.

The teachers for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 64 pupils, Emma R. Garrott; No. 2, 51 pupils, J. B. Byatt; No. 3, 59 pupils, C. M. Luckett; No. 4, 56 pupils, B. H. Riggs; No. 5, 54 pupils, G. D. Edmundson; No. 6, 73 pupils, J. T. Browning; No. 7, 25 pupils, Hannah Garrett; No. 8, 29 pupils, Ella S. Nelson. No. 1 (colored), 74 pupils, J. B. Washington; No. 2 (colored), 41 pupils, W. B. Johnson.

The magistrates are John T. Smith, Joel Hall, William Murphy; Constable, John Burgess.

HAUVER'S DISTRICT, No. 10.

Hauer's, or Election District No. 10, was laid out with the following boundaries, viz.:

"Beginning at the intersection of the State line dividing Washington and Frederick Counties; then with said line to the lines of District No. 5, at a stone on said line east of Jacob Trisler's; thence south fifteen degrees, west about four miles and a half, near Eyler's fields; thence south thirty-seven and a half degrees, west about two miles, near Smith's saw-mill; thence south twelve degrees, east about a quarter of a mile, to Smith's mill; thence south twenty-three degrees, west about two and a quarter miles, near Hammon's saw-mill; thence south thirty-one degrees, west about three and a half miles, near Buzzard's saw-mill; thence south forty-eight degrees, west about one mile; thence south twenty-seven degrees, west about one and a half miles; thence south about three-quarters of a mile to Ferrand's swamp; thence south seventy degrees, west about two miles, to a black-walnut tree; thence north eighty-seven degrees, west about three and a quarter miles, to Morgan's; thence north sixty-five degrees, west about three miles, to Black Rock, on the Washington County line; thence with the Washington County line to the beginning."

The district, therefore, is bounded on the north by Pennsylvania, on the east by Emmitsburg and Mechanist Districts, on the south by Catoctin, and on the west by Washington County. It is situated in the extreme northwestern portion of the county. The villages are Sabillasville and Foxville.
The first settlement in this district was made about the year 1758 or '59, by a Swiss colony in the southwest portion of Harbaugh's Valley, in the neighborhood of what is now called "Hauver's." It is a national institution of the Swiss to love mountainous regions. Swiss soldiers, it is said, have died of homesickness for their Alps, and Swiss immigrants nearly always seek the more elevated lands. Hence the first Swiss pioneers in Frederick County passed by the fertile valleys and sought the lands on the sides of the Catoctin Mountains. The next settlers were the Harbaughs, in 1760 and '61. All this region was then a wilderness, for Frederick Town had only been laid out fifteen years before, and five years previous Chambersburg, Pa., was a small town on the outskirts of civilization. The whole country between Chambersburg and Frederick, including Conecocheague Valley, showed but here and there a small settlement. Rev. Michael Schlatter, who passed from Frederick to the above valley in 1748, speaks of all the region west of the South Mountain as presenting nothing but regions of grass, hazel-bushes, shrubbery, and crab-apple trees, and says the whole country was called "the barrens." Indians were still there, but friendly when they were not drunk. When George Harbaugh, the first settler, removed to the valley, which took its name from him, there was as yet no road in existence through it. The immigrants had to unload their effects and leave their wagons at the eastern end of the valley, where they made arrangements to convey their effects to the place of destination on sleds, and partly on packhorses. The first of the noted family of Harbaugh to settle in America was Yost Harbaugh, a native of Switzerland. He arrived in 1736 and settled first in Maxataway, a valley of Berks County, Pa., but about 1743 removed to the new settlement of Kreutz Creek, west of the Susquehanna. He died in April, 1762. He was twice married, and his children were as follows: By his first wife, George, Ludwig, Jacob, John, Henry, Yost; and by his second wife (named "Mary Liz" in his will), Leonard, Mary Elizabeth, Ann Margaret, and Ann Catherine. The emigrant, Yost Harbaugh, was a member of the German Reformed Church, and married his second wife in Pennsylvania in 1746. Of the above children, George Harbaugh was the first of the three brothers that removed to the valley. He was born in Switzerland in 1727, and came down from York County, Pa., to the valley in 1760 or '61, about the time of the establishment of "Mason and Dixon's line," which ended the disputes that so seriously interfered with the early settlers. He became a Moravian in his religious profession, which was perhaps occasioned from the comparative nearness of the Moravian settlement at Graceham. He came to his death by accidental drowning, somewhere in the head-waters of the Falls Creek, near the foot of what is called Mount Misery. His children were George, John, Anna Regina, Elizabeth, and a little daughter who, at the age of six years, was accidentally killed by the discharge of a gun. Of these children, George lived a while on the old homestead, and then removed to Bedford County, Pa. This George had a son, Jacob, a lame man, who kept tavern in Sabillasville; John lived at what is now Schultz's mill, and later went to Ohio; Anna Regina married a Mr. Eyler, resided in Eyler's Valley, and died in 1849, aged ninety-two years, and is buried at Graceham; Elizabeth married a Mr. Fetter, of Bethlehem, Pa. Ludwig, the second son of Yost Harbaugh, and the second Harbaugh to settle in the valley, was born in Switzerland in 1728. After his marriage he removed from York County, Pa., to near Weller's mill, just east of Mechanistown. From thence he removed to Middletown Valley, where his first son, Christian, was born Jan. 14, 1753. Afterwards, about 1761, he removed to Harbaugh's Valley, and settled on the farm not far from and southwest of Sabillasville, formerly Zollinger's, but in 1836 owned by John Harbaugh, of Christian. Ludwig died Aug. 9, 1809, aged eighty-two years, and was buried in the graveyard on his own farm. His wife, Christiana, died Oct. 17, 1797, aged seventy years.

Their descendants were numerous. Of their children, Christian lived a short distance west of Sabillasville, and died March 23, 1836, aged eighty-three. He was buried at Graceham, and left one hundred and thirty children and grandchildren. He was a Moravian, as was his wife, a Miss Williard. Christian had ten children, Peter, Christian, John (a noted tanner), who lived on a farm south of Sabillasville owned by his grandfather Ludwig; Elias, Henry, who lived on the old homestead near Sabillasville; Alexander, Solomon, Elizabeth, Mary, Rebecca, Charlotte, who married a Mr. Willman and lived in Sabillasville, and Sabina. Ludwig's second son was Jacob Harbaugh, who lived on the top of the mountain northwest of Sabillasville. He was called "Mountain Jacob." His first wife was the widow of a Mr. Winters, her maiden name being Casebeer. She was married to Jacob Harbaugh. They both died in their ninety-second year, left no offspring, and are buried on their homestead. The third son, Henry, married on the Monocacy, and removed to near Lexington, Ky. The fourth son, Peter, was unmarried, and was accidentally drowned in a branch of the Monocacy. He was on the eve of being married, and on arriving at the creek on the way to the residence of his intended bride, he found it greatly swollen from the rain. He dismounted, and leaving his horse, attempted to cross in a small boat. The rolling current being too strong for him, carried him violently down the stream. He was found fourteen days afterwards in a drift of wood. The fifth child, Yost Harbaugh, lived in the valley (where Elias Harbaugh lately died). He belonged to the Unit Brethren, and died in 1837, aged sixty. His children were Thomas, William (who lived in the lower end of the valley), Daniel (who lived on the homestead on Friends' Creek), Elizabeth, Sarah, Sophia, and Margaret,—the three next to the last married respectively to Charles Smith, Henry Fitz, and John Nagel. Of Ludwig's other five children, John was gored to death by a bull when a boy, Elizabeth married a Mr. Rice, of Kentucky, and Margaret married Andrew Williard, south of Shutt's mills, where she died. They were both of the Moravian communion. The third son of the emigrant, Yost Harbaugh, and the third one to settle in the valley, was Jacob Harbaugh, born in Switzerland, Feb. 5, 1730. He was married, April, 1761, to Anna Margaretha Smith, daughter of George Smith. She was born April 3, 1740, and died March 18, 1803. Jacob moved to the valley in 1761, im-immediately after his marriage. He had bought land there previous to his removal. He settled on the farm on which he lived and died, towards the upper end of the valley, near where it opens out towards Frederick. It was subsequently occupied by his son Elias, and later, by his grandson Leonard. When Jacob purchased the land it was surrounded by a wilderness. There was but a small space cleared, on which stood a cabin, which had been erected by the previous occupants. There are two small graves in the orchard there, the children of the man who lived on it when Jacob bought the place. He bought the land of a Capt. Daniel Smith, who lived near the gap, towards the outlet of the valley, in the direction of Frederick. At this period the depredations of Indians were not infrequent. One of Capt. Smith's dughters was taken away by the Indians, and was so long absent that they could only recognize her on her return by a wart on the end of her tongue. After she had been recovered, she was of such a roving disposition that they could not keep her at home. She is buried at Lititz, in Lancaster County, Pa. On Dec.
22, 1764, Samuel Greybill deeded part of a tract of land called "Mount Olivet," containing three acres, to Jacob Harbaugh. This was an addition to his previous purchase. He paid five pounds for it, and it lay back of the graveyard. South of the house, in a meadow, Jacob planted an oak-tree in 1760, which stood until cut down in 1856 by the occupant of the place. At first all kinds of game and wild beasts were plentiful in the valley. The latter even ventured up to the houses in open day. In 1764, as Jacob Harbaugh's wife was engaged in taking bread from the bake-oven, she was suddenly surprised by the fierce attack of a wild-cat. A desperate contest ensued, but at length she came off victorious, causing the vicious animal to retreat. Jacob served some years as constable. On one occasion he was attacked by a band of men at "Money's tavern," which it seems was the place for holding magisterial courts, and one of them struck him in the eye with a stone, causing the loss of its sight. Jacob Harbaugh was a member of the Reformed German Church, and after it was organized worshiped at what is called "Apple's Church," instituted about 1790. His house was built in 1768, by his brother Leonard Harbaugh. His old clock (still standing in the room) was bought with Continental money, and the family Bible was printed in Nuremberg in 1770. He died April 28, 1818, and was buried by the side of his wife in the family graveyard back of the orchard on the homestead farm. Jacob Harbaugh's children were Anna Margaretta, born Jan. 27, 1762, married to Henry Snyder, near Chambersburg, Pa.; Jacob, born March 21, 1763, who lived in the lower end of the valley, and died Dec. 16, 1842, eighty years of age; John, born May 27, 1764, married Elizabeth Winters, and lived in the upper end of the valley; Susannah, born Nov.
6, 1765, and married Jacob Hoover, lived in the valley;
Catherine, born March 6, 1767, and died in a good old age unmarried; Barbara, born March 12,
1768, and died Oct. 6, 1809; Julian, born June 21,
1769, and died Nov. 11, 1817; Anna Maria, born March 17, 1771, married John Shirver, near Lutersburg, and died March 3, 1873; Henry, born Aug. 22, 1772, and died Nov. 11, 1844; George Harbaugh, born March 17, 1774, and married Anna Snyder (near Boonsboro'), Jan. 2, 1801. He settled in Washington township, Franklin Co., Pa., near the Maryland line, on a tract of two hundred acres, being part of "The third Resurvey on Sarah's Delight" (eighteen hundred acres) granted by patent to Christopher Shockey by Frederick, Lord Proprietary of the province of Maryland, July 12, 1768. Two hundred acres of it were sold by Christopher to Valentine Shockey, and the latter, Feb. 13, 1787, sold it to Jacob Harbaugh, Sr., for £1000. The latter sold it to George Harbaugh, Sept. 1, 1804, for £1200. A small part of this two hundred acres extends across Mason and Dixon's line into Hauer's District. He built his house of stone in 1805.
George Harbaugh died Feb. 3, 1853. He had twelve children, of whom the tenth was Rev. Henry Harbaugh, D.D., born Oct. 25, 1817, and who was twice married, first to Louisa Goodrich, and after her death to Mary Louisa Linn. Yost, the eleventh child of Jacob Harbaugh, was born Jan. 21, 1776, and died Aug. 18, 1777. Yost, the twelfth child, was born March 17, 1778; married Elizabeth Maug, had seven children, lived at Fountain Dale Mill, and died April 28, 1817; the thirteenth child of Jacob, named Frederick, was born Nov. 1, 1779, and died in infancy; the fourteenth, Joseph, born Dec. 2, 1782, died in infancy; and the last and fifteenth was Elias, born Jan. 1, 1782. He was married Dec. 30, 1817, to Anna Catharine Pentzer. She was born Aug. 23, 1793, and died Feb. 15, 1849. Elias resided on his farm near Sabillasville, and died Aug. 4, 1854. He had nine children, all baptized and confirmed in the German Reformed Church. Yost, the sixth son of Yost Harbaugh, the emigrant, was born on Oct. 11, 1741, and served in Braddock's expedition, was at Bloody Run in the Indian wars, and a captain in the Revolution. Leonard, the first child of Yost Harbaugh, the emigrant, by his second wife, was born May 10, 1749. He removed to Baltimore in 1775, and in 1792 to Washington, D.C. He built the War and Treasury offices as they stood previous to their destruction by the British in 1814. He did part of the building of the President's house, and was many years engaged in large public enterprises, making the Potomac River navigable for large boats, etc. He died Sept. 22, 1822. Mary Elizabeth, the second child of Yost Harbaugh by his second wife, was born on Good Friday, 1753; married Godfrey Leubart, and died Aug. 15, 1819. The third child, Anna Margaret, married a Mr. Bailey, and the fourth, Anna Catharine, a Mr. Breisen.

The Hauners, from whom this district took its name, were very early settlers, but came subsequently to the Harbaughs. They were of German origin, very numerous, and a thrifty people. Peter Hauser, a descendant of the old stock, has several times been in the Legislature as a member from this county. They are located in the southern and southeastern part of the district. In their neighborhood, at Hauser's (a struggling village), were formerly held the elections. At these violent troubles sometimes arose over candidates to be voted for, and for long years feuds existed between the mountaineers ("Swissers") and the inhabitants of the valley, in which many bloody encounters took place.

Peter Zollinger settled very early in this district, and was of Swiss birth, being one of the Palatines who came by thousands after the French and Indian war. He owned the land on which Sabillasville was founded and which was then called Zollinger's Town. After his death the name was exchanged to Servillasville, in honor of his wife Servilla, a lady held in affectionate remembrance by the whole community, but in course of time the name became adulterated into "Sabillasville."

Valentine Shockey, son of Christopher Shockey, the patentee of eighteen hundred acres, a small part of which was in this county, and the balance in Pennsylvania, became a notorious counterfeiter. He flourished from about 1775 to 1804, when he was in the York County, Pa., jail, and there, while in prison, George Harbaugh purchased his farm. There is yet to be seen a cave near Mount Misery, east of the Great Falls, on Falls Creek, which is called Shockey's Cave, where he and his confederates made their money, and hid themselves in times when they were fearful of pursuit. This iniquitous business was carried on along these mountains during the whole of the last quarter of the eighteenth century. Shockey resided on the tract bought by George Harbaugh. His house stood between the present stone house and a barn. Once, when a posse were in hot pursuit of the counterfeiter, they came to his house in the evening, but he escaped to the mountain. They waited for some time, and then set fire to his house, with the hope that the sight of the flames would lure him from his hiding-place, and if he should come to the rescue, they might be able to capture him. The flames soon enveloped the building, and on the woods around and from the distant mountain shone the red glare of the burning house. From the side of the mountain Shockey looked down on the work of destruction, but he did not leave his retreat. Shockey was the leader of a terrible gang, whose exploits resounded from Baltimore to the Ohio River. About 1830, on Shockey's old farm, a zinc plate, the counterfeit type of a Continental note, was turned up by a harrow. The cave and the traditions concerning Shockey show him to have been a daring and desperate man, and the boldest of the counterfeiters who followed on the heels of the Revolution.

Sabillasville.—This pretty village is situated in the northern part of the district, and is on the Western Maryland Railroad. It lies about two miles from the Pennsylvania line, and nearly the same distance from the Washington County line. Dr. William F. Luckett, the resident physician, has been located here for ten years, and enjoys a large and lucrative practice. There are two churches,—German Reformed, Rev. H. Wissler, pastor; and United Brethren, Revs. J.
D. Freed and Wein, preachers in charge. R. S. Dupharne is the postmaster. A well-stocked store is kept by David and Lewis Crawford, and the village boasts of a good hotel, of which John Stern is the landlord. The village is beautifully located between two high mountains, and is in the midst of an orderly and intelligent community. The temperance local option law went into effect in this district in May, 1851.

From Mechanicstown the railroad grade ascends towards the Blue Ridge, and at every step of one's progress the scenery becomes grander and more picturesque. Above Mechanicstown, where the scaling of South Mountain begins, a high bridge is crossed, which affords a splendid view in every direction. At Sabillasville, by a piece of engineering skill in what is known as the “Horse-Shoe Curve,” there is another magnificent view of the mountains and valley. The ascent gradually unfolds more and more of the panorama below, until passing “Blue Ridge Summit,” fifteen hundred feet above tide-water, well known as a resort for excursionists, and near which are numerous hotels and springs, Waynesboro' Station is reached, where suddenly bursts on the view a scene of indescribable beauty,—the Cumberland Valley, a section of surpassing loveliness. Two miles distant is the famous “Crown Cliff,” where the prospect is sublime. In the distance the hotel at Monterey Springs may be clearly distinguished, and smiling fields and dwellings and church-spires enliven the landscape, while the substantial Switzer barns add a characteristic feature to the picture for miles away. It was on this lofty summit that Mason and Dixon and their party, when running the line between the possessions of William Penn and Lord Baltimore, tarried a while to enjoy the chase in the midst of the magnificent scenery, then in all its primeval grandeur. Near by is “Hartman's Gap,” through which Alan Cameron and the Tory refugees from Canada penetrated, under the guidance of the Indian chief “White Eyes,” the ally of the British, in order to join the Hessians under Knyphausen and the British Tories under Gen. Gage and Lord Dunmore to destroy the town of Frederick. Sabillasville is on the old Gap road, the first one built over the mountains, and over which in olden times passed all the teams going from Catottin Furnace to the Franklin County, Pa., forges and furnaces.

The teachers in the district for the term ending April, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 83 pupils, W. M. Martin, L. Ely assistant; No. 2, 50 pupils, J. M. Kiefer; No. 3, 35 pupils, E. M. G. Buhrman; No. 4, vacant; No. 5, 28 pupils, Theodore Smith.

Foxville is situated near the Washington County line, six miles from Smithsburg, six from Mechanicstown, and three from Smithfield, on the Western Maryland Railroad. It contains a Methodist Episcopal and a Lutheran church. Harvey Buhrman is postmaster. The merchants are H. T. Brown, Thomas C. Fox; physician, Dr. Harvey Buhrman; constable, H. Clay Hayes; shoemakers, Emanuel Prior, Elias Remer; blacksmith, Jacob Weller; carpenters, Henry Wolf, Upton Wolf.

WOODSBOROUGH DISTRICT, No. 11.

The boundaries of Woodsborough, or District No. 11, were established as follows; “Beginning at the forks of the Liberty and old Annapolis road, and running thence with a straight line to the pine-tree on the Woodsborough and Liberty road; thence with a straight line to the mill formerly owned by Roop on Little Pipe Creek; thence with said creek to the mouth thereof; then with the Monocacy to the mouth of Israel’s Creek; thence with said creek to the road leading from Frederick to Liberty; thence with said road to the beginning.” The district is in the northeastern portion of the county. On the north Double Pipe Creek separates it from Carroll County; on the east lie Johns ville and Liberty Districts; on the south Mount Pleasant; and on the west Frederick, Lewistown, and Cungerstown Districts, from which it is separated by the Monocacy River. The Frederick and Pennsylvania Line Railroad passes through the middle and northeastern portions. The villages are Woodsborough and Georgetown. The first settlers were the Woods, Crauners, Stouffers, Stimmels, Cronisses, Shanks, Smiths, Dudderars, Fogleys, Deplaces, Locks, Alsaughls, Kriases, Millers, Phillips, and Winebrenners.

The paternal ancestor of Mr. Phillips, the first of the family in Maryland, came from England. John Phillips, grandfather to L. N. Phillips, was in the front rank of Frederick County pioneers. His son Noah, born in that portion of Montgomery County now embraced within the limits of Frederick County, moved in early life to the place now occupied by his son, Lycurgus N.

Noah Phillips married a daughter of John Campbell, of Frederick County. He died Feb. 8, 1863, aged eighty-five. His wife preceded him by nineteen years, dying April 9, 1844. But two of their children are living,—Lycurgus N., of Frederick County, and Mrs. Minerva Howard, of Baltimore.

Lycurgus N. Phillips was born March 28, 1822, upon the farm which is and always has been his home. His school-days covered a brief period under the instructions of the district pedagogue, and later a three years' term at Pennsylvania College. He was brought up to be a farmer, and has made farming a satisfactory and successful venture. Nov. 27, 1849, he married a daughter of Joseph Biggs, of Carroll County, of which his forefathers were dwellers for many years back. Of the thirteen children who have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, eight are living,—five sons and three daughters,—and thus far they have remained steadily under the ancestral roof-tree,—an unbroken family circle.

By religious faith Mr. Phillips is a Methodist. His first vote was cast for Henry Clay, and following the fortunes of the Whig party until the party became extinct, he joined the American, and ultimately the Republican party, to which he still adheres. He was chosen a Republican member of the first Legislature of Maryland after the war, and during his term of service acted with much zeal and marked ability as a member of four important committees. The evening of existence finds him philosophically in the enjoyment of the comforts that a life of labor and industrious energy has gained for him. As counsel and adviser his judgment is much deferred to, and as a citizen and neighbor he is held in high esteem.

Woodsborough District and town both take their name from Col. Joseph Wood. His father, Joseph Wood, the emigrant, was born in Gloucester, England, and on coming to America first settled in Cecil County, Md., on "Bohemia Manor." There he married his first wife, in January, 1734 or 1735, by whom he had five children:

3. Joseph Wood (the colonel, from whom the name was given to district and town), born Sept. 17, 1738.
5. Catharine, born April 9, 1749.

Joseph Wood, the emigrant, married his second wife, Catharine Julien, Sept. 11, 1749, by whom he had six children:

3. John, born Nov. 29, 1754.
5. Rebecca, born Sept. 12, 1759, and married to Thomas Reynolds.
6. Ruth, born Nov. 24, 1761.

Joseph Wood, the emigrant, removed from Cecil County to Hauver's District about 1755. He loaned the Continental Congress eight thousand dollars in silver to fight the war of independence. He was buried at Rocky Hill church, and his second wife (Catharine Julien) at a place one mile south of the town, on what is now the Miller property.

Col. Joseph Wood, the third child of the emigrant by his first wife, married, April 9, 1769, Ann, daughter of James Reed, by whom he had five children, viz.:
1. Mary, born June 25, 1772, and married to James Harlan.
2. Sarah, born June 21, 1774, married to Joshua, son of James and Elizabeth Harlan.
3. Elizabeth, born Feb. 10, 1777, died March 31, 1777.
4. Catharine, born March 2, 1778, and married to John Williams.
5. Joseph, the third of the name, born Jan. 9, 1781, and married to Nancy Grabill.

Robert, first child of Joseph Wood, the emigrant, had by his wife, Catherine Dorsey, the following children:
1. Sarah, born June 1, 1764.
2. Joseph, born May 19, 1765.
3. Nicholas, born May 13, 1766.
5. Charles D., Sept. 29, 1769.
6. Amelia, born July 26, 1772.
8. Dennis, born Dec. 12, 1776.

Joseph Wood, the third, had by his wife, Nancy Graybill, five children, viz.:
2. John, born August, 1809, married to Sophia Wenrich.
4. Sarah, married June 5, 1844, to Frederick Lock.
5. Moses.

Four Harlan brothers, Quakers, came from England to America, of whom one, not being satisfied, started home again, but instead went to Ireland, and was afterwards known as "Irish George." The other three located near Doe Run, in Chester County, Pa. Their names were William, James, and Caleb. One of them, James, married Elizabeth Webb, by whom he had the following children:
1. James, married to Mary Wood.
2. Steven, married to Catharine Wright.
3. Daniel, married to Mary Legget.
4. Mary, married to Mr. Woodward.
5. Elizabeth, married to Mr. Baldwin.

Joshua Harlan was born Aug. 17, 1763, and married Sarah Wood, January, 1792. He died Dec. 24, 1830, and she May 28, 1844. Their children were:
The children of Moses and Eliza E. Anders were:

2. Francis M., born Sept. 5, 1840, died Dec. 27, 1845.
7. Moses W., born May 12, 1851, died July 21, 1852.

Prior to the Revolution of 1776, Col. Joseph Wood built what is known as the stone mills at Woodsborough, and erected a mansion of brick imported from England. This fine dwelling is still standing, and is occupied by David Albaugh. Another house of brick which Col. Wood erected is still standing, and is occupied by George M. Shaw. Col. Wood owned some fifteen hundred acres of land, a part of "Monocacy Manor," on a portion of which, near the northern boundary, the town was laid out.

Joseph Wood, the emigrant, had his fourteen hundred and fifty acres surveyed Jan. 10, 1748, and received his patent June 1, 1750.

Jacob Stimmel, born in Adams County, Pa., settled in the district about 1770, and his son, John B. Stimmel, now living, was born June 27, 1790. The latter is the father of ex-Constable Stimmel. John Winebrenner, a descendant of one of the first settlers, and founder of the religious sect known as Winebrennerians, was born in this district.

Woodsborough.—The first settlement or village was called "Woods Town," but the plat of Col. Wood, dated Feb. 7, 1786, laying out the town, designated it as "Woodsberry." Afterwards it was called "Woodsborough," and the word is generally spelled "Woodsboro." It occupied some forty acres, and was laid off into eighty lots, each two hundred and forty-seven by sixty-six feet. The principal streets are Frederick, Second, and Third, thirty-three feet in width. There are two alleys sixteen and a half feet wide. Elizabeth is the central cross street between the two alleys. The town is most beautifully located in a bottom surrounded by hills, and is on the Frederick and Pennsylvania Railroad and Woodsborough turnpike, ten and a half miles from Frederick, and near Israel's Creek and Monocacy River. It lies in the midst of a fertile and salubrious country, diversified and undulating. The inhabitants point with affectionate pride to the old edifice which gave rest and refreshment to Gen. Washington when he encamped his foot-sore army on the adjacent hills, on their march to Philadelphia. The town was then on the great highway from the South, by way of Frederick, York, and Lancaster, to Philadelphia. The old house which served Washington for a headquarters was built of split logs, and filled in with mortar and stone. It became a tavern, and until 1835 bore the sign of Washington mounted on a charger with drawn sword in hand. It is yet standing, in good preservation, near the town, between the York and Creagers-town roads. Capt. G. W. Anders, a lineal descendant of Col. Wood, has in his possession the original plat of the town. Col. Wood died in the house where Mrs. Eliza Holbruner has lived for seventy years. The colonel at the beginning of the century built a Universalist church, which about twenty years ago was converted into a building for other purposes. The oldest living persons in the town born in its limits are Mrs. Catherine Hall (born Smith), Mrs. Eliza Holbruner (born Maxwell), and Mrs. Charlotte Donsife (born Shank), all three about seventy-five or seventy-six years of age.

Churches.—About a mile and three-quarters from Woodsborough, on the road to Johnsville, is Rocky Hill Lutheran and Reformed church. It was built in 1768, on a lot conveyed by Peter Baird, grandfather of Matthias Baird. It was an old-time two-story log structure, and fifty years after its erection was plastered and weather-boarded, and remains to this day in its primitive condition. Its pulpit, a square box four feet high, was put up in 1771. It is reached by a staircase. The galleries occupy three sides of the church. The whole building is in a good state of preservation, and bids fair to stand a century yet. It was built by the Lutherans, Reformers, and Presbyterians, but about 1800 the latter withdrew. Up to about 1830 the preaching was in the German language, and then for a number of years it alternated between German and English, and about 1840 began to be held exclusively in the latter tongue. Among its first pastors was Father Grubb, an early pioneer missionary preacher. From 1770 to 1815 the preachers were Rev. Grove, Rev. Wachter, and Rev. D. F. Schaeffer. Its present Sunday-school superintendent is Michael Fogle, and the assistant superintendent, Matthias Baird. Adjoining the church is the old burying-ground, which contains tombstones dating as far back as 1769. All the earlier inscriptions are in German.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Methodist services were held in the early part of the century at the old “Burnt Mills,” and “at the house where Widow Gilbert lives.” The first class-leader was George H. Hardman. The church was built in 1819, and J. A. Baker was the first superintendent of the Sunday-school after its organization, and so continued for many years. It belongs to the Liberty Circuit, West Baltimore District, of Baltimore Conference. Among the early preachers may be mentioned Revs. Nicholas Sneed, Reynolds, John L. Given, Rowen, Larkins, George Hilt, Bard, Tabner Ball, Mercer, J. Cronin, James, Hanks, Philmyer, W. R. Mills, Gilmore, A. Riley. Since and including 1868 the pastors have been:

The Lutheran Church was organized in 1838, under the auspices of Rev. Mr. Weiser, but services had been held for years previous by Rev. Dr. Harkey and others. Since and including 1857 its pastors have been:

- 1857, Rev. Beeckley; 1863, Rev. S. W. Owen; 1871, Rev. B. F. Allman; 1873, Rev. Michael Fair; 1875, Rev. A. R. Lentz; 1876, Rev. D. M. La Motte, who is the minister at present.

The Methodist Protestant Church was organized and built in 1832, and its present pastor is Rev. J. M. Brown.

The pastor of the Reformed Church is Rev. Mr. Hench, and his predecessor was Rev. Orange E. Lake.

The earlier physicians of the town were Drs. Bollzell, Henry Staley, Kuhn, Thomas Sinn, J. M. Geyer, H. L. Donsife. The present physicians are Drs. R. T. Hammond, W. H. Wagner, and H. K. Herr. Dr. Hammond has been in practice here forty years, and Dr. Wagner since 1853. The latter studied under Dr. Thomas Sinn at Liberty, and is a member of the Sydenham Society of London, England.

J. H. Baker has been postmaster since 1877. His predecessor for two years was Eugene Albaugh, before whom were Benjamin Smith, John Main, Jacob M. Wachter, George W. Shank, Benjamin Smith.

The school-teachers for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

- School No. 1, 33 pupils, Adam Roser; No. 2, 46 pupils, Minnie L. Seabrook; No. 3, 55 pupils, J. E. Dougherty; No. 4, 65 pupils, B. F. Hildebrand; No. 5, 117 pupils, M. J. Hendrickson, J. Callahan assistant; No. 6, 82 pupils, B. W. Stilley; No. 7, 42 pupils, Hattie A. Rinehart.

The magistrates are George W. Shank, J. H. Bowers, John A. Lock, Adam Birely.

New Midway is pleasantly situated on the Frederick and Pennsylvania Line Railroad. F. C. Renner is postmaster; Robert Barrick, constable; Jesse Bolder, builder; M. D. Butts, merchant; Charles Dougherty, blacksmith; E. Renner, wheelwright; Frank Strine, shoemaker; and F. C. Renner, flybrush manufacturer.

Georgetown is located in the southwestern part of this district, and was named in honor of George Cramer. It is on the Frederick and Pennsylvania Railroad, but the station is called by the railroad Walkersville. All the territory of Georgetown proper, except four lots, is in Woodburn district. F. B. Lewis keeps a store, and also deals in coal, lumber, etc., and is the station agent. This place is growing rapidly, and is one of the prettiest villages on the line of the railroad.

Monocacy Manor.—The General Assembly by various acts confiscated all the estates, real and personal, of parties attainted with treason during the Revolution. The lands thus confiscated were resurveyed and subdivided, and then sold by the State at public vendue. Among them was Monocacy Manor, in Frederick County, of 8932 acres, belonging to Daniel Dulany. This tract was confiscated by an act of November, 1789, and the sales thereof appropriated to the redemption of the certificates granted the soldiers of the “Maryland line.” These certificates were received as specie in payment of the lands or lots thus purchased. The sale took place Oct. 10, 1781, and below is given the number of the lots, with acres in same, the tenant then in possession, and the names of purchasers.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lots</th>
<th>Acres</th>
<th>Tenant</th>
<th>To Whom Sold</th>
<th>For</th>
<th>In £</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>44...Widow Shriver, Gen. Williams</td>
<td>350</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>182...Wm. Smith, Col. P. Adams</td>
<td>1630</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>191...Geo. Devilliers, John McHenry</td>
<td>1215</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>140...Geo. Devilliers, Wm. Dailey</td>
<td>830</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>92...Peter Faust, “</td>
<td>510</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>113...Val. Mauk, “</td>
<td>560</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>28...Philip Weaver, “</td>
<td>190</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>140...Frederick Baker, Gen. Smallwood</td>
<td>1225</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>199...Peter Cramer</td>
<td>1500</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>1665...Col. Wood, Col. Rawlings</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>186...Widow Hodge, Col. J. Howard</td>
<td>1500</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>242...Mrs. and Wm. Cruikshank, Capt. Montgomery</td>
<td>2555</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>1390...Peter Cramer</td>
<td>570</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>41...Christian Barrick, Samuel Swearingen</td>
<td>493</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>1390...Geo. Devilliers, John Beall (for son)</td>
<td>1120</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
A large number of lots in Frederick Town belonging to Daniel Dulany were also seized by the State and sold at the same time; also 300 acres called "Partnership," the property of John Buchman.
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

the upper part of the valley suspected it to be a Tory rendezvous, and only through the efforts of Mr. Potts, of Frederick, were the hardy yeomanry restrained from tearing it down.

Petersville.—This place is two and a half miles from Knoxville, and twelve southwest of Frederick. It is situated in the centre of the Maryland Tract, between the South Mountain on the west and Catactin on the east. The neighborhood has been for years a favorite summer resort. It has a refined and cultivated society, and was at one time the residence of Governor Lee, Hon. John Lee, and Governor Francis Thomas. The fine residence occupied by John Columbus O'Donnell possesses considerable historic interest, having been built in 1819 by Col. John Thomas, father of Governor "Frank" Thomas, and having remained in the possession for two generations of the widely-known and noted Thomas family. In 1861, Gen. Columbus O'Donnell, of Baltimore, purchased the property from Governor Thomas, and materially improved it as well as embellished it. During the late civil war the house was occupied at various periods as the headquarters of Union generals, including Caster and Kilpatrick. It is situated on a commanding elevation close to the village of Petersville, and with a short distance of the battle-field of Antietam. From it may be had a fine view not only of Harper's Ferry Gap, but of a splendid expanse of mountain scenery. John Columbus O'Donnell, the present proprietor, has expended upon it the results of a generous taste and advanced ideas gained from extensive foreign travel.

The house, which now as heretofore is the abode of a generous and elegant hospitality, is situated in the midst of charming grounds, whose natural beauties have been greatly heightened by intelligent landscape gardening. The estate contains about three hundred acres, and is regarded as one of the most valuable in Frederick County.

William Gardner is the postmaster, and the resident physicians are Drs. John W. Hillary and George W. West.

St. Mark's Parish.—This parish (Protestant Episcopal) is an offshoot from All Saints', at Frederick. Its creation has already been described in a preceding chapter. The rectors since and including 1800 have been:

The Rev. Townsend Dade, of Eden, afterwards St. Peter's Parish, officiated on the Maryland Tract soon after the year 1783, and after him the rectors of that parish down to 1806.

For a sketch of Rev. John Chandler, see St. Peter's Parish. George Williams passed himself off as a clergyman, and was minister of this parish for nearly three years, but was discovered to be an impostor and compelled to leave. Rev. William Westerman was a native of the West Indies, and was ordained by Bishop White in 1818. He removed to Petersville in 1819. In 1821 he returned to the West Indies, and died there in 1859. Rev. John L. Bryan removed in 1822 from Virginia, of which he was a native. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Moore in 1818. In 1831 he removed to Ohio, and there died in 1866. Rev. Jared Rice was a native of Vermont, but ordained by Bishop Moore in 1828. He became rector of St. Mark's in 1829, and died in 1833, aged thirty-two years. He was a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary. No material for sketches of Rev. Mervin Allen and Rev. R. H. Phillips has been obtained. Rev. John Delaplane was a native of Pennsylvania, and a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was ordained by Bishop Moore in 1834. He then became the minister of St. Thomas' Church, at Hancock, Washington Co. He was chosen rector of St. Mark's in 1841, and died that year, leaving a son and daughter. His wife subsequently married the Rev. J. Buck. Rev. Olcott Bulkley, a native of Vermont, and graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary, was ordained by Bishop Moore in 1837, and took charge of Christ Church Parish, Calvert County, Md. He removed to Petersville in 1840, and in 1842 and 1844 was rector of All Saints' Parish. He removed to Virginia, and disappeared from the clergy list in 1856.

Other Churches.—The Lutheran Church was erected in 1872. Its pastors have been Revs. L. A. Mann, 1872 to 1876; J. H. Turner, 1876 to 1880; and M. L. Beard, the present incumbent. The Methodist Episcopal congregation originally held its services in the school-house, but in 1859 purchased the public hall and converted it into a neat edifice. Its pastor is Rev. E. Smith. The Catholic Church has had a large membership from the first settlement of the district, when a congregation was formed. Its fine edifice has a commanding view of the country around. Rev. John Gaffney is the priest in charge.

Burkittsville.—This town is situated in the far-famed Middletown Valley, at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, two and a half miles from Claggett's, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and nine from Harper's Ferry. The climate is particularly beneficial to invalids, and the neighborhood is rapidly becoming a popular summer resort. It was first known as "Harley's Post-Office," but received its present name from Henry Burkitt, who owned the land on which the village was built. Mr. Harley kept the first store, some fifty years ago. The postmaster is Martin L. Hightman, and the physicians are Dr. J. D. Garrett, Thlgman Biser, G. L. Staley, and T. E. Hardy.

The organization of the Lutheran congregation dates back to 1830. The edifice was erected in 1859, before which time the members worshiped with the Reformed congregation in the latter's building. It was first connected as a charge with Middletown, and later associated with Jefferson, but became a separate charge in 1857. Its pastors have been:

The fine church edifice was built during the ministry of Rev. G. A. Nixdorff. Its Sunday-school superintendent is John Hightman.

The Reformed Church was established in 1829 by Rev. John C. Buecher, pastor of the Middletown Church. Its pastors have been Revs. G. L. Staley, Samuel Phillips, Moses Stewart (eleven years), H. I. Comfort (five years), and M. L. Shuford, since 1873. The pastor acts as the Sunday-school superintendent. The elders are Ezra Willard, Greenbury House, Henry H. Biser; the deacons, William Pearl, F. G. House, W. S. Flook. The congregation has a substantial parsonage. The cemetery, jointly held by the Reformed and Lutheran Churches, is now a public one for the use of all.

The Protestant Episcopal Church holds occasional religious services at Union Chapel, a commodious building, owned by Messrs. Wileoxon & Levy, of Frederick. Rev. J. Trapnel, of St. Mark's Church, is the officiating minister.

The town has one of the most commodious public school-houses in the county, and its schools are not surpassed in efficiency by those of any place of its size in the State.

Burkittsville Female Seminary.—This institution, located at Burkittsville, was founded in 1866, by the Rev. W. C. Wire, A.M., a Lutheran clergyman, who continued to preside over the institution for some twelve years. The buildings, which were erected in 1866, consist of an elegant and substantial brick edifice seventy feet long and three stories high, with a wing thirty-six feet long, surmounted by a cupola which affords an extensive view of the surrounding country. The institution was formally opened on the 15th of October, 1866, and was incorporated by the General Assembly of Maryland in March, 1867. The number of pupils has steadily increased, and the sphere of its influence is annually widening. The course of study embraces all the branches essential to a practical and ornamental education. The collegiate course comprises three years, but pupils are advanced according to their progress, and not the time spent in the institution. The faculty consisted at first of Rev. W. C. Wire, A.M., principal; Mrs. M. J. Wire, vice-principal and superintendent; Miss M. H. Dupperou, mathematics, English branches, and botany; Miss M. A. Newlin, drawing and painting, and assistant in English; Miss M. A. Mackley, vocal and instrumental music. The annual sessions of the institution comprise ten months, commencing in September, and closing in June. Rev. J. H. Turner, D.D., succeeded Mr. Wire for two years, and Prof. M. L. Heisler is the present principal. He took charge of the institution in 1880.

Burkittsville Tannery.—Michael Weiner, a native of Bavaria, came to the United States in 1834, and having spent a few years as an employee at the Middletown tannery, purchased in 1846 the tannery at Burkittsville, belonging to E. H. Sleifer, who had bought it from the original proprietor, a Mr. Locker. Mr. Weiner has steadily maintained a reputation for the product of his works, which enables him to command for it the highest price in the market. Forty lay-away vats and five leaches enable the tannery to produce one thousand heavy hides per annum. Sole, harness, and upper leather and sheep and calf-skins of the best quality are made. Mr. Weiner has a good local trade, but finds his chief market in Baltimore. Since 1878 he has been assisted by his son, Henry M. Weiner, who has the personal management of the works.

Needwood Distillery.—Probably no whisky in the United States bears a better reputation than that produced at the Needwood distillery. It is noted everywhere for its purity and flavor, and commands a high price in the market. In 1850, Outerbridge Horsey, a native of Frederick County, began its manufacture, and from that time to this all his skill, knowledge, and energy and many costly experiments have been directed to the production of pure rye whisky. So closely has this policy been adhered to that the Needwood is said to be the only distillery in the United States which runs the entire year on one class of whisky. In 1862, when the hurricane of war swept over this beautiful section of the State, Mr. Horsey's business was destroyed, and much of his machinery carried off. When peace permitted a resumption of industries, Mr. Horsey set up new and improved machinery, erected a large brick warehouse with a capacity of three thousand barrels, and increased his facilities, after which he proceeded with the manufacture of his whisky. The Needwood Distillery is beautifully situated in the Blue Ridge Mountains, four miles from Knoxville, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The superintendent is James Dall. The market for Mr. Horsey's product comprises the trade of the entire country. The largest orders, however, come from New York, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, and the State of California. Nothing, it is said, gives such flavor and tone to whisky as age, aided by a sea voyage. For this reason Mr. Horsey never sends out raw or new whisky. Once made it is placed in the bonded warehouse, remaining in an even temperature, for months, often years, after which it is shipped to the seaboard, and thence around Cape Horn to the Pacific coast, where it remains for a year or two, after which it is brought back, rich in all the qualities that epicures require.

Ahalt's Distillery.—About the year 1848 the Hon. John Lee erected a flour-mill on the site of the above distillery, which is about four miles from Knoxville, the nearest railway station on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. This structure was afterwards remodeled into a saw-mill, and in 1879 again changed its form, and was made suitable to its present purpose by J. D. Ahalt. It is a well-known fact that the grain grown on the fertile plains of Frederick and Washington Counties is of a quality so fine that no matter what it is converted into it always produces the best of its kind. Recognizing this fact and comprehending its value, J. D. Ahalt started the above distillery for the manufacture of pure rye whisky. Mr. Ahalt will use none but the choicest selected rye, while his process is based upon the most improved methods, some of which are the results of costly scientific experiments made by himself. The whisky, after lying long enough to become mellow, will be shipped by sailing vessels to Rio Janeiro, receiving the benefit of a sea voyage to that point and return. The distillery is admirably located upon a lovely mountain slope, where clear spring-water is always obtainable.

Knoxville.—This town is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, seventy miles from Baltimore and fifteen from Frederick. It is pleasantly situated on an easy slope, and is shielded from the winds by the surrounding hills. South Mountain is near, and on the Virginia side of the Potomac the mountains rise in picturesque grandeur. It has Methodist Episcopal, Lutheran, and Reformed Churches, supplied respectively by Revs. John W. Walsh, M. L. Beard, and M. L. Shuford. Robert Porter is postmaster, and Dr. John Reed physician. The merchants are J. M. Miller, W. T. Main, J. D. Main; shoemaker, S. W. Brooks; grain dealers, Darby & Rice; coal, I. N. Merchant; wheelwright, John Mitchell; blacksmiths, John W. Porter, G. E. Thomas; saddlery, Robert Porter; hotel, James Reely; butcher, Charles W. Schnetze.

Capt. H. T. Deaver, a native of Frederick County, and one of the best known of the residents of his section, lives on what is known as the old Richard Johnson place, one mile from the village of Knoxville. Richard Johnson (brother to Hon. William Cost Johnson) was a bachelor and a person of eccentric disposition. His farm contained two hundred acres, and was known as "Peri Land." Capt. Deaver bought the property of the Johnson estate in 1852, and in 1856 built the handsome, substantial, and roomy residence he now occupies. The two hundred acres originally in his purchase have been increased by him to five hundred. The house is a brick structure two and a half stories in height, and is situated on a picturesque elevation fully eight hundred feet above tide-water. The farm lies at the lower end of the Middletown Valley, and from its highest eminence, whereon the residence stands, may be seen portions of the States of Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, embraced in the counties of Loudon, Jefferson, Washington, Frederick, and Montgomery. Old Richard Johnson used to maintain, and stoutly, too, that he could see from his house seven counties and three States. In the distance may be seen Harper's Ferry Gap and the waters of the Potomac and the Shenandoah, while the towering elevations of Elk Ridge, Blue Ridge, and South Mountain rear their distant fronts within clear sight. Capt. Deaver has a handsomely-improved farm, and ranks among the most successful of agriculturists. Unusual care is taken of the grounds inclosing the mansion, and they form accordingly a feature of much importance in the general prospect.

St. John's Female Seminary, a select boarding-school for young ladies, located near Knoxville, is an offshoot of Mount Washington Female College, and was organized originally at Mount Washington, Baltimore Co., Md., in the spring of 1856. After being in successful operation from that date to the 19th of April, 1861, the school was disbanded by the force of circumstances arising out of the civil war. In 1864 the property known as "Tyroonel," one of the most beautiful places in Frederick County, was secured for its use, and the school was reorganized in a new home. The buildings, however, were of limited capacity, affording accommodations for only a small number of pupils, but in 1874 a large additional building was erected for school purposes, making the school in every way more comfortable and efficient, and increasing its capacity to the number of thirty or more boarding scholars. The buildings are surrounded with extensive grounds artistically laid out and ornamented with flowers and trees in great variety. The school, which is not incorporated, was under the control of the Rev. George Lewis Staley, D.D., a clergyman of the German Reformed Church, until 1879. During the past two years it has not been in operation, but Professor Staley has used the buildings for a summer resort for boarders from the cities.

Berlin.—This village (Barry Post-Office) is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, seventy-five miles from Baltimore, and fifteen from Frederick by county road. The town has great advantages for trade, and does a large business in grain, fertilizers, and coal. The merchant mills of Jordan, Wenner & Jordan are located here. There is a lodge of Knights of Pythias (Catoctin, No. 91), and one of Independent Order of Red Men (Delaware Tribe, 43). Rev. John Hall is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and William A. Barnard is postmaster. The merchants are Jordan, Wenner & Jordan, Boteler & Gross; builder, E. D. Barnard; blacksmith, W. A. Barnard; railroad and express agent, Linganore Boteler; butcher, Thos. Watt; shoemaker, Joseph Shilling; restaurant, T. B. Leopold.

Broad Run is pleasantly situated in the centre of the great Middletown Valley, seven miles from Knoxville, and is said to be surrounded by the richest land and most beautiful buildings in the county. John H. Grove is the merchant and postmaster; M. F. Fink and J. D. Whipp, millers; W. S. Keafauver, wagonmaker; Samuel Ahalt, G. W. Huffer, machinists; W. T. Grove, J. E. Flook, carpenters; J. C. and P. G. Cochran, blacksmiths.

The teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 56 pupils, Anna M. Werking; No. 2, 64 pupils, A. C. McBride, Fanny Hightman, assistant; No. 3, 41 pupils, John H. M. Craggott, C. S. Smith; No. 4, 54 pupils, M. E. Philpot; No. 5, 50 pupils, William Gittings, C. B. Carlisle, assistant; No. 6, 62 pupils, C. E. Miller, Alice M. Thomas; No. 7, 16 pupils, Ella V. Smith. No. 1 (colored), 43 pupils, Mary S. Jackson; No. 2 (colored), 54 pupils, Adelaide Dodson.

The magistrates are Israel Carnes, Burkittsville; James Meck, Petersville; Dr. John Reed, Knoxville. S. L. Gouverneur, of this district, the grandson of ex-President James Monroe, and who had in his possession many of the important papers of that distinguished patriot and statesman, prepared for publication a work from the pen of Mr. Monroe addressed to his countrymen, and written after he had retired from public life.

MOUNT PLEASANT DISTRICT, No. 13.

By an act of the General Assembly passed April 19, 1852, Mount Pleasant, or Election District No. 13, was established out of parts of Liberty (8), New Market (9), and Woodborough (11). The commissioners named in the act to lay it off were James S. Riddlemoor, George Murdock, and John Myers. Its boundaries were made as follows: "Commencing at the mouth of the Linganore Creek; thence up said creek to the head of William Jones' mill-dam; thence with a straight line as near as may be to Jacob Harmin's dwelling-house, on the road leading from Liberty Town to Brigg's ford on the Monocacy River; thence down said river to the place of beginning." The district is situated near the centre of the county, and is drained by Monocacy River and the Linganore and Israel Creeks. The villages are Mount Pleasant and Walkersville. On the north is Woodborough District, on the east Liberty and New Market, on the south and west New Market and Frederick.

Among the families which settled in this district at an early period may be mentioned the Cramers, Stoefers, Routzahns, Diffendalls, Ramsburgs, Nicodumes, Bealls, Derra, Houcks, Koonses, Dorseyes, Jacobs, and Shriners.

The residence of C. M. Lewis, about five miles distant from Frederick City, is a type of the substantial, hospitable, and comfortable old mansions with which the mind naturally associates the era of good cheer and genial warmth that characterized social life in the early days of Maryland history. It stands removed some distance from the highway, and is approached by a fine drive through a wooded avenue. There is about the old stone mansion an air that seems to bid the visitor a hearty welcome, and to bespeak, moreover, the comforting entertainment which abides within. The house was built in 1815 by Joshua Dorsey, whose daughter married Dr. Thomas Johnson about that time. In that house both Joshua Dorsey and Dr. Johnson died. The Dorseys and Johnsons were famous as royal entertainers, and at their fireside the leading families of that region frequently gathered and held at times high revel, while within the time-honored walls of the mansion many brilliant minds have discussed the topics of the time, and groups of merry-makers have enlivened its apartments. Mr. C. M. Lewis (by profession a master-machinist) purchased the property in 1875, and moved thither from Baltimore. There are one hundred and thirty-five acres of cleared and fruitful land, with most excellent improvements, attached to the premises. The farm itself lies in what is known as Glade Valley. Near by is an eminence much favored by sight-seers, from which one may obtain a delightful view of a broad stretch of picturesque landscape.

Mount Pleasant Village is on the Liberty road, six miles from Frederick, and three from Walkersville. It derives its name from its elevated site, from which not only Frederick City is seen, but also, on a clear day, the Potomac River, twenty-five miles distant. The Reformed Church was organized in 1809, and its edifice erected in 1870, under the auspices of Rev. A. R. Kremer. His successors as pastors were J. M. Souder, in 1875, and Rev. A. Shulenberger, the present incumbent, in 1876. Mr. Shulenberger also preaches at Rocky Hill and Union Chapel.

The merchants are C. A. Thomas (postmaster), J. T. Taylor, and James Riddlemoser. The physicians are Drs. D. E. Stone and J. H. Leib. The other industries are G. W. Buckey, tanner; John D. Damon, shoemaker; John Fitch, John Wagner, hucksters; D. S. Kemp, carpenter; A. Shectehelum, wheelwright; B. Stevens & Bro., blacksmiths; W. W. Wetker, cabinet-maker.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is attached to the Liberty Circuit.

Georgetown.—Four houses of this place are situated in Mount Pleasant District, one of which is that of Drs. William and Michael Zimmerman, another that of Rev. J. D. Freed. The United Brethren church was built in 1857, and its pastors have been:

Ceresville Flour-Mills.—The Ceresville mills and estate originally consisted of about six hundred acres of choice limestone land, situated about three and one-third miles northeast of Frederick, on the east bank of the Monocacy, where the waters of Israel Creek enter into the river. At the beginning of the present century the estate was owned by Gen. Williams, and between the years 1812 and 1816 he built the mansion-house in which Samuel Hoke, Jr., now resides, a saw-mill, and the present Ceresville flouring and grist-mills. The mill-house is built substantially of stone, 40 by 60 feet, and four stories high, with all the necessary machinery for manufacturing sixty barrels of flour per day, all of which is driven by the waters of Israel Creek by two overshot water-wheels sixteen feet high. The mansion-house was subsequently the home of Maj. Daniel Hughes, who distinguished himself in the Indian war in Florida, and of Charles Johnson, the father of Gen. Bradley T. Johnson.

The present proprietor of the mills is Edward A. Shriner, whose grandfather, Michael Shriner, resided on a farm near Unionville. Michael Shriner, whose ancestors came from Germany at a very early period, had three sons,—Cornelius, Basil, and Abram H.,—all of whom engaged in the milling business. Of these, Cornelius, the father of E. A. Shriner, leased the Ceresville mills in 1826, and purchased them in the following year. His first wife, who was the daughter of Christian Scholl, was married to him about this time. She died in 1838. His second wife, whom he married in 1841, was Mary P., daughter of George Barrick, who is still living. Of the first marriage, E. A. Shriner is the only child now living. Of the second marriage, two children,—Mary C. and G. W. B. Shriner—survive, the latter being engaged in the grocery business in Frederick. Cornelius Shriner was a farmer in early life, but afterwards became a miller, as stated. Before his death, which occurred on the 13th of September, 1854, he had amassed a large property, and was at the head of an extensive and flourishing business. In 1840, Cornelius Shriner bought a half-interest in the Linganore mills, and in 1844 purchased from Col. Edward Schley the Carroll Creek flouring-mills. In 1850 he purchased of Lewis V. Scholl the remaining interest in the Linganore mills and estate. Mr. Shriner resided for several years in Frederick City, and was a director in the Frederick County Bank for a number of years. For the greater portion of his life, however, he resided at the Ceresville mills, although his place of business was in Frederick. Mr. Shriner dealt largely in grain to supply the Linganore and Carroll Creek flouring-mills, and was among the largest manufacturers of flour in the State. He also dealt largely in grain and live-stock, which he shipped to Baltimore, where his son was associated with G. Sauerwein in the produce and commission house of G. Sauerwein & Co.

In 1854, while riding to church with his son George, Mr. Shriner was paralyzed and fell from his horse. He was taken home insensible, and after a brief illness died at the age of fifty-four years.

E. A. Shriner, eldest son of Cornelius Shriner, was born on the homestead at Ceresville, Jan. 24, 1830, and still resides there. Mr. Shriner received from his father a thorough training as a miller, and since his earliest youth has been engaged in that calling. In 1850 he was given an interest in the business, and in 1852 associated himself with G. Sauerwein in establishing in Baltimore the house of G. Sauerwein & Co., referred to above. In 1858 he was married to Margaret A., daughter of John Derr, of Frederick County, a descendant of the French Huguenots who fled to this country from the Palatinate early in the eighteenth century. Mr. Shriner succeeded to the ownership of the Ceresville mills upon the death of his father, and has continued to operate them ever since. Mr. Shriner's aspirations have never led him to seek political distinction, his business having always been the object of his assiduous care and interest, and he finds sufficient gratification in knowing that he has succeeded in largely developing and improving the extensive mill property which he has controlled and managed for nearly thirty years. Mr. Shriner has been identified with the Frederick and Liberty Turnpike Company for a number of years, and since 1869 has been the president of that corporation.

Mr. Shriner's residence and mill property are situated on the Liberty and Frederick turnpike, between three and four miles from Frederick. Originally they comprised a small stone house and a four-story stone mill. The latter succeeded a one-story brick mill that stood not far from the present mill on Israël's Creek, which dated its existence from about 1790. The stone mill was built in 1813. Cornelius Shriner improved and enlarged the residence by a brick addition. A number of other improvements have been made from time to time, and the mill at present is perfectly equipped and appointed in all respects. It is furnished with three burrs and one chopper, and manufactures flour by the latest patented process. It has a capacity for grinding fifty thousand bushels of wheat annually, and produces eight thousand barrels of flour every year, of which seven thousand are shipped to Eastern and other markets.

The neighborhood has been much improved by the construction of the Frederick and Woodsborough and the Liberty and Frederick Turnpike Road Companies, which centre at the Ceresville mills, and which were built at a cost of $50,000.

In the construction of these roads Mr. Shriner took an active interest, and served as director, and in the latter company as president. In the mean time the mills have been improved by the introduction of the latest machinery. The mill itself is as solid and substantial as the day it was built, and its long ownership in one family, who have given it their care and attention, has built up a reputation upon the merits of its products which is as solid as the mill itself. Situated in the heart of the "Garden of Maryland," where the cereals are the best, the products of the Ceresville mills have always been exceedingly popular.

Mr. Shriner has devoted all his time to the production of a perfectly pure article of flour, made only of the best wheat, and known in the Washington, D. C., and Baltimore markets as the "Ceresville, Bloomingdale, and E. A. Shriner brands of family flour."

Walkersville.—This village lies on the Woodsborough turnpike, adjoining Georgetown, and is six miles north of Frederick. It is one of the newest and at the same time one of the most attractive places in the county, and in the past three years over thirty substantial houses have been erected within its limits. It was named in honor of John Walker, who owned the land on which it was laid out. S. W. Stauffer is the postmaster, and Dr. J. D. Nicodemus the resident physician. J. Hanson Stauffer keeps a large dry-goods store. Its beautiful location and proximity to the fine turnpike skirting it make it a favorite resort for drives and excursions from Frederick City.

The school-teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 30 pupils, Olivia E. Ever; No. 2, 16 pupils, Melissa J. Long; No. 3, 61 pupils, R. H. Harrover; No. 4, 33 pupils, George F. Thomas; No. 5, 59 pupils, R. T. Gilman; No. 6, 50 pupils, Bettie Rice; No. 7, 86 pupils, C. Harry Anders, A. A. Wagner (assistant). No. 1 (colored), 44 pupils, Adelaide Chambers.

JEFFERSON DISTRICT, No. 14.

Jefferson, or District No. 14, was established by an act of the General Assembly passed in 1832, and was created out of Middletown (No. 3). The commissioners named in the act to make the division were Patrick McGill, Sr., Henry Culler, John Simmons, Jacob Thomas, of John, and Adam Lorentz. The district was laid out April 11, 1833, with the following boundaries: "Beginning at the Potomac River opposite the highest ridge on the Virginia shore; thence with said mountain bounding the western ridge, the highest part thereof, to a large forked sassafras tree (marked) on the north side and very near the new public road leading from Jacob Feaster's mill, intersecting the turnpike road near Staub's dwelling-house, running from said tree north eighty-two degrees, west two miles and one-three hundred-and-twentieth of a mile, inter-seeing the branch four perches north of the blacksmith-shop in Rockville; from thence with the meander of said stream until it intersects Catoctin Creek, where is now a marked large sycamore-tree and a stone planted on the north side of said branch opposite a ledge of rocks on the west side of Catoctin Creek; thence with the meanders of said Catoctin Creek until it intersects the Maryland and Virginia line, and with said line to the beginning."
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

By act of March 7, 1850, the dividing line between Frederick, Buckeystown, and Jefferson Districts was changed "to the eastern summit range of the Catoctin Mountains, crossing the Frederick and Harper's Ferry road at or near the sixth mile-post on said road from Frederick City." Jefferson District is in the southwestern section of the county; Middletown District skirts it on the north, Frederick and Buckeystown on the cast, and Petersville and Middletown on the west. Its southern boundary is the Potomac River. The Catoctin Mountains extend through the eastern portion from north to south. The villages are Jefferson, Centreville, Landcr Post-Office, and Catoctin Switch.

Among the earliest settlers were Capt. Marler, Stoneo Frazer, the Phillipses, Lamars, Thrashers, Simmonses, Delashmutts, Lakins, Cullers, Shawens, Easterdays, Castles, Ramsburgs, Sheaffers, Keaufuers, Motters, and Kesslers. The Johnson family did not settle in the district until about 1798. Thomas Johnson (2) was born Aug. 24, 1729, and died in Buckeystown District, Oct. 2, 1778. His wife was a Miss Thomas. Their children were John, Thomas, Richard, and William. The latter married in 1800 Catharine Cost, of Frederick. William Johnson was born about 1770, on his father's farm in Buckeystown District, but in 1798 removed to what is now Jefferson District, where he purchased four hundred acres of land, nearly all in woods, and was the first man to sow clover in the valley. William Johnson died in October, 1811, and left three sons,—Thomas, Richard, and William Cost Johnson. The latter became a prominent lawyer and politician. Col. Thomas Johnson is the only surviving son of the three sons of William Johnson. He was born on his farm, Feb. 15, 1801, was a colonel forty years in the militia, and served in 1861 in the Maryland Legislature as a member of the Lower House.

Jefferson.—In 1800 this town had only four dwellings, and was then known as the "Trap," and afterwards as "Newtown Trap." It was so called from the fact that it was a rough and dangerous settlement, in passing through which many a poor traveler was robbed and sometimes foully made way with. Hence it acquired a bad name in its early days. 1 It was incorporated by the Legislature of 1831-32, through the active efforts of William Cost Johnson, then one of the delegates of Frederick County. By general consent the naming of the new town was left to the oldest resident, Dr. Charles MacGill, who, notwithstanding the majority of the citizens desired to call it "Catoctin" (after the Indian tribe that once occupied the valley), named it after the illustrious Thomas Jefferson, of whom the doctor was a warm admirer. The town is an elevated, healthy point, twenty-six feet higher than Burkittsville, and one hundred and twenty-five above Harper's Ferry. In the beginning of the century and for years afterwards it was on the great thoroughfare from the North to the South, and the travel through it was immense. The first man to preach in Jefferson was a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church named Martin, a brother of Luther Martin, Maryland's distinguished lawyer. Henry Culler was the first mayor of the town.

Churches.—The Lutheran church was built in 1841, and rebuilt in 1866, but previous to the first date preaching had been had for ten years, and at various times before. The pastors have been: 1831-34, Rev. A. Peck; 1834-35, Rev. J. Harpel; 1835-40, Rev. W. W. Webster; 1841-43, Rev. Jesse Winesoff, Rev. C. C. Baughman; 1844-45, Rev. W. F. Eyster; 1845-53, Rev. D. J. Haver; 1854-54, Rev. G. S. Collins; 1855-57, Rev. B. Appleby; 1857-58, Rev. E. Darsey; 1858-78, Rev. H. G. Bowers; 1878, May 1, Rev. W. H. Settlemeyer, the present pastor. The Sunday-school superintendent is Dr. J. J. Culler. The elders are Daniel Culler, Basil Lewis, John W. Long; and the deacons, J. Henry Culler, William Shaff.

The Methodist Protestant church was built in 1843. Its present pastor is Rev. W. R. Mills, and its pastors previous to Rev. J. E. Maloy, Mr. Mills' predecessor, were those stationed at Frederick.

The Methodist Episcopal church was built in 1830, and for thirty years previous preaching was had at the old school-house or at dwelling-houses. Among the preachers before 1830 were Revs. Charles B. Young, James Reed, E. R. Veech, and J. R. Cadden, and since them Thomas McGee, William Butler, Joseph Parker, Aaron Clary, H. G. Dill, J. W. Langley, David Trout, L. M. Gardner, John Anderson, B. G. W. Reed. In 1858, Jefferson was united with Middletown Circuit.

The German Reformed Church was established in 1841. Aug. 16, 1841, Peter Hoffman and wife con-

1 The commissioners by act of March 14, 1832, to blend Newtown Trap and New Freedom with the town of Jefferson were William Lynch, Levy Willis, and John W. Pratt.
veyed part of lot No. 43, eighty-two and a half by two hundred and seventeen and a half feet, to Sebastian Ramsburg, John Feaster, Sr., Henry Crum, John Stockman, Sr., Henry Stockman, Jacob Feaster, Jr., John Hemp, and John Stockman, of John, the consistory of the church then duly organized, as a site for a church, which was immediately erected. Rev. N. H. Skyles has been pastor since 1875, and his predecessor was Rev. S. S. Miller.

Rev. E. Jenkins is the pastor of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Post-office, Masonic Lodge, Etc.—C. E. Thomas has been postmaster since 1860, and before him three of his brothers, Emmanuel, John, and Perry G., had held the office. This office has been most of the time in the Thomas family.

The great storm of Sept. 8, 1866, blew down the Methodist Protestant church, the Lutheran in part, as well as Dr. Crum's and Mrs. Anderson's houses in part. It was the most terrific wind-storm ever known in the valley.

St. Alban's Lodge, A. F. and A. M., No. 65, was located in New Town (now Jefferson), and was last represented in the Grand Lodge in November, 1829, by Samuel Cole (probably a proxy).

In the German Reformed cemetery, the oldest burying-ground, the following early settlers are buried, viz.: David Kemp, born Sept. 2, 1778, died Feb. 29, 1836, and Mary Kemp, his wife, born Dec. 20, 1782, died April 4, 1855; Thomas Lamar, born Dec. 19, 1777, and died Aug. 11, 1864.

Among other old families here interred are the Grosses, Barrick's, Baers, Flooks, and Lakin's.

The teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 16 pupils, Addie Carrier; No. 2, 105 pupils, W. H. Meyers, Annie E. Sowers, assistant; No. 3, 40 pupils, C. W. Marriott. No. 1 (colored), 37 pupils, W. A. Thomas.

The physicians are Drs. G. W. Crum, J. H. Crum, J. J. Culler; merchants, S. M. Culler, S. E. Little, Isaac Walker; saw-mill, H. C. Biser; dentist, Dr. H. D. Mills; dealers in harness, saddles, etc., D. C. Shaff, A. D. Doty; miller, Basil Lewis; blacksmiths, R. F. Cochran, H. C. Wise, Peter Poole; tobacco and notions, W. V. Culler; undertakers, T. T. Thomas, J. G. Eitchison & Son; tailor, C. E. Thomas; carpenters, F. S. Feaster, W. P. Stockman, F. Shaff.

MECHANICSTOWN DISTRICT, No. 15.

Mechanicstown, or Election District No. 15, was created by the act of May 27, 1852, out of parts of Creagerstown (4), Emmittsburg (5), and Hauver's (10). The commissioners designated in the act to lay it off were Frederick White, John Eyler, and Michael M. Egge. Its boundaries were made as follows: "Beginning at the summit of the Catoctin Mountain, near the furnace, and running thence to a point near the blacksmith-shop of Michael Zimmerman; thence from said shop along the public road to Thomas Metcalf's land; thence with a straight line to John R. Boller's house, including said house and the village of Graceham; thence along the public road leading from Mechanistown to the Emmittsburg cross-road; thence along the Emmittsburg road to a point where the branch known as Beaver Dam crosses said road; thence in a straight line to a point north of John A. Martin's house; thence in a northern direction to William Boller's farm; thence with the Emmittsburg road, leading to Wolf's tavern, to the cross-road from Mechanistown to Sabillasville; thence with a straight line to Harman's farm; thence with the south side of the road to the new-cut road near Gat's farm, and thence with a straight line to the place of beginning."

Mechanistown District is situated in the northern part of the county, with Hauver's and Emmittsburg Districts on the north, Emmittsburg and Creagerstown on the east, Creagerstown on the south, and Catoctin and Hauver's on the west.

The early settlers were the Wellers, Creagers, Wilhides, Firors, and Rouzers, who came about 1750, with other pioneers. These were nearly all Germans. "Longatepaugh," a survey of two hundred and forty-nine acres, was patented to Lawrence Creager, July 17, 1779, and "Shoemaker's Knife," a tract of fifty-five acres, was granted July, 1746, to Philip Knavel. During the French and Indian war the early inhabitants of this region were on the extreme Western frontier, and suffered severely from the depredations of the savages.

The pleasant village of Mechanistown is beautifully situated on the east of the pretty stream called Hunting Creek, which has its source in the Catoctin Mountain. It is fifty-two miles northwest from Baltimore, and about the same distance from Washington City, and sixteen north of Frederick. It lies at the base of the mountain. The first settlement dates back to 1731, when a few buildings were erected along the road leading from Hagerstown via "Harman's Gap" to Baltimore. Lots were then laid out by James and Lawrence Creager, who held nearly all the lands as far as the present village of Creagerstown.

The Weller family was the first that actually settled on the site of the present town. There were three Weller brothers, who came from Berks County, Pa., one of whom stopped here because of the very large and fine spring of water, now called the "Cold Spring."
The second settled in Virginia, and the third afterwards located in Kentucky. Jacob Weller settled on the site of Mechanicstown, and was a teamster in the Revolutionary war. The first hotel (now the "Gilbert House") was built in 1800, under the auspices of Jacob Weller, son of the first settler, and the first store was kept by Jacob Firor in 1806. At that period the present beautiful landscape was an almost uninterrupted forest, and game of various descriptions was so plentiful that it is said the good host, Mr. Weller, wishing to furnish his guests with a treat of squirrels, killed from one tree seventy-three of them.

At the beginning of the century the shrieks of the prowling wolf were heard at night, and the only response was the plaintive cry of the whip-poor-will.

In 1810 the first tan-yard was established by a Mr. Wampler. In 1811 the post-office was opened in a house built in 1805 by Mr. Ridenoire, and in 1842 was kept in the same log dwelling. In 1811 there was started by Jacob Weller an extensive edge-tool manufactory, the first one erected south of New York. It was built on Fishing Creek, and run by the above stream of water as a tilting-forgé. Mr. Weller would start his "tilting-hammer" in the morning before daylight, and working on a cold piece of iron, would wake up the whole neighborhood with the fearful noise. He manufactured pump-angers, chisels, axes, etc. Many of his orders came from the Southern States and the West Indies. He made all of the mill-irons used at that day for miles around, and some of them can still be found with his name (Weller) branded on them. This factory continued until near 1850. In 1815 a large woollen manufactory was erected, and kept in successful operation for over forty years. In 1820 the celebrated Hunting Creek Tannery was built by Richard Jones, of Baltimore. It was of stone, two stories high, and the establishment comprised about two hundred vats constructed upon the patent reel principle, consumed annually over two thousand cords of bark, and required the labor of but fifteen men to manufacture twenty-five thousand sides of superior leather per annum. It was afterwards carried on by Capt. W. L. Jones, John Q. Hewlett, and others. There was another tannery in the town, beside two others contiguous, in all requiring five thousand cords of bark and a capital of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The first tannery is not now in operation. Samuel Stern had a tannery at the foot of the mountain, built about 1820.

The town derived its name from the fact that its population was composed principally of mechanics. The first lucifer-matches made in America were manufactured in this town. Their inventor and discoverer was Joseph Weller, who in 1825, at Frederick, purchased some matches of French importation. On his return home he started an investigation of the material, etc., and the result was his discovery of their ingredients and the manufacture of them immediately with the assistance of his brothers. They were twice burned out. The matches were peddled out through the country at twenty-five cents per package, and with the paper box of matches went a piece of sand-paper on which to ignite them. Many of the farmers drove away the peddlers with dogs, because they feared the burning of their houses and barns by this new invention. Great curiosity was excited as to the secret of their manufacture, but no one discovered it so as to compete with the Wellers. They were first made into blocks, subdivided at first by hand and later by machinery, and then dipped, one by one, into the brimstone mixture, etc., then left to dry, and the next day tied up in packages.

The town was incorporated in 1832, and the first burgess was Mr. Adlesperger. The records of the old incorporation are all lost. Mr. Park was burgess in 1842. In 1870 the Legislature passed an act repealing the first incorporation and creating a new one. The officers under the new charter have been as follows:

The assessment of 1880 shows the real estate to be valued at $165,493, upon which a tax of 15 cents on the $100 was levied.

In 1836 a disturbance took place between the citizens of Mechanicstown and the hands at Catocin Iron Furnace. On Saturday, August 27th of that year, the furnace employés marched into Mechanicstown and commenced an attack on the citizens with bludgeons, stones, dirks, and other weapons. A bloody conflict ensued, which continued throughout the day. Finally the foe retreated, a number of them having been badly hurt.

There are five main roads leading to this village besides the great thoroughfare. A number of picturesque spots are to be seen in the vicinity, among them the falls of Hunting Creek, which rises in the Catoctin Mountain. On the same mountain a short distance from the falls is a rock resembling a chimney in shape and known as the Chimney Rock. It forms a fine observatory from which to view the lovely landscape outstretched below.

Catoctin Furnace is situated in the southern portion of the district, three miles from Mechanicstown. It was built in 1774 by the Johnson Brothers,—Thomas, Baker, Roger, and James,—upon a tract of seven thousand acres patented in 1770 to Leonard Calvert and Thomas Johnson. In 1793 the firm dissolved, and Thomas and Baker Johnson, two of the brothers, became the owners. In 1803, Baker Johnson bought out his brother, and leased the furnace to Benjamin Blackford and a Mr. Thornbury. Before the expiration of the lease Mr. Johnson died, and his executors sold the furnace to Willoughby and Thomas Mayberry in 1813. Willoughby Mayberry, however, soon became the sole owner. In 1820 it was purchased by John Brien, who vastly improved the property. Afterwards James Fitzhugh bought it, and then John B. Kunkel and brother, and for the past quarter of a century it has been worked by John B. Kunkel. He has recently built the third furnace, an anthracite one. The timber on these lands has been used in their third and fourth growth. The ore which is obtained is of the best quality of brown hematite. Abundant forests afford every facility for the making of charcoal. Fully three hundred wood-choppers and coal-makers and over a hundred miners are employed by the proprietor. The capacity of the furnace is twelve thousand tons of pig metal annually, which finds a ready market among the consumers for machinery, car-wheels, and for all foundry and rolling-mill purposes. Under the management of Col. Kunkel, the works are in the finest possible order, and the general system pursued is proved to be excellent by its very handsome and satisfactory results. Henry Hendricks, a colored man in Mechanicstown, has one of the old Catoctin stoves, made seventy years ago by Thornbury & Blackford. In 1801, Baker Johnson built near the furnace an elegant mansion, in which Dr. W. S. McPherson now resides.

John B. Kunkel, one of the foremost of iron manufacturers in Western Maryland, was born in Frederick City, Dec. 11, 1817, and in Frederick County has spent his life. His great-grandfather, William Kunkel, was a colonel in the Prussian army, and about 1732, emigrating to America, made his home in Lancaster County, Pa. Six of his seven sons served in the American army during the Revolution, and two lost their lives in the service, one at the battle of the Brandywine, and a second in a manner not positively ascertained, since his fate was never known. Of that son it is told that he was but eighteen years of age when he entered the service. He was a captive on board the Jersey prison-ship, and was so impressed with the terrible sufferings endured by the prisoners that upon his release and return home he vowed to his father that he would return to the army and fight until the last redcoat was driven from the country. From that hour he was never heard of.

The youngest son, William, grandfather to John B. Kunkel, lived and died upon the tract in Lancaster County originally located by Col. Kunkel.

William Kunkel the younger had three sons, of whom the eldest was John. In 1809 he moved to Frederick City, and engaged in business as a distiller. In 1828 he abandoned distilling and embarked his energies and capital in the manufacture of leather. His operations in that direction were of considerable importance, and employed not only a tannery owned by himself but other tanneries as well. He followed the trade of a tanner in Frederick until his death in that city in 1861, aged seventy-seven. His wife, a descendant of the Hoffmans of Lancaster County, Pa., died in Frederick in 1856. Her ancestors were active participants in the war of the Revolution. It is related of Jacob Hoffman, one of her uncles, that during the campaign he was frequently on the march barefooted, and that he wore twisted strands of hay in lieu of suspenders. John B. Kunkel was married in 1842 to a daughter of William Porter, of Philadelphia, once a member of the famous old-time firm of Beran & Porter, shipping merchants. Mrs. Kunkel is a descendant of Governor John Redding, one of New Jersey's early Governors, and president of the Colonial Council in 1745. Governor Redding was a blood relative, through Lord Wilton, of Charles Stuart, of England.

The Catoctin Iron-Works, founded by the Johnsons about the Revolution, and now carried on and owned by John B. Kunkel, were purchased in 1858 by Mr. Kunkel's father, upon the dissolution of the firm of latest operators there, Fitzhugh & (J. M.)
Kunkel. The business was continued at Catoctin by Jacob M. and J. B. Kunkel until 1866, when Jacob M. retired. Since that time J. B. Kunkel has been the sole proprietor. The furnace has an annual capacity of ten thousand tons, and produces first-class forge and car-wheel metal. About eleven thousand acres of land are tributary to the works. Ore is obtained at a distance of about one mile and a half from the furnace, to which it is transported over a railway owned by Mr. Kunkel. The ores mined at these banks yield from thirty-eight to fifty per cent. in metallic iron. About one hundred men are regularly employed in the conduct of Mr. Kunkel's business. That business, as may be well understood, engages and has engaged his closest attention, and in its pursuit he has found neither time nor desire for the distractions of public life. He occupies a tastefully-appointed home at Catoctin, and there dispenses a genial hospitality. His living children number seven, of whom three sons are associated with him in the management of the works.

Catoctin (Protestant Episcopal) Church.—In 1855, Harriot Chapel was made an independent congregation. In 1855 it was enacted that the territory heretofore a portion of All Saints' Parish, Frederick County, and contained within the following metes and bounds, to wit: beginning for the same on the South Mountain, at the junction of the boundary line between the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania and the division line between Frederick and Washington Counties, in the State of Maryland, and running southwestwardly along the ridge of South Mountain to a point therein called Braddock's Gap; thence southewestwardly to Biggs' ford on Monocacy River; thence up said river to Devilbiss' ford; thence eastwardly along and with the county road (through and including the village of Walkerville) to Mount Pleasant, to the intersection of Tie's road with the main road from Frederick City to Liberty; thence still eastwardly with a straight line to a point where the division line between Frederick and Carroll Counties crosses the main road from Liberty to Freedom; thence northwardly with said last-mentioned line to the boundary line between the States aforesaid; and thence westwardly with the boundary line to the beginning, and to be named and known as the Catoctin Parish. The rectors have been:

Rouzer's Tannery.—The father of Mr. Rouzer, the present proprietar of Rouzer's Tannery, was almost wholly without capital, and began with but few facilities and many obstacles to combat. Such, however, was his energy and tact that his business has enlarged and improved, until now the son of its founder owns and conducts one of the most important industries of Western Maryland. On the fine farm on which the tannery is located Mr. Rouzer was born and raised. The tannery has a capacity of five thousand to six thousand finished sides per annum. This tannery suffered the misfortune of being burnt down in November, 1853, but was promptly rebuilt the same year. The buildings now consist of the main house, two bark-sheds, two wagon-sheds, and a scale-house, all in good order. A switch belonging to the establishment runs to the Western Maryland Railroad, and affords ample facilities for shipping and receiving goods. Most of the hides tanned come from Texas, though some are received from South America, and the market being almost wholly in Baltimore, only a few are retailed within the county. The bark used comes from Fairfield and Cashstown, in Pennsylvania.

John Rouzer, one of the leading tanners of Western Maryland, was born Nov. 25, 1815, upon the property now occupied as his home, the fine residence he occupies having been built by his father in 1812. His father, Daniel, born in New Jersey in 1766, came to Maryland while a lad, and worked as an apprentice at the tanning business in Hagerstown and Frederick. At the age of twenty-seven—that is to say, in 1793—he made upon the present Rouzer place, near Mechanicstown, a start as a tanner on his own account. He was married twice. His first wife was Sophia, daughter of Peter Shover, one of Frederick County's early settlers. By that marriage there were ten children. The only one living is Henry Rouzer, of Mechanicstown, born in 1806. Sophia Rouzer died in 1810, and in 1814 Mr. Rouzer took a second helpmate in Julia, daughter of John Matthews, of Frederick County. She was born in 1779. Of the second marriage there were but three children,—John, born 1815; Eliza, born 1817; Sarah Ann, born 1819. John and Sarah Ann are still living. Daniel Rouzer was more or less actively engaged in tanning until his death, Aug. 18, 1850, aged eighty-four. His widow followed him four years later, Aug. 19, 1854. John Rouzer has passed his life upon the place where he was born. A brief season of schooling was followed by an early application to the trade pursued by his father, and he may be fairly said to have been bred a tanner. His yearning was for a thorough school education, but his father thought he could not spare his services from the business, and so in deference to paternal desire he denied himself the scholas-tie training towards which his ambition inclined. For years he was his father's assistant, and ultimately becoming a partner, continued so until the father's death. Upon the settlement of the estate, Mr. Rouzer bought the tannery property, and since then has continued the business solely on his own account. In 1833 fire destroyed the tannery buildings, which were at once rebuilt upon a larger and much improved plan. About three thousand hides are tanned annually, the production being exclusively sole leather; and in their manufacture about nine hundred tons of bark are used. Mr. Rouzer married, in 1846, Phoebe T., daughter of John Landers, a comar to Frederick County in 1812. Mrs. Rouzer died six months after her marriage. After remaining a widower sixteen years, Mr. Rouzer married again, March 20, 1862, his second wife being Emma K., daughter of Nicholas Parrish, of Frederick County. Nicholas Parrish and his wife are still living in Mechanistown. The children of the second marriage were nine, all sons; seven are living. Five are at school, and two (the youngest) at home. Mr. Rouzer was trained in the Lutheran faith, is now a zealous member of the church, and for many years has been an elder therein. Public life has never enticed him from the cares of a business to which he is wedded, and in which he finds a vast deal more of satisfaction than politics or office-holding could give. He did not take an active part in the civil war, but he was throughout a devoted Union man.

The Franklin Flour Mills, located on the pike leading from Frederick, and fifteen miles from that city, is one of the most important and busy mills in the county. It was built by Jacob Firor in 1828, and in 1876 came into the possession of John Jones, a native of Frederick County. On assuming control of the mills he furnished them with improved machinery, which consists of two runs of wheat-burrs, operated by a fourteen-foot overshot water-wheel, eighteen-foot fall, with a capacity of fifty barrels per day of twenty-four hours. Owings' Creek, upon whose banks the mill is situated, supplies the power. The building is substantially built of brick, and is 40 by 50 feet, two and one-half stories high, and is in as good a condition as when built. Producing both patent and straight goods, Mr. Jones not only finds a brisk local market for them, but the "John Jones" brand is well known in the Baltimore and New York markets as a reliable and standard article.

Churches.—About 1765 the German Reformers and Lutherans united built a log church about a mile from Mechanistown, which was called "Apple's Church." Its early records are lost. The first child baptized was Johann Adam, son of Jacob and Margareta Momma, May 23, 1773. The next was Maria Barbara, daughter of Philip and Eva Catharina Am- bros, July 23, 1773. The next was Anna Maria, daughter of Daniel Klingan and Anna Elizabeth Schmidt, Aug. 1, 1773, on which day Johann Heinrich, son of Johann Kupper Schmidt, was also baptized. On Dec. 15, 1793, eighteen members were added to the church. Among the first preachers were Revs. Rahawson and Bassler. Afterwards the ministers were Revs. Elias Heiner, S. R. Fisher, G. W. Aughimabugh, and E. E. Higbee. In 1858 came Rev. H. I. Comfort, succeeded in 1867 by Rev. N. E. Gilds, who was followed in 1875 by Rev. Henry Wissler, the present pastor. For a long period Apple's Church and the church at Emmitsburg were a joint charge. Mr. Wissler has charge of five churches,—Trinity, and one at Creagstown, Rocky Ridge, Sabillasville, and St. Jacob's, near Fountain Dale. In 1880 the Reformed congregation removed to the town, where its new edifice had been just completed. "Apple's Church" took its name from a family of Apples living in the neighborhood, who gave the land upon which to build the first meeting-house. This structure stood until about 1815, when the present one was built, which has several times since been repaired.

From 1765 to 1858 the Lutherans, in conjunction with the Reformers, worshiped at "Apple's Church." The names of the first preachers are not obtainable, but towards the last quarter of the past century Father Grubb was a regular preacher at this congregation. The present "Apple's Church" building was erected under his auspices about 1815, by funds largely subscribed by the Lutherans. He died over fifty years ago, having traveled extensively in preaching. He was also a doctor, and particularly noted in cases of fever and bilious colic. After him were Revs. Reuben Weiser, John J. Reifmennsnyder, Wachter, George W. Anderson, and John Richards. A new church, the present structure, and the finest in the town, was dedicated in the spring of 1858, when the congregation left "Apple's Church." It was erected under the auspices of Rev. William Hunt. His successors have been Rev. S. Curtis, J. N. Unruh, Jacob Summers, and W. C. Wire, the latter the present pastor. This church has a membership of two hundred and fifteen. Up to about 1830 preaching was exclusively in the German language, and then for a few years it alternated between German and English, and finally was entirely of English. The first settlers of the district worshiped at "Apple's Church," and were mostly of German descent.

The Moravian church is a pretty frame structure, and is supplied by Rev. E. W. Shields, of Graceham.

The United Brethren (Weller's) Church was organized in 1831, and on December 11th of that year the church edifice was consecrated. It was erected upon ground presented by Jacob Weller, who was born at Mechanistown, Jan. 25, 1775, and died May 6, 1846. His first wife, Anna Margaret, was born Oct. 22, 1780, and his second, Mary Love, Sept. 8, 1795. Before the meeting-house was finished preaching was had in the old school-house. The first trustees were Jacob Weller, George Stokes, Henry Kemp, to whom, a few years later, were added Frederick Rider, Jacob Martin, and Reuben Osler. Its pastors have been Revs. Nelson, Glossbrenner, William Brown, Winebrenner, Isaac, George, and John Statton, W. T. Lower, Isaiah Baltzell, John Sand, William Knott, George Byme, Jacob Bostell, Gibbons, Matthews, McCabe, Darkies, J. D. Freed, Funk, Kneidlick, William Evers, John W. Grimm (1861-65), C. I. B. Brane (1874-76), J. P. Funk (1876-77), J. D. Freed (1877-81), and Rev. Wein (1881), the present incumbent. This church is in a highly prosperous condition.

In 1859, on Whit-Monday, the beautiful Catholic church, situated on a commanding elevation near the railroad, was dedicated. The congregation is large, and the church flourishing. Its pastor up to 1880 was Rev. H. A. McMurdie, whose labors terminated that year by his decease.

The Methodist Episcopal church organization was perfected in 1849, previous to which time services had been held in the school-house nearly opposite. The present edifice was erected in 1850, by Rev. B. C. Flowers, who, with Andrew Sefton and Tuisco Marlow, were three of the trustees. Its corner-stone was laid by Rev. S. S. Rozell, and the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Henry Slier.

In 1849 the presiding elder was Alfred Griffiths, and the preachers in charge Revs. John A. Henning and J. R. DeBrow. In 1850 the pastors were Revs. George Brooke and J. R. DeBrow, and in 1881, Rev. W. O. Eldridge, whose predecessor was H. P. West.

In 1861-62 a paper made its appearance in Mechanistown called the Family Visitor, published by Isaiah Wolfsburger. It was tinctured with "secession" proclivities at the commencement of the civil war, and the paper was suppressed by the Union men of the town. The same gentleman afterwards published a Republican paper at Elliott City, in Howard County, called the American Progress.

Societies.—In the summer of 1871, Grand Master Latrobe granted a dispensation to form a Masonic lodge at Mechanistown. On Nov. 20, 1871, the Grand Lodge granted a charter to Acaelia Lodge, No. 153. The officers in 1879 were:

W. M., D. C. Martlin; S. W., Cost J. Carmack; J. W., John H. Rouzer: Sec., Van B. Osler; Treas., Geo. W. Stocksdale.

Good Samaritan Lodge, No. 46, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Emmittsburg, Oct. 23, 1845. Its charter members were George Zollinger, Peter Stein, John Burk, John B. Picking, and Lewis Colliflower. It was moved to Mechanistown in 1849. The lodge hall was erected and completed Aug. 10, 1848. The building was occupied as a seminary, in which Rev. Sidney Harkey taught. The lodge rented the upper part until 1870, when by a special act of the Legislature it was empowered to purchase the building.

The first officers were:

N. G., J. G. Picking; V. G., J. Burke; Treas., Mr. Wiltz; Sec., Joseph R. Abrams.

The officers for the term ending December, 1881, were:

N. G., Wm. Stix; V. G., Joshua Herring; Sec., John Landers; Treas., Van B. Osler.

Number of members, 70; accumulated funds, $250; and value of property, $2000.

Its first officers were:

C. C., A. A. Moore; V. C., Dr. Wm. White; Prel., F. M. Uhler; M. A., J. H. Rouzer; K. B. S., E. L. Snider; M. F., S. A. Moore; M. Exch., J. W. Davidson; I. G., Thomas Shaw; O. G., M. A. Willard.

Officers for term ending June, 1881:

C. C., Wm. H. Stall; V. C., T. N. Eyler; Prel., E. M. Smith; M. A., G. W. Stimmel; K. B. S., C. Harman; M. F., John H. Rouzer; M. Exch., E. N. Cooker; I. G., Wm. Miller; O. G., Horatio Fogle; P. C., Wm. H. Dammuth; Representative to Grand Lodge, John H. Rouzer.

The lodge meets in I. O. O. F. Hall every Friday evening. Number of members, 28; accumulated funds, $731.94.

Physicians.—The first resident physicians were Drs. Alexander Goldsborough and John Restler. The latter was a surgeon in Bonaparte's army, and after the battle of Waterloo came to America. Then followed Dr. E. Lincoln Brown. From 1845 to 1849, Drs. E. T. Curry and J. M. Geyer were in partnership. Dr. Joseph Biggs, who practiced here several years, removed in 1854. Dr. J. M. Geyer practiced from 1856 to 1861. Dr. George M. Zimmerman was there from 1862 to 1878, and Dr. Horatio N. Shultz from 1869 to 1874. Dr. M. E. Leatherman came in 1878. Dr. William White, who came in 1849, was born in Carroll County, and has been in continuous practice at Mechanistown for thirty-two years.

Seminary.— The Mechanistown Male and Female Seminary was established in 1874, under the care of the Middle Conference of the Lutheran Synod of Maryland. In the first year it had thirty-three students. Its principal for nearly all the time of its existence (over two years) was Rev. Victor Miller. The trustees were Dr. William White, president; John Rouzer, J. J. Henshaw, M.D., W. J. Black, George W. Stocksdale, Van B. Oster.

"Catoctin Clarion."—On the 4th of March, 1871, the Catoctin Clarion, published by William Need, made its appearance in Mechanistown. It was a local paper, took but little part in politics, though the editor favored and voted for Horace Greeley for President in 1872. It was published for four years by the original proprietor, but on account of ill health he disposed of the office to Alexander P. Beatty.

Mr. Beatty bought the office July 23, 1875, and sold it Aug. 1, 1879, to E. L. Root and Charles E. Cassell, the latter being the editor. It is a sparsely sheet of neat appearance, and is conducted with ability. It is independent in sentiment.

Railroad, Express, Etc.— The Western Maryland Railroad was completed to this place in 1872, and the connection by rail of this hitherto inland town with the outside world gave a fresh impetus to the business of the town. Express connections were soon established and telegraph wires erected. From this time on the town, which in 1824 had but one store (kept by Charles Hoffman), grew very rapidly. Its fine scenery, delightful climate, and well-known salubrity make it an attractive summer resort, patronized by many from the cities. The site has been selected for the fine public-school building to be erected this year, and a new canning manufactory has been completed.

The teachers in the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 35 pupils, D. C. Weller; No. 2, 45 pupils, Mattie E. Youson; No. 3, 33 pupils, Jennie Schma; No. 4, 46 pupils, John Landers; 64 pupils, E. L. Bohlitz; 59 pupils, Frederick White; No. 5, 59 pupils, J. W. Davidson; No. 6, 49 pupils, J. W. Grindor; No. 7, 87 pupils, J. W. C. Zimmerman.

Justice of the Peace, Frederick White, Mechanistown; Dr. W. S. McPherson, Catoctin; Calvin L. Fisk, Greytown.

Graceham.— This ancient village is situated in the extreme eastern part of the district and near the Creagerstown boundary line. It is the seat of the first Moravian church in Maryland. The log dwelling for the first minister was completed in 1749, but preaching began in 1745, at the houses of the pioneers. On the 12th of September, 1768, twelve men felled and squared fifty-six logs for the first log church which was situated on Carroll's Manor. The day previous, Mr. Carroll, the proprietor of the Manor, through his agent, Joseph Johnson, gave a written instrument to Rev. R. Powell, granting ten acres of land on which to build this church, and also gave two pounds towards putting up the house. The house was raised October 11th and 12th. Mr. Powell moved into the house (which was a church and dwelling combined) on Dec. 1, 1768, and that day preached from this text, "He will betroth us unto Him for ever." The building was not finished and consecrated until Oct. 16, 1773. Though preaching began in 1745, the first regular congregation was not formed until Oct. 6, 1758.

The Moravian ministers of this church have been as follows:

1745, Lorenz Tharthansen Nyberg, John H. Herzic; 1746, George Nieck; 1748, George Niecer; 1749, Swan Rosen; 1751, Mathausen Rens; 1752, Richard Uyley; 1755, Christian Richter; 1757, Valentine Haidt; 1758, — Bundt; Oct. 6, 1758, Johann Michael Zahn (first regular pastor), died; 1762, Franz Böehler; 1784, Otto Krogstrup; 1787, Nicholas H. Eberhard (died); 1778, R. Powell, — Hefner; 1779, Richard Uley (died); 1771, Joseph Niecer; 1775, Johannes Schweichaupt; 1784, Daniel Sydriek (died); 1790, Gottlieb Sensesen, Johann Friedrich Peter; 1791, Johann Martin Beek; 1796, Christian Friedrich Schaf; 1798, Johann Friedrich Schlegel (died); 1805, Carl Gottlieb Blech; 1819, Johann Peter Kluge; 1827, Samuel Reineke; 1832, Samuel R. Huesner; 1839, Ambrose Randtler; 1845, Edward Raudthaler; 1849, Robert de Schweinitz, A. A. Reineke; 1854, Benjamin Riebsacker; 1859, Henry Bachman; 1861, Eugene P. Greider; 1867, Henry T. Bachman; 1870, Jesse Rieckensdorfer; 1873, L. P. Cleswell; 1880, E. W. Shields.

We find the following first two baptisms on the church records (kept in German):

A few years later the following occur:

2. April 8, 1764, by Rev. John Daniel Sydriek, Mary Marga-
The old log church gave way to the second building, which stood until 1822, on October 27th of which year the present church edifice was consecrated. It is a brick structure fifty by forty-two feet. The parsonage in front was erected of brick in 1798, and is the second one. In it and its predecessor were held the parochial schools of the church. The old graveyard is near by and is in a well-kept condition. The men are all buried on the right hand side (from the entrance) and the women on the left. Immediately in their rear are the children's graves, and still farther in the rear those of strangers or new members of the church. Up to a recent period the tombstones were all numbered.

The oldest one whose inscription is legible is No. 3, that of John Heinrich Krieger, born 17th May, 1749, died 25th May, 1764, aged fifteen years and eight days. No. 2 is that of Ludwig Protsman, born 1718, died 1778. No. 51 is that of Lorenz Krieger, born March 15, 1715, died Aug. 28, 1784. No. 395 is that of Philip William Boller, born March 6, 1766, died Dec. 9, 1848.

There are three graves of three generations of the Siess family, father, son, and grandson, viz.: John George Siess, born March 23, 1754, in Heidelberg, Pa.; his son, Godfrey Siess, born Feb. 9, 1765, in Heidelberg, Pa., died Aug. 4, 1811; his grandson, John Siess, born Oct. 26, 1794, died May 3, 1862. The latter was the father of the Rev. Dr. Siess, the eminent Lutheran divine and theological writer and author. The tombstone of Nicholas Henry Eberhard, one of the pioneer Moravian ministers, shows the date of his birth to have been Jan. 2, 1723, and of his death April 8, 1770.

Graceham a century and a quarter ago was a noted religious seat, to which came hundreds of the pioneers for religious worship. At this time the men all carried rifles to defend themselves against the Indians or wild beasts.

Where O. L. Siess now lives, Godfrey Siess just after the Revolution had a snuff manufactory, the only one in the county outside of Frederick Town.

The Moravian buildings are on a rising ground at the eastern end of the village. To the right is seen a spring-house, where there are several never-failing springs of water. In the background appears a part of the mountain.

JACKSON DISTRICT, No. 16.

Jackson, or District No. 16, was laid off out of those parts of Catoctin (No. 6) and Middletown (No. 3) contiguous to each other by an act of the General Assembly passed May 25, 1852. The commissioners designated in the act to establish it were Capt. David Kailor, Daniel Main, and David Young, of D. Its boundaries were fixed as follows: "Beginning at the Frederick District line above George Blessing's, and running thence in a straight line as near as practicable to intersect the Catoctin Creek, where the road leading from Smithsburg to Frederick City crosses said creek, excluding the aforesaid George Blessing's dwelling; thence to the bridge lately built across the branch coming from Palmer's mill, on the road leading from the old Hagerstown road to Wolfville; thence to intersect the Washington County line above Jacob Renner, including said Renner; thence with said Washington County line until it intersects the turnpike leading from Frederick to Hagerstown; thence to Shoemaker's school-house; thence to Google's school-house; thence to intersect the road leading from Beallsville to Middletown at Kinney's mill; thence to intersect the Frederick District line above George W. Summers; thence with the said Frederick District line to the point first mentioned above." Jackson District is situated in the western portion of the county, on the slope of South Mountain, and is south of Catoctin and north of Middletown Districts. On the east is Frederick District, and across the mountains on the west lies Washington County. The villages are Myersville, Jerusalem, and Beallsville. The first settlement was made before 1745, by the Flooks, Bowluses, Myers, Hoffmans, Bahrmans, Grossnickles, Remsburg, Harmans, Smiths, Bisers, Toms, Koghs, Dutrows, Bussards, Delaughters, Derrrs, Sumans, Gavers, Poffenbergers, etc. Nearly all these settlers were German immigrants, many of whom belonged to the German sectaries, including the Dunkers, the Mennonites, and others. There were also a number of Lutherans and German Calvinists. The immigrants were tenacious in the preservation of their language, religion, habits, and customs. They were also sturdy Republicans, and lived heartily upon their rich and carefully-cultivated lands. Their impress is still visible and their influence felt all over this district. The first man to preach the gospel in this district was Rev. Bernard Michael Houseal, the first Lutheran pastor at Frederick, or in the county. He crossed the Catoctin range on horseback as early as 1753, and preached the word of God to a few of the early settlers assembled in private dwellings of the pioneers.

Myersville.—This place is thirteen miles from Frederick and near Catoctin Creek. It took its name from the Myers family, one of the oldest in this section. Rev. C. H. Mott is pastor of the United Brethren Church, and Rev. H. G. Bowers of the Lutheran. C. A. Buhrman is postmaster. The physician is Dr. L. M. Zimmerman, and the merchants Joseph Brown and Upton Buhrman. James W. Morgan is justice of the peace, George W. Main constable, and John Koogle surveyor. William Schildnecht has a tannery, A. R. Mowen a tin-shop, William Ludy a saw-mill, and B. F. Fout and Josiah Harp are the millers. Mrs. Caroline Biser keeps a boarding-house, and C. A. Buhrman a stationery-store. The village is filled with enterprising mechanics, and it is the chief seat of trade for a populous country for miles around.

When it was found that the Tories were gathering in large numbers at Castle's old building, near where Harmony Grove (Beallsville) is now located, in this district, the greatest consternation prevailed in Frederick Town. The bells were rung and the people convoked. A file of soldiers was immediately formed and dispatched to the hiding-place of the recusants. They were seized at once and brought to Frederick. A fair trial was instituted, and the Tories and spies underwent a searching examination. It was satisfactorily proven to the minds of the Committee of Safety that these men near Castle's were in communication with Knypshanssen's men in the Jerseys and the Tories in Canada, that they gave information as to the situation of affairs in Frederick, and advised the British to seize upon the barracks, the magazine, and if necessary burn the town. Of the seven Tories tried three were hanged, and the Tory movement in the Middletown Valley was effectually suppressed.

The teachers in the district for the term ending April 15, 1851, were:

School No. 1, 38 pupils, C. H. Anversgood; No. 2, 50 pupils, C. G. Grosnjeke; No. 3, 32 pupils, M. L. Rice; No. 4, 64 pupils, J. L. Lutz, H. E. Staley, assistant; No. 5, 81 pupils, D. U. Schildnecht, J. W. Wilson, assistant; No. 6, 41 pupils, T. L. Hauver; No. 7, 42 pupils, J. W. Gaver.

Harmony.—This pretty village is nine miles from Frederick, and is pleasantly situated in a healthy neighborhood, near Middle Creek. It contains a flourishing Dunker Church, one of the oldest in the county, and a Lutheran Church, the latter being part of the Middletown congregation. William B. Taylor is the postmaster, and with his son operates the woolen manufactory. The merchants are Joseph H. Bussard and George F. Williams. The other industries are E. Baker, Joseph Bebington, millwrights; Caton Blesson, M. Brandenburg, carpenters; G. Brady, G. W. Summers, millers; J. N. Brandenburg, blacksmith; J. E. Castle, George Harshman, shoemakers; D. Gladhill, wheelwright; George S. Harp, constable; P. R. Langdon, weaver; L. Rothanhefar, gunsmith; George Wachter, saddler.

JOHNSVILLE DISTRICT, No. 17.

By an act of General Assembly of March 9, 1854, Johns ville, or Election District No. 17, was laid off and established out of parts of Liberty (No. 8) and Woodsborogh (No. 11). It was laid out by Special Commissioners Nicholas Norris, Jacob Root, and Daniel S. Herrick, as appointed in above act. Its boundaries were designated as follows: Commencing at or near the stone bridge across Pipe Creek near Diffendall's mill; thence by the most suitable line to the Hill school-house; thence to some point at or near the Copper-mine school-house; thence with the Copper-mine road to some point at or near Nicholas Norris' farm; from thence to Sam's Creek, the dividing line between Frederick and Carroll Counties; and thence with said dividing line to the place of beginning." The district, which is situated in the eastern portion of the county, is bounded by Carroll County on the north and east, Linganore District on the south, and Woodsborough District on the west. Among the early settlers were the Birely family, of German descent, numerous branches of which are found throughout the neighborhood and county. The Hlers were noted for their numbers and fine physical development. Peter Hler, who died in 1872, aged seventy years, left nine sons and twelve girls, all strong and hearty men and women. Of these sons not one weighed less than one hundred and eighty pounds. Mr. Hler never had a physician in his house for any of his twenty-one children. Among other pioneer families were the Fegles, Morts, Clemsons, Bastians, Sittleys, Philippees, Koonses, Shoemakers, Hammers, Snookses, Albahgs, McGuinises, Warners, Haughs, Carmacks, Johnsons, Norrises, Buckees, Stoners, Bowmans, Foxes, Keefers, Martzes, Dutters, Stulls, Renners, Crans, Flickingers, Bakers, and Grossnickles. The settlement in the district was first made about 1746.

Johnsville lies five miles from Union Bridge (Carroll Co.), and is pleasantly situated near Beaver Dam Creek. It took its name from the fact that when the village was first settled most of the Christian names of the first settlers were John. It has a large church of the Dunker congregation, a class of religionists very numerous in this district. Its physicians are Drs. Reuben Sidewell and his son, Frank H., and H. C. Devilbliss. The older Dr. Sidewell was born in Chester County, Pa., and has had a large and lucrative practice here since 1846.

Western Maryland Lodge, I. O. O. F., was instituted in 1879, and has its hall over Dr. Sidewell's office. The merchants of the village are C. E. Saylor, Frank Smith, and J. Shrieve & Co. Over Mr.
Saylor’s large store is a fine town hall. In 1846, when the village was fairly established, there was but one mail a week. Now the village has two each day.
The Methodist Protestant Church was organized about 1840, and became a part of Pike Creek Circuit, which was created in 1829. We give a list of the pastors on the circuit from 1829 to 1881:

1829, D. E. Reese, Sr.; 1830, F. Stier, J. Hanson; 1831, I. Ibbertson; 1832, I. Webster, C. W. Jacobs; 1832, W. Sex-smith; 1834, J. Varden, H. Doyle; 1835, H. Doyle, J. W.
Everist, A. A. Lipscomb; 1836, J. S. Reese, W. J. Porter;
1835, E. Henkle; 1839-40, G. D. Hamilton; 1840, B. App-pley; 1841, J. S. Reese, J. T. Ward; 1842, J. R. Reese, J. Elderdiee, P. L. Wilson; 1843, J. S. Reese, S. L. Rawleigh; 1844, W. Collier, J. L. McLean, J. D. Brooks; 1845, P. L. Wilson, J. K. Nichols; 1847, J. Morgan, T. D. Valtant; 1848, W. Roby; 1849, D. E. Reese; 1850, T. L.
McLean; 1851, H. P. Jordan, J. Roberts; 1852, H. J. Day;
1853, T. M. Wilson; 1854, J. A. McFadden; 1855, F.
Schwentzell; 1856, N. S. Greenway; 1857, J. T. Ward, J. T. Murray. In 1860 Liberty Circuit was created, consisting of Liberty, Johnsville, Woodborough, and Walkeraville. 1860, H. C. Cushing; 1862, J. T. Ward; 1864, D. A.
Shermer; 1866, D. W. Bates; 1869, F. Sventell; 1873,
E. R. McGregor; 1874, J. Roberts; 1876, J. R. Nichols;
1877, J. R. Nichols; 1880, J. M. Brown.

Ladiesburg was so called because some sixty years ago its population comprised seven ladies and only one gentleman. The happy individual was Samuel Birely, who died in 1877, aged eighty-three years.
The post-office was established in 1830.

It contains two dry-goods stores, one millinery-shop, one hay and straw-packing establishment, a shoe and blacksmith-shop, Adams Express office, and a water station on the Frederick Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It lies fourteen miles north of Frederick, within two miles of the Monocacy River, and near the Carroll County line. The surrounding country is agricultural in character. There are two churches, the Reformed and the Lutheran. The Winebrenna-rans have a congregation about a mile distant. A few Catholics are scattered throughout the neighborhood. The Dunkers, or German Baptists, are in large numbers a few miles south and east of the place. The location of the village is elevated and surrounded by hills, which are called the “Fox Mountains,” or “Fox Hills.” These hills are dotted with springs of the purest water, which seem to be inexhaustible.
This portion of the county is believed to have been a favorite spot with the Indians. The descendants of persons who lived there a century ago speak of reminiscences related by their ancestors, in which reference was made to large numbers of Indian graves formerly seen on the surrounding hills. Arrow-heads of stone are common objects upon the surface of the ground.
Along Big Pipe Creek, four miles distant, small elevations on the hillsides may still be seen which are supposed to be graves of the savages. Within three hundred yards of the village is an elevation on a levee plain of about twenty acres, which is encircled by slight hills. It is about seven feet high, and ninety yards in diameter in the widest portion. The plain and surrounding hills resemble an immense amphitheatre. Near Chaysville lave has been found in large quantities, which was evidently thrown out by a volcanic eruption many centuries ago.

On Nov. 16, 1826, John Evey had a saw-mill and marble quarry at Beaver Creek, then rented by Joseph Emmett, Jr. In June, 1777, Jacob Myers completed a wire-mill near Little Pipe Creek.

Dr. J. J. Leggett is the resident physician.

School-teachers in the district for term ending April 15, 1881:

School No. 1, 34 pupils, Luta O. Marks; No. 2, 81 pupils, D.
E. Hammond, Jennie Booker (assistant); No. 3, 32 pupils,
W. Emma Norris; No. 4, 22 pupils, N. M. Rice; No. 5, 28 pupils, Annie E. Kinzer; No. 6, 57 pupils, Martha J.
Ecker; No. 7, 59 pupils, Alma O. Thomas.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, No. 18.

Woodville, or Election District No. 18, was established according to an act of the Legislature adopted
April 1, 1872, out of portions of New Market (No. 9) and Liberty (No. 8). Its boundaries were designated, to wit: “Commencing at the junction of the Buffalo road and Talbot’s Branch; thence running with said branch to the crossing of the Unionville and Linganore public road; thence with said road to the old Annapolis road; thence with said Annapolis road to the intersection of the New Market road; thence with said road to Forest Grove school-house; thence with a straight line to the reservoir on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad known as No. 13; thence to the tobacco-house on the Kempstown road formerly owned by Brook Buckstone; thence with the Kempstown road to Penn’s shop on the Buffalo road; thence with the Buffalo road to the place of beginning.” The territory comprising this district as it now stands was set-led in part as early as 1740. It is situated in the southeast portion of the county, and is bounded by Carroll and Montgomery Counties and New Market and Liberty Districts. Among the first settlers may be mentioned the Clarys, Owens, Griffiths, Shipleys, Pooles, Vansants, Kimmels, and Lawrences. One of the first surveys was “Moab,” granted to one of the Clarys about 1743. Judge Samuel Chase owned a large tract of land, on which he built a two-story log house to which he came during the summer. His place was called "Pleasant Hall." This house stood until a few years ago, and was where Richard Vansant now lives, west of Mount Airy. There are yet standing two rows of cherry-trees planted by Judge Chase, which are now very large.
FREDERICK COUNTY.

Plane No. 4 is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, forty-six miles from Baltimore, seventeen from Frederick, and near the source of Bush Creek. This is the last plane on the railroad from the east, and in the early days of the road the cars were pulled by horses to the summit and then "braked" down the grade. The railroad company has a large engine-house and two engines to help east-bound freight-trains over the planes, and have a coal-shute for cooking all engines on main stem First Division. The engine-house is two and a quarter miles east of this plane. Two hundred tons of coal are daily loaded from the shutes into passing engines. B. G. Shipley is assistant superintendent of trains, and William R. Dorsey has charge of the coal-shute, which is worked with only six men. A. M. D. Mullinix is postmaster. P. G. M. Griffith keeps a general store, and Frank Bartholow operates a tannery.

Ridgeville is mostly in Carroll County, being divided from the Woodville District by the Buffalo road.

Woodville is three miles from Mount Airy, sixteen from Frederick, and thirty-three from Baltimore. F. S. Clary is clerk and postmaster; Dr. Richard S. Appington, physician; J. W. Condon, undertaker; J. Franklin, blacksmith; J. W. Harrison, J. H. Runnels, carpenters; E. Wilson, miller. Linganore village is seven miles from Mount Airy. The postmaster is Thornton Poole, who married a daughter of the well-known Dr. Beall Owens, and who is the merchant of the place. Moses Dutty and Samuel Reifsnyder are millers.

Sidney Grove Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Linganore, was organized in 1768. Its pastors have been:

1868, Rev. W. A. McDonald; 1876, J. T. Maxwell; 1871, A. Q. Fitzhary; 1873, David Bush; 1876, W. R. Stringer; 1879, M. G. Balthis.

West Falls is three miles from Mount Airy, twenty from Frederick, and forty from Baltimore. The Methodist Episcopal Church belongs to the Unionville circuit. J. C. Dutty is postmaster, and J. F. Hood assistant. The avocations embrace Dr. W. H. Gray, physician; J. F. Hood, merchant; J. A. Clary, miller; J. Ricehart, F. W. Gartrull, J. H. Devali, carpenters; H. Demmitt, wheelwright; C. Bear, D. Bear, J. Butler, L. J. T. Dorsey, blacksmiths.

The teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

Schoo1 No. 1, 32 pupils, C. Eugenia Hanna; No. 2, 31 pupils, Martha E. Breenean; No. 3, 30 pupils, J. M. Hanna; 42 pupils, Sue M. Garrett; No. 4, 53 pupils, Bessie Mussenter. No. 1 (colored), 38 pupils, E. B. Oranu.

Magistrates, Richard Vansant, Thornton Poole.

Parr's Springs.—At this noted resort the four counties of Frederick, Montgomery, Howard, and Carroll converge.

Mount Airy.—This place is in Carroll County, but is a large shipping station for Woodville District. The railroad grade from Plane No. 4 to this point is eighty-three feet to the mile.

LINGANORE DISTRICT, No. 19.

Linganore, or Election District No. 19, was laid out and established out of part of Liberty District (No. 8) by an act of General Assembly of March 29, 1878. Its boundaries were designated as follows: "Beginning at a white-oak tree at the intersection of the Copper-mine road with the Johnsville District line, running thence south to the spring-house of Henry Carter, thence with Spring Branch to New Liberty road, thence south to the bend in the public road west of the dwelling-house of William H. Baker, thence with said public road until it intersects the Woodville District line, thence with said line to the Carroll County line, thence with said Carroll County line until it intersects Johnsville District line, thence with said line to the place of beginning." This district was settled previous to 1752, and among the early families were those of Duddarers, Gaithers, Naills, Nicodemuses, Legenhocks, Peares, Ensors, Nussbaums, Devilbisses, Hammonds, Sappingtons, Bakers, Eckers. William Gaither came from Montgomery County and settled here at a very early period. His son William by his wife, a Mrs. Davis (née Howard), married a Miss Dorsey, and their son, John Gaither, is still living, one of the substantial men of the district.

Unionville.—This pretty village lies on the Liberty road, two miles east of Liberty and five from New Windsor, Carroll Co. The merchants are H. Lindsey and Norris & Urer. S. J. Norris is the postmaster. The physicians are Drs. G. R. Sappington and M. Whitehill. H. Brenneisen is the justice of the peace. The various industries are represented by P. Beach, J. C. Gilbert, shoemakers; Charles Brenneisen, painter; Brenneisen & Bro., photographers; J. E. Brenneisen, wagon-maker; B. Buckingham, J. Dutty, blacksmiths; E. D. Dauner, huckster; J. W. Enry, J. Whitehill, B. F. Nicodemus, millers; G. P. Gosnell, harness-maker; D. Hartsock, undertaker; J. A. Stitley, carpenter. The Methodist Episcopal Church is the largest and oldest in Unionville or vicinity, having been in existence for sixty years.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South, belonging to the Baltimore Annual Conference, was organized in 1868. The church edifice was dedicated in 1869, and is called "Pearre Chapel," after Rev. James Pearre, a wealthy and benevolent citizen, who built it at his own expense. Its pastors have been:

This church is on a circuit composed of New Market, Sidney Grove, Denny's Post-office, Franklinville, and Unionville. This circuit has one parsonage and five church edifices, all built since 1868 and paid for. Circuit membership, 350.

May 15, 1868, a dispensation was granted to James D. McCabe, Edward D. Damer, John P. Naill, Wm. M. Naill, Lewis Kelly, David Nussbaum, David Glass, and John M. Glass to form a Masonic lodge. James D. McCabe was appointed W. M.; Edward D. Damer, S. W.; and John P. Naill, J. W. Nov. 16, 1868, the Grand Lodge issued a regular charter to Linganore Lodge, No. 137, at Unionville, retaining the same officers as under the dispensation. The officers for 1881 were:

W. M., Rufus W. Devilbiss; S. W., Peter Lugenbeel; J. W., George D. Norris; Sec., Daniel Hartsook; Treas., Peter Suckbier.

Edward D. Damer, Past Master, was Worshipful Master for eleven years of this lodge.

Its membership is about 30.

David and Jonathan Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., is one of the most flourishing in the county.

The school-teachers for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 54 pupils, Laura Garrett, E. Atkinson (assistant); No. 2, 67 pupils, H. L. Biell; No. 3, 50 pupils, Lilie Hill, Colored schools.—No. 2, 54 pupils, Fannie Sim; No. 3, 17 pupils, Louise Locks.

Oak Orchard is five miles from New Windsor, Carroll Co. The ore-mines on the farm of Elijah C. Ensor have been reopened, and are superintended by John Smeltzer, of Wrightsville, Pa.

John T. Barnes is postmaster.

The industries are Noah I. Franklin, merchant; John E. Waltz, carriage-maker; John Summerville, undertaker; Jacob H. Naill, E. C. Ensor, millers; A. Alexander, blacksmith; M. L. Devilbiss, A. Miller, carpenters; W. H. Fisher, W. H. Garber, shoemakers; J. P. Naill, huckster.

David W. Naill, of this district, while a member of the State Senate, was the author of the inscription that the State put on the block it contributed to Washington's Monument, in Washington City, to wit: "Maryland,—the memorial of her regard for the Father of his Country, and of his cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment for the American Union." Mr. Naill's house, a stone structure, was built in 1771 by Solomon and Susan Miller, on a tract of land taken up in 1727 by James Carroll, and called "Park Hall." Mr. Naill was largely engaged in the milling business near Bethel church.

LEWISTOWN DISTRICT, No. 20.

By the act of April 5, 1878, of General Assembly, Lewistown, or Election District No. 20, was laid out and established out of portions of Frederick and Cragertown Districts. Its designated boundaries are as follows: "Beginning at the southwest corner of Mechanistown District line and running with said Election District line, bearing slightly northeast, to the crossing of the road leading from Eicholtz' mills to Lewistown, at a point near the dwelling-house of A. G. P. Wiles; thence in a southeasterly direction to the Woodsborough Election District line on the Monocacy River, touching the north corner of George L. Devilbiss' dwelling-house, and with the Woodsborough Election District line on a southerly course to Biggs' ford on the Monocacy River; thence bearing a northwesterly course to the north corner of Bethel Church; thence bearing still a northwesterly course to intersect the Catoctin Election District line at a point where the said line strikes the Hanover road; and thence with Catoctin District line in a northerly direction to the place of beginning." It is bounded by Cragertown on the north, Woodsborough on the east, Frederick on the south, and Catoctin on the west. This portion of the county was settled about 1745, and the early families were those of John Devilbiss, the Hills (soldiers in the Hessian regiments), Cronises, Schaefer, Leathermans, Cramers, Ramsburgs, Poos, Wetzel, Eichelbergers, and Snooks. Simon Snook entered two large tracts of land on the Monocacy, and married Charlotte Keller. Their son Jacob, who died in 1811, was the father of the venerable Daniel Snook, now in his eighty-second year.

The Snooks' surveys were called "No help for my loss" and "Silver Mot." In this district was the famous "Devilbiss Camp-meeting Ground," near the foot of the mountain.
Once when Elder Gruber was holding there a big camp-meeting a mob of mountaineers came down and raised a disturbance by taking down the ropes of the tents and otherwise creating trouble. The Methodists, to avoid a repetition on the following day, tarred the ropes, by which means the offenders were recognized, as they got tan on their clothes in their second attempt to pull down the tents. The rioters then gathered together and marched around the grounds singing, "Old Daddy Gruber tarred the ropes, oh, glory Hal- lelujah," etc., and nearly broke up the meeting.

Lewistown.—Daniel Fundenberg laid out the village in 1815. The grist-mill now operated by John C. Derr was built about 1824 by John Brue, who subsequently sold it to Frederick A. Schley, who conveyed it to the present proprietor. Fishing Creek runs through the village, and on it is the woolen-factory of William B. Taylor & Son. It was built over fifty years ago by John Cronise, who in 1837 sold it with the land, nineteen and three-fourths acres, parts of surveys "Trifle" and "Ogle's Necessary Compact," to John W. Derr. While the latter owned it, and when operated by his tenant or lessee, Mr. Routzahn, it burned down. Mr. Derr rebuilt it, and afterwards sold the property to David Study, who later conveyed the same to Sarah A. Taylor, of whom the present proprietors purchased it in 1880. It manufactures carpets, overrids, blankets, and woolen fabrics generally. The village is on the Emmittsburg road, ten miles from Frederick and five from Harmony Grove. It contains Lewistown Grange, No. 134, P. of H., of which George W. Miller is Master, and J. D. English, secretary. At an early date a distillery was located here and operated by a Mr. Eichelberger. O. T. Zimmerman has had a store here for twenty years, and the other merchant is A. N. Cramer, the postmaster, who came about three years ago. C. D. Keyser has a cabinet-shop, George H. Clem a hotel, and Dr. J. K. Waters is the physician.

The Methodist Protestant Church edifice was built in 1857, previous to which the congregation worshiped in a log house erected years ago, but now used by the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church for their services. The Methodist Protestant Church was organized in 1847 under the pastorate of Rev. P. L. Wilson, but previously Rev. Dr. John S. Reese had preached. The subsequent pastors were Revs. Mills, J. E. Maloy, Arnett, H. C. Littleton, D. Shirmer, Evans, Reese, and J. K. Nichols. Its Sunday-school superintendent is J. W. Clem. W. H. Todd has been trustee since its organization.

The Methodist Episcopal church, of which Rev. W. O. Eldridge is present pastor, was erected in 1833.

It belongs to a circuit consisting of Emmittsburg, Mechanistown, Maple Chapel, Tom's Creek, Middleburg, and Keys' School-house. Some of its pastors have been Revs. Isaac Collins, Holland, George Brooks, Joseph Prance, Joseph Cooper, Keith, D. Moore, W. H. Koontz, Heming, Maxwell, and West. It has a fine bell and organ. It is located near the village on a high hill, and commands one of the finest views in the county. The substantial brick school-house was built in 1868.

Utica.—This place is on the Emmittsburg and Frederick road, eight miles north of Frederick and three and a half from Walkersville, on the Frederick and Pennsylvania Line Railroad. The first settler near it was Valentine Bowersocks, who located in the neighborhood about 1770, and built the first house near the village. Jacob Cronise was the founder of the village, and erected the mill and stone mansion-house. The first store was kept by a Mr. Cde in 1830, and the present store is owned by A. M. Geesey. In 1830, William Todd, of Lancaster County, Pa., removed here and purchased the mill erected three years before. Mr. Todd built up the town, and his son, William H. Todd, now owns and operates the merchant-mill, which sends its flour to New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia. St. Paul's Reformed and Lutheran church (Jointly) was built in 1839. Its pastors are Revs. Sheerin A. Hedges (Lutheran) and Henck (Reformed). Mr. Hedges also preaches at Creagerstown and Bethel. O. T. Zimmerman is superintendent of the Reformed, and Andrew Walker of the Lutheran, Sunday-school. Revs. Summers and Unruh were former Lutheran pastors here. In olden times the Reformers, Dunkers, Lutherans, and Methodists used to worship in an old log church, to which was added, about 1800, a stone structure under the preaching of Rev. Nicholas Sneed, a noted circuit-rider of frontier days. Dr. J. K. Waters is the only physician.

Augustus Clem started in 1876, at Utica, a small paper called the Sunbeam, which was published monthly with a limited circulation, but was afterwards merged into The Visitor. It is yet published, and is devoted to religious and literary matters.

Other Villages.—Hensonville is a village on the Emmittsburg road, five and a half miles from Frederick and two and a half from Harmony Grove. Its postmaster is W. H. Ramsburg. Its industries are H. A. Buecky, tanner; Gipson Dunlap, tailor; J. E. Palmer, wagon-maker; and William Frey and Daniel Sunday, lime-burners. By a special act of the Maryland Legislature liquors are prohibited from being sold within three miles of this village.
Harmony Grove, a pretty hamlet, is situated on the Frederick and Pennsylvania Line Railroad, two and a half miles from Frederick. It has a Methodist Protestant church and a public school. N. R. Plummer is postmaster, and keeps a grain-store, etc. J. C. Cronise, Thomas Miller, Abraham Trimmer, and W. J. Warman are millers; J. Mecafe, millwright; and H. C. Grabenhorst, dairyman.

The school-teachers of the district for the term ending April 15, 1881, were:

School No. 1, 115 pupils, J. P. Delander, Maggie Agnew, assistant; No. 2, 54 pupils, H. L. Gaver; No. 3, 58 pupils, L. H. Warrenfoits. No. 1 (colored), 33 pupils, Hiram Clapper.

Magistrates, Henry Eaton, Samuel Heffner.

In 1812, sub-committees from the different election districts met “in general committee” at the Washington Hotel, in Fredericktown, for the purpose of recommending four candidates for the General Assembly. Among the members we find the names of Ignatius Davis, Samuel M. Thomas, and John M. Cromwell from District No. 1; Col. Stephen Steiner, Henry Steiner, Otho Lawrence, and John Brengle from District No. 2; William Hillary, John S. Frazier, and Levin Hayes from District No. 3; James Johnson and Maj. William Head from District No. 4; Joseph Hewes, Dr. Robert L. Annan, and William Emmitt from District No. 5; John Ross Key and Joseph Taney from District No. 6; Gen. Robert Cummings, Col. Henry Barrick, Joshua Delaplaine, and Sebastian Graff from District No. 7; and Col. Philip McElfresh, Capt. Eli Brashear, Maj. Daniel James, and Basil Dorsey from District No. 9. Col. Philip McElfresh was appointed chairman, and Matthew Brown secretary, and it was unanimously decided to recommend Maj. John Graham, Ignatius Davis, Joshua Delaplaine, and Richard Potts to the voters of Frederick County. Political contests three-quarters of a century ago were not by any means free from the acerbities which so often disfigure the campaigns of our own day. In the memorable contest between George Baer and Gen. Samuel Ringgold, candidates for Congress in 1796, one of the most effective “points” made against the general was an alleged expression of his reflecting on the German element of the population. In those days “polities” was an expensive luxury—as it still continues to be—for any one who would spend his money. Of Gen. Ringgold, for instance, it is related that just before election he would ride all over the county in his carriage and four, and wherever he found a family in distress or a farm to be sold by the sheriff he would give the needed relief in hard cash, declaring, generally, that none of his constituents should suffer as long as he could prevent it.

Montgomery County.

CHAPTER XXXII.

INTRODUCTORY.

The territory now embraced by Montgomery County was originally a portion of Prince George’s, but was segregated in 1748, when it became a portion of the new county of Frederick, created in that year, and comprising all the land lying west of a line drawn from the mouth of Rock Creek, through a portion of the District of Columbia, to the Patuxent River, an immense but comparatively unknown section of the State, which was destined eventually to be divided into six counties, and to comprise much of the most valuable territory in Maryland, and to contain a population which, for industry, enterprise, and all the elements which constitute the worth and importance of a community, is unsurpassed in America. That portion which now forms the county of Montgomery was partially settled very early in the history of the province of Maryland. The pioneers who came over in the “Ark” and the “Dove” and their immediate successors were an active, pushing race of people, who fully appreciated the gravity of the situation in which they had placed themselves. They knew their lives were to be toilsome and beset with many dangers and adversities, but the love of adventure which had brought them to the New World doubtless sustained their spirits under innumerable trials, and goaded their restless nature to fresh explorations. Many of them soon tired of the monotony of the peninsula, and in canoes and by bridle-paths over land worked their way to the interior of the country. The broad waters of the Potomac and Patuxent were invitingly open to them, and the sound as well as just and upright policy pursued towards the Indians by the early colonists reduced to a minimum the dangers from this source.

We have seen in the introductory to the history of Frederick County how Henry Fleet in 1625, nine years prior to the settlement of St. Mary’s, ascended the Potomac to the head of navigation and was made captive by the Indians. In his journal he gives a very graphic description of the country, and those familiar with it will recognize in Tohoga the site of Georgetown, and in the place “where the river is not above twelve fathoms broad” the narrows immediately below the Little Falls and in the neighborhood of the bridge.

At the time of the first settlement of the province the Indians who inhabited the territory along the line of the Potomac, in the neighborhood of Rockville and the District of Columbia, belonged to the Piscataway confederacy, whose emperor was chief of all the tribes on the Potomac. Piscataway was originally the seat of this great chief and his tribe, and was situated on a creek of that name, about sixteen miles below Washington City. The Piscataway confederacy numbered at least six tribes, among which were the Panunkies, Piscataways, and Anacostians. Deeds can be found recorded among the land records of Prince George’s County, at Upper Marlboro, made by the emperor of the Piscatawys to the purchasers of his land. The power of this great chief is shown in the fact that upon his arrival with his colonists in the Potomac in 1634, Governor Leonard Calvert found it necessary to leave his companions and go in person from St. Clement’s Island to Piscataway to meet the emperor and treat with him about settling in his dominions. This Calvert did, previously to his landing at St. Mary’s, and received from the great chief the celebrated answer, “I will neither bid you go nor stay.” As we have shown in the history of Frederick County, the Jesuit priests of St. Mary’s in 1643 sent Father White, one of their number, as a missionary to this tribe, and such was his success that among others he baptized the emperor and his family. He did not, however, remain long, as he, together with all the other priests, were driven out of the province during the ascendancy and misrule of Ingle in 1645, under color of authority from the English Parliament.

But as early as when Father White was among the Piscataway tribes land had been taken up by some of the colonists on the creek below, where the town of Piscataway now stands. The first evidence we have of any great body of settlers in this neighborhood is to be found in the old vestry-book of Piscataway Parish, under date of Jan. 30, 1694, which is as follows: “By a sufficient and lawful authority the inhabitants of Piscataway parish, having met at the house of John Addison, Esq., in said parish, elected the said John Addison foreman, William Hatton, John Smith, William Hutchinson, William Tannehill, and John Swallwell to be vestrymen in said parish; and they ordered that the forty pounds per poll be paid to John Addison, Esq., and William Hutchinson, and that they do employ carpenters for building a church.” The parish was created under the act of 1692, being one of the original thirty parishes into which the province of Maryland was then divided.

The church was built at the head of Back Creek, which makes out from the Potomac River at what is now Fort Washington. The first rector was the Rev. George Tubman, and upon the creation of Prince George’s County, in 1695, Piscataway Parish became its western half. In 1701, Mr. Tubman was succeeded by Rev. Robert Owen, and in 1710 he was followed by Rev. John Frazier, who married in the county, and afterwards purchased and settled on an estate called “Blue Plains,” on the Maryland side of the Potomac, opposite Alexandria, Va.

The settlements in this neighborhood increased rapidly, and, as will be seen in the sketch of the Episcopal Church in this county, soon grew strong enough to erect a church building about where the town of Rockville now stands. At a very early period, perhaps about 1695, this immediate vicinity received a large accession to its population from the Scotch refugees, who, despairing of the fortunes of the House of Stuart, took refuge in large numbers in the province. From this colony, and those who followed them in 1715-17 and 1745, sprang many of the leading families of Montgomery and Prince George’s Counties, their names attesting their strength. Such was their number and influence that about 1695 one of the county districts, or hundreds, as they were then called, was named “New Scotland.”

In after-years the Six Nations, by the accession of the Tuscaroras, who inhabited the head-waters of the Potomac about Harper’s Ferry, claimed title to a portion of the county, and no doubt gave names to the Seneca, Monocacy, and the Tuscarora streams, but had no permanent residence within the county borders. Besides deer, buffaloes, bears, and turkeys, this country also abounded in wolves, for as late as 1797 an act of Assembly was passed (for Montgomery County) offering a reward of thirty dollars for the head of every wolf over six months old, and four dollars for every one under that age. The first settlers speedily made clearings in the forest and reduced the land to cultivation, the remunerative prices obtained for tobacco (which could be nowhere else so successfully grown as in these lands) stimulating their enterprise. In fact, the growth of tobacco was pursued in Montgomery, as in other sections of the State, to such an extent that the lands were finally impoverished, and it was only by a radical change in the system of farming and in the character of the crops that Montgomery County has been raised to the standard of productive ness which it now maintains as one of the leading counties of Maryland. Many of the old houses, built of brick and stone, attest the possession of considerable wealth and great social refinement among the planters. The brick used in the construction of houses, churches, and public buildings generally were often brought from England as ballast by vessels returning after having taken out cargoes of tobacco from the "plantations." The farm-house of that day was generally a square substantial building with large halls and roomy, high-ceiled apartments, in which the planter dispensed a generous and often courtly hospitality. The table always contained an abundance of food, and the style of living was liberal, not to say prodigal. Farther up the county, in the section bordering on Frederick, many German immigrants from Pennsylvania settled, and these, together with the English and other colonists, were forced by their remoteness from navigable water to restrict themselves to timber for building purposes. In most cases these wooden buildings were large log cabins, chinked with clay or mortar, and having a chimney built on the outside, generally of stones or pieces of timber plastered with clay. These structures, though not inviting, were warm and dry in winter and cool in summer. All the barns and tobacco-houses were constructed on a similar plan. The log houses were seldom more than one story high, but they generally had large garret-rooms and a deep cellar.

In the unsettled districts the log cabin became what was known as a "half-faced camp," generally used by a hunter. This was a log cabin inclosed on three sides, the front being protected by a sort of veranda. The great advantage of these houses was their cheapness and the fact that they could be erected without the aid of a carpenter. As soon as the logs were collected and dressed the neighbors assembled, and the house was "raised" by their joint efforts. A jollification always ensued, much after the style of the apple-butter and quilting parties of New England, or the husking matches at the South. The furniture in these dwellings was, of course, of the simplest description, but in the houses of the planters farther south and east it was more costly, much of it being mahogany. Throughout Western Maryland the bedroom furniture consisted generally of painted bedsteads, with straw beds and feather beds for covering, and a chair or two. The housekeeping was always clean and neat, and the German housewife especially was noted for her skill in preparing butter and cheese, and for her industry and deftness in weaving and knitting. Apple and cherry orchards were to be found on nearly every farm, and the cellar was generally well stocked with excellent home-brewed beer and cider. Slave-labor was largely employed in Montgomery County, and colored labor continues to be generally used, although the farmers themselves and their families are almost invariably hard-working, thrifty, and energetic. In the old times the servants' "quarter" was not infrequently the largest building on the estate. Occasionally, however, it was a succession of cabins, each of which contained several families, though sometimes, as a special favor, one family was permitted to occupy a building alone. Vast tracts of land were tilled by single proprietors, but there was also a thrifty middle class, which had practically no existence as a farming community in the more southern counties, and to this class Montgomery owes in a great measure her present prosperity, although it is only just to add that many of her most industrious and successful farmers and business men are descendants of large planters of the last century. Montgomery, in fact, was particularly fortunate in the composition of her early population, which was a harmonious blending of the English colonists of wealth and influence and of those energetic German and Scotch-Irish settlers from the North who carved their fortunes with their hands. They multiplied and prospered, and nothing occurred to mar the harmony of their lives or disturb the even tenor of their way until the breaking out of the French war and the defeat of Braddock in 1755.

The invasion of the western frontier of the province by the French and the Indians from Fort Du Quesne created great excitement and anxiety while it lasted, but a force from the lower district of Frederick County (now Montgomery) under Col. Ridgely and Capt. Alexander Beall marched to the rescue and allayed the fears of the settlers. The rapid settlement of Frederick County and its unwieldy proportions soon suggested the propriety of a division to accommodate the necessities of the citizens, and on the 31st of August, 1776, Dr. Thomas Sprigg Wootton, a member of the State Convention, introduced a bill for the division of Frederick County into three distinct municipalities. The bill was read and ordered to lie on the table. It was called up and passed by a small majority, Sept. 6, 1776, and thus two new counties, Washington and Montgomery, were created.

The language of the act relating to the latter is as follows:

"Resolved, That after the first day of October next such part of the said county of Frederick as is contained within the bounds and limits following, to wit: beginning at the east side of the mouth of Rock Creek, on the Potomac River, and running thence with the said river to the mouth of Monocacy, then with a straight line to Parr's Spring, from thence with the lines of the county to the beginning, shall be and is hereby erected into a new county called Montgomery County."

The county was formed at the outset of that fierce struggle which resulted in the independence of the in the fatigues and dangers of a war instituted for the defense of the community of which he was an adopted member. His well-known character was almost equally esteemed by the friends and foes of the side which he had espoused. In America he was regarded as a martyr to the liberties of mankind; in Great Britain, as a misguided, good man, sacrificing what he supposed to be the rights of his country. His name was mentioned in Parliament with singular respect. Some of the most powerful speakers in that assembly displayed their eloquence in sounding his praises and lamenting his fate. Those in particular who had been his fellow-soldiers in the previous war eulogized on his many virtues. The minister himself acknowledged his worth, while he reproached the cause for which he fell. He concluded an involuntary panegyric by saying, 'Curses on his virtues, they have undone his country!''

A monument of white marble was erected to his memory by order of Congress in front of St. Paul's church, New York. It bears this inscription:

“This Monument Was erected by order of Congress, 25th January, 1776, To transmit to posterity A grateful remembrance of the Patriotism, conduct, enterprise, and Perseverance of Major-General Richard Montgomery; Who, after a series of success, Amidst the most discouraging difficulties, Fell in the attack On Quebec, 31st of December, 1775, Aged 38 years.'

The remains of Gen. Montgomery, after remaining forty-two years in their original burying-place, were brought to the city of New York, July 8, 1818, and interred near the monument in St. Paul's church with great pomp and ceremony. It may be naturally inferred that a people who would select such a name for their county would occupy no doubtful position in the contest then convulsing the colonies. Nowhere in the State was there exhibited more intense repugnance to the arbitrary measures of Great Britain or more ardent patriotism. The first public meeting in Frederick County was held at Hungerford's tavern (now Rockville, the county-seat of Montgomery), to take action in favor of American freedom and secure the repeal of the obnoxious laws. In the subsequent war Montgomery furnished a very large proportion of the troops which composed the Maryland line, and though many perished on the battle-fields of the Revolution, the following officers became members of The Society of the Cincinnati at the conclusion of the war: C. Ricketts, lieutenant; Lloyd Beall, captain; Samuel B. Beall, lieutenant; Henry Gaither, captain; Richard Anderson, captain; James McCubbin Lungan, captain; Richard Chiderson, captain; David Lynn, captain.
In addition to the members of that society there were
Col. Charles Greenbury Griffith and Richard Brooke;
Capts. Edward Burgess and Robert Briscoe; Lieuts.
Greenbury Gaither, John Gaither, Elisha Beall, Elisha
Williams, John Lynn, and John Court Jones; Ensigs
Thomas Edmondson, John Griffith, and William Lamar; and Quartermaster Richard Thompson.

Montgomery County is bounded on the north by Frederick and Howard Counties, on the east by the counties of Howard and Prince George's, on the south by District of Columbia and the Potomac River, and on the west by the Potomac River. The latter separates the county from the State of Virginia, and the Patuxent River forms the boundary line between Montgomery and Howard. The number of acres comprised within the present limits of the county is 242,356, of which about 175,000 acres are under cultivation, 60,000 are woodland, and the balance unimproved. The land is rolling in character, naturally fertile and productive, and very favorably situated for agricultural purposes. A network of fresh, limpid streams covers the surface of the county, affording ample power for milling purposes, as well as abundant water for farming and grazing. Aside from the Potomac and Patuxent Rivers, which bound the county respectively on the west and east, there are a large number of tributaries, among which are Rock Creek, Great, Little, and Dry Seneca, Little Monocacy, Muddy Branch, Broad Run, Bennett's and Crab's creeks. The Washington Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad passes near the eastern boundary of the county, and the Metropolitan Branch of the same road runs almost directly through the centre from south to north. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which follows the Potomac, runs along its southwest border, and it will thus be readily observed that Montgomery possesses unusual facilities for traffic with leading commercial centres.

Montgomery embraces an area of five hundred and eight square miles, which comprises all the varieties of soil formed from the disintegration of the volcanic rocks, such as red and white isinglass, hornblende, sometimes called rotten rock, mica slate, with the addition of a distinct variety known as the red lands, a valuable kind of soil, which results from the disintegration of red sandstone. Its soils have in them all of the elements of fertility, some in the largest proportions, and can be improved to a degree equal to the best Pennsylvania and New York lands. The progress made in the past two decades has shown this by noted examples of great improvement in apparently completely worn-out and impoverished soils.
These with skill and care have become as productive as many of the best lands in the State, and at a cost less than is required to put in cultivation the wild lands of the West and Northwest, to which immigration, especially from foreign countries, has been directed. The soil varies greatly, the western or upper part of the county being a finely-cultivated and fertile region, while the more northern portion, although thickly settled, is a thinner and poorer soil. The eastern section, near to Howard and Prince George's Counties, is mostly a light sandy loam, with some clay lands, and exhibits, in its vast improvements about Sandy Spring, what may be accomplished by industrious, skillful tillage. These lands, which were formerly almost a wilderness, with only a nominal value, have become an excellent farming district.
The part binding the District of Columbia, from its proximity to Washington, is being cultivated largely as market farms, to supply the great demands of the District population, and it is the residence of many of the most wealthy and influential citizens of the national capital, who have sought the pure air of the country in preference to the marshes of the Potomac.
The climate is temperate and favorable to general agriculture, and the winters are seldom too cold for out-door cattle-feeding. Oak in all its varieties, hickory, poplar, chestnut, pine, walnut, birch, maple, sycamore, and ash constitute the timber growths. Its chief products are wheat, corn, oats, and tobacco, large crops of the latter being raised in its western limits on the red lands. The splendid grass crops are favorable to the breeding of superior horses, cattle, sheep, and other live-stock, and from the herds in this county numerous specimens have been selected for exportation to other States. The best judges have pronounced it particularly valuable for wool-growing, and some of the Northern wool-growers are meditating its selection as a location for the pursuit of their calling. Gneiss, serpentine, red sandstone, temixed with shale, limestone, trap, and quartz are the prevailing rock formations. Entering the county from the northwest, red sandstone makes its appearance, and is extensively quarried near the mouth of Seneca Creek; it is succeeded by argillites, and, within a short distance of Rockville, by the serpentine formation, containing beds of chromiferous iron. This is the centre of a group of primary rocks which occupies nearly the whole of the county, the rocks of this group being principally granitic,—gneiss, hornblende, micaceous and talcose slates of chrom-iferous iron, which are used for the production of pigments and dyes. Ores of manganese are found, and gold was discovered in 1848. Chrome ore is found and manufactured in the northern part. The Seneca sandstone is worked at the extensive quarries on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal at the mouth of Seneca Creek. It was largely used in the construction of the canal, and also in the public buildings in Washington City, notably the Smithsonian Institute. It is easily quarried and dressed, being somewhat soft when first taken out. The county contains other fine building-stone, among which are excellent varieties of granite. Near Hyattstown, in the northwest, a quarry of roofing-slate has been opened. Copper ores have been discovered, and chromite ores occur at many points in a serpentine formation which stretches from near New Lisbon, in Carroll County, through Montgomery County, four miles west of Rockville, nearly to the Potomac River. The ore has been worked at several points, and is found to vary considerably in quality. From the extent of this formation, future explorations will no doubt develop these ores in the largest and richest quantities. Black oxide of manganese occurs one mile and a half west of Brookville, but the workings which were commenced were suspended.

The geographical situation of the county is excellent. Located midway between the level tide-water lands bordering on the Chesapeake and the mountainous country embraced within the shadows of the Blue Ridge and the Alleghanies, it possesses the advantages of both. Without the miasma of the former, it has the sloping roads with easy grades and the healthy features of the latter without its hills and declivities.

Parr's Ridge enters Montgomery County at the northern corner, declining in elevation to the Potomac. At Damascus the elevation is seven hundred feet; at Clarkesburg, six hundred and fifty feet. The ridge at Barnesville is five hundred and fifty feet. It is drained on the northwest by Bennett's Creek into the Monocacy. Damascus is situated at the junction of Parr's Ridge and the Southeast Ridge, which forms the basin of Seneca Creek, the stream which draws or drains all its waters inside the county, and drains about one-third the whole area.

The Southeast Ridge to Laytonsville, where the elevation is six hundred and fifteen feet, divides the streams flowing into the Potomac on the northeast from the streams forming the head-waters of Seneca on the southwest. From near Laytonsville the ridge divides, and one spur runs south to the Potomac. The ridge from Laytonsville to where the Metropolitan Branch road crosses it at an elevation of five hundred and fifteen feet divides the streams flowing into the Seneca on the northwest from the streams passing the head-waters of Rock Creek on the southeast.

At the Metropolitan Branch road the ridge divides and a spur runs west to Darnestown, where it has an elevation of four hundred and fifty feet. Thence the ridge runs southwest to the Potomac. This ridge divides the waters drained into the Seneca on the northwest side from the waters drained into Muddy Branch on the southeast side. The principal ridge (on the south side of the main road from the District of Columbia to Frederick City) again divides, and while the main ridge continues south of the Potomac, and from the southeast of the basin of Muddy Branch, it also forms the northeast side of the valley of Watts' Branch. The ridge from the junction or divide referred to runs southeast to the Potomac at Georgetown, and divides the waters flowing into Rock Creek on the northeast side. Rockville, the county-seat, is located on this ridge at an elevation of four hundred and fifty feet. At Rockville the ridge again divides, and the other side runs south to the Great Falls of the Potomac. This ridge forms the southeast side of the valley of Watts' Branch and the northwest side of the valley of Cabin John.

At the divide referred to at Laytonsville the ridge running south to Mechanicsville divides the waters of Hawling's River (a tributary of the Patuxent) on the northeast side from part of the head-waters on the southwest side that flow into the basin of Rock Creek. At Mechanicsville the ridge has an elevation of five hundred and forty feet, and again divides, one ridge running south, then turning to the southeast continues to the Potomac at Washington City, and forms the east and northeast side of the curve of the valley of Rock Creek, and the southwest side of the basin of the Northwest Branch.

The ridge running from Damascus through Laytonsville to Mechanicsville continues a southeast course through Sandy Spring to Spencerville, thence into the waters of Patuxent from the waters of the Northwest Branch.

The streams of the county, their fall and volume of water, next claim attention. As remarked above, Bennett's Creek derives its head-waters from the northwest side of Parr's Ridge. The main stream and tributaries have a water-power of about two hundred feet. 1 The Little Monocacy, also on the northwest

---

1 The rivers of Maryland, with rare exceptions, took their names from the Indians who lived on their borders, and were generally given for some peculiarities which they possessed. Some of the streams which now courseLastly through Montgomery, their beds filled up by the caving of the banks and the debris of immemorial forest-trees, were in the early days, before railroads and turnpikes were known, of paramount importance to those who tilled the soil in Montgomery and the neighboring counties. The Patuxent was navigable for conside of Parr's Ridge, has an available water-power of about one hundred feet. Southwest of the village of Poolesville (which has an elevation of about four hundred and fifty feet) Broad Run takes its rise, and has a water-power of fifty feet. The main stream of considerable vessels as far up as Bladensburg. There is reason to believe that Henry Fleet, on his visit to this section, before the arrival of the colonists, pushed through the country as far as Little Monocacy, which was at that time a far more pretentious stream than is now the river into which it empties. It was capable of bearing on its bosom vessels of heavy burden, and was a powerful auxiliary to the farmer. Tradition says that the early settlers of Maryland and Virginia ascended this river as far as the falls at the old Hampton mill. The original Indian names were Menagassi, Menakeesi, Monakeesi, and Monoc-kissey, which have been modernized into Monocacy. These words are derived from Maskane, strong and rapid; Mashanne, a rapid stream; and Okkehanne, a crooked or winding stream. Heckewelder, from these derivations, believes the meaning of Menagassi to be a rapid stream containing several great bends or windings.

Pa, or Paw, in the dialects of some of the tribes of the Five Nations, means small. Taxet, or taxent, conveys the idea of a place where something descends or falls, as a stream or river. Patuxent, therefore, means probably a stream or river small or narrow at the falls. The original name of the river Potomac was Pedhanock. Ped signifies waves or swells, frothing restlessly, as if driven by the winds, or forced along by a rapid current. Oconhanc means a stream flowing through pine-trees; kithanne, main or superior stream; kithamme, two streams flowing into one, as the North and South Branches of the Potomac, or the Potomac and Shenandoah. Both khaum and hame have about the name meaning. Pedhanne, or Pedhanme, therefore, may signify a river or stream with high frothy waves or waves. Pedhanmock, however, has been modernized into Potomac, and implies a stream issuing from a mountain. Webster defines the Potomac as "a place of the burning pine, resembling a council fire," and Heckewelder says the word Pedhanmeck, or Portomack, signifies "they are coming by water." Between these two authorities there is a vast difference, and probably the best way to reconcile them is to combine their definitions, which would give as the meaning of the word "a river of high and frothy waves issuing from a mountain by the burning pine in two streams, which flow together and form the main stream of the country." Kit, in the language of the Delawares, signifies great; as kithamm, two great streams coming together, hamme being the plural of home, and the word may refer to the Shenandoah and Potomac coming together at Harper's Ferry. Three of the streams of the county have the name of Seneca, not presumably after the distinguished Roman philosopher of that name, as the Indians of that date never displayed any taste for or knowledge of the classics. The Indian word shunne signifies story, and home a river or stream. Sumilke is a derivation from the first name, and signifies the same. Both have been modernized into Senegar, and mean a story, creek, stream, or river, and the lapse of time has possibly caused the original name to be changed to Seneca. Simepkella includes the adjective, subject, predicate, and object, and signifies strong water rushing over rocks and stones. This is the original name of Seneca Falls, and gives color to the above inference, though the river might possibly have been named after the Seneca tribe of Indians, at one time so numerous and formidable in Western New York, as well as in Western Maryland.

the Seneca has an available water-power of about two hundred and seventy-five feet; its tributary, Dry Seneca, and tributaries, about one hundred and fifty feet; Little Seneca has a fall of about one hundred and eighty feet; its tributary, Buck Lodge, about sixty feet; Ten-Mile Creek, about sixty feet,—making a total of three hundred feet. Long Draught has a water-power of about fifty feet; Gunners' Branch, about fifty feet; Wheatstone, over fifty feet; Cabin Branch, about fifty feet; Goshen Branch, about fifty feet; Wild Cat, fifty feet; Magruder's Branch, fifty feet; and Darby's Branch, fifty feet,—making a total for Seneca and tributaries of eleven hundred feet of available water-power. Seneca, at the junction with the Potomac, is one hundred and eighty feet above tide; below the mouth of Long Draught, two hundred and sixty-four feet; at the crossing of the Metropolitan Branch Road, two hundred and eighty feet; at Middlebrook, three hundred and eight feet; at the mouth of Goshen Branch, three hundred and forty-nine feet; at the mouth of Wild Cat, three hundred and seventy-five feet; at the mouth of Magruder's Branch, four hundred and thirty feet; and at Darby's Mill, about four hundred and fifty feet above tide.

The Patuxent, though larger than Seneca, derives a large portion of its head-waters from Howard County. The Cat-Tail creek, its principal tributary, at its junction with the Patuxent, above Triadelphia, drains an area in Howard County of about eighteen thousand acres; while its principal, the Patuxent, above the junction drains an area in Howard and Montgomery Counties of about twenty-two thousand acres. Hawling's River, a tributary of the Patuxent, at the crossing of the Laytonsville and Unity road, is about four hundred and fifty feet above tide; at A. B. Davis' mill, three hundred and seventy-five feet; at its junction with the Patuxent it is two hundred and ninety-four feet; its tributary, Ready Branch, has an available water-power of about fifty feet,—making a total for Hawling's River and tributaries of about two hundred feet. The Patuxent has a small available water-power near its source, five hundred and twenty-five feet above tide; near Triadelphia, three hundred and seventy-five feet; at its junction of Hawling's River, two hundred and ninety-four feet. The conjectural fall below the junction in the county is about seventy feet, making about three hundred feet of available water-power for the main stream, and a total for the Patuxent and tributaries of about five hundred feet.

The main stream of the Northwest Creek draws its head-waters from near Mechanicsville, and unites with the Potomac at Washington City, and has an approx-imiste fall in the county of two hundred feet. The Paint and Sligo have an approximate fall of two hundred feet in the county. Rock Creek is classified as next to the Patuxent and Seneca in fall and volume of water. The North Fork draws its head-waters from near Laytonsville, and to the junction with the East Fork, including its tributaries, Mill Branch has an available water-power of about fifty feet. The East Fork draws part of its head-waters from near Mechanicsville, thence to the junction with the North Fork near Rockville, and having an available water-power of one hundred feet. At the junction the elevation above tide-water is about two hundred and seventy-five feet; at Veirs' mill, two hundred and fifty; at the crossing of the Metropolitan Branch Railroad, two hundred and eleven feet; and thence to the Poto- mac, dividing Georgetown from Washington City. The total available water-power of Rock Creek is five hundred and twenty-five feet. Part of Rock Creek runs through the District of Columbia.

Fall Branch runs into the Potomac at the Little Falls, with about fifty feet of available water-power. Cabin John draws part of its head-waters from near Rockville, and runs south to the Potomac. The main stream and tributaries have an available water-power of two hundred and fifty feet. One of the longest and largest single arches in the world is thrown across this stream to convey water from the Great Falls on the Potomac to Washington. The crown of the arch is one hundred feet above the stream. Watts' Branch draws part of its head-waters from northwest of Rockville, and runs southwest to the Potomac. It has an available water-power of about two hundred feet.

Muddy Branch rises about the centre of the county, and runs southwest to the Potomac. It has an available water-power of about two hundred feet.

But, remarkable as the fall and volume of the streams in the county are, they are eclipsed by the astonishing available water-power of the Potomac. In extreme droughts hundreds of millions of gallons of water daily flow over the Great Falls; the average flow amounts to billions of gallons daily. At the mouth of Monocacy the elevation is two hundred feet above tide; at Seneca, one hundred and eighty feet; at the Great Falls, one hundred and fifty feet; and at this point the fall and volume of water is sufficient to drive every factory in New England.

Competent authority thinks that the Potomac has been from indefinite ages wearing away the right bank of the stream. Nearly all the meadows or lowlands are on the Maryland side, while the deep water and channel of the river are nearest to the Virginia side.

The Potomac is the southwestern boundary of Montgomery County for forty miles, and falls two hundred feet in that distance. The water to supply Washington City is drawn by an aqueduct from the Potomac above the Great Falls, at an elevation of one hundred and fifty feet, with a capacity to convey more than sixty-seven million gallons of water daily.

The strata of rocks and soil generally run from nearly northeast to southwest. The climate, like that of the State, may be called variable, as shown by the contrast between the intense and long-continued cold of the past winter and the mild winter that preceded it. The estimated average annual fall of rain is forty-one inches, but the late Benjamin Hallowell estimated it at forty-three inches. The extremes of rain-fall have varied from twenty-eight inches in 1822 to over sixty inches in subsequent years. The soil generally retains moisture to a far greater degree than limestone soils, and the deep clay loam is remarkable for producing a crop in the driest seasons. Five general or severe droughts have occurred during the present century, with an exact period of sixteen years intervening between each.

The general progress of settlement was to the north and westward. Among the first recorded patents is that of Girls' Portion.—This was surveyed for Henry Darnell in 1688. It extends from Rock Creek eastward to O. H. P. Clark's farm, three and three-eighths miles. The Ashton and Sligo turnpike passes through the tract. The Silver Springs farm, the estate of the late F. P. Blair, and the residence of the Hon. Montgomery Blair, includes a portion of this tract; also the Silver Spring Station and Sligo. The Brookville and Washington turnpike crosses it.

Leeke Forest.—This additional tract of seven hundred and ten acres was surveyed for Col. Henry Dulany in 1688. It lies west of "Joseph's Park," on the west side of Rock Creek, and extends west one and seven-eighths miles. The Rockville and Georgetown turnpike passes through it. The farms of the late Samuel Perry and William Hudleston, on the old Georgetown road, and Bethesda church are included within its limits.

Hermitage.—Granted to William Joseph, May 2, 1689, for three thousand eight hundred and sixty acres. This grant lies on the east side of Rock Creek, and adjoins "Joseph's Park" on the north, extending from Viers' mill to the intersection of the Rockville and Washington turnpike with the Union Turnpike Company's road. The Brookville and Washington turnpike passes through it from the Watery Branch to one-fourth of a mile south of Mitchell's Cross-Roads. The city road from Rockville to Washington passes through it from Grove's farm to Aug. Burgdorf's farm, at the intersection of the Brookville and Washington turnpike. The Norwood turnpike traverses the tract from Kemp's store to Lydland's farm, at its intersection with the Brookville and Washington turnpike. It embraces many fine farms and elegant residences. Lying to the east of "Hermitage" is

St. Winiburg, surveyed to John Woolcock, May 3, 1689, for five hundred acres, extending from the Northwest Branch at Kemp's mill westward one and one-half miles west of the Brookville and Washington turnpike. The road from Kemp's mill to Lydland's farm and the Norwood turnpike passes through it. This grant includes the estate of the late William Pierce. Immediately north of "St. Winzuburg" is located Carroll's Forest, granted to Charles Carroll, May 3, 1689, containing five hundred acres. This tract was conveyed May 3, 1734, by Charles Carroll of Carleton to John Connelly.

Joseph's Park was granted to William Joseph, May 28, 1689, containing four thousand two hundred and twenty acres. This tract lies on the east side of Rock Creek, and embraces Knowles' Station, Forest Glen Station, and Linden Station, including the farms of Alfred Ray, William A. Batefellor, and Carroll's, or St. John's Chapel. The Brookville and Washington turnpike passes through it from Augustus Burgdorf's farm nearly to Grace Church.

On the west side of Rock Creek, north of "Leeke Forest" and west of "Hermitage," is a tract called

Dan, granted to Thomas Brooke, Sept. 6, 1694, for three thousand six hundred and ninety-seven acres, extending from Rock Creek one and one-half miles west, and up the creek north two and seven-eighths of a mile. The Georgetown turnpike passes over it from Mr. Codswell's farm to that of the late Samuel Perry. The year following, attracted no doubt by the fertility of the bottom lands lying on the banks of the Potomac, Richard Brightwell, with a more adventurous spirit than any of the previous settlers, and netted by a noble impulse, ascended the Potomac River as far as the mouth, and above it, to the Great Seneca, and sought to establish a settlement far from his neighbors, where he and his friends could enjoy the pleasure and excitements of fishing and hunting. Here could be found in abundance buffaloes, bears, wolves, and deer, the Sugar-Loaf Mountain and the chain of hills that extend to the Monocacy River affording them ample shelter and protection from the skill and pursuit of the wily hunter. He located his grant between Edward's Perry and the mouth of the Great Seneca, and named it

Brightwell's Hunting Quarter.—It was patented Aug. 29, 1685, and contained one thousand and eighty-six acres. It extended for about four miles along the Potomac River, and is now traversed through its whole length by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. The beginning of this tract was destroyed in the construction of the canal, but a suitable stone was planted in its stead at the bottom of the canal, which is known only to a few persons. For the next twenty-five years the course of settlements on Rock Creek continued west of the creek. West of "Joseph's Park" and south of "Leeke Forest" is situated

Clean Drinking, patented to John Coats, Oct. 1, 1699, for seven hundred acres. This tract extends down Rock Creek to Jones' Bridge. Walter C. Jones established a mill on this survey, and left his epitaph upon an old stone that still remains a monument of his folly. The inscription, though somewhat defaced by time, is still legible, and reads:

"Here lies the body and bones
Of old Walter C. Jones;
By his not thinking,
He lost 'Clean Drinking,'
And by his shallow gate,
He lost his vast estate."

Following the settlements on Rock Creek came those upon the Patuxent.

Bear Neck, granted to Benjamin Williams, March 28, 1700, for one hundred and fifty acres. Adjacent to this and lying to the south is Maiden's Fancy, to Neal Clarke, surveyed Sept. 11, 1700, for five hundred and eighty acres. This tract is situated in the southeast corner of the county. Two miles above on the river is Bear Bacon, surveyed for Mark Richardson, June 21, 1702, containing six hundred acres. The Ashton and Laurel road passes through this tract from the cemetery to Liberty Grove school-house. The next settlements were made in the southwestern part of the county, between Rock Creek and the Potomac River.

Friendship, patented to Thomas Addison and James Roddard, Dec. 1, 1711, for three thousand one hundred and twenty-four acres. This land extends from near the Potomac and below Edmund Brooke's farm in a southeasterly and easterly direction across the Georgetown turnpike, north of Tennallytown, and up the pike northwesterly near to Bethesda Post-office, and contains many rich and valuable farms,—Allison Naipor's lands, and the farms of Richard Williams, Henry Longworth, and others. The river road passes through to Rider's farm to near Tennallytown. Adjoining on the east lies

Charles and Thomas, surveyed for Charles Beale and Thomas Fletcher, April 8, 1715, containing four hundred and nineteen acres. The road from Tennallytown to Jones' Bridge runs through the land. On the north and west of Friendship lies another tract, called Friendship, for Charles Beale and Thomas Fletcher, May 2, 1715, for one thousand three hundred and sixty-eight acres. This tract extends from the farms of L. A. Lodge in a north-east course as far as C. W. Landsale's farm.

Ciggett's Purchase, surveyed for Thomas Fletcher, April 10, 1715, containing seven hundred and seventy-two acres, and is situated west of "Clean Drinking" and south of "Leeke Forest." The Georgetown turnpike crosses the tract from the branch below Bethesda Church to nearly its intersection with the old Georgetown road. Immediately west of this is Huntington, surveyed for Thomas Fletcher, Dec. 10, 1715, comprising three hundred and seven acres. It is divided by the old Georgetown road. West of "Leeke Forest" and west of "Huntington" comes Contention, granted to William Fitz Redman, Feb. 15, 1715, containing six hundred and twenty acres, embracing the farms of Mr. Yeabower and others. North of "Hermitage" and east of Rock Creek is found Bradford's Rest, granted to John Bradford, June 13, 1713, comprising two thousand six hundred and fifty-eight acres. Adjacent on the west lies the

Addition to Bradford's Rest, granted to Maj. John Bradford, Sept. 29, 1715, for five hundred and eighty-four acres. And again the same lands resurveyed, with lands added, and called Bradford's Rest, for Maj. John Bradford, June 10, 1718, containing four thousand eight hundred and ninety-two acres. This tract extends up Rock Creek north as far as William E. Manchester's farm, and east as far as the late Roger Brooke's farm. The road from Rockville to Baltimore runs through the grant from William S. Brooke's farm to Granville Stabler's farm, three and one-half miles, and the Brookville and Washington turnpike runs through it from near Higgins' tavern nearly to Riner's store. The lands embrace many elegant farms, including those of Philip Riley, Charles Abert, the late Roger Brooke, A. R. Washworth, William S. Brooke, Hon. Allen Bowie Davis, A. H. Herr, and others.

The streams and water-courses seem to have attracted the attention of the early settlers, as is proved by the location of the grants. First comes Rock Creek, and then Northwest Branch, which was the next point selected by the emigrants, followed by the settlements along the Patuxent; after this came Watts' Branch and Hawling's River. The first settlement on Watts' Branch was

Dung Hill, surveyed for Walter Evans, Aug. 10, 1715, containing five hundred and thirty-six acres. It was situated on the Potomac, at the mouth of Watts' Branch. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal runs through it, as does also the river road from near Watts' Branch to Cornell's farm. Immediately below this grant, lying along the Potomac, is Thompson's Hop-yard, patented by John Thompson, Dec. 8, 1715, which embraced one hundred acres. This is but a short distance above the Great Falls.

Cool Spring Level was patented to Archibald Edmonston, April 28, 1717, containing five hundred and ninety-two acres. This tract is situated on the road from Offutt's Cross Roads to the Great Falls. On the north of this road is Allison's Park, surveyed for John Allison, June 10, 1715, embracing six hundred and twenty acres, and lying south of Watts' Branch. Adjacent to this is Archibald's Lot, granted to James Moore, March 17, 1718. This tract lies on the road from Rockville to the Great Falls, and contains one hundred acres, and is embraced in the farm of Jacob Miller.

Younger Brother.—This tract lies west of Watts' Branch, and was surveyed for William Offutt, Aug. 2, 1717, and contained six hundred and sixty acres, and comprises the farms of William Viers and Joseph T. Bailey. Following this is Dispute, lying on the head-waters of Watts' Branch, surveyed for Charles and William Beall, Jan. 19, 1719, containing six hundred and seventy acres. An elder tract lies to the east of this and is called the Two Brothers, comprising twelve hundred acres, through which passes Watts' Branch and the road from Rockville to Darnestown. The next that claims attention on Watts' Branch is The Exchange, for Arthur Nelson, granted March 10, 1718, for four hundred and eighteen acres, and again to the same person, Jan. 28, 1719, The New Exchange, for one hundred and fifty acres. These two were resurveyed Dec. 20, 1721, and were called "Exchange and New Exchange Enlarged," for Arthur Nelson, and contained sixteen hundred and twenty acres. By this extension the tract extended down Watts' Branch a long distance, and embraced the site upon which Rockville was originally built. The road from Rockville to the Great Falls passed for more than two miles through the tract. The county poor-house farm, Judge Bouie's (O'Neal's), John E. Willson's, and other farms are included in the tract. North of "Dan," mentioned previously, is the Addition to Dan, surveyed for Philip Lee, Dec. 10, 1717, containing five hundred and seventy-six acres, traversed by the Georgetown turnpike. Then came Joseph West and James Holman, who joined in a copartnership and had a tract surveyed containing five hundred and thirty-five acres, and when they came to give it a name were troubled to select one that would give satisfaction to both parties,—each wanted his name selected for the tract, so as to appear on the records at Annapolis. Much was said on the subject by both parties. Finally a compromise was effected by mutual friends, who, taking their two Christian names, joined them with the copulative conjunction "and," which gave them Joseph and James, and it was so patented, Oct. 15, 1718. It is situated on the road from Rockville to Gaithersburg, and embraces the farms of Samuel Clements and others.

In following the succession of settlements, it is necessary to return to the Northwest Branch, where Archibald Edmonston located Easy Purchase, for which a patent was granted April 23, 1716, consisting of nine hundred acres, extending from the Northwest Branch to the West Point Branch. The Ashton and Sligo turnpike runs through the entire length of it, from John T. Baker's farm, below and near Colesville, to the late John Hopkins' farm, at the intersection of the Columbia road. Crossing to the east side of the Northwest Branch is located Friendship Enlarged, for Alexander Beall, May 14, 1716, containing nine hundred and twenty acres, and extending from near the county line up to the north of Bond's mill, on the Ashton and Sligo turnpike. A short distance north of "Carroll's Forest," herefore described, lies a tract called Drumstray, surveyed for James Beall, Sept. 10, 1715, for two hundred and twenty-five acres. It lies on the Northwest Branch, and embraces the farms of James Bonifant. On the Northwest Branch, and still north of this, James Beall was granted Lay Hill, Aug. 17, 1716, containing one thousand two hundred and ninety-eight acres. The Northwest Branch runs through the tract, while the Norwood turnpike passes the entire length. The farms of Abraham Van Horn, A. J. Cashell, and others are situated on it. On the ridge dividing the head-waters of the Patuxent and Northwest Branch lies a tract embracing many farms, called Snowden's Manor, surveyed for Richard Snowden, Dec. 19, 1715, containing one thousand acres. The Ashton and Sligo turnpike runs through the estate, also the road from Ashton to Laurel. The tract embraces the lands of William John Thomas, the farm of William Lee, Warwick Miller, Ann Stabler, and the farm and bone-mill of William Bond. A survey was made twenty-eight years after, and was called Snowden's Manor Enlarged, for Richard Snowden, dated March 5, 1745, and embraced nine thousand two hundred and sixty-five acres. This manor contains some of the finest lands in the county. The Laurel road passes through it from Ashton, through Spencer ville, to the cemetery near Liberty Grove church. The turnpike from Ashton to Wimpenny's farm, near Colesville, runs upon it, while the Norwood turnpike passes through it from Joseph Moore's farm to Van Horn's farm. The Northwest Branch runs through the tract from near Ashton to Kemp's mill.

Charles and Benjamin, surveyed and granted to Charles Beall, July 2, 1718, containing two thousand two hundred and eighty acres. This tract extends from E. J. Hall's farm down the Brookeville and Washington turnpike to Higgins' tavern, embracing the farms of B. D. Waters, Thomas Waters, Joshua W. Jones, Samuel Cashell, and others. The Episcopal church at Mechanicsville is located on this grant.

Beall's Manor, granted to Charles and William Beall, Feb. 14, 1720, embracing seventeen hundred and eighty-seven acres, situated on the head-waters of West Point Branch, beginning in Thomas Wimpenny's yard, a mile north of Coleville, on the Ashton and Sligo turnpike. On it are located the farms of Thomas Wimpenny, Mr. O'Hare, Lloyd Green, J. W. Bonner, and others. Coleville stands on a tract adjacent to "Beall's Manor," surveyed about the same time, and called Beall's Christina, containing five hundred and six acres. Cole ville is a thriving village of recent date.

Beach Garden Enlarged was surveyed for Archibald Edmondston, Nov. 10, 1716, containing twelve hundred and sixty-five acres. Adjoining this tract is Deer Park, surveyed for Archibald Edmondston, Feb. 14, 1720, containing six hundred and eighty-two acres. This grant, including "Beall Christilt," lies between the East Point and the West Point Branches, and embraces the farms of Julius Marlow and others. Adjacent to "Beall's Manor is Snowden Hill, granted to Richard Snowden in October, 1725, surveyed for five hundred and forty-six acres. The Col-
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Richel road passes by this tract, while it is well watered by the West Point Branch passing through it. Nancy Brown's farm and others are included, as also the road from John Leizar's to Nancy Brown's.

Charley Forest was granted to Maj. John Bradford, and contained one thousand two hundred and thirty acres, increased by Addition to Charley Forest, surveyed for the same person, Sept. 16, 1720. These two united extend from Mechanicsville to within a short distance of where Snell's Bridge crosses the Patuxent River. The turnpike from Mechanicsville to Sandy Springs and Ashton passes over it, and from Ashton the road to Snell's Bridge and the road to Brighton traverses it.

On this tract is situated Sandy Springs and Ashton, including many valuable farms, viz.: Fair Hill Farm, at Mechanicsville, with the farms of William H. Farquhar, Alvin Gilpin, R. T. Bentley, and Edward Thomas. The tract is located on the dividing ridge that separates the head-waters of the Northwest Branch and Cabin Creek.

In following the order of dates in settlement Hawling's River is reached, when Hygham is found granted to John Bradford, Feb. 23, 1720, surveyed for one hundred acres. Beginning from the same tree is Gold's Branch, granted to Richard Snowden, July 30, 1722, for two hundred and fifty-seven acres. These two grants lie on Hawling's River, and constitute a portion of the farm of Allen Bowie Davis, his residence being located on the latter, through which the Westminster road passes, and also Gold Branch, a small tributary of Hawling's River.

Gittings' Ha! Ha! was surveyed for Thomas Spriggs and Richard Simmons, July 27, 1724, and contained five hundred and seventeen acres, lying on both sides of Hawling's River, embracing the farms of James T. Holland, Thomas John Holland, and William Brown. Adjoining this lies Bordley's Choice, granted to Thomas Bordley, April 8, 1725, for one thousand acres. The Reedy Branch, an easterly offshoot of Hawling's River, divides the tract and affords plenty of water to the farms of Thomas J. Holland, William Rigg, Thomas Rigg, and Bruce Howard. The Brookville Academy is located on this survey. Adjoining this tract lies a grant originally Brooke Grove, surveyed for James Brooke, Sept. 14, 1725, a resurvey of which was made for the same person Nov. 15, 1741, for three thousand one hundred and sixty-four acres. It was again resurveyed so as to include the adjacent vacancies, and named

Addition to Brooke Grove, and granted to James Brooke, Sept. 29, 1762. It contained seven thousand nine hundred and six acres. After this addition to his grove he had eleven thousand and sixty acres granted by patent and six thousand by purchase. This tract extends from Thomas J. Holland's farm some eight or nine miles in a northwesterly direction beyond the Big Seneca. The town of Brookville and Laytonsville are situated on it. The road from Brookville to Laytonsville passes through the tract, which embraces some of the finest farms in the county, including those of E. J. Hall, the late Dr. William B. Magruder, John Riggs, Charles Brooke, the late Walter Magruder, David L. Fugh, Thomas D. Gaither, and Samuel Riggs, of R. This was the largest tract of land owned by one person in the county, and gives an example of the wealth and influence enjoyed by these early princes of the manor. James Brooke was a descendant of Robert Brooke, who established a Protestant colony at Bella Brooke, on the Patuxent, June 29, 1656, seventy-eight years prior to this date.

John and Sarah, surveyed for John Philburn, Dec. 21, 1724, and containing two hundred acres, includes the town of Unity.

Benjamin's Lot, surveyed for Benjamin Gaither, April 5, 1725, for five hundred and sixteen acres, is located on the Patuxent River. It embraces the town of Tridelphia, and includes the farms of Robert Brown and others. The Westminster road from Brookville passes through "Bordley's Choice," "Gold's Branch," "Addition to Brooke Grove," and "Benjamin's Lot" to the Patuxent bridge.

New Year's Gift was granted to Thomas Bordley, Oct. 11, 1720, for eleven hundred and forty-three acres, and is situated on the head-waters of Hawling's River. The road from Unity to Damascus runs through it, while it embraces the farms of the late Thomas Griffith, A. B. Worthington, Charles Hutton, and Richard H. Griffith.

With the granting of this tract there was a halt in the settlements along the Patuxent, Hawling's, and head-waters of the Big Seneca Rivers. But little activity was manifested until about 1741, when settlers poured in and the country rapidly filled up until 1775, when very little vacant land remained. Returning again to Rock Creek on the west side, and passing on down south of the road leading from Rockville to Baltimore, Antoa was surveyed for Caleb Litton, Jan. 18, 1720, containing four hundred and five acres, since which time Hon. Allen Bowie Davis has added a portion of this tract to his Rock Creek farm.

Easy Come By was surveyed for William Pottinger, and contained three hundred acres, granted to him Oct. 2, 1722. Adjacent to this is

Mill Land, surveyed for Edward Dawson, March 10, 1724, containing two hundred and fourteen acres, and is situated on the west of Rock Creek, and lies on the north side of the road from Rockville to Baltimore, and embraces the farm of the late Judge Richard J. Bowie and others. Three miles from Rockville, on the east of Rock Creek, and about one mile northeast from "Mill Land," lies Boyd's Delay, surveyed Nov. 12, 1725, and granted to John Boyd, June 6, 1727. It contained two hundred and thirty-three acres, afterwards increased by the addition of several tracts, both by purchase and grant. Many of his descendants are in the county. His great-grandson, the late Rev. K. T. Boyd, an eminent divine, and one of the founders of the Methodist Protestant Church, was born on this estate in 1794. His widow is still living, and resides in Charlesburg. The lands embrace the farms of William E. Mucaster, Roger R. Farquhar, and James F. Baraball.

Magruder's Hazard was surveyed for Samuel and John Magruder, Nov. 25, 1726. It contained one hundred acres.

Paradise was surveyed for Thomas Gittings, Sept. 17, 1728, for two hundred acres. These two tracts lie on the east side of Rock Creek. The road from Redland to Muncaster's mill passes through it.

Bernard's Desire was surveyed for Luke Bernard, Feb. 1, 1728, containing two hundred and thirty acres. The road from Rockville to Redland passes through this tract, as also through the farm of the late John Bean.

Wickham's and Pottinger's Discovery was surveyed for Nathan Wickham and Samuel Pottinger, Jan. 1, 1721, and contained one thousand acres. It is situated on Piney Branch, and embraces the farms of N. D. O'Fallot, Mary M. Dodd, Samuel Jones, and others.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

Partnership was granted to Henry Massey and John Flint, April 4, 1722, and comprised two hundred acres, and adjoins "Dung Hill," heretofore mentioned. Whetstone Branch runs through the land, which embraces at present the farm of Elbert Perry.

The Brothers' Industry was surveyed for James Wallace, April 16, 1722, for one thousand four hundred and twenty-nine acres, and includes the farms of Edwin Wallace, Solomon Young, and others.

Deer Park was surveyed for Ralph Crabh, April 19, 1722, and contained four hundred and seventy acres. It lies on the ridge separating the head-waters of Muddy Branch from those of Whetstone Branch, and embraces a portion of Gaithersburg, a station on the Metropolitan Railroad, which since its incorporation as a city has rapidly improved.

Fellowship was surveyed for Nathan Wickham and Samuel Pottinger, March 16, 1723, and contained four hundred acres, and lies on the waters of Whetstone Branch, and embraces the farm of the late Charles Saull, and the late Nathan Cook's home-farm.

Constant Friendship was granted to Joseph West and James Holman in 1722. It lies near Rockville, and includes the lands of Levi Viers and others.

It will be seen that the first settlements, commencing in 1658, in this county were along the banks of Rock Creek, extending up both banks of the stream as far as Rockville. Thence they sought the Patuxent, and continued to spread along the banks of this fertile stream as far as Snell's Bridge. Then the country lying west of Rock Creek, towards the Potomac, and north and east of Rockville, seems to have attracted the attention of the settlers. Next came the flat red-lands along the Potomac, in the vicinity of Darnestown and Poolesville, which were surveyed and granted. Among the first was Wickham's Good Will, surveyed for James Plummer in 1723, containing two hundred and seventy acres. This tract is situated on Muddy Branch, near where the road from Gaithersburg to Du Fief's farm crosses the stream, and embraces the farm of J. Hardesty.

The Joseph was granted to Joseph West, July 1, 1725, and contained three hundred acres, lying on Muddy Branch. The road from Rockville to Darnestown passes through the tract, which has its beginning at a stone at the northeast corner of the bridge over Muddy Branch.

Middle Plantation was surveyed for Daniel Dunlap, May 30, 1724, and embraced seven hundred and twenty-two acres. This tract is situated at the mouth of Great Seneca, where the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal passes through it.

Magruder's and Beall's Honesty was granted to Daniel Magruder and Charles Beall, May 16, 1726, and contained one thousand seven hundred and twenty-six acres. It extends from "Leake Forest" in a southerly direction to the Potomac River, and down the river to Edmond Brooke's farm, then returns with, or parallel with, "Friendship" and "Contention," before mentioned, and embraces the farm of William Reading. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal passes through it.

Clever Wald Enlarged was surveyed for William Offutt, July 17, 1728. It contains two thousand acres, and embraces the farms of the late Philip Stone, George Bradley, Joshua W. Offutt, and others.

Goose Pond was surveyed for John Chittum, Nov. 4, 1726, for one hundred acres. It lies on the Potomac, a short distance above the Great Falls, and is traversed by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. Just below this, and immediately opposite the Great Falls, is Bear Den, surveyed for William Offutt, April 4, 1729, and containing two hundred acres.

Prevention was granted Wm. Beall and others, July 4, 1727, for eleven hundred and eighty-two acres. Rock Creek runs through the tract. Viers' mill is located at the crossing of the Rockville and Washington road. It embraces the Rock Creek farm of Judge Bouie and others.

Saint Mary's was granted Caleb Litton, June 28, 1727, for sixty-seven acres. It lies south of Rockville, on the city road.

It has already been stated that the original Rockville stood on "Exchange and New Exchange Enlarged." The additions will now be given:

Valentine's Garden Enlarged was surveyed for Arthur Nelson, June 17, 1728, and contains nine hundred and fifty acres. The same was resurveyed, as follows:

Resurvey on Valentine's Garden Enlarged, for Henry Wright Crabh, April 10, 1753, for two thousand and eighty-five acres. On this tract stands the first addition to Rockville, and it lies mostly north and northwest of Rockville, and extends as far as the Washington Grove Camp-ground. Haymond's addition was surveyed for John Haymond, Nov. 10, 1743, and contained three hundred acres. On this tract lies the second addition to Rockville, embracing that portion of the town recently laid out in the vicinity of the Metropolitan Railroad depot and the Agricultural Fair Grounds.

About this time the tide of settlements commenced to extend up the Potomac, and a neighbor was found for Richard Brightwell, who located near Edward's Ferry in 1695. For twenty-six years he had braved the perils of his "Hunting Quarter," and during this time had seldom visited the lower settlements, being content with his dogs, pet bears, and deer for companions until "Concord" was granted to Daniel Dunlap, April 26, 1721, for one thousand one hundred and six acres, which was located one mile above "Brightwell's Hunting Quarter," on the Potomac River, and one hundred yards above the mouth of Broad Run, where the line begins, and extends up the Potomac to some distance above White's Ferry, taking in most of the bottom-lands through which runs the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

Hanover was granted to Dr. Patrick Hephburn, March 16, 1722, for fifteen hundred acres, and situated on the head-waters of the Dry Seneca. It embraces the farms of Howard Griffith, Samuel Darby, the late Grafton Beall, and others.

Flint's Grove was surveyed for John Flint, July 4, 1722, and contained three hundred acres. It lies on Dry Seneca, and includes the farm of Thomas Fife.

Happy Choice was surveyed for William Black, May 29, 1724, for eleven hundred and eighty-six acres, and lies on the road from Barnesville to Rockville. William O. Seliman's farm and others are included in this tract.

Hopewell, granted to John Narriss, Oct. 31, 1726, for three hundred acres, lies on the Little Monocacy, and is crossed by the road running from the mouth of Monocacy to Mount Ephraim, and is also joined by the farm of Wm. Price.

Jeremiah's Park, surveyed for Jeremiah Hayes, Dec. 10, 1747, includes the site upon which Barnesville stands. Sellman's Station and Post-office, one mile from Barnesville, on the Metropolitan Railroad, also called Barnesville Station, are located on this tract.

Partnership, surveyed for Charles Diggs and John Bradford, April 16, 1724, for two thousand acres, lies on Dry Seneca, and embraces the farms of Thomas Darby, Robert H. C. Allnut, Samuel Dyson, E. S. Poole, John T. Fletchall, and others.

The Resurvey on Part of Forest, surveyed for Robert Peter, May 17, 1784, containing seventeen hundred and ninety-six and one-fourth acres, embraces the lands in and around Pooler ville, the first house in which was built by John Poole in 1793.

Banks' Venture was surveyed for John Banks, Nov. 29, 1792, and contained one hundred acres, including the present site of Redland.

Abraham's Lot was granted to Cornelius Etting in 1732, on the Potomac River, near the mouth of Broad Run.

Killmain was granted to Daniel Carroll in 1735, and contains three thousand acres. It lies on the Conrad's Ferry road, and includes the lands of Locawick Young's heirs and others.

John's Delight, granted and surveyed for John Harris, June 14, 1735, embraces the lands in and adjacent to Martinsburg and Conrad's Ferry.

Conclusion, granted to Daniel Dunlay in 1731, embraces the farms of Joseph Dawson, Frederick Dawson, Col. George W. Dawson, and others, all finely improved.

Turkey Thicket was granted to John Mogruder, September, 1736, and embraces the farms of Zadock Mogruder and others.

Benjamin's Square, granted to Benjamin Wallingford in 1745, includes the farms adjacent to Goshen.

Spring Garden, granted to Higson Belt in 1738, includes the farm of James Williams and the lands near Laytounsville.

Abel's Level, granted to Abel Brown in 1741, and Moore's Delight, granted to Benjamin Penn in 1748, lies on the head-waters of Great Seneca Creek, and embraces the farms of Col. Lyde Griffith and others.

Pork Plenty, if no Thieves, granted to Nathaniel Ward in 1735, lies on the Patuxent, and embraces the lands in and around Duvall's old mill.

Cheastnut Ridge, granted to George Buchanan in 1732, embraced the lands in and adjacent to Germantown Station, on the Metropolitan Railroad.

Ralph, granted to George Scott in 1740, includes a portion of Horace Water's land and others.

Grandmother's Good Will, granted to John Crampton, lies on the Little Seneca, and adjoints the farm of George W. Israel, south of Clarksburg.

Cow-Pasture, surveyed for Henry Griffith, Feb. 10, 1761, for three thousand eight hundred and fifty-four and one-half acres, lies on both sides of Little Seneca Creek, near Clarksburg.

Peach-Tree Hill was granted to Richard Watts, Sept. 13, 1750, and contains seventy-five acres, and adjoins "Cow-Pasture." A resurvey was granted to include vacancies, and called Errors Corrected, for Nicholas Ridgeley Warfield, May 25, 1792, and contains two hundred and twenty-eight and three-fourths acres. The Little Seneca Creek passes through the tract, as also the old Baltimore road from Barnesville to Nevis-

Very Good, granted to John Dickinson in 1756, and Bite the Biter, granted to Samuel Saffell in 1756, are both near the village of Damasus.

Silent Valley, granted to Ellsworth Beane in 1756, lies east of Damasus.

Trouble Enough Indeed, granted to Thomas Whiten in 1756, contains two thousand four hundred and ninety-two acres. It lies between Clarksburg and Damasus, and embraces the lands near King's distillery.

By glancing at the map of the county, and selecting a point on the Patuxent east of Richard H. Griffith's residence as a starting-point, a line drawn to William Griffith's residence, on Hawling's River, thence to Brookville, thence to Redland, thence to Charles Saffell's residence, thence to F. A. Tschiffly's residence, thence to where the river crosses Watts' Branch, thence up the river road to the road from Pooler ville to White's Ferry, thence west to the Potomac River, a tolerably well-defined boundary line of the settlements made before 1730 will be established, excepting a few settlements made on the head-waters of the Great Seneca and the Dry Seneca. Beyond this boundary line but very few settlements were made previous to 1741. Within these limits settlements progressed regularly as before, but after 1741 the settlements rapidly extended all over the county, so that by 1755 very little vacant land remained.

After this period only here and there a vacancy was discovered, and a resurvey on the adjoining tract would be made to include it.

From the earliest settlements to 1700 the grants were given as lying in lying in Charles County; from 1760 to 1748, as lying in Prince George's; from 1748 to 1776, as lying in Frederick; and since 1776 all grants have been from Montgomery County. By a glance at the names of the first settlers it will be readily learned that Montgomery County was settled by a class of people far superior to the ordinary emigrant who reaches the shores of America in modern times and is shipped by contract to the West. In the majority of instances the settler was an educated gentleman with a cultured family, who had fled from the oppressions of wretched government and the persecutions of religious bigotry to secure freedom of thought and action in a virgin country where his precursors had established a secure asylum. He brought with him all his worldly goods, and he also contributed the refinements and aesthetic features of the social life he had abandoned. The Dunlans, Magruders, Bowies, Bonics, Viers, Clarks, Bealls, Bordleys, Gaithers, Brookes, Wallingfords, Wickhams, Bowns, Wards, Barnells, Watkinses, Addisons, Stoddards, Evanses, Thompsoins, Snowdens, Dawsons, Crabbs, Saffells, Wests, Diggs, Offuts, Bradfords, Carolls, Buchanan's, Scotts, Griffiths, Dickinsons, Beanes, Hayses, and Cranports were the pioneers of Montgomery County, and the descendants of many of them are still among the most prominent and most respectable citizens of the county, thrifty, honest, intelligent, engaged in the same occupations as their sires, and frequently cultivating the same acres.

The material, social, and moral condition of Frederick County (embracing Montgomery, Allegany, and Garrett) about the period of the Revolution presents a vivid contrast to its present appearance and circumstances. Then it was the frontier county of the province, and its hardy sons were the pioneers of civilization. On its outskirts roamed the savage. Fort Cumberland was the rendezvous of the British and colonial army in 1755. Fort Necessity and the Great Meadows witnessed the conflict between the lilies of France and the lions of England. In 1758 Cherokees were slain on George’s Creek and bonnies paid for their scalps. Its centre was occupied by an industrious mechanical and agricultural people, comprised chiefly of Germans, while the lower district (now Montgomery) was settled and filled with an English people remarkable for the best traits that distinguished their mother-country. The first settlers and their descendants were hardy pioneers, familiar with the plow, the sickle, and the rifle. Their wives and daughters rode on pillows behind their husbands, fathers, and brothers to meeting, and a four-wheeled carriage was unknown in the limits of the county. Montgomery County has passed through three distinct phases of civilization since its settlement, or rather through two, and is now entered upon the third.

First were the old tobacco-planters, with their baronial estates and armies of slaves. They felled the native forests and planted the virgin soil in tobacco and Indian corn. This did very well so long as there was timber for the axe and new land for the hoe, and those old lords of manners were happy. They feasted and frolicked and fox-hunted, and made the most of life. These are what are known as “the good old times.” But in less than a century after this system of demodding and exhaustion began there were no more forests to clear and no more new lands to till. Then succeeded the period of old fields and decaying worm-fences and monndering homesteads. This saddest condition of the county had reached its climax about 1840, at which time the population reached its minimum. Then and before the lands bordering on the Rockville and Georgetown turnpike, the only paved road in the county, were, with the exception of Robert Dick’s farm and one or two others, but a succession of uninclosed fields. During this period there was a constant stream of emigration from the county, some going to the cotton-fields of the South, but most to the fertile new lands of Kentucky and Missouri. Few enterprising young men settled on their fathers’ farms, nor were they to blame, for the land would no longer yield its increase, and they had no means of renovating the soil. Montgomery land had become a synonym for poverty. This was not, however, universally true. The red-lands of Medley’s, and those around Brookville and in the Friends’ settlement at Sandy Spring, and on Hawling’s River, with an occasional farm in other sections, had retained comparative fertility. That emigration, however, was not in vain. It added strength and intelligence to that movement which from the first settlement of the country has ever been in progress from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and furnished representative men to other States. The Lamars of the South, who have now (1881) a representative in the United States Senate, and the grandfather of Hon. Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, were from this county.

The late Senators Edwards, of Illinois, and Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, and that brilliant commoner, Proctor Knott, besides a host of others who have filled distinguished positions at the bar, on the bench, and in every representative capacity throughout the Western States, were natives of this soil.

The Society of Friends in the neighborhood of Sandy Spring, who formed their settlement in the course of the decade preceding and following the middle of the eighteenth century, and who at every period of our history have done so much to promote the material development and intellectual advancement of our country, first abandoned the destructive system during the last quarter of the last century, probably induced thereto by the change then made in the character of their labor.

The same society, about 1845, or perhaps a few years earlier, introduced into this county the old Chinch Island Peruvian guano. Its effect was magical. It had the properties of Aladdin’s lamp.

No sooner were the people made aware that by application of this new fertilizer to their old worn-out lands they could be made to produce remunerative crops of cereals and grass, than they turned to their cultivation with the wonted energy of their race. This industry was greatly promoted by the Crimean war, which caused a material advancement in the prices of all kinds of farm products. From this epoch may be dated the cereal-growing period. New post-and-rail fences replaced the old zigzag affairs, old buildings were renovated and new ones erected, and the fields teemed with bountiful harvests. The decade from 1850 to 1860 was one of unrivaled prosperity to the people.

Then came the struggle between the sections, with all its blighting and devastating horrors. The young men again sought the tented field. The business of farming was in many localities suspended, fences were destroyed and farms laid waste by the marching and countermarching of armies and the general ravages of war. During this contest slavery was abolished, and at its close we entered upon the third era of our existence, the free labor period. The young men returned to their homes with muscles hardened and energies quickened by their martial experience. They accepted with cheerfulness the new order of things, and fully alive to the kindly properties of their native soil, and acquainted with the means of making it productive, went to work with a will, and already every vestige of that unfortunate struggle has been effaced, and now, with a larger population, the people are in a more advanced state of enlightenment and material prosperity than ever before. The buildings are better, the fences better, the churches better, handsomer, more numerous and more largely attended, the school-houses greatly multiplied and of superior construction, and the school system more thorough and efficient than any which preceded it.

Since the opening of the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad half a million of dollars has been annually expended by the people in the purchase of lime, bone phosphates, and other fertilizers of a kindred character, resulting in a greatly increased production of wheat and Indian corn. This gives employment to at least twenty-five mills, located on the various streams in the county, several of which are merchant-mills. Besides this, a large quantity of grain is annually exported in an unmanufactured state.

Market-gardening and fruit-growing, too, are becoming extensive industries here, and can nowhere else be more successfully prosecuted, the soil yielding abundantly and of the best quality all the vegetables and fruits common to a temperate climate. Wine production is also growing into quite a business, and cannot fail to prove successful, as this county is the home of many varieties of the wild grape and the native soil of the Catawba. These various industries must soon place the people in the very van of agricultural progress. There are purely local advantages, too, which will promote and accelerate the march of improvement. The Great Falls of the Potomac is the largest available water-power in the world, and its development and utilization for manufacturing purposes cannot fail to eventuate in the growth of a considerable town at that point.

The increase in population and commercial importance of Baltimore, connected as this county is with her by her great railway, must surely be felt here. But, above all, the overshadowing influence of the national capital must in time make this county all that its most ardent friends could desire. In 1850 the county contained 1051 farms, covering 162,815 acres improved and 111,122 acres unimproved lands, valued together at $3,084,361, and the value of farming implements and machinery was $134,179. The live-stock consisted of 4118 horses, 93 asses and mules, 4519 milk cows, 724 working oxen, 3523 other cattle, 9780 sheep, and 16,332 swine, valued in the aggregate at $394,678; and the amount of wool produced was $28,691, and of butter 245,927 pounds, and the value of animals slaughtered was $99,903. The crops of 1849–50 amounted to: wheat, 164,108 bushels; rye, 5157; Indian corn, 396,947; oats, 168,240; barley, 56; buckwheat, 6083; peas and beans, 589; Irish potatoes, 49,399; and sweet potatoes, 131 bushels; also hay, 8588 tons; clover-seed, 1036 bushels; and other grass-seed, 49 bushels; hops, 170 pounds; flax, 5510 pounds; and flaxseed, 701 bushels. The value of orchard products was $5813, and of market-garden products, $470; wine, 75 gallons; silk-coconuts, 21 pounds; and beeswax and honey, 4334 pounds, are also found among the productions of the county. The value of home-made manufactures for the year was set down at $9802. There were at the date mentioned 80 industrial establishments in the county, with an aggregate invested capital of $137,810, consuming in the year raw material to the value of $219,372, employing on the average 179 males and 63 females, at an average monthly cost of $3870, and producing goods to the value of $331,167 in the year. Two-fifths of the capital was invested in milling operations, and one-fourth in the manufacture of cotton and wool. The following are the details of the principal occupations:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Business</th>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Capital</th>
<th>Hands</th>
<th>Value of Products</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Agricultural implements</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>$1,550</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>$3,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blacksmiths</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>3,000</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>9,662</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cotton-mills</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>20,000</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>39,200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woolen-mills</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>15,200</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>24,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mills, flour</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>25,800</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>124,948</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>* Griffin</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>45,300</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>72,723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>* Saw</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>12,050</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>15,852</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tanneries</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3,900</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>9,685</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

And besides these there were in operation two boot and shoe factories, one cooperage, one engraving office, one bone-mill, two clover-mills, one paper-mill, one sumac-mill, one saddlery, one stone quarry, and one tin-shop. The gold-mine employed seven hands, and produced in the year $1596. The average wages to a farm-hand with board was eight dollars per month; to day labor seventy-five cents, or with board fifty cents; to a carpenter one dollar and twenty-five cents a day, and to a female domestic with board one dollar per week. The price of board for laboring men was one dollar and seventy-five cents a week. The value of real estate and personal property amounted to $4,523,800, and the taxes assessed thereon to $26,246; of which sum $13,128 was State tax, and $13,128 county tax. The number of paupers supported in the year ending June 1, 1850, was one hundred and eighteen, of which ninety-nine remained charged on the public at that date. Only one criminal was convicted during the year. The educational statistics of the county show that the number of primary and public schools was, on June 1, 1850, thirty-four, with the same number of teachers and seven hundred and fifty scholars; annual cost, $8006, of which $3007 was received from public funds and $4999 from other sources, and that the number of academies and other schools was six, with ten teachers and one hundred and sixty pupils; annual cost, $6530, of which $1060 was received from public funds and $5470 from other sources. The whole number of individuals that attended school in 1849–50 was 1264. One newspaper was published in the county, and there were eight libraries, containing 1657 volumes.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

655

In striking contrast with the above are the statistics of the census for 1880 as far as they can be ascertained. The following is the population of the county by districts. Two districts have been created since the census was taken:

First Election District (Cracklin), 2419. Second Election District (Clarksburg), including the following places, 3652: Browningsville, village, 54; Clarksburg, village, 67; Damascus, village, 112; Gaithersburg, town, 43; Hyattstown, village, 48. Third Election District (Medley's), including the following villages, 4252: Edwards' Ferry, village, 36; Poolesville, village, 287. Fourth Election District (Rockville), including town of Rockville, 4203; Rockville, town, 688. Fifth Election District (Berry's), including the following villages, 3799: Colesville, village, 45; Spencerville, village, 81. Sixth Election District (Darnestown), including the village of Darnestown, 1653; Darnestown, village, 107. Seventh Election District (Bethesda), 1488. Eighth Election District (Mechanicsville), including the following villages, 3288: Ashton, village, 45; Brookeville, village, 206; Cincinnati, village, 54; Sandy Spring, village, 50. Total population, 24,759.

The population of the county is given below for the successive decades from 1790 to 1880 inclusive. It will be observed that the career of Montgomery has not always been progressive. The impoverishment of the land from the excessive cultivation of tobacco retarded her growth at several periods; but since 1850 her prosperity has been continuous.

POPULATION.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Total</th>
<th>White</th>
<th>Colored</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1790</td>
<td>18,003</td>
<td>11,679</td>
<td>6,324</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1800</td>
<td>15,848</td>
<td>8,508</td>
<td>7,340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1810</td>
<td>17,980</td>
<td>9,731</td>
<td>8,249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1820</td>
<td>16,100</td>
<td>9,882</td>
<td>6,218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1830</td>
<td>19,816</td>
<td>12,163</td>
<td>7,653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1840</td>
<td>15,456</td>
<td>8,766</td>
<td>6,690</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1850</td>
<td>13,860</td>
<td>9,135</td>
<td>4,725</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1860</td>
<td>18,322</td>
<td>11,549</td>
<td>6,773</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1870</td>
<td>20,563</td>
<td>12,128</td>
<td>8,434</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1880</td>
<td>24,759</td>
<td>16,400</td>
<td>8,359</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The collectors reported for the year $152,000 in new assessments, but the exemptions and withdrawals were so much as to leave only an increase of about $80,000. The taxable basis was $8,332,552.

The rate of State and county tax remained the same as in the preceding year, one dollar on the hundred.

Below is given in chronological order a list of the acts of the General Assembly of Maryland having reference to the interests of Montgomery County:

1787.—Georgetown incorporated.
1797 and 1800.—Acts to levy money for building a new jail.
1801.—To review the road from the mouth of Monocacy to Georgetown, through the lands of L. Luckett.

For laying out a road from J. Orme's to intersect the main road from William Darne's to Montgomery Court-house.

For removing prisoners to the new jail and selling the old.

1801 and 1802.—Creating the town of Rockville.

1803 and 1812.—Opening a road from Westminster through Montgomery County to Washington City.

1805.—For encouraging the killing of crows.

1804.—Laying out a road from Liberty Town, in Frederick County, to Hyattstown, and authorizing a lottery therefor.

For changing the road from Rockville to Potomac River.

1805.—Opening a road from Barnewville to Maceubbin's mill, to intersect the main road leading from Frederick Town to George Town, at or near Lugtown.

For an addition to Rockville.

1806.—For a lottery to raise money to purchase a fire-engine and to purchase ground and build a school-house in Rockville.

1807.—For laying out a road from Richardson's mill to intersect the main road to Bladensburg.

A Board of Agriculture established.

1808.—For laying out a road from Crow's mill, on the Patuxent, by the Point Branch and the Northwest Branch, to intersect the line of the District of Columbia.

For laying out the town of Brookville.

Declaring to be a public road the road from Edwards' Ferry, on the Potomac, to the road through the Sugar Land Bottom from the mouth of Sence to Conrad's Ferry.

1809.—For laying out a road from the lower end of William Darne's lane to intersect the road from J. Orme's plantation to the Montgomery court-house.

For erecting the town of Hyattstown.

For making a turnpike from Elliott's lower mills towards Georgetown.

For incorporating Rockville Academy.

For opening a road from the mouth of B. Gilpin's lane to intersect the old road to Montgomery court-house at or near A. Slater's.

1810.—For altering the road to Baltimore where it passes over the lands of P. B. Key.

For a lottery for opening and clearing the road from Westminster to Georgetown (through this county).

1811.—Creating the town of Barnewille.

Prescribing penalty on persons erecting booths or selling liquor within two miles of any Methodist camp or quarterly meeting.

1812.—For vacating the road from O. Trundle's, on Carroll's Manor, intersecting the public road at the mouth of the Monocacy.

1813.—Authorizing the Levy Court to appoint a constable for the town of Brookville.

1814.—For incorporating the trustees of Rockville Academy.

1815.—For laying out a road from a point on the road from Frederick Town to Noland's Ferry, to intersect the road from the mouth of Monocacy to Baltimore.

Incorporating a company to make a turnpike road from the mouth of Monocacy, through Montgomery County, to intersect the Baltimore and Frederick turnpike road at the Peplar Springs, in Anne Arundel County.

1816.—For alteration of the road from Georgetown to Rockville.

Laying money to complete the repairs on the jail.

For authorizing the proceedings of the Rockville Roman Catholic Church to be recorded and made valid.

For laying out a road from Unity to the establishment of Bentley & Co., called Triadelphia, and thence crossing the Patuxent into Anne Arundel County, to intersect the road from Rexbury to Elk Ridge Landing.

Appointing commissioners of the school fund.

1817.—For laying out a road from New Market, in Frederick County, to the District of Columbia line.

For conveying lands to the Society of Quakers for the establishment of a school.

For preventing geese and swine from going at large in Rockville, or within a quarter of a mile.

Incorporating companies to make certain turnpike roads through Montgomery and adjoining counties.

For laying out a road from New Market to intersect the Georgetown road near Griffith's lane, and thence to intersect the old Baltimore and Frederick road near H. Wayman's.

1818.—Repealing that part of an act of 1816 providing for the education of poor children in the county.

1822.—Authorizing George M. Chichester to keep a ferry from his lands in, over the Potomac River.

To open a road from Damascus to Rockville.

To open a road in Montgomery, Anne Arundel, and Baltimore Counties.

For restraining the sale of ardent spirits in Brooville.

For opening a road from Greenfield, in Frederick County, to near Clarksburg.

1824.—Divisional line established between Frederick and Montgomery Counties.

Levy Court to appoint annually a bailiff in the village of Unity.

To keep in repair the Rockville and Washington turnpike road.

To provide for building a court-house.

1825.—Providing for the surrender of the road and bridges of Columbia Turnpike Company to Anne Arundel and Montgomery Counties.

1835 and 1837.—Providing for the instruction of youth in primary schools.

1836.—For opening road from the old Quaker road, near Henry Griffith's, to Lisbon, in Anne Arundel County.

1838.—Authorizing the erection of a bridge over the Patuxent River at Brown's Ford.

For establishing primary schools, in which one manager of said schools was to be appointed for each election district annually by county commissioners.

1841.—For building a bridge over the Patuxent River at Triadelphia factory.

To open a road from said bridge to intersect the road from Washington to Westminster.

1845.—Owners of lands through which Robinson's mill road passes to retain gates or erect others.

1853.—An act to promote the culture of the mulberry and the manufacture of silk in Montgomery County, and to incorporate a company by the name and style of the Montgomery Silk Company. Its capital stock net to be less than one thousand dollars nor more than fifty thousand dollars, divided into shares of twenty dollars each. The commissioners authorized to receive subscriptions were Thomas P. Stabler, Thomas McCormick, Lloyd Dorsey, Samuel Blunt, Greenbury Griffith, William T. Glaze, Thomas T. Wheeler, Thomas Poole, William Brewer, Adam Robb, Zacharinh F. Johnson, William Tomlinson, Francis Valdenar, Samuel D. Waters, and Thomas Gittings. 1825.—Ephraim Gaither, Richard H. Griffith, James Day, Baker Waters, William Brewer, Elisha W. Williams, Thomas P. Wilson, Otho Magruder, Roger Brooke, and Thomas Gittings appointed school commissioners to apply and distribute school fund for poor children.

1829.—An act appointing Zadoc Magruder, William McLanahan, and Thomas Gittings to inspect and purchase certificates of surveys, resurveys, etc., essential to the land affairs of the county.

1836.—Thomas Gittings, W. O. Chappell, and William Chiswell to examine surveys, field-notes, etc., of Willy Janes, assistant surveyor of the county, and purchase such or all as may be of value to the county.

1868.—Incorporating Triadelphia Turnpike Company, also Savings Institution of Sandy Springs.

Appointing commissioners,—Francis Valdenar, of Montgomery, and William W. Hall, of Prince George,—to run, define, and mark the dividing lines between said counties.

1870.—Authorizing the repair of old jail or construction of new one.

Incorporating Washington, Colesville, and Ashton Turnpike Company.

1878.—Gaithersburg incorporated by act of April 5th.

1880.—Creating Districts Nos. 9 and 10, known as Gaithersburg and Great Falls Districts.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

COURTS AND COUNTY OFFICIALS.

Creation of the First Court—Erection of Court-House—First Court Proceedings—First Court Records—Early Marriages—Civil List—Elections.

In the early part of 1777, Nathan Magruder, John Murdock, Henry Griffith, Thomas Crampbin, Jr., Zadoc Magruder, Allen Bowie, and John Wilson were appointed commissioners for Montgomery County to purchase a lot of land not exceeding four acres, at a place to be selected by a majority of the votes, for the purpose of building thereon a courthouse and prison for the county. The place selected and long known as Montgomery Court-House was by act of 1801 designated Rockville. The town was then but a small hamlet, but is to-day a town of social and commercial importance. The old court-house was built shortly afterwards, and the first court held in 1779.

In 1798 an act was passed to divide the county into five election districts, and in 1799, Daniel Reintzell, Hezekiah Veitch, Thomas Fletchall, John Adamson, and Thomas Davis were appointed commissioners and made the division. The original districts were Berry, Cracklin, Rockville, Medley’s, and Clarksburg, which remained the political divisions until 1878, when three new districts, Bothea, Darnestown, and Mechanicsville, were formed, and in 1880 Gaithersburg and Great Falls Districts were laid out by an act of the General Assembly of Maryland.

The first County Court met at Leonard Davis’ May 20, 1777, and was held by the following worshipful justices: Charles Jones, Elisha Williams, Richard Thompson, Edward Burgess, Samuel W. Magruder, William Deakins, James Offutt. Samuel Carnole was appointed court clerk. A bond from Clement Beall, the new sheriff, signed by him, George Beall, Jr., and Hezekiah Magruder, was approved by the court. The second court was held May 29th, with same justices save Joseph Wilson, in place of William Deakins. Brooke Beall, the clerk of the court, was ordered to take charge of the records and other papers belonging to his office until there was a sufficient public building provided for that purpose, or it was otherwise ordered by the Legislature. It was also ordered that the courts be held at the house of Leonard Davis until the erection of the court-house and prison, and that Davis find a sufficient house for the reception of prisoners by July 20th. The bond of Brook Beall as clerk, appointed by the first court, signed by him, Edward Burgess, and Samuel Wade Magruder, was approved.

The third court met August 12th, with the same justices on the bench as at first, save that Offutt was absent, but in his place were William Deakins, Thomas S. Wootton, and Phineas Campbell. The following grand jury, the first in the county, appeared and were sworn: Alexander Cragott (foreman), Henry Clarke, Herbert Wallace, James Stimpson, William Benson, Richard Hopkins, Benjamin Harris, Jr., Thomas McCubbin, Aaron Lanham, Daniel Henry, Basil Roberts, James Harbin, John Daley, Greenbury Gaither, Michael Litton, Benjamin Allinson, James Higgins. The court bailiff was Benjamin Nicholls. Richard Potts and Baker Johnson were admitted to the bar as attorneys. On August 13th warrants were issued to Samuel Douglass as overseer of the “main road,” in the room of Samuel Biggs.
The following bonds were given and licenses paid for tavern-keeping:

"State of Maryland to Lucy Oune, £40.

Saml. Turner, 40.
William Watkins, 40.
"Same to

Nicholas Paul, £40.
John Watkins, 40.
Adam Burns, 40.

For Lucy Oune's keeping a sufficient house of entertainment, according to act of Assembly. Fine paid sheriff & Clerk.

For N. Paul's keeping House of Entertainment. Fine paid Sheriff & Clerk.

Paul Hoy brought into court his servant Mary Riley, who had run away, and who was adjudged to serve her master two years after her present time of servitude had expired, also a further time of six months after the expiration of said two years, which six months was allowed her on payment of three pounds to her master as a fine for having base-born child. James Luter and Thomas Graves gave bonds for keeping taverns. The sureties of the former were Adam Burns and John Dowden; of latter, John Watkins and Adam Burns. On the oath of Ann Campbell, John Waters gave bond in twenty pounds, with John Randall as security, for his appearance at the next term. Leonard Richard brought into court his servant, Ann Graham, to be adjudged for having a base-born child, and she was ordered to serve thirteen months in addition to her present servitude, and fined £3 7s. John Hewes was recognized to the next court in forty pounds, to be of good behavior towards Ninian Beall, with Benedict Woodward and Thomas Sparrow as sureties. John Jones, an orphan, aged three years, was bound unto William Nailor until his majority. Richard Downes, for running away from his master, Charles Murphy, was ordered to serve five months longer. Leonard Davis was licensed to keep tavern, with Charles Hungerford and Richard Crabb as sureties. Negro "Sampson," belonging to Thomas Lancaster Lanslide, and negro "Juden," of Jeremiah Oune, were set levy free. Brock Mockbie got a license to keep tavern, with Edward Burgess and Simon Nichols as securities. Ann Giddings, for having a base-born child, was fined £1 10s. Philip Houser was appointed overseer of main roads, vicin Niuin Beall (son of Ninian).

"Dimah, a mulatto, aged three years," was sold to Simon Nichols until her thirty-first year for twenty pounds; and "Dick Hodney," mulatto, aged one year, was sold to the same until his thirty-first year for ten pounds.

The justices of the court settled and adjusted the rates of liquors and other accommodations as follows:

A hot dit for a gentleman, with a pint of beer or cider,.......................... 2 0 0
Do, for a gentleman's servant, with do........ 0 5 0
A cold do, for a gent, with do........ 0 0 0
Do, for a gent's servant, with do........ 0 2 0
Lodging in a good bed, with clean sheets........ 0 0 9
Shallage with hay or fodder 24 hours for a horse........ 1 0 0
Puturance 24 hours for a horse........ 0 0 0
Oats or corn per gall........ 0 1 0
West Indies Rum or Spirits per quart, sealed and made into Toddy, with leaf sugar........ 1 10 0
Do, or do, per gill........ 0 2 0
Peach Brandy per Quart........ 0 5 0
Apple & cherry do, per Quart........ 0 0 0
Whiskey per Quart........ 0 0 0
Madeira Wine per Quart........ 0 10 0
Claret per Quart........ 0 10 0
Red or white port or Lisbon per Quart........ 0 10 0
Tenderif per Quart........ 0 5 0
Good Limmuns spice........ 0 0 0
Good Limes spice........ 0 0 0
Good strong beer per gallon........ 0 0 0
Good small do, per do........ 0 0 0
Good cider per do........ 0 0 0

All liquors intermixed with Cherries not to exceed the above rates.

The following constables were appointed:

Upper part of Newfoundland Hundred......Aquila Davall.
Upper part of Potomack .........William Davis.
Lower " James Bobb.
Seneac " John Cook.
North West " John Lee.
George Town " Thomas Brannah.
Rock Creek " John Tannenhill.
Sugar Land " Thomas Dowden.
Sugar Loaf " John Watts.
Lingamore " Hezekiah Griffith.

The following witnesses testified before the grand jury: Walter Smith Greenfield, Bennett Woodward, John Cook, Thomas Brannah, John Watts, Hezekiah Griffith, William Davis, John Tannenhill, Henry O'Neale, Ninian Beall (of Ninian), Mary Greenfield, Ann Giddings.

The court appointed George Beall, Jr., and Hezekiah Magruder "toacco inspectors," who gave bonds with Zach. Magruder and Thomas Nicholls as sureties. (They were reappointed in 1778.)

The next County Court met Nov. 11, 1777. Present, Justices Charles Jones, Richard Thompson, James Offutt, Richard Beall, William Deakins. The following grand jury appeared: Elias Harding, Charles Murphy, John Fleming, Jr., John Thompson, Joshua Harbin, Thomas Veatch, Jonathan Tucker, William Parkin, George Offutt, Martin Fisher, William Willett, James Haislip, Zephaniah Offutt, Moses Oune, Edward Beall. The bailiff was Walter Magruder. Samuel Briggs was licensed to keep tavern upon payment of £3 15s., and gave bond, with Thomas Veatch and Wm. Blackmore as sureties. Josiah Russell and Samuel Irwin were admitted as attorneys. Ninian Beall was licensed to keep tavern, with John Suter and Samuel Biggs on his bond, also George Campbell, with Thomas Dowden and Samuel...
Biggs as bondsmen. Henry Clark was appointed constable, vice John Lee, in Northwest Hundred. Daniel Henry was arrested for saying that he wished Hancock and Adams (John Hancock and Samuel Adams) were taken by the enemy, as they were the beginning of the war. On his examination by the court he was honorably discharged, the accusation being without the least foundation in fact.

Christian Bencees and Richard Calahan were recognized to the next term,—offenses not stated. The first criminal trial was that of James Vine for felony. He was found guilty, and sentenced to receive at the hands of the sheriff twenty lashes at the common whipping-post on his bare back, and be put five minutes in the pillory. Thomas Malone was bound over to the next court to keep the peace, especially towards Ninian Beall. Ann Willson was fined £1 for having a base-born child, Hugh Clifford £1 7s. 4d. for assault on Ninian Beall, and the latter £2 10s. 7d. for neglect of duty as overseer of the roads. In the case of Catherine McKay vs. Christopher Keyser, on her petition for freedom, she was declared free, her servitude having expired. Ann Woodward, for having a base-born child, was sold for seven years, and her child until it arrived at the age of thirty-one years, Archibald Allen being the purchaser for five pounds, and he released ten years of the child's servitude. George Mitchell was examined "for speaking inimical against the States," and in default of £2000 bail to appear at next court, was committed to the gaol. Benjamin Nicholls was ordered to take care of and provide for a negro man. In the case of George Gordon vs. Joseph Sim for his freedom, the latter was ordered to pay thirty shillings seven pence, the remaining part of Gordon's freedom dues. John Hutchinson was declared levy free. Hiram Kirk, an orphan, aged eleven, was bound unto Thomas Johns and Thomas Richardson until his majority, during which apprenticeship his masters were to learn him the cooper's trade, to read, write, and cipher as far as the rule of three, and when free, give him a set of cooper's tools and a decent suit of apparel. David Harvey and Mary O'Neill were recognized to the next term of court.

The next court convened March 10, 1778, when the following grand jury were sworn: Ninian Beall Magruder, Van Swearingen, William Beall Magruder, William Clark, Anthony Wilcoxon, George Reed, James Sheer, John Belt, Samuel Beall Magruder, Edward Magruder, Nathan Holland, Thomas Sparrow, Thomas Lewis, George Beall, Benjamin Harris, James Duley. The court appointed Josiah Russell as prosecutor during its present sitting. Archibald Boyd was admitted as an attorney. The following persons appeared in court and took "the oath of fidelity and support to the State of Maryland." William Holland, Nathan Thompson, John Litmor, Seth Gaither, Ananias Ozdon, Levi Hays.

At the August court, 1778, the justices sitting were Samuel Wade Magruder, Gerard Briscoe, Henry Gaither, Charles Jones, Walter Beall, Richard Thompson, Edward Burgess, Thomas Sprigg Wootton.

Christopher Bazby was convicted of felony by the following petit jury: John Wilcoxon, William O'Neale, Thomas Hays, Benoni Dawson, Basil Roberts, Henry Clark, Joseph Wheat, Sr., Nathaniel Crawford, Anthony Wilcoxon, Humphrey Godman, John Allison, Benjamin Harris, and was sentenced to receive on his bare back twenty lashes and stand ten minutes in the pillory. At the November court, 1778, Samuel Turner, Brooke Beall, and William Deakin, Jr., were appointed to view the road leading from Seneca into the new road from the mouth of Watts' Branch to Georgetown, for the purpose of building a bridge over said Watts' Branch. The court appointed Charles Jones and Walter Beall to agree with workmen to build a bridge over Rock Creek near Charles Jones'. Twenty pounds was levied to purchase a stone for the jail. The first petit jury which tried a criminal case was sworn in at the November court, 1777, to wit: James Perry, William Tannehill, Edward Wheeler, Charles Gassaway, Daniel Henry, Samuel Biggs, Thomas Tucker, John Wilcoxon, Philip Oune, Michael Litton, William Boyd, Anthony Wilcoxon, who convicted James Vine of felony. The first regular petit jurors summoned appeared at the August term, 1777, to wit: Samuel Turner, Thomas Nicholls, John Watkins, Charles Gassaway, Zachariah Offutt, Nathaniel Crawford, Charles Jones, Zachariah Thompson, John Hawkins, Walter Smith Greenfield, William Talbot, Joseph Magruder, Ninian Magruder, Stephen Kisor, Thomas Graves, Zephaniah Wallace, Jacob Upright, Richard Magruder, Joseph White, James Wallace, Joshua Harbin, John Ray, Samuel Brewer Magruder, Samuel Watson, Mark Elliott, and Michael Dowden, who for their two days' services received forty pounds of tobacco, the same as was allowed the grand jurors for that length of time.

At the March term, 1779, the justices sitting were Charles Jones, Phineas Campbell, Walter Beall, Henry Gaither, Joseph Wilson, George Cullum, S. W. Magruder. For indecent behavior to the court James Polly was fined £5.

At the August term, 1779, the grand jury were Richard Wootton (foreman), Daniel Years, Daniel Henry, William Howard, Samuel Watson, Elias Harding, Edward Wheeler, Wadsworth Willson, Humphrey Godman, Hugh Riley, Henry Wilcoxen, William Fee, Van Swearingen, Mark Elliott, Nathan Linthicum, Alexander Catlett. The court crier appointed was John Ball. At the August term, 1780, Jonathan Nixon, Jr., was bailiff, and Luther Martin was admitted to practice as an attorney.

The first deed recorded was on July 3, 1777, from Benjamin Spyker, of George Town, to Andrew Reintzel, for lot No. 78 in George Town; consideration, £75. This indenture was acknowledged before Charles Jones and Richard Thompson, justices of the peace, who were witnesses to its execution.

On Aug. 9, 1777, a lease executed Sept. 7, 1776, between Thomas McCray (lessee) and Samuel Boone, whereby for five shillings was leased during the natural life of lessee 100 acres on Muddy Branch, adjoining lands of William Deakins, Eden Pancoast, and Alexander Campbell, was recorded. The third indenture was recorded August 12th, and dated July, 1777, from John Watson to John Reynell and Samuel Coats, conveying for £800 two tracts of land, the first on Sligo Branch, part of "Labyrinth," and containing 240 acres, and the second a tract patented by Lord Baltimore to John Watson, Aug. 2, 1766, called "Rockingham," and laid out for twelve acres. On the same day was recorded a deed from Ninian Beall to Alexander Catlett and his wife Susanna for 200 acres, called "Farewell," also for another tract of 179 acres. Also on same day was put to record a deed from Ninian Beall to Hardage Lane and his wife Rachel for 525 acres in one tract, 152½ acres called "Bachelors Chance," and a third of 22½ acres of the resurvey on Rich Meadow. Also on same day was recorded a conveyance from Ninian Beall to Benjamin Edwards and his wife Margaret for 429 acres of resurvey on Gravelly Ridge and 271 acres of resurvey on Rich Meadow. The considerations in these three deeds were the grantees being the daughters and sons-in-law of the grantor. On same day was recorded the indenture of apprenticeship of Thomas Wall, son of Mary Wall, apprenticed to John McCormack for seven years to learn the art of a weaver. Said apprentice was to have two years' schooling, and at the expiration of his term of service have a new suit of wearing apparel agreeable to the customary wear of the country, and a new loom with the necessary utensils thereto belonging given him by his master, whom he had to serve with diligence and respect. On same day was recorded articles of agreement between William Collyar and Abraham Sansbury, whereby the latter sold to the former all his right of everything upon a plantation belonging to Jonathan Allison, or of which said Allison was overseer (only one bed and furniture, one servant-woman named Mary Ryan, a tea-kettle, the wool, and some leather), for £130. It was agreed, in case there was trouble in getting possession of the property or a lawsuit attending same, Sansbury should pay "the lawful boot" and not be entitled to the purchase-money.

The Levy Court in 1777 made an assessment for the building of a court-house and prison of 108,342 pounds of tobacco,—that is, 26 pounds upon each taxable,—the total taxables being 4167. The court ordered the sheriff to collect it, having decided that these sums of tobacco might in reason be paid and received.

Some insight into the early settlement of the county may be obtained from an examination of the wills recorded and the inventories of personal property and letters of administration and guardianship filed immediately after the establishment of the Orphans' Court. The first will admitted to probate in the new county was that of Edward Gaither, son of Benjamin, on June 11, 1777, before Samuel West, register of wills. It was dated March 26, 1777, and the four subscribing witnesses to its execution were John Ray, Jr., Benjamin Ray, John Suter, and Samuel Hardesty. The testator bequeathed to his son Benjamin one tract of land called "Gaither's Purchase," containing one hundred acres, also fifty-four acres of part of a tract called "What's Left." To his son Basil he bequeathed "Mitchell's Garden" of nineteen acres, one hundred and thirty acres of a tract called "Mitchell's Range," and two acres likewise in same "Range." To his son Eli the plantation on which the testator lived, of one hundred and ninety-eight and one-half acres, and to his sons Greenbury, Nicholas, Burgess, Jonsey, and Brice all the remaining part of "Mitchell's Range," all the first and second resurveys on "Mitchell's Range," the tract called "Gaither's Range," and the one named "Good Luck." The tract he was to have of Zachariah Linthicum to be equally divided among the last five sons. He left his copper still to his wife Eleonor during her natural life, besides other properties. To his daughters Eleonor Prather, Sarah Gaither, Casander Gaither, and Lyla Gaither he devised all his negroes, save the two to his wife during her life. The second will was recorded May 28, 1777, and was that of Samuel Saffell, dated Nov. 25, 1776. Its witnesses were Robert Dawe, Benjamin B. Kelly, and Griffith Davis. He gave to his children—Samuel, William, Ann, James, Joshua, Elizabeth, Charles, and Sarah—each a shilling, and to his wife Sarah, made the executrix, all his properties.

The following is a summary of the real and personal property, as returned by Assessor Enoch Green for taxation in 1793:
MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Total Amount.</th>
<th>£</th>
<th>d.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Value of other Personal Property.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Male Slaves above 45 years, and Females above 56 years.</td>
<td>202</td>
<td>3,290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Value.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Male and Female Slaves under 8 years.</td>
<td>202</td>
<td>3,290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Value.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Female Slaves from 14 to 56 years.</td>
<td>202</td>
<td>3,290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Value.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Male Slaves from 14 to 45 years.</td>
<td>202</td>
<td>3,290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Value.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Male and Female Slaves from 8 to 14 years.</td>
<td>202</td>
<td>3,290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Value.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number of Acres.</td>
<td>£</td>
<td>d.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The following wills were proven and recorded at the times mentioned,—all within the first three years after the creation of the county:

- May 21, 1777, Ralph Hoults.
- June 14, "John Fletcher.
- June 17, "James Farrall.
- Aug. 4, "Jasper Yost.
- 21, "William Wilton.
- Feb. 19, 1778, Middle Smith.
- 2, "Henry Caggott.
- 4, "Richard Anderson.
- March 4, "John Mullikin (painter).
- 21, "William Mullikin.
- 28, "Lodwick Davis.
- April 14, "Thomas Cagger.
- May 30, "Benjamin Prather.
- 2, "John Cook.
- June 4, "Hugh Coulam.
- Jan. 8, 1779, Eleven Hopkins.
- Aug. 19, 1778, Richard Beall, of Samuel.
- Oct. 5, "John Holmes.
- May 12, "James Harbin.
- Feb. 10, "Samuel West (register of wills).
- Jan. 9, 1779, Archibald Edmondston.
- 27, 1778, John Fryer.
- May 14, "James Spring.
- March 21, "Thomas Prince.
- June 9, "James Gatton.
- Feb. 9, 1779, Samuel Magruder, then of Prince George's County, where the will was dated Jan. 12, 1739.
- Feb. 11, 1779, Thomas Cartwright.
- July 4, "Robert Owen.
- 30, "William Shaw.
- Aug. 4, "Benjamin Gatton.
- 30, "Catherine Ferguson.
- Sept. 4, "Robert Constable.
- Nov. 12, "William Davis, Sr.
- Dec. 18, "Gabriel Baxter.
- Feb. 8, 1780, Jane MacGeilhu.
- March 11, "Robert Lassby.
- 13, "Henry Lecke.
- 15, "Nicholas Rhoades.
- 24, "George Beall.
- 29, "Elizabeth Butler.
- May 22, "James Beall, son of Ninian.

The first inventory recorded is that of John Cook (an additional one), of ninety-five barrels of corn, valued at £35, Jan. 18, 1779. The next was of Joshua Hickman, amount £143. Then of Ambrose Cook, Jan. 8, 1779, of £1249 6s. 3d. Then of James Odel (appraised Aug. 12, 1765), of £348 16s. 10d. Of Jasper Yost, taken Aug. 27, 1777, for £216 10s. 4d. Robert Redmond's, March 10, 1778, of £66; John Fryer's, June 23, 1778, of £2 4s.; of Aaron Prather, March 7, 1777, of £228 2s. 2d.; of Edward Gaither, Feb. 6, 1778, of £484 9s.; and of William Wilson, Aug. 28, 1777, of £459 4s. 9d.

At the June term, 1779, Charlotte Perry chose John Williams as her guardian, and Joseph West chose William O'Neale,—first two guardians appointed. This was the first Orphans' Court held, as the County Court had for previous two years transacted all probate business. At August term, Edward McDaniel, aged eight, was bound to Sarah Mitchell, and John Cannida to William Tracey. The first letters of administration were taken out at December term by Mary Hickman and Neal McGinnis on Arthur Hickman's estate. At the February term, 1780, the first citation was issued, and was for Jacob Rentzel to appear at the next term. At the same term an attachment for Samuel Hobbs and wife was issued. The business of the court in the first three years was small, but at the close of the Revolutionary war began to increase, when the sittings of the justices became longer and the minute-books full of the dull routine of court work.

The following is a list of marriage licenses for the first two years of which there is any record given. Prior to 1788 no records of marriages were made, or, if they were, they have been lost:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Month</th>
<th>Individuals</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 10</td>
<td>Francis Piles and Ann Poole.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Richard Hudson and Nancy Wellen.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>William Magruder and Lucy Williams.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Benjamin Davis and Elizabeth Thresher.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Michael Wheaton and Elizabeth Nichelson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>John Peter and Eleanor Orne.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Thomas Hickman and Margaret Sowener.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Alexander Oft and Anne Lowe.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>John Gartell and Lucretia Beall.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 8</td>
<td>Peter Hawkins and Elender Williams.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>William Worthington and Ruth Perry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Christopher Sipe and Elizabeth Iglehart.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>John Boyd and Mary Parrum.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>William Darnes and Betsey Gahaive.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>William Thomas and Peggy Fletcher.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Arnold Warfield and Margaret Browning.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>William H. Gittings and Jane Murry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Basil Maeneue and Sarah Walker.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Christopher A. Coall and Sarah Claton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 11</td>
<td>Brian Flaherty and Bridget Flaherty.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Thomas Crowley and Judy Conner.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>John Miller and Eleanor Harnett.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Barton Emms and Margaret Smith.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Thomas Watkins and Catherine Magneutry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Thomas H. Wilsequeun and Sarah Prather.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 17</td>
<td>Walter Duvall and Sarah Duvall.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Charles Stewart and Chloe Ann Norton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>John B. James and Ruth Crawford.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>William Stewart and Helen Beall.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Ignatius Davis and Margaret Wooton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 1</td>
<td>Zachariah Duley and Ann Lazenby.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>William Prather and Elizabeth Adamson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Collin Williamson and Mary Talcot.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Henry O'Riley and Elizabeth Sewal.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>James Long and Margaret Sanford.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Patrick Carroll and Ann Farrell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 12</td>
<td>John All and Comfort Yeang.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Nathan Walker and Ann Beck.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aug. 7</td>
<td>Justice Ridgway and Anne Artist.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Charles Rigg and Sarah Ervin.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Alfin Macentoo and Eleanor Rosby.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 11</td>
<td>Amos Scott and Anne West.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Benjamin Cross and Margaret Walker.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Henry Robert Whittaker and Mary Edwards.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Thomas Wilson and Nancy Rankins.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 2</td>
<td>John Pringle and Elizabeth Hendley.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Dawson Cash and Jennifer Beene.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Basil Ferguson and Elizabeth Brashar.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Thomas Wheeler and Ruth Jackson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Benjamin Summers and Virginia Bechwith.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>David O'Neale and Rebecca Lane.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>James Baggerly and Elizabeth Smith.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Walter Helten and Nancy Johnson.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Thomas Kennedy and Rosamond H. Thomas.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Stephen Penne and Elender Scrivnor.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Thomas Arnold and Mary Frazer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Robert Wilson and Elender Shekells.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 1</td>
<td>Charles Sheets and Hannah Hobbs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Thomas Burre and Linny Butt.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>John Jones and Sarah Stewart.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Alexander Jones and Mary Waner.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>John Thomas and Nancy Berry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Israel Housey and Terry Hobbs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Beem Ashton and Rachel Perry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Joseph Crown and Mary Slater.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Jacob Cross and Dehila Cross.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Benjamin Sharp and Henrietta Harris.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dec. 3</td>
<td>Thomas Dick and Margaret Peter.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Samuel Ciel and Sarah Belt.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Harrison Cleveland and Sarah Richard.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Benjamin Cranroft and Nelly Prather.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Charles Harvey and Rebecca King.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Aaron Poole and Hessa Browning.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Nathan Holland, Jr., and Martha Beall.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Joseph Astlen and Rachel Chiswell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>John Jackson and Easter Ellis.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Joseph Gee and Mary Hev.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>John M. Cox and Eleanor Gray.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Basil Cohoe and Nancy Phillips.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Levi Lewis and Rebecca Winn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Bennett Eiven and Sarah Dougherty.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Hoby Penn and Lucretia Howes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>William Slater and Sarah Leatch.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>George Ward and Ann Redman.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Edward Brashers and Ann Dyoon.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>William Case and Eliza Kelly.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Conrad Hester and Barbara Getert.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>John Powell and Eleanor Steele.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>John Campbell and Priscilla Oden.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Erasmus Huguet and Jane Douglass.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Norris Read and Elizabeth Holland.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>John Orne and Elizabeth Gaines.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>John Troop and Rebecca Morely.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>Joseph Brooke and Leitia Boone.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Charles Davis and Lawrady House.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1799.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Month</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 15</td>
<td>Henry C. Wyvall and Ruth Davall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Jonas Austin and Ann Hoggins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>James Wilson Perry and Margaret Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>James Johnson and Ann Riney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Jacob Smokey and Elizabeth Funks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Thomas Whalin and Ellicott Carey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>John Adams, Jr., and Eleanor Colyer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Charles Offutt Jones and Rebecca Offutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Thomas Gatton and Ruth May</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Benjamin Thompson and Elizabeth Hany</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Brier Lowry and Sarah Appleby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Samuel Hedges and Eleanor McCoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>John Trundle and Elizabeth Wells</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>William Heath and Vorlinder Boswell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>William T. Bell and Eleanor Beall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Rezin Shaw and Anna Crim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 1</td>
<td>Richard Lewis and Elizabeth Beall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>James Grooms and Sarah Hing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Daniel Ball and Elizabeth Carroll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>David Anderson and Margaret Thompson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Richard Cissell and Charlotte Cissell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>William West and Nancy Offutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Walter Jenkins and Ruth Selby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Abner Clond and Susannah Smallwood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Thomas Garrett and Elizabeth Fee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>John Austin and Casandria Oile</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>John Arrin and Elizabeth Davall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Joshua Spurrier and Harriet Baker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Thomas Sedgwick and Ann Atherson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Hezekiah Dixon and Lucy Perry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Carlton Belt, Jr., and Elizabeth Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>John Trundle and Mary Nestch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Barroch Offutt and Nirlinda Offutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March 7</td>
<td>Brooks EDMonton and Deborah Orne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>James B. Crawford and Ann Allison</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Basil Waters and Aon P. Magruder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Daniel Dury and Elizabeth Jinkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>John George Baker and Amelia Jackson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Levi Tucker and Susannah Collins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Ignatius Jones and Viney Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Stephen Bickett and Catharine Oliver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>April 2</td>
<td>Giles Easton and Elizabeth Nolen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Thomas Hill and Eleanor Wheeler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>John Dorn and Elizabeth Grantt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>John Nicholas and Tabitha Oden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Charles Beatty and Vorlinder Offutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Teneh Ringgold and Mary C. Lee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Jessell Leach and Mary Lipton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Joseph Cope and Elizabeth Hennis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>James Davis and Anny Cissell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>May 10</td>
<td>Jonathan Gloyd and Hetty Lineberry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Basil Trundle and Easter Hughes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Edmund Riggs and Jane Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Charles Griffith and Elizabeth Green</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Samuel Gattton and Mary Jarloe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 6</td>
<td>Samuel G. Jones and Mary Few</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>George Warren and Sarah Ticker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 6</td>
<td>William Oliver and Rebecca Wilburn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>John Hynce and Vorlinder Swan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aug. 5</td>
<td>Leonard Piles Ochum and Sarah Thirech</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Solomon Polly and Mary Holland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Nicholas Beckwith and Mary Butt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Jacob Hoikman and Susannah Hall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Jonathan Fry and Amelia Flatrock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 4</td>
<td>John Barney and Milly Brascroft</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Richard Wells and Anne Belt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 16</td>
<td>Washington Bowie and Ann Crab Choe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>David Peter and Sarah Johns</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 8</td>
<td>Jacob Howard and Rachel Prather</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Lawrence Lydian and Mary Wehlan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Benjamin Dillaha and Rachel Slater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>George Mornick and Maria Bell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>William Wheeler and Ann Hill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Thomas Wardengo and Pernelia Simpson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 4</td>
<td>John Magruder and Mary Lithium</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Joseph Fernetion and Sarah Hays</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>John Huichen and Margaret Brown</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>James Magruder and Elizabeth Lithum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>William Levering and Susanna White</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Jesse Merchant and Elizabeth Dunn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>John Lyons and Sarah Welch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>James Bolton and Lucy Shaw</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Barton Harris and Elizabeth Casey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Hardige Lane and Mary Greenfield</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>John Wright and Elizabeth Downey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>John Parsley and Eleanor Clayton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dec. 18</td>
<td>Joseph Brown and Nancy Windsor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>John Perry and Jane Alutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Thomas Stonestreet and Polly Nichols</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>John Morris and Anne Green</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Charles Bevin and Soplia Moore</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Michael McElrane and Amelia Holland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Hezekiah Verslum and Elizabeth Hoyd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Joseph Chamberlain and Susan Collins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Richard Stewart and Elizabeth Remington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>John William and Sarah Stone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>George H. Gloyd and Elizabeth Boyd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Samuel Gue and Rachel Mobly</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1800

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Jan.</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>William Ramsey and Margaret Herren</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Thomas Cook and Sally Maria Traverse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Alexander Callies and Mary Sedgewick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>John Seaton and Ann Wise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Giles Hill and Ann Newton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Basil Poole and Ruby King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Edward Porter and Mary Hester</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>John Lantam and Lucy Ray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>John Atherson and Sylvia Perkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Canden Riley and Anne Ray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Frederick Gaither and Jane Galerell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Nathaniel James and Anne Bayton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Nathen Orne and Polly Beull</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Ephram Murphey and Mary Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Philip Cissell and Rachel Lizure</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Joseph Sheldon and Julia Hill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Solomon Holland and Margaret Gattion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>John Rodman and Harriet Ward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Benedict Beckwith and Elizabeth White</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Thomas James and Lydia Fowler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Benjamin Fowler and Judith Scott</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Feb. 5. William Brewer and Mary R. Chiswell.
  22. William Thomas and Elizabeth Shaw.
  22. Philip Tosell and Mary Wheaten.
  24. George Hoskins and Mary Read.
On June 2, 1812, Henry Harding was married at Rockville to Catharine Ann Robb by Father Plunkett.
On June 25, 1815, in Washington City, Judge Charles J. Kilgour, of Rockville, was married to Miss Louisa McIlhany, of Virginia.
On Feb. 22, 1844, in Barnesville, by Rev. M. Jones, the Rev. James C. Henning, of Methodist Episcopal Church, to Miss Alice Ann, youngest daughter of the late John Webster Wilson, of Baltimore.

A list of the officers of the county is given from the earliest period of which there is any record:

JUDGES OF THE CIRCUIT COURT.

Chief Judges.
1791, Richard Potts. 1865, Samuel H. Berry (circuit judge).
1792, William Craik. 1866, Richard Ridgely.
1797, Richard Potts. 1867, Madison Nelson (died Jan. 1, 1870).
1801, William Craik. 1870, William P. Maulsby.
1802, William C. Baggott. 1876, Richard J. Bowie (died March, 1881).
1806, Jeremiah Townley Chase. 1826, Thomas Beall Dorsey.
1826, Thomas Beall Dorsey. 1851, Nicholas Brewer (circuit judge).

William P. Maulsby was appointed to serve until following election, as was also John Ritchie.

Associate Judges.
1791, Jeremiah Crabbs. 1885, Richard Wootton.
1793, Benjamin Edwards. 1886, Richard Ridgely.
1795, Thomas Plater. 1886, Richard H. Harwood.
1802, Patrick Magruder. 1828, Nicholas Brewer.
1802, William Holmes. 1867, William Veirs Bowie.

CLERKS OF CIRCUIT COURT.
1777, Brooke Beall. 1814, Samuel T. Stonestreet.
1795, Upton Beall. 1831, James G. Herring.
1837, Brice Selby. 1863, E. B. Prettyman.

SHERIFFS.
1777, Clement Beall. 1821, William O'Neal.
1780, Simon Nickolls. 1834, Richard R. Waters.
1786, William Robertson. 1840, Henry Lilly.
1789, Benjamin W. Jones. 1842, Thomas F. W. Vinson.
1795, Benjamin Ray, Jr. 1846, William O. Chappell.
1798, Benjamin W. Jones. 1849, William Thompson.
1801, Solomon Holland. 1851, Philip J. Connell.
1804, Benjamin Hay, Jr. 1853, Matthew Fields.
1807, John Fleming. 1855, Silas Browning.
1813, Robert W. Fleming. 1859, Samuel Glyed.
1816, Arnold T. Windsor. 1861, John T. Baker.
1819, Bree Selby. 1862, Perrie Leizer.
1822, William Clements. 1865, Zephaniah N. Jones.
1825, Henry Harding. 1867, James H. Caggett.
1828, Thomas F. W. Vinson. 1869, John T. Beeson.

1871, Thomas Waters, of S. 1877, Ambrose Clements.
1872, Edward H. Waters. 1879, John H. Kelchner.
1875, Hillary O. Higgin.

REGISTERS OF WILLS.
1777, Samuel West. 1847, Henry Harding.
1778, Richard Wootton. 1851, William Thompson, of R.
1800, Solomon Holland. 1858, John W. Spates.
1838, James W. Anderson. 1863, Robert W. Carter.

STATE ATTORNEYS.
1845, Richard J. Bowie. 1871, Spencer C. Jones.
1849, William Viers Bowie. 1879, J. B. Henderson.
1867, George Peter.

LEVY COURTS AND COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.
1801—Thomas Davis, John L. Summers, John Clarke, James Lockland, Thomas B. Beall, Adam King, Thomas Davis.
1808-12.—Norman West, Richard West, Edward Burgess, Warren Magruder, Henry Jones, Samuel Lane, James B. Brooke.
1815.—Eli Dorsey, Jesse Wilcoxon, William Darne, Thomas Gitting, Richard West, Thomas Fletchall, Lydia Griffith.
1816.—Thomas Gitting, Richard West, Lydia Griffith, Jesse Wilcoxon, Eli Dorsey, Benjamin Husey, Alex. Warfield.
1822.—Samuel Griffiths, Daniel Trundle, John Busey, James Fletchall, Richard West, Elijah Viers.
1827.—Richard West, James Fletchall, Daniel Trundle, Samuel Griffith, Lloyd Magruder, Joshua Dorsey, Roger Brooke.
1828.—Richard West, James Fletchall, Daniel Trundle, Roger Brooke, Horace Wilson, Henry Griffith.
1829.—Benjamin White, Richard West, James Fletchall, Daniel Trundle, Roger Brooke, Horace Wilson.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

1830.—Joshua Dorsey, Greenbury Griffith, William C. Pearce, Burgess Williet, Wm. D. Poole.
1833.—Lloyd Magruder, Horace Wilson, Henry Griffith, John L. Trundale, Edward Dawes.
1834.—Baker Waters, Lloyd Magruder, Henry Griffith, J. L. Trundale, Edward Dawes.
1842.—E. W. Owen, C. H. Murphy, J. T. Viers, H. H. Young, Francis Valdenar.
1843—44.—Wm. Thompson, of R., C. H. Murphy, James Offutt, Elias Spalding, Francis Valdenar.
1845.—Francis Valdenar, Charles H. Murphy, Elias Spalding, William Thompson, of R., James Offutt.
1846—47.—C. H. Murphy, Henry H. Young, William Brown, Charles H. Murphy, Elias Spalding.
1848—49.—Zachariah Waters, Nathan C. Dickerson, Stephen M. Lyddane, Martin L. Gittings, John C. Gott.
1850—51.—John C. Gott, Benjamin E. Hughes, Nathan C. Dickerson, S. M. Lyddane, M. L. Gittings.
1854—55.—Julius West, Howard Brown, C. H. Murphy, Nathan S. White, William Brown, of J.
1865.—Thomas J. Holland, William Reid, Benjamin C. Gott, Joseph T. Bailey, Thomas Rawlings.
1867.—John L. Du Fief, Thomas J. Holland, Thomas Rawlings, William Reid, Benjamin C. Gott.
1869.—Thomas J. Holland, Solomon Dowden, E. G. Dudley, Stephen M. Lyddane, Oliver H. P. Clark.
1780—83.—Charles Jones, Enneas Campbell, Richard Wootton, Joseph Willson, Edward Burgess.
1783—85.—Enneas Campbell, Richard Wootton, Joseph Willson, Edward Burgess.
1790—92.—Edward Burgess, Joseph Willson, John Holmes, Enneas Campbell, Lawrence O'Neal.
1792—94.—Thomas Crampin, Thomas Johns, John Holmes.
1794—97.—John Holmes, Richard Wootton, Thomas Crampin.
1797—98.—Thomas Crampin, Richard Wootton, Benjamin Edwards.
1798—1800.—Thomas Crampin, Richard Wootton, Daniel Reintzel.
1806—2.—Thomas Crampin, Richard Wootton.
1802—5.—Richard Wootton, William Holmes.
1806—4.—Richard Wootton, Honor Martin, Samuel Griffith.
1808—10.—Honor Martin, Thomas Linstead, Robert Smith.
1810—12.—Honor Martin, Thomas Linstead, Walter B. Beall.
1812—13.—Thomas Davis, Richard Anderson, Bruce Selby.
1813—14.—Thomas Davis, Henry Harding, Bruce Selby.
1814—15.—Bruce Selby, Henry Harding, Thomas J. Caggert.
1816—17.—William Darne, Henry Harding, Thomas J. Caggert.
1817—19.—Bruce Selby, Henry Harding, William Darne.
1819—20.—Henry Harding, Thomas Lingoan, William Darne.
1820—23.—Honor Martin, Richard K. Watts, Sr., George Magruder.
1823—28.—Honor Martin, Robert Wallace, Richard K. Watts, Sr.
1825—29.—Henry Harding, Willy James, Jese Leach.
1830—31.—Robert Wallace, Samuel C. Veirs, John Adamson, Jr.
1831—34.—Henry Harding, Willy James, Jesse Leach.
1834—35.—Henry Harding, Jesse Leach, Thomas F. W. Vinson.
1836—39.—George Harding, Thomas F. W. Vinson, Philip G. Biays.
1839—42.—William O'Neal, Jr., Thomas F. W. Vinson, John Jones, of N.
1842—45.—Samuel C. Veirs, William O'Neal, Jr., John Jones, of N.
1845—47.—Henry Harding, Nathan Holland, Otho Magruder.
1847—48.—George W. Dawson, Otho Magruder, Allen B. Davis, Nathan Holland (vice Davis, resigned).
1851—56.—Samuel C. Veirs, Otho Magruder, John Jones, of N.
1861—65.—Elijah Thompson, John W. Anderson, H. B. Cashell.
1866—67.—Samuel C. Veirs, John W. Anderson, William Thompson, of R.
1872—75.—Hazel R. Cashell, Edward W. Owen, A. H. Summers.
1875—79.—E. W. Owen, A. H. Summers, Samuel Darley.
1879—83.—Edward W. Owen, A. H. Summers, E. G. Dorsey.

OFFICERS IN 1777.
Surveyor, William Bayley, Jr.; Coroners, Wallace Boal, Simon Nicholls, Archibald Aicken, Henry Gaither; Examiner-General, Francis Deakins; was appointed Feb. 14, 1782, examiner-general of the vacant soldiers' land, etc.

JOSEPH T. BALLEY, Recorder. "

Justice and Judges of the Orphans' Court.
1777—79.—Charles Jones, Thomas Sprigg Wootton, David Lyon, Edward Burgess, James Campbell.
MEMBERS OF STATE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.

1776: First State Convention.—Thomas Spigg Wootton, Jonathan Wilson, William Bayly, Jr., Elisha Williams.

1864.—Edmund P. Duvall, Thomas Lansdale, George Peter.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

JUSTICES OF THE COUNTY COURT.

STATE SENATORS FROM MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

1786, Benjamin C. Stoddert (elected, but did not accept); 1791, Benjamin C. Stoddert (he resigned, and Thomas Sim Lee entered Nov. 21, 1794); 1789, Uriah Forrest; 1821-24, Dr. John Wootton; 1821-24, Benjamin S. Forrest; 1836, John J. Bow; 1838, Horace Wilson; 1812-66, William L. Gaither; 1865, Thomas R. Lansdale; 1867, Isaac Young; 1868, Nicholas Brewer; 1870, W. O. Sellman; 1874, Nich-Jas Brewer; 1878, George Peter; 1882, Joseph T. Moore.

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES FROM MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

1777.—Edward Burgess, Elisha Williams, William Bayly, Jr., Richard Crabb.

1778.—Edward Burgess, Thomas Crampin, William Bayly, Thomas Spigg Wootton.

1788.—Thomas Crampin, William Bayly, Lawrence O'Neale, Charles Hungerford.

1781.—Edward Burgess, Charles Greenbury Griffin, William Bayly, Lawrence O'Neale.

1782.—Edward Burgess, Charles G. Griffin, Lawrence O'Neale, Benjamin Edwards.

1783.—Lawrence O'Neale, Benjamin Edwards, Edward Burgess, Thomas S. Wootton.

1784.—Thomas Crampin, Lawrence O'Neale, Benjamin Edwards, Thomas Spigg Wootton.

1785.—Lawrence O'Neale, Thomas S. Wootton, Thomas Beall, of George, Thomas Crampin.

1786.—Edward Burgess, Lawrence O'Neale, William Holmes, John Hayman Nichols.

1787.—Edward Burgess, Lawrence O'Neale, William Holmes, Charles G. Griffith.

1788.—Jeremiah Crab, Thomas Crampin, Jr., Lawrence O'Neale, William Dorsey.

1789-90, Edward Burgess, Jeremiah Crabb, Lawrence O'Neale, Uriah Forrest.

1791.—Lawrence O'Neale, Jeremiah Crab, Francis Deakins, Thomas Turner.

1792-93.—Jeremiah Crabb, Lawrence O'Neale, John Threlkold, Richard Wootton.

1794.—Lawrence O'Neale, Thomas Davis, David Lucket, Walter Brooke.

1795.—Thomas Davis, Edward Burgess, Lawrence O'Neale, Daniel Rentzel.

1796.—Daniel Rentzel, Elemeleck Swearingen, Lawrence O'Neale, David Lucket.

1797.—George Riley, Robert Swatles, Patrick Magruder, Robert P. Magruder.

1798.—John L. Summers, Robert P. Magruder, Elemeleck Swearingen, George Riley.

1799.—Robert P. Magruder, George Riley, Thomas Turner, Elemeleck Swearingen.

1800.—Robert P. Magruder, Thomas Davis, Herekiah Vestach, Thomas Beall, of George.

1801.—Robert P. Magruder, Thomas Davis, Elemeleck Swearingen, Herekiah Vestach.

1802.—Elemeleck Swearingen, Thomas Davis, Bries Selby, Herekiah Vestach.

1803.—Elemeleck Swearingen, Thomas Davis, Herekiah Vestach, John Linthicum.

1804.—Elemeleck Swearingen, John Linthicum, Bries Selby, Wm. Darne.

1805.—Wm. Carroll, Bries Selby, Richard Key Watts, John Linthicum.

1806.—Wm. Carroll, Richard Key Watts, Bries Selby, Wm. Darne.

1807.—Wm. Carroll, Wm. Darne, Benjamin Ray, Jr., John Linthicum.

1808.—Wm. Carroll, Henry Chew Gaither, Samuel Thomas, Jr., Herekiah Vestach.

1809.—Henry C. Gaither, Samuel Thomas, Charles H. W. Wharton, Herekiah Vestach.

1811.—Abraham Jones, John H. Riggs, Edward Owen, Charles Evans.

1817-18.—Ephraim Gaither, George C. Washington, Benjamin S. Forrest, Ezekiah Linthicum.

1819.—George Peter, Ephraim Gaither, George C. Washington, Benjamin S. Forrest.

1820.—Ephraim Gaither, Henry Harding, Wm. Darne, Benjamin S. Forrest.

1821.—Benjamin S. Forrest, William Darne, John H. Riggs, Benjamin Duvall.

1825.—John W. Lansdale, Archibald Lee, Edward Hughes, Otho Wilson.

1826.—Edward Hughes, Willey Janes, John P. C. Peter, John W. Lansdale.

1827-28.—Archibald Lee, John P. C. Peter, Edward Hughes, John W. Lansdale.

1829.—Thomas Gittings, Ephraim Gaither, Edward Hughes, Archibald Lee.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

DEPUTY CLERKS OF COURT.

George B. Braddock, R. S. Patterson, A. D. Green.

JAILER.

W. O. Kingsbury.

SURVEYOR.

Charles F. Townsend.

CORONERS.

Edward W. Hormer, M. J. Higgins.

OVERSEER AT ALMSHOUSE.

John P. Connell.

TRUSTEES OF THE POOR.

Gustavus Jones, J. A. Gloyd, Henry Humphrey, H. Trail, Columbus Joy; Clerk, R. S. Patterson.

TAX COLLECTORS.

First District, John Allnutt; Second, J. L. Dowden; Third, Nathan D. Poole; Fourth, Joseph H. Bailey; Fifth, James L. Dorsey.

OFFICIALS IN 1869, NOT ELSEWHERE GIVEN.

Clerk to Commissioners, Uriah Forrest; Surveyor, James Anderson; Justices of the Peace: First District, Henry N. Harris, E. T. Brown, Benjamin R. Fish; Second, Joshua Purdam, F. M. Smith, James A. Crandle; Third, Samuel Darby, Samuel S. Hays, C. N. Mosburgh; Fourth, H. W. Viers, M. F. Harris, C. W. Lansdale; Fifth, Thomas Fawcett, Richard Cissel, James H. Brooke; Constables: First District, Richard Lowe, R. T. Mannake; Second, C. G. Waters, James Winread; Third, Alex. E. Soper, James F. Poole; Fourth, John R. Miller, John Johnson; Fifth, H. O. Higgins, Jos. Hopkins; Road Supervisors: First District, William Thompson, of R.; Second, Obed Hurley; Third, Richard P. Spates; Fourth, William S. Wilson; Fifth, Nathan Shaw; Militia: Colonel, Lloyd Dorsey; Lieutenant-Colonel, J. W. Anderson; Coroner, Mortimer Moulden.

The Bar.—The following attorneys have been admitted to the Montgomery County bar, as shown by the “list-books” of the clerk’s office:

1777.—Richard Potts, Baker Johnson.
1780.—Thomas Wilson Ridgely, Jr., Luther Martin, Robert Smith, David Ross, William H. Iorsey, Edward Nicholls, John M. Gantt, John T. Mason.
1795.—James Johnson.
1797.—Humphry Ridgely Warfield, William Caggott, Roger Perry, William Goldborough.
1798.—Allen B. Duckett, Archibald Van Horn.
1799.—John Cottman.
1801.—Roger Brooke Tancy, Francis Scott Key.
1805.—Philip Barton Key, B. S. Pignown, Richard K. Watts.
1809.—Charles J. Kilgour, L. P. W. Balch.
1810.—Frederick A. Schley.
1816.—Henry Ashton, Mr. Boyle, W. M. Worthington, Zadok Magruder.
1821.—Charles L. Dorsey.
1828.—Lawrence A. Dawson, John J. Campbell, Richard J. Bowie, John Brewer, Samuel W. Bell.
1829.—B. S. Lear, John G. England (oldest member of the bar).
1830.—W. M. Stuart.
1831.—Richard S. Cox.
1835.—Reverdy Johnson.
1836.—James Brewer.
1837.—Joshua Morsell, Lewis B. Wootton, Somerrith Pinkney.
1838.—George C. Patterson.
1840.—William Viers Bouie.
1842.—M. H. Myerly, W. H. Dorsey.
1843.—W. P. Bradeful, Robert Ouid, Franklin Miner.
1844.—Hugh Carpenter, Jr., George A. Pearre, W. P. Preston.
1845.—John E. Addis, W. C. Brent.
1847.—J. T. B. Worthington, A. C. Campbell.
1849.—J. H. G. McCutchen, W. B. Chichester.
1852.—M. Thompson.
1855.—W. M. Merrick, J. E. Young.
1856.—J. W. Bittinger, Thomas Anderson.
1867.—J. Solby Clark.
1872.—J. E. R. Wood.
1873.—John B. Brewer.
1879.—Washington Catlett, H. Hutton, H. P. Heath, William Bruce.

The following records of important elections which have taken place in the county will be of interest to the reader:

Vote for Delegates to the State Convention of 1788 to adopt or reject the Federal Constitution.—Federal Ticket—Thomas Crumpin, 896; William Deakins, Jr., 894; Richard Thomas, 895; Benjamin Edwards, 891.

Anti - Federal Ticket—Edward Burgess, 313; Lawrence O'Neall, 312; William Holmes, 312; Henry Griffiths, 311. Total vote, 1209. Federal majority, 583.

Presidential and Congressional Election in 1789.—The first constitutional election for representatives to Congress and electors for President and Vice-President took place in January, 1789. The vote in Montgomery County was for eight Presidental electors—Chancellor John Rogers, 220; Col. George Plater, 222; Col. William Tilghman, 231; William Richardson, 314; Alexander C. Hanson, 319; Robert Smith (attorney), 308; Dr. Philip Thomas, 317; Dr. William Matthews, 310; Jeremiah T. Chase, 5; Charles Ridgley, of William, 41; John Seney, 44; James Shaw, 38; William Page, 40; Moses Rawlings, 6.

For Six Congressmen—Joshua Seney, 153; Daniel Carroll, 362; Benjamin Conley, 318; George Gale, 316; William Smith, 310; Michael Jenifer Stone, 278; George Dent, 84; Samuel Sterett, 37; John F. Mercer, 42; Abraham Faw, 2; William F. Murray, 42; Nathaniel Ramsey, 6.

Vote for President in 1856.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>President</th>
<th>Buchanan</th>
<th>Fillmore</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cracklin</td>
<td>1161</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cracklesburg</td>
<td>159</td>
<td>304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mealey's</td>
<td>199</td>
<td>221</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rockville</td>
<td>359</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berry's</td>
<td>248</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subtotal</td>
<td>1126</td>
<td>1208</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vote for President in 1860.

| President | Bell | Breckenridge | Douglas | Lincoln |
|-----------|------|-------------|---------|
| Cracklin | 265 | 130 | 44 | 3 |
| Cracklesburg | 313 | 163 | 17 |
| Mealey's | 210 | 187 | 28 |
| Rockyville | 290 | 384 | 9 |
| Berry's | 167 | 261 | 6 | 47 |
| Subtotal | 1135 | 1129 | 99 | 59 |

Majority for Bell, 30.

April 6, 1864, on the vote for calling a State Constitutional Convention, Montgomery County voted aye, 516; nay, 746.

October 12th, on the question of adopting the new constitution, the county voted aye, 422; nay, 1367.

November 8th of the same year, at the Presidential election, the county gave 496 votes for Abraham Lincoln, and 1542 for George B. McClellan.

Vote of the County for Governor in 1867.—Oden Bowie (Democrat), 1675; H. Lenox Bond (Republican), 320.

Vote of the County for President in 1868.—Horatio Seymour, 1745; U. S. Grant, 399.

Vote for President in 1872.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>President</th>
<th>Grant</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Greesy</td>
<td>310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second District</td>
<td>291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third District</td>
<td>456</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fourth District</td>
<td>637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fifth District</td>
<td>437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subtotal</td>
<td>2121</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 Federalists.
Vote for Congressmen in 1874.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Walsh</th>
<th>Lowndes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cracklin</td>
<td>323</td>
<td>345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clarkesburg</td>
<td>328</td>
<td>291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medley's</td>
<td>541</td>
<td>345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rockville</td>
<td>689</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berry's</td>
<td>399</td>
<td>388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>2253</td>
<td>1732</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Majority for Walsh, 521.

Vote for Congressmen in 1876.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Walsh</th>
<th>McComas</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>First District</td>
<td>392</td>
<td>394</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second District</td>
<td>379</td>
<td>323</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third District</td>
<td>326</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fourth District</td>
<td>996</td>
<td>465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fifth District</td>
<td>386</td>
<td>551</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2935</td>
<td>2098</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vote for Congressmen in 1878.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Peter</th>
<th>Urner</th>
<th>Reesey</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cracklin</td>
<td>214</td>
<td>246</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clarkesburg</td>
<td>339</td>
<td>397</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medley's</td>
<td>489</td>
<td>346</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rockville</td>
<td>888</td>
<td>261</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berry's</td>
<td>375</td>
<td>295</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Darnestown</td>
<td>223</td>
<td>141</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bethesda</td>
<td>218</td>
<td>164</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mechanicville</td>
<td>156</td>
<td>411</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2228</td>
<td>2255</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vote for Governor in 1871.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Whyte (D.)</th>
<th>Tome (R.)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cracklin</td>
<td>355</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clarkesburg</td>
<td>351</td>
<td>279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medley's</td>
<td>484</td>
<td>346</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rockville</td>
<td>615</td>
<td>380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berry's</td>
<td>432</td>
<td>462</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2257</td>
<td>1840</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vote for Governor in 1879.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>W. T. Hamilton</th>
<th>J. A. Gary</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>First District</td>
<td>270</td>
<td>233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second District</td>
<td>367</td>
<td>311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third District</td>
<td>455</td>
<td>345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fourth District</td>
<td>311</td>
<td>316</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fifth District</td>
<td>374</td>
<td>395</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sixth District</td>
<td>213</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seventh District</td>
<td>164</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eighth District</td>
<td>212</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2592</td>
<td>2180</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

For Delegates.—William Grady, 2507; Thomas J. Owens, 2483; George C. Patterson, 2486; Joseph T. Moore, 2288; Upton Darby, 2327. Three elected.

For State Attorney.—James B. Henderson, 2551; James Dawson, 2197.

For Judges of Orphans' Court.—Remus G. Dorsey, 2553; Edward W. Owen, 2546; Abraham H. Summers, 2534; William Brown, of James, 2296. Three elected.

For Clerk.—Elisha B. Prettyman, 2531; Philmon M. Smith, 2124.

For Register of Wills.—Robert W. Carter, 2835.

For County Commissioners.—Joseph T. Bailey, 2617; Solomon Dowden, 2579; Thomas G. Hardesty, 2535; William W. Poole, 2617; George T. Waters, 2623; Charles G. Porter, 2267. Five elected.

For Surveyor.—Charles F. Townsend, 2642.

Chapter XXXIV.

Educational and Miscellaneous Matters.

Not much attention was given to popular education, or, more properly speaking, public-school education, in the early history of Maryland. The ancestors of the present generation were busily engaged in settling a new country. They made their money by toilsome methods, after having encountered great hazards and hardships. They were peculiarly self-dependent, and could not be taught the advantages to be derived by the community from the expenditure of their hard-earned substance for the education of those who were bound to them by no tie, and who had not aided in making it. King William's School was established at Annapolis in 1696 for instruction in Latin, Greek, and writing, and the trustees were styled the "Rectors and Visitors of the Free Schools of Maryland;" but their duties, aside from the management of the school in Annapolis, were probably not laborious. The masters of King William's School were required to teach as many poor children as the visitors should determine, but Annapolis, at that time one of the most important towns in the province, probably furnished as many scholars as this institution, with its limited resources, could instruct. An act of 1723 ordered the erection of public schoolhouses in all the counties, and there were schools established at several of the more populous and prominent points in the State; but it is easy to conjecture how impotent they were as auxiliaries to general education at a time when traveling was done on horseback and many of the most flourishing settlements were in the heart of the back country. The Assembly of 1763 declared that it was reasonable that education should be extended equally to the several parts of the province, and that there should be a public school erected in Frederick County, as well as in other counties. In order to build a house and other conveniences for a country school, it was enacted that there should be one acre purchased in Frederick Town, in Frederick County, and that Col. Thomas Cresap, Mr. Thos. Beatty, Mr. Nathan Magruder, Capt. Joseph Chapline, Mr. John Darnall, Col. Samuel Beall, and the Rev. Mr. Thos. Bacon be the visitors of the school, and are authorized to purchase the lot.

It was further enacted "that an equal dividend of the duties, taxes, etc., collected for the use of the county schools shall be paid to said visitors and applied to the purchase of said lots and buildings."

The school system, under the control of the Church of England, although tainted with the intolerance of the period, displays a commendable solicitude for the cultivation of the minds and morals of the youth of the colony. In the absence of collegiate institutions, private schools, conducted by learned men, ecclesiastical and lay, of all creeds, laid the foundation of scholastic knowledge. The more affluent youth were educated abroad, but the log school-house and the winter fireside developed the seeds of science in many minds, and produced a race of men possessed of extraordinary mental endowments and capacity for public affairs.

There was no literature in those days. But the public archives, the proceedings, courts, resolutions, and letters of public men embodied in the journals of the Convention, the legislation of the State immediately succeeding its organization as an independent sovereign power, the judicial opinions and the brilliant career of members of the bar educated before and after Martin, Pinkney, Wirt, Taney, Johnson, and men of that stamp attest that the fountains from which they drank were both pure and invigorating.

The first school of any reputation in Montgomery County was a seminary for young men in the Wallace or Magruder neighborhood, established towards the close of the Revolutionary war by James Hunt, a Presbyterian clergyman from Philadelphia, on his farm, called "Tusculum;" now memorable as the Alma Mater of William Wirt. It was there that he was prepared, as far as scholastic training could prepare him, for that brilliant career which made his name one of the most illustrious in American annals.

Many of the families of that generation were educated there, and traditions and legends connected with them still cluster around the spot.

The next classical institution established in this county was the Rockville Academy, chartered in 1809, and the next the Brookville Academy, chartered in 1814. Both of these institutions are handsomely endowed by the State, and have been in successful operation ever since their foundation, and the refining and elevating influence they have exerted upon the youth of the county can scarcely be appreciated.

Many private institutions of learning of efficiency and reputation have since been established at Rockville, Brookville, Sandy Springs, Darnestown, and Poolesville, and the public-school system is the very best that could be devised. Involuntary ignorance is no longer possible, and ignorance of every kind is being rapidly eradicated.

Between 1830 and 1840 a general interest was awakened in regard to the education of the masses, and the germ of the present school system was very generally established in the counties of the State. In 1864 a cumbersom system of education was introduced, but its workings soon made it apparent that it was not fitted for the sections of Maryland embraced by it, and it was superseded or modified in most of the counties by the present method.

The following managers of the primary schools of Montgomery County met at the court-house June 19, 1839: Thomas Griffith, Benoni Dawson, and John A. Carter, the latter being made chairman. Uriah Forrest was appointed clerk to the board. The Legislature, at its session of 1838 and 1839, had passed an act establishing primary schools in the county, and had authorized the creation of this board to supervise the same. On July 8, 1839, the board divided the Third Election District into eight school districts, and adopted the division of the Fifth Election District into school districts as made by the commissioners in 1827. On Aug. 19, 1839, the board divided Rockville District, No. 4, into six school districts, and Medley's, No. 3, was slightly changed in its districts. The First and Second Districts, Cracklin and Clarkesburg, do not seem from the records to have come under this law, or had been divided into school districts by previous enactments.

The present free school system went into operation in this county in 1866, when the following board of school commissioners were selected: W. H. Farquhar, J. T. Desselum, F. A. Dawson, J. N. Soper, Charles Abert. The secretary and treasurer was R. M. Williams. On April 29, 1868, the following board was appointed by the county commissioners: William Musser, B. B. Crawford, William T. Jones, Samuel Jones, R. W. Brace, with James Anderson as secretary, treasurer, and examiner. On Jan. 4, 1870, the following board was elected by the people: Samuel Jones, S. W. Davis, Edward Lewis, Isaac Young, Thomas Waters of S., who chose James Anderson as secretary, treasurer, and examiner. In January, 1872, the Circuit Court appointed the following board: Samuel Jones, W. T. Jones, and W. M. Talbot, who continued Mr. Anderson as examiner, secretary, and treasurer. In January, 1880, the court appointed the following board: Allen Bowie Davis, R. T. White, and Henry Renshaw, who appointed S. R. White as secretary, treasurer, and examiner.

The first law relative to free, or rather public, schools relative to this county was passed in 1827, but it proving seriously defective, gave way to the act of 1838 and 1839. This act provided for three managers, who had general supervision of all the public schools then existing or to be thereafter created. Some of the districts created under it were both to accept the new system, and it never went into general or full operation.

The Teachers' Association of Montgomery County was permanently established on Sept. 8, 1881, at a meeting of teachers of which R. J. Green was secretary pro tem. The constitution and by-laws reported by the committee, William Grady, were adopted. These provide for holding four meetings of the association annually, on the first Friday after each regular meeting of the board of county school commissioners. Its officers consist of a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and an executive committee of three. The first regular election of officers will be held on the first regular meeting of the school year, until when Messrs. Armstrong, Prettyman, and Venable were appointed to serve as the executive committee. Any white teacher teaching school in the county can become a member by signing the constitution and by-laws and paying an initiation fee of twenty-five cents, and agreeing to pay at each regular meeting a quarterly fee of ten cents. The association is formed for interchange of views on teaching, improvements in school matters and discipline, lectures, discussions, and the general advancement of the teacher's profession.

The following is a summary of school statistics for the year ending Sept. 30, 1880:

Number of schools having outbuildings................. 76
" " sufficient blackboards ...... 78
" " good furniture .............. 78
" pupils for the year ........ 4717

Receipts.
State school tax ........................................ $10,265.36
" " free-school fund .................... 2,672.26
" county school tax .......................... 9,349.44
Sales of books .................................... 422.06
State appropriation to colored schools ................. 3,152.72
Balance on hand Sept. 30, 1879 .......... 1,031.24
From collections on cash and orders ............ 6,821.25
Balance to S. R. White, as per check ....... 9.58
From various sources ......... 324.00

Total Receipts .. $35,291.41

Disbursements.
Teachers' salaries.............................. $24,486.75
Fuel ........................................... 467.82
Incidental expenses of school ................. 234.86
Rent ........................................... 60.00
Books and stationery .......................... 1,465.81
Interest ........................................ 246.51
Salary of secretary, treasurer, and examiner in part for three years .......... 2,748.44
For per diem of school commissioners in part for two years .... 364.10
Office-rent, furniture, seal, and fuel ............ 47.22
Printing and advertising ...................... 71.25
Paid to colored schools ...................... 3,219.74
Attorneys' fees at Annapolis ................. 25.00
Postage and stationery ................. 26.89
Expenses on bank deposits .......... 6.47
Insurance on school-books and office ........ 13.30
Expenses of school commissioners to Baltimore, 1879 48.00
Building, repairs, and furniture ............ 179.38
Balance, cash on hand .......... 5.97

Total Disbursements $33,291.41

Colored Schools.
(Included in above, but here given separate.)

Receipts.
From State .................................... $4,176.96
Which was disbursed for teachers' salaries, books, and other expenses.

Tobacco.—Tobacco was for many years the principal medium of exchange in the province and State of Maryland. Money was scarce in those early days and the rate of exchange probably varied with the arrival of every ship. It was therefore necessary to settle upon some commodity which had an absolute intrinsic value on both sides of the ocean. Thus it happened that the salaries of officials, pastors, and teachers were always rated as so many pounds of tobacco, as were also the wages of mechanics and laborers. This was probably regarded as fortunate at that time, but no greater evil could have befallen the province. It gave an unhealthy stimulus to the cultivation of the tobacco crop to the exclusion of more necessary produce, and the very best lands in the State were rapidly exhausted by this veritable vampire and the injudicious tillage of the planters, the latter being unable to understand that land, like everything else, could be overworked. No county in the State suffered more than Montgomery from this cause.

In 1732 tobacco was made a legal tender at one penny per pound, and one of the early acts prescribed a penalty of five hundred pounds of tobacco for a certain offense, and another a forfeit of two hundred pounds for Sabbath-breaking, another a fine of two thousand pounds for selling strong liquor on Sunday, except in cases of absolute necessity. There was a time when the cases of absolute necessity, as exhibited by the absolute prostration of the subjects thereof, were many, but these are now few in number, and the law for its rigid enforcement awaited the slow growth of public opinion up to the point which demanded and secured compliance with the requirements of the statute. A law, to be wise and efficient, need not necessarily be a reflection of public opinion,—it is often a teacher, an evangelist, to show the people their real need and duty. Another law imposed a fine of six hundred pounds of tobacco upon county clerks who should neglect their duty, and another regulated the rate in shillings and pence per one hundred pounds of tobacco, at which "fees and allowances, fines, forfeitures, and penalties given or made in tobacco should be computed," that was twelve shillings sixpence. On a basis of dollars and cents, seven shillings and a sixpence, or sixty pounds of tobacco, were equal to one dollar. Students of advanced theories of modern as well as ancient finance will at once perceive the serious difficulties in the way of transacting business when the standard of value, the medium of exchange, was itself a commodity necessarily irregular, fluctuating, and unreliable, likely to be abundant at one time with a corresponding expansion in values, and scarce at another with corresponding shrinkage in other articles measured by it, with the usual embarrassment and distress. Another difficulty soon became apparent in the agricultural processes of the early fathers; the evils attendant invariably upon a system almost exclusively agricultural and the concentration of the productive energies of the people upon one article of produce came upon them. With few or no local manufacturing industries of any extent, and imperfect means of transportation over the "rolling roads" and bridle-paths of primitive times, it can readily be perceived that the early planters possessed few luxuries. The uncertain income from this one article of export and the fluctuation of the tobacco trade was one of the reasons assigned for the slow growth of the population of the province of Maryland under the royal government (after 1689, William and Mary of England). But after the first third of the eighteenth century people began to turn their attention to wheat-raising, and a mill for the manufacture of wheat-flour was built by James Brooke about 1737, near the junction of Hawling's River and the Patuxent. The ship-biscuit made at Brooke's bakery were consigned to agents at Bladensburg, Elkridge Landing, and Joppa, to supply vessels on their return voyage. An impetus was thus given to wheat-raising, and by 1774 the planters, instead of cultivating tobacco exclusively and awaiting the slow returns of European agents, raised wheat and corn for the market at hand, and as a contrast to the former meagre supplies and privations, there were brought into the stores of the large towns mathematical instruments, hardware, groceries, liquors, wines, glassware, fine and coarse linens, mirrors, India china dinner and tea sets, silk, satin, and brocade. Forty pounds of tobacco per head was at one time the tithe or tax levied for the support of the established church, and thirty pounds at another. In 1696, Mr. Gaddes arrived in the province, being sent out by his lordship the Bishop of London, and the Assembly appointed him to read prayers in some vacant parish, and made provision for his maintenance of ten thousand pounds of tobacco. In the same year the House concluded to build a church in Annapolis, and passed an act imposing a tax of "three pence per hundred on tobacco, to continue and be in force until the 12th day of May, which shall be in the year of our Lord God 1698, and to be applied to the building of ye church at Annapolis." As the population increased the revenue from the tax of forty pounds of tobacco became immense, and the tax was subsequently by law reduced to thirty pounds per head. After this law had expired an attempt to collect the old tithe of forty pounds was made, and strong opposition to its collection ensued. It was in regard to this matter that Charles Carroll and Daniel Dulany carried on their famous and sharp contests under the respective signatures of "First Citizen" and "Antilop;" the opinions of the former were supported by the people in the election which ensued, and their thanks were presented to him at public meetings held in Baltimore, Frederick, and Annapolis. All the court officers and other public officials were paid their salaries and fees in tobacco, and all taxes levied in this weed. Tobacco warehouses were established in various parts of the province and tobacco inspectors appointed,—all under the control of the Assembly. As has been already said, the lands of Montgomery County yielded gradually to the strain of successive crops of tobacco, until at length it was discovered that the county, instead of making headway, was actually retrograding. This alarmed the property-holders. The culture of tobacco was in a great measure abandoned. Proper manures were utilized for strengthening the soil, careful tillage became the rule, and to-day there is no more prosperous county in the State.
Montgomery County Agricultural Society.—A meeting of the citizens of the county was held in Rockville, March 4, 1846. Otho Magruder was made president, Samuel Viers vice-president, and W. Viers Bouic secretary. The resolutions offered by Richard J. Bowie were adopted, viz.: 1st. That the interest of our county will be greatly promoted by the founding of an agricultural society for the whole county.

2d. That a committee of twenty-five persons from different parts of the county be selected by the chair to prepare the draft of a constitution for such an association, based on practical results, and to recommend such other steps as may in their judgment advance the objects of this meeting.

On June 1, 1846, the first officers were chosen: President, John P. C. Peter; Vice-Presidents, R. P. Dunlap, A. B. Davis, G. W. Dawson, F. Valderman, Dr. H. W. Wilson; Corresponding Secretary, J. Wanderson; Recording Secretary, W. Viers Bouic; Treasurer, Robert W. Cardiz; Executive Committee, W. H. Farquhar, S. C. Viers, Joseph T. Bayley, F. C. Clopper, Otho Magruder.

Since then the following have been successively chosen presidents: Allen Bowie Davis, Robert P. Dunlap, John L. Duffief, Richard J. Bowie, Joseph H. Bradley (who held the society together during the war and reorganized it at the close), Elisha J. Hall, John H. Gassaway, and Wm. S. Brooke.

The officers for 1881 were:

Its twenty-eighth annual exhibition was held Sept. 7, 8, and 9, 1881, and was a creditable illustration of the progress made by the people of the county in everything relating to agriculture.

The grounds of the society are among the most commodious and beautiful in the State. They are located near the town of Rockville, and occupy some twenty acres.

No county in the State has given more careful and intelligent study to the development of the science of agriculture. The people of Montgomery are among the most cultured in Maryland, and for many years have seen and profited by the advantages of co-operation and interchange of views upon their paramount industry, the cultivation of the soil. At an early date farmers' clubs were organized in the districts and neighborhoods, and when the Grange movement was inaugurated the farmers of Montgomery enthusiastically welcomed its advent and enrolled themselves as members of the order.

In addition to their clubs and granges, a Farmers' Convention, embracing representatives of all the societies, and invited guests from abroad, is held annually, at which carefully-prepared papers are read upon the best methods of increasing the yield of crops or the proper management of stock; in short, upon all subjects having the remotest bearing upon the science in which they exhibit such pardonable pride.

The latest Farmers' Convention was held at the Lyceum, Sandy Spring, Jan. 18, 1881. The clubs and granges were fully represented, and there were a number of prominent visitors from Howard, Prince George's, and Washington Counties, and the State of Virginia. The officers were Henry C. Hallowell, president; Charles Abert, Joseph T. Moore, John E. Wilson, Benjamin D. Palmer, Richard Waters, and W. B. Chichester, vice-presidents; Allen Farquhar, Charles P. Kirk, secretaries.

Maryland has generally been the pioneer in legislation looking to the moral health of her people. It is questionable whether self-interest or pure philanthropy has exercised a greater influence in the treatment of matters of this character; perhaps both have been controlling elements in securing legislation. Freedom of conscience caused an outpouring of emigrants of the better class from the mother-country.
The citizens of Montgomery County responded with alacrity to the call of the country in 1812. The county furnished more than its quota of troops, evening of his long life in singing our long catalogue of heroes, yet unsong, and from his sweet flute, sife, and violin I ardently drank in the inspiring melodies of the Revolution. At the hour of ten o'clock I took the candle and a row of paper matches, about the length and appearance of a row of pins, and retired to a bed in an upper room. The matches were made by cutting out a piece of paper about three inches long and one wide, and making a dozen slips with a pair of scissors into one of the lower edges of the paper, so prepared as to extend about three-quarters of the distance across its width. This clipped edge was dipped into the combustible mixture, and when dry, all that was necessary to produce a flame was to tear off one of these clippings and draw its clipped ends gently along between the tip of the forefinger and the wall of your room, or over a bit of paper or substance. I struck the match, the first kind known in trade, and, with a cheerful and glad heart lit the candle. I was soon under the cover, and yielded to ‘tired nature’s sweet restorer,’ but encountered a very singular and inexplicable experience, which I will mention, for I am writing facts, of which I ought not to be ashamed. The air being keen and frosty, three counterpanes were on the bed, and I slid under them, and made a survey of the surroundings in the dark room before trying my hand at sleep. On entering the room I discovered a wooden bolt on the door, and made it fast against intrusion; saw several chairs, other articles of furniture, and two windows only, over which curtains were hanging, one of them being at the back of the bed, within reach of the occupant. Trying my hand at sleep, I met with half success; but just at this stage of the proceeding, imagine my surprise when, by some unseen force, the three counterpanes were drawn violently from the bed to the floor. After recovering from my astonishment, I visited the ruins on the floor, recaptured the counterpanes, and coveted sleep once more. After a time I fell into a troubled doze, and down went the counterpanes again, with greater violence than at first. I sprang down after them, found the matches, lit the candle, and searched for the intruder, but no such party could be found, neither in nor under the bed, nor elsewhere in the room. I made up the bed again, got in, tried to sleep. After a long trial—I knew not how long—I fell into a troubled slumber, but was suddenly roused by a terrible stream of unearthly light flashing through the window, curtain and all, and blazing over the room from floor to ceiling. Drawing the curtain aside, I beheld a great ball of fire, as large as the sun or moon, rushing from the direction of the zenith, and describing a circular or parabolic curve towards the far distant southwestern horizon. Hearing at the same time a great uproar among the servants down in the yard, I sprang from the bed to the next window, and looked out upon the great meteoric shower of Nov. 12 and 13, 1833. Rushing down into the yard, I saw a squad of frightened servants, so terrified, indeed, that they knew nothing save that the world was coming to an end. The old soldier appeared at the door, asked me to come into his room, and said it was nothing,—he had seen the like before. The shower continued until overpowered by daylight, the stars rushing down through space like snow-flakes, yet vastly more luminous. Fearful balls of fire shot madly towards the earth, like the pyrotechnic rocket shootings upward, consuming their substance in flight, or losing it by friction against the walls of air. Most of the meteors were as large and brilliant as the stars themselves, and it required no vivid imagination to suppose that these celestial bodies were then rushing to earth; for the

1 The following account of a visit to an old Revolutionary hero, by Hon. Allen Bowie Davis, of Montgomery, and his graphic description of the meteoric shower which took place that night, Nov. 12, 1833, cannot fail to interest the reader:—

"Five miles beyond Clapper's mill, on the Great Scenic, at early candle-light, I rejoiced up at the farm of Charles Saffell, an old soldier, then eighty-four years of age, who had been a musician in the Revolutionary army. The old gentleman had a drum, sife, and fiddle, an old English musket, which he captured at the battle of Brandywine, and many other relics from the "days that tried men's soul." He was spending the calm which were under the command of Maj. George Peter, a brilliant officer and accomplished gentleman. At the battle of Bladensburg, in 1814, that most disastrous fracaso of modern times, the troops of Montgomery and Prince George's, under the command of Commodore Barney, aided by a body of seamen and marines, maintained their ground until they were overpowered by numbers and the commodore badly wounded and taken prisoner. The British proceeded to Washington, and burned the Capitol, the President's house, and many other buildings. President Madison was compelled to take flight, and sought safety in Brookville, Montgomery Co., whence he issued his dispatches. Among the interesting incidents connected with the British attack on Washington was the removal of the public archives to Montgomery County. Some panic-stricken citizens with half a dozen carts were moving out of the devoted city as the British fleet sailed up the Potomac. As they passed the War Office they were halted by a sentinel and the public records packed in the carts. The latter were driven rapidly to the old Rock Creek church under a guard of soldiers, and for several weeks, until all danger had vanished, the precious documents were faithfully guarded in that sacred edifice amid the tangled thickets and dense woods of the county, the citizens meanwhile providing the soldiers with the necessities of life.

The feeling of uncanniness which prevailed prior to the breaking out of the great civil war in 1861 was keenly felt in Montgomery County. The citizens of this portion of Maryland were mainly descended from those who settled the wilderness in the seventeenth century, a hardy, determined, and educated people, likely to entertain strong convictions upon all matters of public interest, and to be willing and anxious to defend them when called in question. Their associations and sympathies were for the most part with the South, and, like the inhabitants of many of the older counties of Maryland, they had inherited from their ancestors strong States-rights principles. They did not, however, act with precipitation. Meetings were held and resolutions passed calling upon the patriots of both sections to use their influence for conciliation. When all hopes of a peaceful issue to the contest had fled, the young and adventurous flocked in numbers to Virginia and connected themselves with some of the many organizations then under arms to repel invasion. Among the large number who distinguished themselves on many bloody fields during the war it seems almost invincible to particularize, and yet a history of Montgomery County at this period would be incomplete without some mention of such men as Cols. Ridgely Brown, Elijah Veirs White, Benjamin S. White, and Gas Dorsey; Capts. Thomas Griffith, Festus Griffith, George W. Chiswell, and James Anderson; Lieut. Edward Chiswell, and Surg. Edward Wootton. Col. Brown crossed the Potomac at the beginning of the war with twenty-three men and joined a Virginia regiment of cavalry under Col., afterwards Brig.-Gen., Thomas T. Munford. He fought gallantly under this distinguished officer until the First Maryland Battalion of Cavalry was formed. He joined this regiment and was elected captain of a company, from which position he was promoted and made major, and upon the retirement of Col. Smith and Howard, because of disabling wounds, took command of the battalion. He was killed in 1864.

Col. Brown had had few superiors in any age or country. He combined with exalted courage a rare degree of intelligence and a purity and gentleness of nature which would have made him creditable to a Bayard. He was the idol of his men, and was the recipient of marked commendations from all the general officers on whom he served.

Montgomery County did not escape the vexations incident to the march of hostile armies. Both sides at times used her soil as a base of operations, and the farmers of that section on more than one occasion had cause to rue the day which had brought war with its train of horrors upon a peaceful and prosperous country. On the 21st of October, 1861, the ill-fated expedition which crossed the Potomac at Ball's Bluff was hurled back in disorder to the Montgomery side, and during that night the remnants were rescued from their perilous position in the centre of the Potomac by the First Maryland Regiment, under Col., afterwards Gen., John R. Kenly. In the latter part of June, 1863, the advanced guard of Lee's army, under Gen. Stuart, passed through the county, and the farmers were very generally stripped of their horses. In July, 1864, the forces under Gen. Early and Gen. Bradley T. Johnson marched to attack Washington, and the streets of Rockville were the scene of a spirited cavalry fight for several hours, which resulted in the Confederate troops holding the town. Several months after the foregoing, Capt. Walter Bowie, son of Col. W. W. W. Bowie, formerly of Prince George's County, an officer of Mosby's battalion, was killed in an ambuscade in Montgomery County upon his return from a raid in Southern Maryland. He was a gallant and dashing soldier.

Tavern-keepers Licensed in 1780.—Brook Mackee, Elizabeth Riley, James Suter, Robert Owen, John Dowden, Ludwig Yett, John Beall, Jacob Reintrell.

Tavern-keepers in 1800.—Frederick Scholl, Henry Lansdale, Charles Rogers, William Dargue, William Ogle, Theophilus Robey, Benjamin Gittings, John B. Medley, Christopher Coole, Adam Robb, Lewis Duvall, John Dells, Thomas MacCubbin, John Thomas, George Gloyd, John Thomas.

The tavern rates in 1820, as established by the County Court, were as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Rate</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Breakfast for a Gentleman</td>
<td>$0.37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hot dinner for a Gentleman</td>
<td>$0.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cold</td>
<td>$0.37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hot</td>
<td>$0.33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cold</td>
<td>$0.25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeira Wine per quart</td>
<td>1.25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sherry</td>
<td>1.25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Port</td>
<td>1.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claret</td>
<td>1.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All low wines</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porter</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Porter</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; Strong beer&quot;</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Small beer</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cyder</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spirit per gill</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rum</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French brandy per gill</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whisky</td>
<td>65</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oats or corn per gallon</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sablage and hay 24 hours</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liqueur with clean sheet</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Toddy made of spirit per quart</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punch per quart</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Supper for a gentleman</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot; Servant</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Gold-Mines.—As far back as 1827, Prof. Ducatelle, a mineralogist of great note, declared that the region near the Great Falls, in Montgomery County, gave strong indications of the presence of gold. A few years afterwards, when Mrs. Trollope was writing out her notes upon American manners, while on a visit at the residence of Miss Stone, a German consul, Mr. Hitz, found traces of gold. About 1865 a gold-hunter from the Pacific slope found samples of free gold, and soon after a company purchased a tract of land, secured numerous samples, and commenced operations, but the quartz contained no gold. Another company sunk several shafts on the Forrest property, but failed to find gold in paying quantities. A company from Washington and Baltimore sunk a shaft one hundred feet deep on the canal. In October, 1869, a nugget of alluvial gold worth by estimation one hundred and seventy-five dollars was discovered on the farm of Robert Davidson, and was sent to the General Land Office for examination. It weighed nine and four-tenths ounces, eight pennyweights, and eleven grains. It was three and three-eighths inches in length, two and six-eighths in width, and averaged about one-half of an inch in thickness. The matrix was hard granite quartz, which was browned by the decomposition of iron pyrites.

In general aspect the quartz resembled that which was found and excavated from the ledge worked for some time by a company in the vicinity of the Great Falls, and corresponded in every respect with samples of gold-bearing quartz from the county previously deposited in the cabinet of the Land Office. The nugget was hardly covered with earth, in a loose, gravelly loam, resting on auriferous pieces of quartz.

The character of the rocks of this county is well exhibited by the section of them made by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Beginning near Ellicott Mills, on the Patapsco River, in a perfect nest of granite traps and hornblende rocks, it is but a short space before an interruption of serpentine rocks is arrived at, which formation in another part of the State yields valuable deposits of chrome ore. Then more hornblende rocks, staurolite, zule slate, and granite, in which connection it is supposed the gold deposits exist. Where the rocks in their southwestern course cross at the Great Falls, it has been a periodical occurrence to find gold quartz, and the late Prof. Hitchcock, of Williams College, Massachusetts, after a visit to that remarkable place, said that the rocks are identical with the most celebrated auriferous deposits of other countries. Besides the geological features above referred to, this county has other claims to consideration from capitalists in the deposits of magnesian mineral for making epsom salts and calcined magnesia; in its beds of porcelain clay, or kaolin, for making queensware crockery; in its limestone and soapstone quarries, the latter giving employment to large works in Baltimore in preparing it for hearths, tables, shelves, linings for grates, bath-tubs, etc.; rich deposits of copper, magnetic oxide of iron, placquego; and at Seneca Creek, the famous freestone quarries which in this part of the country supply the same material for buildings which in the East is derived from the Connecticut Valley. In 1870, ex-Governor McClurg, a member of Congress from Missouri, caught the gold fever, but after much prospecting gave up the effort. So it may be safely said that within the short period of five years over one hundred thousand dollars were spent in the county in searches for gold, all of which turned out to be a permanent and worthless investment. In 1871 a lad (the son of Robert G. Davidson), while herding some cattle on his father's farm, picked up a stone four or five inches long which contained free gold, and sold for one hundred and sixty-five dollars and forty-five cents. This led to further examination, and a rock of twelve to fourteen inches was discovered containing seven hundred dollars in gold. Mr. Davidson pursued his mining until 1876, when work was stopped, the results being unsatisfactory.

Three or four years ago, Mr. Davidson sold sixty-five acres to Bartlett, Merritt, Jones & Co., for seven thousand dollars. These gentlemen, after working a while, sold to a party in Baltimore, who formed a company known as the "Montgomery Mining Company," and William H. Brown, an extensive druggist in Baltimore, was elected president, under whose management the work was pushed vigorously. They had some thirty hands at work, sunk five shafts, varying from twenty to eighty feet in depth, from which thousands of tons of ore were taken. Two steam-engines of fourteen horse-power were kept constantly going. Various outbuildings, boarding-houses, superintendent's house, and stables were erected. A large stamp-mill, "Knowl's patent," was in full operation, and from this mill the gold bars were taken to the government mint for refining and stamping. H. C. Harrison, a miner of many years' experience in Nevada, had entire superintendence and management of the works.

In May, 1879, Mr. Ellicott contracted to sell his farm to a gold company in New York for thirty-five thousand dollars, he investing one-fifth of the same in the company's stock, and arrangements were being matured for working the mine. The company failed to comply with the agreement, although their time was extended to June 9th. A large load of the ore was taken from this farm and sent to Philadelphia for examination, the company not being satisfied with the partial one made by Prof. Emmons, of Albany, N. Y. In the spring of 1880 a wealthy citizen of Pittsburgh... paid a visit to the gold-mines, and, in company with another Pittsburgh capitalist, purchased a large interest in the company, and secured the adjoining farm of two hundred and four acres on the north. A mill with ten stamps was erected, and steam took the place of hand in bringing up the product of the mine. He at once commenced active operations. H. C. Harrison, an experienced miner from the West, was engaged as superintendent, and a force of men put to work deepening the shaft, which had already been sunk a short distance. Houses were built, and all the appliances of a gold-mine put to work within a few miles of the nation's capital. For some time the farmers did not object to a stranger prospecting for gold, but subsequently this was changed, and every farm was for sale and intruders kept off. The prices were not so exorbitant as one would expect from the promising development made in the vicinity. The Acker estate was sold to a Pittsburgh gentleman. The vein, according to the testimony of experts, ran a little east of north, diagonally across this estate, and thence into a farm of two hundred acres owned by Mr. Fawcett, who sold it to five men, three of whom were interested in the Montgomery mine, for sixteen thousand dollars.

The citizens of Montgomery County, in response to the resolutions adopted at a previous public meeting, assembled on the fair-grounds at Rockville, Sept. 6, 1876, to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the organization of the county. The following is a list of the committee in charge of the celebration:

In addition to the speaking and festivities, it was determined to collect as many "centennial relics" as could be found and place them on exhibition.

The spacious building where were deposited in glass cases the various and antique curiosities which had been brought out for exhibition was crowded to its utmost capacity. Among the articles exhibited were several relics of Gen. Washington, the authenticity of which were unquestionable, among them a lock of his hair, a piece of wood from one of his coffins, autograph letters, also old chinaware, some pieces of which were rendered very interesting by the spicy inscriptions, which showed the bitter hostility of the makers to the famous Stamp Act.

At 11.45 A.M. Mr. Davis called the assembly to order, when a quintette of males sang "O Lord we are Thy people." The Rev. B. Barry, eighty-six years of age, the oldest minister of the Baltimore Conference, offered a touching prayer, concluding with the "Lord's Prayer," which was recited in concert by the people. Hon. A. B. Davis next delivered an address, and was followed by T. Anderson, who read an able, concise, and very interesting historical sketch of the county, to which the author of this volume is indebted for much valuable information. Henry C. Hallowell recited a beautiful poem prepared by himself for the occasion. The next thing in order was dinner, which was a most enjoyable feast, after which Judge Richard J. Bowie delivered an interesting address. Brief addresses were also made by Judge Pearre, Judge Jones, and Rev. Mr. Averitt. During the day Charles Abert read a number of letters received from well-known gentlemen, natives of Montgomery, giving reasons for inability to be present at the first centennial of the county. Nearly all the writers took occasion to express their warm love for the county. Among the clergymen present were Rev. Father Macken, of the Catholic Church, Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Episcopal Church, Rev. Mr. Averitt, and also the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Methodist Church. At the close Dr. Wilson Magruder, leader of the choir, sang the doxology, and all joined in. Rev. Mr. Barry concluded the exercises by pronouncing the benediction.
Representative Men.—As has been already hinted in these pages, Montgomery County was favored with a superior class of settlers, the characteristics of some of whom will doubtless interest the reader.

Benjamin Stoddert, an eminent patriot, was born in Maryland in 1751, and died at Bladensburg, Dec. 17, 1813. He was a captain at the battle of Brandywine, and afterwards major in the Revolutionary army. He was the first Secretary of the United States Navy. For many years he was extensively engaged in mercantile pursuits in Georgetown, D. C. He continued Secretary of the Navy until Jan. 26, 1802. His father, Capt. Stoddert, was an old Indian fighter in Western Maryland, and gave his name to Fort Stoddert, in the West, before the Revolution.

Daniel Carroll, cousin of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, was born in Maryland, and died at Washington, D. C., in 1849, at a great age. He was a delegate to Congress from 1780 to 1784, and was a delegate from Maryland to the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States. He was a member of Congress in 1789-91, and was, in the latter year, appointed one of the commissioners for laying out the District of Columbia. His farm formed the site of the present city of Washington. His father, Daniel Carroll, died at Upper Marlboro', Feb. 27, 1751. In November, 1770, Charles Carroll, barrister, conveyed by deed of trust to H. Rozier, Notley Young, and Daniel Carroll one hundred and sixty acres of land, lying near the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, for the purpose of laying out a town to be called Carrollsburg, now a part of Washington City. It was divided into two hundred and sixty-seven lots, with streets, lanes, alleys, and a public square of four acres for the use of the town. The terms of the sale were that each subscriber was to pay to the trustees six pounds sterling in bills of exchange or cash, for which he was to receive a ticket signed and numbered by them, which was to indicate the lot the holder was entitled to. Upon the receipt of this the holders of the tickets were to receive a deed in fee-simple from the trustees for the lot so drawn. Mr. Carroll reserved for himself six lots. The following notice appears in the Maryland Journal of Dec. 15, 1789:

"Mr. Daniel Carroll, Jun., of Montgomery County, being in a very infirm state of health, has thought proper to convey, in Trust, to the Subscribers his Estate, real and personal. His Creditors are requested to make known to the Trustees their several demands against the said Daniel Carroll, Jun.

"Notley Young, "George Digges, Trustees."

Henry Gaither, a gallant soldier, was born in Montgomery County in 1757, and died at Georgetown, D. C., June 22, 1811. He was a captain in the Revolutionary army, and engaged in nearly every important battle of the war. He was appointed major of the "Levies of 1791," and served under Gen. Arthur St. Clair in his unfortunate expedition against the Miami Indians, which terminated in "St. Clair's Defeat," in November, 1791, in the Northwest Territory (Ohio). He was lieutenant-colonel of the third sub-division from October, 1793, to June 1, 1802. He was a good soldier and an excellent disciplinarian. Gen. William Lingan Gaither, a prominent politician of Maryland, frequently a member of the Legislature, and president of the State Senate, was his son. He died in Montgomery County, Aug. 2, 1858.

Ninian Edwards was born in Montgomery County, Md., March 1775, and was graduated at Dickinson College, Pennsylvania. He studied both medicine and law, and devoted himself to the practice of the latter. He removed to Kentucky, and was twice elected to the Legislature. He was appointed a circuit clerk, and afterwards judge of the General Court of Kentucky, of the Circuit Court, and of the Court of Appeals, and finally chief justice of the State, all of which appointments he received before he was thirty-two years of age. President Madison in 1809 appointed him governor of the Territory of Illinois, to which office he was three times reappointed. Before Congress adopted any measures of defense, Governor Edwards organized companies, supplied them with arms, built stockade forts, and established a line of posts from the mouth of the Missouri to the Wabash River. His Territory was thus prepared for defense. In 1816 he was appointed a commissioner to treat with the Indian tribes. When Illinois was admitted into the Union, he was elected a senator in Congress, serving from 1818 to 1824, when he was appointed minister to Mexico, but declined. In 1826 he was elected governor of the State of Illinois, which office he filled until 1831. He died of cholera, July 29, 1833.

Jared Williams was born in Montgomery County, Md., March 4, 1766, and died in Frederick County, Va., Jan. 2, 1831. He was elected to the Virginia House of Delegates in 1811, and served several terms. He was a representative in Congress from Virginia from 1819 to 1825; Presidential elector in 1829, and voted for Gen. Jackson, and was appointed by the Electoral College to transmit the vote to Washington.

John W. Jones was born at Rock Creek, Montgomery Co., Md., April 14, 1806. He was carried by his father to Kentucky, and educated at Carlisle Seminary. He attended the lectures at the Pennsylvania Academy, and received the degree of Doctor.
Elisha Riggs was for many years the head of the well-known firm of Riggs, Peabody & Co., on Baltimore Street, near Hanover, afterwards Peabody, Riggs & Co., on German Street, in Baltimore, the elder partner moving to New York after aiding and establishing the well-known firm of Corcoran & Riggs, of Washington. He died leaving a fortune of a million and a half of dollars. George Peabody, at one time his clerk, afterwards his partner, had in the mean time removed to London, where in his successful efforts to maintain and uphold the credit and integrity of Maryland he laid the foundations of his own colossal fortune.

Samuel Riggs was the junior member of the same firm. He died in early life, leaving a fortune of three hundred thousand dollars.

John C. Clark, a native of this county, was a well-known merchant and banker in Baltimore. He left a large fortune of four hundred thousand dollars to St. John’s Independent Church, on Liberty Street, which was removed to a magnificent site and a new church built on Madison Avenue, near the park.

George R. Gaither, of Baltimore, was also a native of this county. His large and handsome stores and warehouses on Baltimore, Hanover, German, Howard, Charles Streets, and elegant dwelling-houses on Cathedral Street, entitle him to be numbered among Baltimore’s most opulent and substantial citizens. He left a very large fortune.

Israel H. B. A. and R. R. Griffith, from the same neighborhood, for many years flourished as successful merchants of Baltimore. Upon the death of the first named, investments in stocks and bonds to the amount of $445,000, it is said, were found in a trunk under his bed.

Rev. Thomas McCormick carried butter to market in the first refrigerator ever made, of which Thomas Moore, a member of the Society of Friends, then living in the neighborhood of Brookville, was the inventor, and for which he took out a patent about 1803. The first model was of small size, made for the purpose of carrying butter to market on horseback, as most of the marketing was done in that way in those days. The refrigerator consisted of a cedar tub of oval form, and about eighteen or twenty inches deep; in this was placed a tin box with the corners square, which would contain twenty-two prints of butter of one pound each, leaving space on each side between the tin and the wood for ice in small lumps. The outside of the wooden box was covered with rabbit-skin with the fur on, and over that was a covering of coarse woolen cloth. In this first refrigerator the butter was carried on horseback to the market at Georgetown, D. C., a distance of twenty miles, in warm weather, hard and firm, and with ice enough left to give each purchaser a small lump. This butter, of course, commanded a higher price than any other. After this Mr. Moore made them of larger dimensions, and in a different manner, for family and dairy purposes. They were composed of two cedar square boxes, one of smaller size, and the space between them filled with pulverized charcoal well packed in; a tin box fastened to the inner side of the lid contained the ice, and the whole was covered with coarse woolen cloth. Thomas Jefferson, then President of the United States, some of the heads of departments, and other citizens of the District of Columbia, who had ice-houses, used Thomas Moore’s patent refrigerators. In fourteen years his patent expired, when he gave the public the benefit of the same by not renewing it. This refrigerator was, however, of but little practical benefit to farmers generally, as not one in a hundred had such a useless appendage to his farm as an ice-house, so they went out of use for a number of years. Thomas Moore was a remarkable man. His father, Thomas Moore, came to this country early in the last century, first settled in Pennsylvania, where he married, and afterwards removed to Loudon County, Va., where he built a residence and called the place Waterford, after his native home. Here the son Thomas carried on for a time the business of a cabinet-maker, which he had learned. He then engaged in milling and merchandising in connection with his brother-in-law, James McCormick. About 1794 he removed to Maryland, having married Mary, daughter of Roger Brooke, of Brooke Grove, Montgomery Co. Here he commenced farming on the estate of his wife, and soon distinguished himself as a practical farmer. The State of Maryland is greatly indebted to him for many improvements in agriculture. Although the land was poor when he took possession of it, he soon had the model farm of the county and State. This farm is now owned by E. J. Hall, Esq., late president of the County Agricultural Society, who married a niece of Mary Moore. Persons came from long distances to see his farm and to witness the deep plowing with the mammoth plow of his own invention, his fine stock of cattle in fields of red clover, his meadows of timothy, fine fields of corn, the ground yellow with pumpkins, and the large pen of small-bone hogs fattened on pumpkins, corn, and slop boiled in a box. Charles Carroll, son of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, came on purpose to see the farm and its improvements. The proprietor being absent on the occasion, it devolved upon his twelve-year-old nephew to show the visitor around, which service was rewarded by the first silver dollar the farmer boy ever called his own. Thomas Moore, about this time, wrote a treatise on agriculture, and another on ice-houses and refrigerators, which proved of signal benefit to the State of his adoption. In 1805 he was employed by the corporation of Georgetown to construct the causeway from Mason’s Island to the Virginia shore, for which he received $24,000, and completed the work in less than a year. After this he was employed by the United States government to lay out the great National road to the West. During the war with Great Britain, from 1812 to 1816, he took charge of the Union Manufacturing Works near Elliott’s Mills, as chief manager. About this time he, in connection with his two brothers in-law, Caleb Bentley and Isaac Biggs, purchased the site and erected the cotton-mills known as Triadelphia, in Montgomery County. This was not a profitable investment, the war closing soon after the factory went into operation. He was next called upon by the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia to accept the position of chief engineer of the James River Canal. He also served in the same capacity in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, when, after making considerable progress, he contracted a fever so fatal to many on the Potomac, and came home to end his life with his family. From 1818 until his death, with much honor to himself and with great benefit to the public, and with the entire approval of those to whom he was responsible, he occupied the office of principal chief engineer of Virginia. On the 3d of October, after a sickness of twelve days, he died, aged sixty-three years.

Thomas L. Reese, the father and grandfather of the well-known grocery firm now doing business in Baltimore, was for a number of years a highly-esteemed citizen of this county. In early life he was a clerk with the celebrated Johns Hopkins in the counting-room of their uncle, Gerard T. Hopkins, and often heard the great capitalist say when he came to Baltimore he had but five dollars in the world, but he had resolved to become a rich man. When about twenty-five years old he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Moore (above mentioned), and lived for six or eight years in Brookville engaged in mercantile life, filling several offices of honor and trust, and everywhere esteemed as a conscientious and upright man.
From thence he returned to Baltimore, and became a partner in the wholesale grocery firm of Gerard T. Hopkins & Co. In 1833 he opened a retail store on Pratt Street, desiring to educate his sons in all the details of business, where he remained until 1844, when he retired from active life; but still by his daily counsel and advice aided his sons who succeeded him in building up the large business they are now doing. In early life he was often heard to say that he never desired to become a rich man, and although actively engaged for more than thirty years in mercantile life, during which he reared and educated a large family, he died in moderate circumstances, but leaving to posterity a legacy more valuable than any amount of earthly, riches,—a good name.

Thomas J. S. Perry, the senior member of the dry-goods firm of Perry & Co., of Washington City, died Sept. 5, 1880. He was born in 1825 in Montgomery County, and went to Washington when a young man, and finished his education in the old Rittenhouse Academy. He shortly after entered into business as a member of the dry-goods firm of Perry & Ashby. Augustus E. Perry dying in 1876, he succeeded as the senior member of the firm of Perry & Brother, Mr Ashby having withdrawn. Sept. 1, 1881, Seaton Perry, his nephew, withdrew, and the firm was changed to Perry & Co. Perry & Brother formed their partnership in 1840. Thomas was the last of five brothers.

Gen. Uriah Forrest, a distinguished Revolutionary officer, was born in St. Mary's County in 1756, but early in life removed to Montgomery, where he took an active interest in the affairs of the county. He attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the Maryland line, and received a wound at the battle of Germantown, from the effects of which he never recovered. He was appointed auditor of Maryland, member of the Continental Congress in 1786-87, and upon the adoption of the Federal Constitution came within one vote of defeating Charles Carroll of Carrollton for the United States Senate. He was a member of the Maryland House of Delegates in 1789 and 1790 from Montgomery County, a major-general of militia, a member of Congress in 1793-95, and at his death, near Georgetown, D. C., in July, 1805, was clerk of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

Roger Brooke, an immediate descendant of one of the first settlers of the colony of Maryland, was noted for wit and humor, and though a Quaker he had, like Washington, a great fondness for his hounds and the fox-chase, and was one of the most successful farmers in the county. Mr. F. P. Blair, in an agricultural address, characterized him as a second Franklin.

Robert Pottinger and Dr. William B. Magruder, father of the late most excellent and valuable citizen and physician, Dr. William B. Magruder, of Brookville, were leading and prominent citizens of the county.

The two Drs. Duval, father and son, were prominent and active in their profession, and as politicians and representatives of the county in the State Legislature.

The different State inspectors of tobacco appointed from Montgomery County were Richard H. Griffith, Philemon Griffith, John W. Darby, Francis Valdemar, Perry Etchinson, Greenberry S. Etchinson, and Robert S. Hilton.

Robert Sellman, of this county, was, before the repeal of the law, appointed State flour inspector. He so actively and faithfully discharged the duties of the office that, after the repeal of the law, he was and still is continued as private inspector at the request of the merchants of Baltimore.

Thomas F. W. Vinson, well and favorably known to the citizens of this county, was a fine specimen of the gentleman of the olden times. His pleasing manners at once put his friends as well as strangers at their ease in his presence. He was for many years sheriff of the county and one of the judges of the Orphans' Court.

Mr. James Holland, grandfather of the present Thomas J. Holland and Clagett Holland, was said strongly to resemble Gen. Washington in his personal appearance. As an auctioneer he was extensively known. The following names of citizens and families of the county are worthy of record and of being handed down to posterity and honorable recollection: William Darne, Dr. S. N. C. White, William Pool, A. S. Hayes, William Bennett, Brook Jones, Joseph I. Johnson, Nathan Hempston, Jacob Nicholls, Horatio Trundle, Hezekiah Trundle, Richard Harding, William Trail, T. C. Lanman, Rev. Thomas W. Green, Dr. Horatio Willson, Rev. Basil Barry, Allen Bowie, Davis, the Fletchers, Dawsons, Griffths, Platers, Whites, Waters, Darbys, Gittings, Gots, Peters, Gues, Pooles, Huttons, Riggs, Owens, and Gorvilles.

Revolutionary Pensioners.—Capt. Gleeson, whose residence was a log cabin near Barnesville, was severely wounded in the right knee in a battle between the "Black Snake" and "Little Turtle," yet he scoured to receive the small rate of pension offered him by the government for his meritorious services, and he died in his log cabin, well convinced that republics are ungrateful.

James Carrant was the first Revolutionary soldier pensioned in Montgomery County. He was placed on the roll in compliance with the general invalid pension law approved June 7, 1785, and died Sept. 4, 1822.
Francis Hutchinson was also a pensioner, but not Revolutionary. He belonged to the regular army of the United States. Samuel Harris was pensioned as a matross of the Revolutionary artillery, and died on the 19th of September, 1826. William A. Needham was also a Revolutionary pensioner, placed on the roll in 1805. William O'Neal was a private in the Maryland militia at some period not known, and placed on the pension-roll per act April 30, 1816, at the rate of forty-eight dollars per annum. Samuel B. White was a private in the Revolutionary army, pensioned per act June 7, 1785, and died Jan. 16, 1832. James White was also a pensioner per act June 7, 1785. He belonged to the Revolutionary army. All the soldiers named above were invalid pensioners, pensioned on account of wounds and disability received in the service of the United States in the line of their duty, and they honorably appear on Montgomery's roll of honor as good men tried and true.

The following Revolutionary soldiers residing in Montgomery County were pensioned by act of Congress approved the 18th of March, 1818. In order to obtain the benefit of this act they were required to prove nine months' service in the Continental army, and exhibit under oath a schedule showing that their property was worth no more than five hundred dollars. Another act was passed on the 1st of May, 1820, requiring the exhibition of another schedule, and if in the mean time their property had increased so as to exceed five hundred dollars in value they were dropped from the pension-roll. These acts of Congress were very distasteful to the old soldiers, for they looked upon them as offering a reward to soldiers for keeping themselves in poverty.

The first name in the county placed upon the pension-roll, in compliance with the act of 1818, was John Robbins, on the 6th of April, 1818, aged seventy-two years, at the rate of ninety-six dollars per annum. He belonged to the "Old Maryland Line," so distinguished in all the battles in which it took part. All the pensioners under this act, if privates, received ninety-six dollars per annum; if commissioned officers, they were allowed two hundred and forty dollars per annum. The second name placed on the roll was that of Joseph Roy, aged sixty-five years, also of the Maryland Continental Line. Then followed the names of Thomas Penfield, aged seventy-two years, who died Dec. 15, 1832; James Ervin, aged sixty-seven, who died June 28, 1827; George Field, aged eighty, time of death unknown; Robert Hurdle, aged seventy-five, time of death unknown; John Jordan, aged seventy-seven, time of death unknown; Henry Leeke, age not given, dropped from the roll per act May 1, 1820, time of death unknown. These were privates of the Maryland Line. James Campbell, of Virginia Line, aged seventy-one years, private, died Sept. 14, 1827; Beltz, or Lohr, Pennsylvania Line, aged seventy-six, private, died Feb. 27, 1827; Thomas Lingoan, lieutenant, Maryland Line, aged sixty-seven, died May 28, 1825; William Layman, ensign, Maryland Line, aged eighty-one, dropped from the roll per act May 1, 1820, restored March 22, 1826, time of death unknown. The two officers last named were pensioned at the rate of two hundred and forty dollars per annum.

The following-named soldiers of the Revolutionary war, residing in Montgomery County, were pensioned per act of Congress approved June 7, 1832. The minimum rate of pension allowed a private under this act was twenty dollars per annum for six months' service in any department of the Revolutionary army, and increased pro rata according to the time of service, so as not to exceed the rate of eighty dollars per annum, the maximum, for two years' service. No grade of officer was allowed more than six hundred dollars per annum for two years' service. Periods of service for less than two years were rated according to rank and time of service. Every soldier was entitled to a pension under this act without regard to the value of his property, and many who lost their pensions on the passage of the act of May 1, 1820, were restored by the act of 1832. All pensions under this act were made to commence on the 4th of March, 1831. Those pensioned were as follows:

Geo. Beech with, sergeant, $32.50 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 74.
Rich. Barret, sergeant, $36.15 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 79.
Giles Easton, private, $30 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 73.
Gah. Galworth, private, $80 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 77.
Chas. Morris, corporal, $79.63 per annum; New York Line.
Chas. Saffell, musician, $88 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 84.
Joseph Warfield, lieutenant, $85.97 per annum; Maryland Line; aged 76.
Samuel Griffin, captain, $114 per annum; Maryland Line.
James Fling, private, $80 per annum; Virginia Line; aged 73.

Charles Saffell, the oldest man on the list, died in 1837.

All the pensioners named above belonged to the Revolutionary army under Washington, except one or two on the list of invalids, who acquired the right to pension for services in the Indian wars which soon followed the Revolution.

Shadrach Nugent, a famous colored man, was born near Rockville in 1761. His father was brought to this country from Guinea, and was called Bob,—"Mr. Crampton's Bob." His mother was an Irishwoman named Mary Nugent, who had been brought to America as a convict at the expense of a man with whom she served for seven years to pay the expense of her transportation. Besides Shadrach there were three other children by this marriage,—Eli, Millie, and Nellie,—all of whom were of much brighter complexion than Shadrach. When quite small Shadrach was bound out by his mother to George Graff, and when the Revolutionary war began he went as a body-servant with Mr. Graff, who was a lieutenant in an independent artillery company, of which the second lieutenant was McPherson, and captain, Steiner, both of Frederick. The company entered the field in full uniform, and the entire outfit, cannon included, was bought by members of the organization. When the government ordered a draft the company entered the service as regulars, and were ordered to Baltimore, whither Shadrach went with his master. Gen. Smith was in command at Baltimore, and old Shad said the town was in confusion because the rumor went that the "Britishers war gwine to burn us up." One day Lieut. Graff sent for Shadrach to come down to the marquee. "He tole me," says Shad, "if dem English come, to fill my canteen with water and his uid whisky, and hang bofe around my shoulders. When day got a fightin' wid dem Britishers, he wanted me to stand right squar behind him and hand him whiskey to drink, and he said if I didn't do dat, how he'd haul out his pistol and shoot me dead. Well, you just believe me, honey, I was scared, was I, and I had made up my mind if dem Britishers had come to jump down a gully, canteen and all, and git, kase I war'n't gwine to be killed by the Britishers nor Massa George neider, and he would have killed me suah. Dem Dutch allus keeps dere word." When the war was closed Shadrach's master, who had married a Miss Mary Carlton, bought a farm three miles from Rockville, and afterwards gave Shadrach his free papers, and told him that he was twenty-one years of age. In the same year he went to seek his mother, and found her with his oldest sister, Millie, who was married to a farmer named Dick Robinson. Near Brookville a company had established what was called the Triadelphia Factory, and in a quarry near by they were breaking stone to build houses for the use of the establishment. In this quarry Shadrach worked for quite a while, and subsequently on different farms. When the war of 1812 broke out, and during its duration, he stayed with his sister at Brookville, and saw the light when the British burned Washington.

His brother Eli, who was living with a Mr. Dodge in Georgetown, came to Brookville with his family, because "ebeberbody in Washington was scared." Shadrach came to Washington in the year Madison was elected President. He says "it war'n't much of a place den, honey; all de place what I lives now was a swamp, and houses on Pennsylvania Avenue was mighty scarce." There he first worked at Lyon's mill, and subsequently for Joel Brown, a hatter, in Georgetown. He next drove a cart for George Brown, who was employed under Street Commissioner Corcoran, father of W. W. Corcoran. He got married in the year Jackson took his seat in the White House. Of his two children living the youngest is thirty-seven years old. He remembers all the Presidents who have been elected since he went to Washington, and often saw Jefferson Davis in the latter's house in G Street. He is in pretty good health, walks without a cane, can read the Bible, has good teeth, thin, white hair, and talks with considerable animation. One of his sons died while enlisted as a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and another one, now living, is employed at the Ebbitt House. George M. Graff, the present owner of the farm on which Shadrach worked before 1776, and his brother are grandnephews of Lieut. Graff, Shadrach's master. The Graff place is on the Frederick road, three miles from Rockville. Shadrach remembers that when a little lad he occasionally went to Clarksburg, and that Capt. Buxton, who bought his mother, lived upon that road, where Mr. Buxton now resides, near Middlebrook. Until three years ago, for a score of years he was a daily occupant of some prominent corner on some chief thoroughfare in Washington, standing erect, selling his "History of the Moons," with a card on his breast inscribed as follows:

"Shadrach Nugent was encamped on Federal Hill, Baltimore, Md., with Lieutenant George Graff, of the Artillery, as his body servant, 102 years ago this July, 1879, when General Lafayette reinforced General Washington at Yorktown, Va. I was 16 years old then, and am 118 years old now."

Being for long years too aged to labor, he lived by the sale of his observations and predictions concerning the moon, from whence his title, proudly boasted of by him, "The Moon Man," is derived. His compilation of changes is said to be in most instances surprisingly accurate, and is as follows:

"A HISTORY OF THE MOONS."

"The three first moons in every new year's almanac is the three first spring moons; the two first spring moons always falls cold, and they are the last cold falls.

"And the three next will be the summer moons for a hundred years."
"And the three next will be the three fall moons for a hundred years.

And the next three will be the three winter moons for a hundred years to come.

And there is only twelve falls of the moon in every year’s almanac for a hundred years.

And it don’t make any difference what months the spring moons change in, the weather will be half spring and half winter.

And when the moon changes with her points down, the change is stormy.

And when the changes with her points up, she changes calmer.

And every almanac has a date, and when the date is later, the moon changes with her points up, laying on her back.

And when the almanac’s date is earlier, the moon changes with her points down; stormy.

The first moon in every new year’s almanac is March’s moon, and the second moon is April’s, the third moon is May’s, and the fourth moon is June’s,—the first summer moon which fills for summer.

In every year you get an almanac; the almanac tells about the weather, and I tell about the moon.

I have been going by the moons for more than a hundred years, and have made it a special study.

And I am one hundred and nineteen years old in this year of 1880.

"Shadrach Nungent,
"The Moon Man."

Necrology.—The following record of deaths in the county, compiled from very early dates, will be interesting:

Died in 1796, Mrs. Martha Beatty, consort of Col. Charles Beatty, aged 54 years. November, 1796.—John Chaddock, Esq., aged 85.

October, 1797.—Roger Nelson, captain of the Republican Volunteer troop of Light Dragoons of Frederick, belonging to Gen. Dayley’s brigade.

April 10, 1804.—Mrs. Elizabeth Browning, near Clarksburg, in her 73d year.

Sept. 6, 1804.—Jonathan Browning, husband of the above E. Browning, aged 79.

Jan. 23, 1827.—At his residence at Rockville, Col. Upton Hall, aged 88. He was for more than thirty years county clerk.

Aug. 22, 1837.—Judge Kilgour, an upright judge and estimable citizen. “He was on his return home to Rockville from one of his tours near Leesburg, Va., riding in a hansom or carriage, when it was supposed his horse took fright and ran off, and he was thrown out, and his skull fractured and otherwise injured, so that he died an hour afterwards.”

April 5, 1838.—At Hystottown, Hon. George Baer, for many years president of the Frederick County Bank, and formerly a member of the United States Congress.

Nov. 6, 1841.—At Georgetown, D. C., Clara, formerly a servant of Thomas Edmonston, Sr., deceased.

March 26, 1855.—William Carroll. In 1812 he was almost unanimously elected to the Legislature. Daniel Carroll, his grandfather, was one of the framers of the Constitution, although he was not in Congress when the Declaration of Independence was signed. He was a brother of the late Archbishop of Baltimore, the first bishop in the United States. Mr. Wm. Carroll’s great-grandfather was a brother of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. Mr. Carroll during the close of his life was employed for some time in the Department of State at Washington, and afterwards served with credit as a magistrate in Baltimore.

April 11, 1856.—Hon. Otho Magruder, in his 63d year. He was at the time of his death one of the judges of the Orphans’ Court. He also attended the late meeting of the District Legislature in Alexandria, and was elected alternate commissioner to the general Assembly.

Aug. 2, 1858.—Hon. William Lingan Gaither, at Berkeley Springs. Senator Gaither had been long in public life, and was well known throughout the State as a gentleman of fine talents, a high sense of honor, and sterling integrity. He had frequently represented Montgomery County in both branches of the State Legislature, and at the time of his death was a member of the Senate, of which body for many years he was the presiding officer. He was also until recently a State director in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. He was stricken down by a violent attack of typhoid fever while discharging his duties to the city of Baltimore.

May 6, 1863.—John Spater, register of wills.

Aug. 12, 1871.—Matthew Fields, Esq., aged 56. He was the editor of the Roseville Republic, which paper had been under his management and edited by him for twenty years. He was esteemed both as a journalist and in private life. During the war his paper was twice suppressed, and Mr. Fields for a time confined in the old Capitol prison. In recognition of the estimation in which he was held, business in the town was suspended on the day of his funeral.

March, 1876.—Hon. Greenbury M. Watkins, at his home in Bocage, aged 69. Mr. Watkins was a member of the House of Delegates of Maryland in 1874. He had been for many years prominently connected with works of public improvement in the State, and was well known in the District of Columbia. In the Legislature of 1874 he was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. In early life he was connected with the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and was a director therein from 1872 until his death. He was one of the largest real estate owners in the county, and was elected to the Legislature in 1864. In the Constitutional Convention of 1867 he was on the Judiciary Committee. He was re-elected to the Legislature in 1870 and in 1874. He was actively engaged in the construction of the Western Maryland Railroad between Hagerstown and Williamsport.

Sept. 2, 1877.—Rev. Basil Barry, of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, aged 88 years, at the residence of his son-in-law, Dr. E.C. Stonestreet. Mr. Barry had been a resident of Rockville for the past forty years, and was held in high esteem by all classes of citizens. He was the eldest but one of the members of the Baltimore Annual Conference. He entered the ministry in 1815, serving on the following circuits and appointments: Mahoning, Great Falls, Stauton, New River, Allegany, Auchuck, Seven, Calvert, Prince George’s, and Harford. In 1828-29 he was in New York; 1827, Baltimore Circuit; 1828, Stauton; 1829-30, Montgomery; 1831, Chambersburg; 1832-33, Clear Spring, Pa.; 1834, Cumberland; 1835-36, Allegany; 1837-38, Rock Creek; 1839-40, Liberty; 1841-42, Great Falls; and 1845, in Montgomery. In 1844 he took a supernumerary relation, in which he continued until 1861, when he took a supernumerated relation. Mr. Barry, notwithstanding his extreme old age, was always a regular attendant at the Conference of the church, and frequently preached from the pulpit when occasion required. His last public ministration was at the Washington Grove camp-meeting, near Gaithersburg.
CHAPTER XXXV.
THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Georgetown—Its First Officers—Incorporated—Business Notes
—The District of Columbia—Laying off Washington City—
The Public Buildings.

Georgetown, originally included within the limits of Frederick, and afterwards in Montgomery, was laid out in response to a petition of the people of Frederick County to the General Assembly, setting forth that there was a convenient site for a town at the mouth of Rock Creek, on "Patownack" River, adjacent to the Inspection House, called George Gordon's Rolling House. In accordance with their desire the Legislature, by act of May 15, 1751, authorized Henry Wright Crabbe, John Needham, John Clagett, James Perry, and David Lynn, commissioners, to lay out and erect a town on the Potomac River above the mouth of Rock Creek, in Frederick County, and empowered them to purchase sixty acres, "part of the tracts of land belonging to George Gordon and George Beall, at the place aforesaid, where it shall appear to them to be most convenient, and to survey the same into eighty lots, to be erected into a town, and to be called George Town."

For the advantage of the town and for the encouragement of the back inhabitants, the commissioners were authorized to hold two fairs annually for three successive days, during which every one attending the same should be free from arrest, except for felony or breach of the peace.

The first meeting of the commissioners was held on the 18th of September, 1751, when they appointed Alexander Beall clerk and surveyor, and Josiah Beall coroner.

The owners of the site of the projected town, however, declined to sell, and they were accordingly compelled to summon a jury and condemn the property for the public uses for which it was intended. The jury, which consisted of William Pritchett, Ninian Magruder, Nicholas Baker, James Beall, Nathaniel Magruder, Charles Clagett, Thomas Clagett, James Holman, Charles Jones, Zachariah Magruder, James Wallace, Basil Beall, William Williams, Alexander Magruder, William Wallace, and John Magruder, son of Alexander, appraised the land, awarding two hundred and eighty pounds currency to the owners, and the survey and plat were completed on the 27th of February, 1752, when the commissioners numbered the lots and named the streets and lanes. Messrs. Gordon and Beall were allowed the first choice in the selection of lots in the new town, and Mr. Gordon chose lots 48 and 52. Mr. Beall at first refused to recognize the authority of the commissioners, and finally selected lots Nos. 72 and 79 under protest.¹

The land upon which Georgetown is situated was first patented by the proprietary of Maryland to Ninian Beall on Nov. 18, 1703. The original tract contained seven hundred and ninety-five acres, and was named the "Rock of Dunbarton." The patent recites that it was made in consideration of there being due to Beall five hundred acres under a warrant of the 19th of May, 1702. The land is described as lying in Prince George's County,

"beginning at the southeast corner tree of a tract of land taken for Robert Mason, standing by Potomac River side, at the mouth of Rock Creek, on a point running thence with said land N. N. West six hundred and forty perches, then east three hundred and twenty perches, thence south 60° easterly four hundred and eighteen perches, then west twenty perches, then S. S. W. one hundred and seventy-five perches, thence with a straight line by the creek and river to the first bound containing, and there laid out for seven hundred and ninety-five acres."

The town grew rapidly, and its port at one time was a formidable rival to Baltimore. Its exports from Oct. 1, 1789, to July 1, 1790, amounted to $260,962. The first addition to the town was Beall's sixty-one acres, made in 1783, followed in 1784 by twenty-four acres from Peter Beatty, Thrékeld, and Deakin.

Georgetown was not named after Gen. Washington, as is generally supposed, as the town was laid out while Washington was still a young man and before he had become famous. It is more likely it took its name from George II., King of Great Britain, towards whom all the provinces at this time were extremely loyal. In 1789 the town was incorporated, with Robert Peter, mayor, John Mackall Gantt, recorder, and Brooke Beall, Bernard O'Neal, Thomas Beall, of George, James McCubbin Lingan, John Thrékeld, and John Peter, aldermen, "so long as they shall behave themselves therein." Robert Peter died Nov. 15, 1801, at Georgetown, aged eighty-one years. He was succeeded as mayor by G. Lloyd Beall in 1798, who served to 1803. The first recorder, John MacKail Gant, served from 1789 to 1809, when he was succeeded by James S. Marsell from 1809 to 1813. He was followed by Francis Scott Key from 1813 to

¹ The following notice appears in the Maryland Gazette of Feb. 27, 1752:

"M. G., Feb. 27, 1752.—Notice is hereby given that the land appointed by act of Assembly to be laid out into a town by the name of Georgetown, adjacent to the warehouse at the mouth of Rock Creek, in Frederick County, is accordingly laid out, and the lots will be sold on March 23rd next, at the house of Joseph Belt, living in said town, at ten a.m.

"Per order of the Commissioners.

"ALEX. BEALL, Clerk."
1816. In 1790 there were only seventy-five post-offices in the United States, and Georgetown was one of them; but it has been ascertained that the office was in operation on the 5th of January, 1776. William B. Magruder was appointed postmaster at Georgetown, Feb. 16, 1790; Richard Forrest, April 1, 1797; Joseph Carlton, Feb. 1, 1799; Tristram Dalton, Jan. 1, 1803. James McCubbin Lingan was appointed collector of customs Oct. 1, 1790, and John Oakley, Oct. 1, 1801.

The first newspapers published in Georgetown were the Weekly Ledger in 1790; Sentinel of Liberty, by Green, English & Co., in 1796; and the Federal Republican in 1812.

In November, 1796, William B. Magruder had “a large assortment of fall goods from London and Liverpool” for sale at his store in Georgetown on “the Baltimore terms.” In September of the same year Teneh Ringgold was in the commission business at the same place. In February, 1791, Andrew Ellicott, attended by Benjamin Banniker, the colored astronomer and surveyor, arrived in the town to lay off the District of Columbia for the capital. Maj. Longson, a French gentleman, who was employed by the President as an assistant, also arrived in Georgetown in March for the same purpose. On Aug. 18, 1796, Washington passed through Georgetown on his way to Philadelphia, but remained in Washington City all night. Died in Georgetown, Oct. 10, 1799, Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas, aged one hundred and seven years; also, on the 21st of January, 1805, Mrs. Mary Lee, wife of Thomas Sim Lee, the second Governor of Maryland, and daughter of Ignatius Diggs. The corner-stone of the western abutment of the Federal bridge at Georgetown (being the second corner-stone) over Rock Creek was laid on Aug. 4, 1792, by Uriah Forrest, mayor of Georgetown.

Georgetown is a suburb of Washington, and is situated on the Potomac, being divided from the capital by Rock Creek. It is beautifully located on a range of hills rising above the former river, and stretches in undulating beauty along its borders.

The Heights of Georgetown are lofty eminences overlooking the city from the north and west. Along these are many splendid villas, the residences of gentlemen of wealth and distinction, and extensive gardens in the highest state of cultivation. Nothing can surpass the splendor of the panorama here presented. Below reposes the city, to the north the metropolis, and as far as the eye can reach the silvery Potomac courses through the most beautiful scenery. The city presents many objects of attraction. Its ancient college, a Catholic institution, its nunnery, its various literary institutions, its splendid aqueduct, and other noted edifices are worthy of attention.

Georgetown College, D. C.—The site now occupied by Georgetown College was selected for the purpose a few years after the American Revolution of 1776 by Rev. John Carroll, then a missionary priest of the vicinity, and afterwards the first Bishop and Archbishop of Baltimore, the primatial See of the United States. Georgetown was then within the limits of Montgomery County, wherein still resided many of the former members of the Society of Jesus, who served the ancient missions of Maryland and Pennsylvania. Of these missionaries Rev. Mr. Carroll was one. After the suppression of the society in 1773, the ex-Jesuits of Maryland had continued to hold the former estates of the society, and it was from the resources furnished by these estates that they now proposed to erect this first Catholic Institution of learning in the United States. It was expected that the Catholic laity would assist the enterprise, but it does not appear that any important help, or, indeed, any help at all, was received from this source. The first building, which is still standing, was begun in 1788, the few acres of ground surrounding it which had been secured were paid for in 1789, and the structure was ready for occupancy in 1791. In that year the first president, Rev. Robert Plunkett, an English ex-Jesuit, was appointed and the first student entered, William Gaston, afterwards a distinguished jurist and legislator in North Carolina. Meanwhile, in 1790, the State of Maryland ceded to the Federal government the territory now known as the District of Columbia, including Georgetown. Thus the site selected by Congress for the capital of the United States was identical, or nearly so, with that previously selected by the proto-Catholic bishop for his college, or “academy,” as he originally proposed it should be. Georgetown, which had been a town of some importance for many years before the District was created, is now only a suburb of the city of Washington, which has grown to be a city of one hundred and forty thousand inhabitants. A very few years after the opening of the college the accession of students from various parts rendered further accommodations necessary, and in 1797 a spacious building north of the former one was completed for the use of the boarders. It continues to be used for the same purpose.

Under the presidents succeeding Rev. Mr. Plunkett—Rev. Robert Molyneux, 1793–96, a native of England and a member of the former society; Rev. William L. Dubourg, 1796–99, one of the Sulpician refugees from France, afterwards Bishop of New Orleans, and finally Archbishop of Besançon, in France; and Rev. Leonard Neale, 1799-1806, formerly of the society and in after-years conductor and then successor to Archbishop Carroll in the See of Baltimore—the "academy" grew into a regularly organized college, with a liberal course of studies and a competent faculty of instruction. In 1806 the Society of Jesus was restored in Maryland, the college was transferred to its care, and became the mother-house of the society in the United States. Rev. Robert Molyneux, the first Jesuit superior, became at the same time president of the college, and died in office in 1808. He was succeeded as superior by Rev. Charles Neale, S.J., brother of Leonard, and as president by Rev. William Matthews, a secular priest, the first regularly settled Catholic pastor of Washington. He died in that city in 1854 at a very advanced age, greatly revered by both Protestants and Catholics. While a teacher in the college, in 1797-98, he had welcomed to the institution Gen. Washington, who called to return a visit paid him by members of the faculty of the time. Among these was an enthusiastic admirer of Washington's, the Abbé Flaget, afterwards the first Bishop of Bardstown and Louisville. Since the days of the first President of the United States, all, or nearly all, his successors in office have visited the college, and in many cases presided at its annual commencements. During Rev. Mr. Matthews' administration, 1808-12, a corps of instructors from Georgetown opened a classical school in the city of New York, which had great success during the few years it was in operation, but was given up in 1813, chiefly from the difficulty of procuring a succession of Jesuit teachers.

In 1812, Rev. John Grassi, S.J., a native of Italy, became superior of the mission and president of the college. Under the administration of this learned and distinguished man the college obtained from the Congress of the United States in 1815 its charter as a university. Its first graduates received their diplomas in 1817, from which period the annual commencements date. Shortly after an institution was opened in Washington by fathers from the college as an ecclesiastical seminary, but the enterprise not proving financially practicable, the building was used as a day-school, under the patronage of Rev. William Matthews, whose church (St. Patrick's) it adjoined. The school earned a high reputation, and was frequented by sons of the most distinguished men in Washington of that day. With varying fortunes, but with a career generally successful, it has subsisted to this time, but is now conducted on the grounds attached to St. Aloysius' Church, and is known as Gonzaga College. In 1817, Rev. Anthony Kohlmann, S.J., a native of Germany and an eminent theologian and controversialist, became superior of the mission, while the presidency of the college devolved for a year upon the Rev. Benedict J. Fenwick, S.J., a former student of the college, and then upon Father Kohlmann for two years, 1818-20, while the latter was still superior, 1817-21. This is the last instance in which the two offices were united. Rev. Enoch Fenwick, S.J., brother of Benedict, and like him educated at Georgetown, was president from 1820 to 1822, when he was succeeded by his brother. The latter continued in office until his appointment in 1825 to the bishopric of Boston, in place of the venerable Cheverus. The presidents next succeeding, up to 1837, were Rev. Stephen L. Dubuisson, S.J., a native of France; Rev. William Feiner, S.J., a native of Germany, who died after a few months; Rev. John Beschter, also a native of Germany; and Thomas F. Mulledy, S.J., a former student of the college. The latter, in 1832, erected a large addition to the original college building, containing a refectory and chapel for the students, each occupying an entire floor, and a study-hall of the same dimensions above. Down to and including 1878 the annual commencements have been held in this hall. During Rev. Mr. Mulledy's incumbency the missions of Maryland were regularly erected into a province, and Rev. William McSherry, S.J., a former student of the college, was made the first provincial, 1833. On March 30th of the same year His Holiness Gregory XVI. empowered the faculty of the college to confer degrees in philosophy and theology, a privilege which no other American institution enjoyed until a very recent date. On the expiration of Rev. Father McSherry's term of office, in 1837, he succeeded Rev. Mr. Mulledy as president of the college, and died in office in 1839.

The succeeding presidents, up to 1848, were Rev. Joseph A. Lopez, S.J., a Spaniard, who died in office after a few months; Rev. James Ryder, S.J., a former student of the college, the founder, in 1830, while a professor in the college, of the Philodemic Society, and the most celebrated pulpit orator of his day; Rev. Samuel F. Mulledy, S.J., a former student of the college, brother of Thomas; and finally Rev. Thomas Mulledy himself, president for a second time, 1845-48. About the time of his accession, Bishop Benedict J. Fenwick established at Worcester, in his diocese, the College of the Holy Cross, and a colony from Georgetown, bearing with them a handsome donation of books from the old college to the new, constituted a portion of its first faculty. This college, although admitting only Catholic students, has been eminently successful, and has, besides, given from among its alumni a large number of priests to the dioceses of New England and to the society, only a minority of its graduates choosing secular professions. Although it is now in high favor with the authorities of Massachusetts, it was many years before its charter could be obtained, and in the mean time the diplomas granted to its graduates were conferred by Georgetown College. Father Mulledy added to the attractions of the college a villa, three miles distant, which continued for many years, or until 1871, to be the resort on holidays of students and teachers, and during the summer vacations the home of the scholastics from Georgetown and other colleges of the province. The property is still owned by the college, but is now leased to private parties.

Rev. James Ryder again became president in 1848, and held office until 1851. During his administration the medical department of the university was organized in Washington, and opened for students in May, 1851. He also built Trinity church, the large and handsome church of the parish, substituting it for the ancient structure which had been attended by fathers from the college since 1735. Subsequent pastors of the church have converted the latter into a parochial school-house. The astronomical observatory, on an eminence near the college and within its grounds, which had been begun under Father Ryder's former administration, was now completed, and was being ably served by Fathers de Vico, Secchi, and Sistini, refugees from the political agitations of 1848 in Italy, and has since been in charge of Rev. James Curley, S.J., under whom the eminent Secchi made his first astronomical observations at Georgetown. Besides these more important works, many local improvements both in the buildings and grounds were made by Father Ryder, and the area of the grounds was extended, so that they now embrace over one hundred and fifty-four acres, much of which is woodland, while the arable portions furnish supplies to the college. Ten acres of park adjoining the college continue to furnish a delightful resort for the students during hours of recreation.

In August, 1851, Rev. Charles H. Stonestreet, S.J., succeeded Father Ryder in the presidency. Father Stonestreet was a graduate of 1833. Being made provincial of Maryland a year after entering the presidency, he resigned that position to Rev. Bernard A. Maguire, S.J. The latter built in 1854 a structure nearly corresponding in dimensions with the one erected by Father Mulledy in 1852, and intended chiefly to accommodate the younger students, who were thenceforth separated from the older ones, with their study-rooms, dormitories, and class accommodations in the new buildings, and their play-ground adjoining. In 1853, during Father Maguire's administration, Loyola College, in Baltimore, was opened and supplied with professors from Georgetown and elsewhere. That college became in 1858 the residence of the provincials, and Georgetown ceased to be headquarters, although the schools of philosophy and theology for the scholastics of the province continued to be held here until 1869, with the exception of three years after 1860, when they were conducted at the newly-opened college in Boston, since devoted exclusively to secular teaching under fathers of the society.

The first president of Loyola College, Rev. John Early, S.J., succeeded Father Maguire as president of Georgetown in 1858, and held office during all the trying period of the civil war, 1861-65. Notwithstanding the departure of numerous students, chiefly those from the South, at the outbreak of the war, the occupation of the grounds by Federal soldiers for some weeks in 1861, and the conversion of many of the buildings into a military hospital during 1862-63, the exercises of the college were never interrupted; besides, in that period of excited feeling and divided preferences only extraordinary prudence on the part of the head of the college could have averted imminent dangers, Georgetown being on the border-line between the then contending parties.

In 1866, Father Maguire became president for a second time. He organized the law department of the university, which opened its classes in Washington in October, 1870. In the previous year, Woodstock College, in Baltimore County, Md., was opened as a general scholasticate for the United States, and thither the scholastics who had been pursuing their studies of theology or philosophy in Georgetown repaired, their professors accompanying them and forming the bulk of the new faculty.

Father Early returned as president in 1870, and in the following year assigned to the college students in philosophy the rooms vacated by those who had removed to Woodstock. These rooms have since been occupied in a similar manner by the successive members, year after year, of the same class. It is now proposed to extend this privilege to the members of other classes, and rooms are being prepared for the purpose in the new and as yet (May, 1880) unoccupied building. Father Early died suddenly, but not unprepared, in May, 1873, himself and his predecessor having been among the governors of the college for twenty-one years.

He was succeeded by the Rev. P. F. Healy, S.J., a graduate of Holy Cross College in 1850, who is (June, 1881) still in office. Under his administration important changes and improvements have been made in the studies of the college course, especially in science and in the advanced studies in English branches.

Georgetown is now probably the only college in the United States, with the exception of the professedly scientific schools, where a course of two years in chemistry is insisted on before the student can gain his diploma. The courses in the medical and law schools of the university have also been extended and improved. In 1877 the foundations of an extensive stone structure, uniting the former college buildings, and with a frontage to the east of over three hundred feet, were laid. The building was completed in a little less than two years. It is being interiorly prepared for occupancy at the opening of the scholastic year, 1880-81, at least as to the class-rooms, eight in number and very spacious, and the private rooms for students, over sixty in number. The other apartments in the building, which is universally pronounced the finest college structure in the United States, will be a hall for commencements,—where that of 1879 was held,—capable of accommodating eighteen hundred persons; a library with a capacity for one hundred thousand volumes; a lecture-hall for physics capable of seating three hundred; a chemical laboratory, with ample annexes for class purposes; a museum; offices for the president and treasurer; a range of parlors, etc. The whole building will be heated by hot water. The central tower, two hundred and six feet in height, will serve as a ventilating shaft for the entire structure, and a tower at the southern extremity of the building, one hundred and forty-two feet in height, affords a magnificent view over the cities of Georgetown and Washington and the course of the Potomac River for many miles.

The former students of Georgetown College are residents of all parts of the United States, and even of foreign countries. They embrace men in every calling, not a few of whom are eminent, either socially or politically.

The Nunnery or Convent of the Visitation is situated on the heights contiguous to the eastern margin of the Potomac, and commands a view of that magnificent river and—at a distance—of the city of Washington. The building appropriated for the ladies' academy is of brick, between two hundred and three hundred feet in length by forty feet in breadth. It is a handsome structure, and in the interior a combination of elegance and neatness. These buildings occupy part of the side of an oblong square which contains an area of four or five acres, a portion of which is laid out as a botanic garden. There are other edifices of great extent on the same square, comprising the archbishop's residence, an elegant church, the convent and charity schools. The whole is under the direction of the Sisters of Visitation, and the course of instruction is one embracing all the accomplishments of the age.

Among other institutions of learning, the most distinguished were Mr. Abbott's English and Classical Academy and Miss English's Female Seminary, both in their several spheres schools of the highest order.

The aqueduct which conveys the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal over the Potomac is a stupendous work, and an attraction to all men of science. It was constructed under the superintendence of Maj. Turnbull, of the United States Topographical Engineers, and cost nearly two million dollars. The piers, nine in number, and thirty-six feet above high-water mark, are built of granite, and imbedded seventeen feet in the bottom of the river, with a foundation upon solid rock, so as to withstand the shock of the spring ice, which rushes furiously from the falls and narrows above, crushing with tremendous force against the bridge and sweeping everything movable before it. These piers, built in the most masterly manner, will bear up against any force that may be propelled against them. This aqueduct connects the great canal with the city of Alexandria, Va. Its length is fourteen hundred and forty-six feet.

The cemetery on the heights is also a great ornament to the city. It was laid out in 1849, at the expense and under the direction of W. W. Coreoran, the eminent banker, and a native of the District. It is known as Oak Hill Cemetery. A capacious mausoleum or public vault is situated in a central position, the front of which is of dressed granite in the Henry VIII. style of Gothic. The donor of the land also added to the cemetery a massive front iron railing, a gate-keeper's lodge in the Norman style, and an elegant Gothic chapel, adorned with beautiful stained glass.

Georgetown was formerly a port of some note, and had considerable trade, and is now quite a thriving business place. It is connected by canal or railroad with all parts of the Union.

Most of the territory composing the District of Columbia, including the city of Georgetown and the

---

1 The following appeared in the Maryland Journal of Feb. 26, 1783:

"Notice.

"The inhabitants of Montgomery County intend petitioning the next General Assembly of Maryland for the removal of the court-house from the place where it then met to George Town."
site of the capital of the nation, was originally a portion of Montgomery County. Before all the States had ratified the Constitution it became a matter of serious deliberation in Congress where the permanent capital should be located. Maryland and Virginia were from the first eager claimants for the honor, and though the cession of the territory would entail a serious temporary loss on Montgomery County, the prospective advantages to be derived from the proximity of the national capital far outweighed any considerations of this character, and no opposition to the scheme was at any time developed.

Congress had hitherto held its sessions, according to the exigencies of the war, at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Princeton, Annapolis, Trenton, and New York, but it was now determined to fix its permanent seat, and settle the violent sectional discussions which continually arose upon the subject between the Northern and the Southern States. The necessity of selecting a residence in which the government might exercise sufficient authority to protect itself from abuse, insult, and violence had been generally admitted since June, 1783, when Congress was driven from Philadelphia by a mutiny of a part of the Pennsylvania line, for the purpose of compelling Congress to grant their arrears of pay. In this emergency a committee was appointed, with Alexander Hamilton at its head, to ask the executive of Pennsylvania for assistance, and they reported that the Philadelphia militia could not be depended on for protection, and that Congress was at the mercy of the mutineers. When this report was made, Messrs. Ward, Mercer, and others, "being much displeased, signified if the city would not support Congress it was high time to remove to some other place." After discussing the situation with Gen. St. Clair, Congress, on the next day, adjourned to Princeton. This adjournment made the establishment of a Federal capital a necessity, and it continued to be made the subject of discussion down to its final adoption, in 1790. On Oct. 7, 1783, Mr. Gerry introduced a resolution that the buildings for the use of Congress be erected on or near the banks of the Delaware or the Potomac, provided that a suitable place could be obtained for a Federal town, and that the right of soil and exclusive jurisdiction be vested in the United States. This statute was repealed on the 24th of April, 1784, and on the 30th of October following, while Congress was sitting at Trenton, they appointed three commissioners to lay out a district on either bank of the Delaware, "not more than eight miles above or below the falls." They were authorized to purchase soil, erect and complete in an "elegant manner" a Federal house, President's house, houses for the secretaries of foreign affairs, war, marine, and treasury, but owing to the resistance of Southern members no appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act was made, and the law was never carried into execution.

On the 13th of January, 1785, an effort was made to substitute the Potomac, which failed. On the 10th of May, 1787, Mr. Lee, of Virginia, offered a resolution "for erecting the necessary public buildings for the accommodation of Congress at Georgetown, on the Potomac River," which was lost. The new constitution of 1787 declared that Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation over such a district, not exceeding ten miles square, as may, by the cession of States, become the seat of government.

No action was had under this provision of the Constitution until Dec. 23, 1788, when the General Assembly of Maryland passed "an act to cede to Congress a district of ten miles square in this State for the seat of government of the United States." By this act it was enacted "by the General Assembly of Maryland that the representatives of this State in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, appointed to assemble at New York on the first Wednesday of March next, be and they are hereby authorized and required, on behalf of this State, to cede to the Congress of the United States any district in this State, not exceeding ten miles square, which the Congress may fix upon and accept for the seat of government of the United States."

On the 27th of December Virginia passed a similar resolution, but no action was taken by Congress upon the measure until the 5th of September, 1789, when a resolution passed the House of Representatives "that the permanent seat of government of the United States ought to be at some convenient place on the banks of the Susquehanna, in the State of Pennsylvania." In the debates to carry this resolution into effect much feeling was displayed by the Southern members, and particularly by those from Virginia. They earnestly contended that the bank of the Potomac was the most suitable location. Mr. Madison, in the course of the debate, went so far as to declare that if the proceedings of that day had been foreseen by Virginia that State might not have become a party to the Constitution. As it was a matter of great importance, Mr. Scott declared that "the future tranquillity and well-being of the United States depended as much on this as on any question that had or could come before the Congress," and Mr. Fisher Ames remarked that "every principle of pride and honor, and even of patriotism, was engaged."
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

"I confess," said Mr. Vinning, "to the House and to the world that, viewing this subject in all its circumstances, I am in favor of the Potomac. I wish the seat of government to be fixed there because I think the interests, the honor, and the greatness of the country require it. I look upon it as the centre from which those streams are to flow that are to animate and invigorate the body politic. From thence it appears to me that the rays of government will naturally diverge to the extremities of the Union. I declare that I look upon the Western territory in an awful and striking point of view. To that region the unpollished sons of earth are pouring from all quarters,—men to whom the protection of the law and the controlling form of government are equally necessary. From this consideration I conclude that the bank of the Potomac is the proper situation."

The bill passed the House by thirty-one ayes to nineteen noes, with an amendment striking out the word Susquehanna, and inserting a clause that the permanent seat of government should be established at Germantown, Pa., whenever that State or its citizens should agree to pay one hundred thousand dollars for the erection of public buildings. The bill went back to the Senate for the consideration of the amendment, and before the Senate could act upon it Congress adjourned.

The fact that the North had the preponderance of votes in Congress now aroused Maryland and Virginia, who determined to evoke the power of money. On the 3d of December, 1789, the Legislature of Virginia passed an act ceding to Congress a district for the location of the seat of government in that State, and on the 10th transmitted the same to the Assembly of Maryland. At the November session of 1790 the Legislature of Maryland passed the following resolution:

"Whereas, By a resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed on the 10th day of December, 1789, it was proposed to the General Assembly of Maryland that the Assembly of Virginia will pass an act for advancing a sum of money not less than one hundred and twenty thousand dollars to the use of the general government, and to be applied in such manner as Congress shall direct towards erecting public buildings, the Assembly of Maryland, on their part, advancing a sum not less than three-fifths of the sum advanced by the said State of Virginia, which resolution came so late to the last General Assembly of Maryland that it could not be acted upon, and was therefore referred to this present session; and, whereas, this General Assembly doth highly approve of the object of the said resolution, and is desirous of doing everything required, on the part of Maryland, for carrying the same into effect, on a second reading of the said resolution,"

"Resolved, That this House doth accede to the proposition contained in the said resolution of the Assembly of Virginia, and will advance to the President of the United States, for the purpose mentioned in the said resolution, the sum of seventy-two thousand dollars, payable to his order in three equal yearly payments."

At the same time, to secure the prompt payment of the sum advanced, the treasurer of the Western Shore was authorized to sell the "reserved lands westward of Fort Cumberland," and also the lands lying in Dorchester County, and now in the possession of the tribe of Choptank Indians, and "to sell and convey the right of this State to one hundred acres of land at Fort Frederick, in Washington County." New York and Philadelphia at the same time offered to continue their "elegant and convenient accommodations." New Jersey offered several suitable buildings at Trenton. Baltimore subscribed in fourteen days £20,000, which was subsequently increased to £40,000, towards the erection of all government edifices if the capital should be located in that city.

On the 31st of May, 1790, a bill was introduced into the Senate to determine "the permanent seat of Congress and the government of the United States." Baltimore and Georgetown again pressed their claims, but the motion was finally carried that a site "on the river Potomac, at some place between the mouths of the Eastern Branch and the Conococheague, be and the same is hereby accepted for the permanent seat of the government of the United States." Mr. Varnum says,—

"The debates on the several resolutions and bills elicited much warmth of feeling and sectional jealousy. Almost all were agreed that New York was not a suitable place, as not being sufficiently central.

"There was much division of sentiment as to the relative advantages of Philadelphia and Germantown, in Pennsylvania; Havre de Grace and a place called Wright's Ferry, on the Susquehanna; Baltimore, on the Patapsco; and Conococheague, on the Potomac. The last two were about equally balanced for some time in the number of supporters. It was remarked by one of the members of Maryland that the people of the State were in the situation of Tantalus, uncertain which to prefer, the Susquehanna or the Potomac. Mr. J. Smith set forth the advantages of Baltimore, and the fact that its citizens had subscribed forty thousand dollars for public buildings. The South Carolinians offered an apparently whimsical objection to Philadelphia, to wit: the number of Quakers, who, they said, were eternally dogging the Southern members with their schemes of emancipation. Others ridiculed the idea of building palaces in the woods. Mr. Gerry, of Massachusetts, thought it highly unreasonable to fix the government seat in such a position as to have nine States out of thirteen to the northward of the place, andadvertised to the sacrifice the Northern States were ready to make in being willing to go so far south as Baltimore. Mr. Page said New York was superior to any place he knew for the orderly and decent behavior of its inhabitants. The motion to insert Baltimore instead of the Potomac was negatived by a vote of thirty-seven to twenty-three."

The act "establishing the temporary and permanent seat of government of the United States" was finally passed on the 16th of July, 1790, by a vote of thirty-two to twenty-nine. The first section of this act provides "that a district of territory not exceeding ten miles square, to be located as hereafter directed, on the river Potomac, at some place between the mouth of the Eastern Branch and Conococheague, he and the same is hereby accepted for the permanent seat of government of the United States."

Thus it was that this "sugar-plum" was given to the South for their adoption of the "Assumption Bill," which Mr. Jefferson says was "a bitter pill" to the Southern States, and it was necessary that "some consonant measure should be adopted to sweeten it a little to them."

In compliance with the act of Congress, President Washington, in 1790, visited Williamsport, Washington Co., but not liking the situation, he finally selected the present site as the future capital of the country. As the act passed by Congress required the district to be located above the mouth of the Eastern Branch, he procured on the 3d of March, 1791, the passage of an amendatory act, by which he was authorized to make "any part of the territory below the said limit, and above the mouth of Hunting Creek, a part of said district, so as to include a convenient part of the Eastern Branch, and of the lands lying on the lower side thereof, and also the town of Alexandria, provided that no public buildings be erected otherwise than on the Maryland side of the Potomac."

On the 24th of January, 1791, President Washington, in compliance with the act of Congress, appointed Hon. Thomas Johnson and Hon. Daniel Carroll, of Maryland, and Dr. David Stewart, of Alexandria, Va., commissioners, and directed them to lay off "the Territory of Columbia." Having completed their task of selecting the site, the President, on the 30th of March following, located the district for the permanent seat of the government, and in a letter to Thomas Jefferson, Secretary of State, dated March 31, 1791, he gives the following result of his efforts:

"The terms entered into by me, on the part of the United States, with the landholders of Georgetown and Carrollsville, are that all the land from Rock Creek along the river to the Eastern Branch, and so upwards to or above the ferry, including a breadth of about a mile and a half, the whole containing from three to five thousand acres, is ceded to the public, on condition that when the whole shall be surveyed and laid off as a city (which Maj. L'Enfant is now directed to do) the present proprietors shall retain every other lot; and as for such part of land as may be taken for public use, for squares, walks, etc., they shall be allowed at the rate of twenty-five pounds per acre ($66.67), the public having the right to preserve such parts of the wood on the land as may be thought necessary to be preserved for ornament, the landholders to have the use and profits of all the grounds until the city is laid off into lots and sale is made of those lots, which by this agreement become public property. Nothing is to be allowed for the ground which may be occupied as streets or alleys."

Under the date of April 10th, Mr. Jefferson replied, rejoicing in the economy of the bargain:

"The acquisition of ground at Georgetown is really noble, considering that only £25 an acre is to be paid for any grounds taken for the public, and the streets not to be counted, which will in fact reduce it to about £19 an acre. I think very liberal reserves should be made for the public."

The territory thus selected by Washington was mainly owned by four planters,—Daniel Carroll, David Burrs, Samuel Davidson, and Notley Young,—who conveyed their property on the 19th of June, 1791, to Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gant, in trust to be laid out for a Federal city; and the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gant were to convey to the commissioners, for the use of the United States forever, all the streets and such of the said squares, parcels, and lots as the President should deem proper for the use of the United States forever.

In carrying out the objects of the act of Congress, the commissioners on the 15th of April superintended the fixing of the first corner-stone of the District of Columbia at Jones' Point, near Alexandria, where it was laid with all the Masonic ceremonies usual at the time. And on the 29th of June following, agreeable to appointment, the President and the three commissioners, with a large number of gentlemen, met in "the Federal Town" to select the situations for the public buildings. "Jenkins' Hill, on the east side of Goose Creek, the property of Daniel Carroll, Jr.," was chosen as the site for the Capitol, and that part of the district called Hamburgh, near Burn's gate, was selected for the President's house.

The name which Washington City and the District of Columbia now bears was adopted by the first commissioners, for in a letter to Maj. L'Enfant, dated Georgetown, Sept. 9, 1791, they inform the engineer that they have agreed that the Federal district shall be called "the Territory of Columbia," and the Federal city "the City of Washington," and directs him to entitle his map accordingly.

On the 19th of December, 1791, the General Assembly of Maryland passed an act ceding to the United States for the permanent seat of government that portion of territory which lies in the State of Maryland, which together with that ceded by Virginia made a tract of ten miles square, bounded as follows:

"Beginning at Jones' Point, being the upper part of Hunting Creek, in Virginia, and at an angle, at the outset, of forty-five degrees west of the north, and running a direct line ten miles, for the first line; then beginning again at the same Jones' Point and running another direct line at a right angle with the first across the Potomac, ten miles, for the second line; then from the termination of the first and second lines, running two other direct lines, ten miles each, the one crossing the Eastern Branch and the other the Potomac, and meeting each other in a point, which has since been called the Territory of Columbia."

This act, although it ceded a portion of the territory of the State, did not rest the rights of its citizens on the provisions of the Constitution alone, but by the following clause it will be seen that the Legislature expressly reserves them in the articles of cession, and denies the power of Congress to interfere with the right of property. The act of cession declares—

“That all that part of the said Territory called Columbia which lies within the limits of this State shall be and the said is hereby acknowledged to be forever ceded and relinquished to the Congress of the United States, in full and absolute right and exclusive jurisdiction, as well of soil as of persons residing or to reside thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the eight section of the first article of the constitution of government of the United States; provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed to vest in the United States any right of property in the soil as to affect the rights of individuals thereon, otherwise than the same shall or may be transferred by such individuals to the United States; and provided also that the jurisdiction of the laws of this State over the persons and property of individuals residing within the limits of the cession aforesaid shall not cease or determine until Congress shall, by law, provide for the government thereof under their jurisdiction, in manner provided by the Article of the Constitution before recited.”

As slavery was a species of property, and existed in the District of Columbia before this act of cession, it was regarded as included in the compact between the three sovereign powers,—sovereign and independent within their respective spheres, and qualified and competent to enter into a compact, and therefore not to be annulled without the consent of all the parties. Slavery existed in the District of Columbia before the Constitution and the laws to which it gave origin were framed, and the obligations which it was intended to enforce were recognized and declared to be in force before the government was established there. Maryland, Virginia, and the general government recognized this principle by various acts of legislation up to the time of its abolishment, and the Senate of Maryland reiterated this document as late as the year 1837, when they resolved, on Mr. Joseph
S. Cottman’s resolution,—

“That Congress does not possess the power to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, and in the opinion of this Legislature the abolition of slavery in said District by Congress would be a violation of the terms and conditions upon which the cession of the District of Columbia was made to the Federal government: and in the event of such violation the territory included in said district ought, and of right will, revert repertively to the States of Virginia and Maryland.”

On the 29th of September, 1792, President Washington authorized the commissioners to dispose of any lot or lots in the city of Washington at private sale, for such price and on such terms as they should think proper. No sales, however, took place of any consequence until the 23d of December, 1793, when a contract was made with Robert Morris, of Philadelphia, and James Greenleaf, of New York, for the sale of six thousand lots, averaging five thousand two hundred and sixty-five square feet each, and situated northeast and southwest of Massachusetts Avenue, for the sum of eighty dollars per lot, payable in seven equal annual installments, without interest, commencing on the 1st of May, 1794, and with a condition of building twenty brick houses annually, two stories high, and covering twelve hundred square feet each. This contract was afterwards modified by an agreement dated April 24, 1794, by which the payment of eighty thousand dollars and erecting the houses should rest on the joint bond of Morris, Greenleaf, and John Nicholson, and that one thousand lots should be conveyed to the said Morris and Greenleaf.

On the 18th of September, 1793, the southeast corner-stone of the north wing of the Capitol was laid with Masonic orders; George Washington, Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 22, Virginia, directing, as-isted by the Grand Lodge of Maryland and several lodges under its direction. A volunteer company of artillery from Alexandria, with mayor and other corporate officers of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria, and a numerous body of citizens also participated in the ceremonies. The orator of the day was Joseph Claude, of Annapolis. The Maryland Gazette of September 26th informs us that at the conclusion of the ceremonies “the whole company retired to an extensive booth, where an ox of five hundred pounds’ weight was barbecued, of which the company generally partook, with every abundance of other recreation.”

We have already stated that as an inducement for the selection of this site Virginia advanced one hundred and twenty thousand dollars for the construction of the public buildings, and Maryland seventy-two thousand dollars. This sum was soon exhausted, and, moreover, Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, who had purchased large tracts of land, not only failed to pay the first installment, which fell due in May, 1795, but early in that year discontinued the buildings which they had commenced under their contract.
The President, finding that the work on the public buildings must stop for the lack of funds, and that it would not be prudent to offer for sale so large a portion of the public property as would be necessary to raise the sums requisite to complete them, sent a message to Congress in 1796, in which he urged the propriety of authorizing the loan, secured by the city property, and if that should prove deficient, then Congress was to guarantee it. Congress approved of the measure, and authorized a loan under their guarante to the amount of three hundred thousand dol-ars. But so low was the credit of the young capital, and so uncertain her further existence, that it was impossible to obtain the smallest loan. After various unsuccessful attempts to borrow money at home and abroad, Washington determined to make a personal application to the State of Maryland for a loan. In a letter to Governor John Hoskins Stone, dated Philadelphia, Dec. 7, 1796, he says,—

"Sir,—The attempts lately made by the commissioners of Washington City to borrow money in Europe for the purpose of carrying on the public buildings having failed, or been retarded, they have been authorized by me to apply to your State for a loan of $150,000, upon terms which they will communicate. Such is the present condition of foreign nations with respect to money that, according to the best information, there is no reasonable hope of obtaining a loan in any of them immediately, and application can now only be made in the United States upon this subject with any prospect of success, and perhaps nowhere with greater propriety than to the Legislature of Maryland, where, it must be presumed, the most anxious solicitude is felt for the growth and prosperity of that city which is intended for the permanent seat of government of America.

"If the State has in its power to lend the money which is solicited, I persuade myself it will be done, and the more especially at this time when a loan is so indispensable, that without it not only very great and many impediments must be induced in the prosecution of the work now in hand, but inevitable loss must be sustained by the funds of the city in consequence of premature sales of public property.

"I have thought I ought not to omit to state, for the information of the General Assembly, as well the difficulty of obtaining money on loan as the present necessity for it, which I must request the favor of you most respectfully to communicate."

Such was the influence of his name that Maryland, on the 4th of December, 1796, lent one hundred thousand dollars, to be used for the erection of the Capitol buildings; but so low was the credit of the general government that, as an additional guarantee of the repayment of the loan, the State required Gustavus Scott, William Thornton, and Alexander White, the three commissioners, in their individual capacity, to give bond of two hundred thousand dollars. On the 22d of December, 1797, the State lent them an additional sum of one hundred thousand dollars upon similar terms, and on the 23d of December, 1799, fifty thousand dollars more. As security for the latter sum, Gustavus Scott and William Thornton gave their individual bond, together with Uriah Forrest and James Maceubbin Lingan. On the third Monday of November, 1800, Congress opened its first session in the city of Washington.

Washington, the national metropolis of the United States, is beautifully and conveniently situated on a gentle undulating surface on the north bank of the Potomac, between Rock Creek and the Anaocotia, or Eastern Branch. The city extends northwest and southeast for about four and a half miles, and from the east to the south for about two and a half miles. The public buildings occupy the most elevated and convenient situations. The streets run north and south, east and west, crossing each other at right angles, with the exception of fifteen avenues, which are named after the States. The Capitol commands the streets called Maryland, Delaware, and Pennsylvania Avenues; the President’s house those of Pennsylvania, Vermont, New York, and Connecticut, and all these different intersections eleven hundred and seventy squares. Pennsylvania Avenue, which stretches in a direct line from Georgetown to the Eastern Branch, passing the President’s house to the Capitol, is four miles in length and one hundred and sixty feet in width between these edifices, and one hundred and thirty feet cast of the Capitol and west of the President’s house. The streets, which are from seventy to one hundred feet wide, give a fine appearance to the city. The whole area of the city is about three thousand and sixteen acres, and its circumference about fourteen miles.

The longitude of the capital was determined in 1821, by calculations made by William Lambert from observations conducted by William Elliot, under the authority of Congress, to be seventy seven degrees one minute and forty-eight seconds (77° 1' 48") west from the observatory of Greenwich, and the latitude thirty-eight degrees fifty-five minutes and forty-eight seconds (38° 55' 48") north.

Washington is nearly surrounded by a fine amphitheatre of hills of moderate elevation, covered with trees and shrubbery, and commanding from many points picturesque scenery and extensive views of the Potomac, or "River of Swans," which, descending from the Allegheny Mountains, and winding its way for nearly four hundred miles through a fertile and most attractive country, empties into the Chesapeake Bay, and finally through its ample waters mingles itself with the ocean. The environs of the city abound in the most eligible sites for villas and country-seats, and such will doubtless be multiplied as the advantages of the metropolis become more extensively known.

The public buildings of Washington are the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, the State offices, Treasury buildings, War offices, Navy offices, offices of the Secretary of the Interior, Post-office, office of the Attorney-General, National Observatory, the Arsenal, navy-yard, Smithsonian Institute, National Medical College, Columbian College, Coast Survey office, City Hall, National Institute, numerous churches, the hotels, and many others devoted to a variety of useful, literary, and benevolent purposes.

The Capitol is situated on an area of thirty acres, inclosed by an iron railing. The building stands on the western portion of this plot, and is so elevated as to command a view of the entire city, including Georgetown Heights, the windings of the Potomac, and the city of Alexandria. It was commenced in 1793, with Mr. Hallet as architect, who was succeeded in that capacity by Mr. Hadfield, Mr. Hoban, and Mr. Latrobe. During the embargo the works were suspended, and as the British subsequently demolished much of what had been accomplished by the above gentlemen, the government in 1815 found it necessary to reconstruct the whole edifice. It was finished as it now stands under the superintendence of C. Bullfinch. The exterior exhibits a rusticated basement of the height of the first story; the other two stories are comprised in a Corinthian elevation of pilasters and columns; these columns, which are thirty feet in height, form an advancing portico on the east, one hundred and sixty feet in extent; the centre of which is crowned with a pediment of eighty feet span, while a receding loggia one hundred feet in extent distinguishes the centre of the west front.

The building is surrounded by a balustrade of stone, and covered with a lofty dome in the centre and a flat dome on each wing. The dimensions of the buildings are, length of front three hundred and fifty-two feet four inches, depth of wings one hundred and twenty-one feet six inches, and the height to the top of the dome one hundred and forty-five feet. The cost up to 1828, when it may be said to have been completed, was nearly one million eight hundred thousand dollars. During the session of Congress, 1850-51, appropriations were made for the further enlargement of the Capitol by the addition of two new wings of two hundred and thirty-eight by one hundred and forty feet each wing, and the whole Capitol, including the space between the wings and the main building, covers an area of four and one-third acres. The cornerstone of the extension was laid by President Fillmore on the 4th of July, 1851, with Masonic ceremonies, on which occasion the Hon. Daniel Webster delivered a brilliant oration.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

Public Roads and Bridges—Stage-Coaches—Railroads—Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

Far more attention appears to have been given by the people of Montgomery in early times to the improvement of the public roads than is frequently bestowed on them at the present time by the inhabitants of some of the counties. In 1777 the roads were laid out and the following persons appointed overseers, and it was not unusual for the overseers to be fined for neglect of duty, as has already been observed by the records of the court:

1. From the top of Strong Hill, above Henry Threlkeld's, to Thomas Graves's. —James Toppin.
2. From Thomas Graves's to Captain John Run, below James Offutt's mill. —Thomas Duley.
3. From the fork of the road above the plantation on the main road, belonging to George Reed, to Rock Creek bridge, by Charles Jones, and from said bridge to Aaron Lanham's and Charles Jones' gate, and from Thomas Graves's to Rock Creek ford, from thence to the county line which leads to the church. —Thomas Graves.
4. From Captain John Run, including the bridge crossway near Ninian Riley's, to the house kept by Leonard Davis. —James Moore.
5. From Leonard Davis's to Rock Creek bridge, near James Smith's former plantation, and from Leonard Davis' to a bridge on Rock Creek near William Rockwith's, and from Rock Creek Chappell until it intersects the George Town road.—Ninian Riley.
6. From Thomas Graves's to Captain John Run, by James Moore's, and from Thomas Richardson's and Thomas Johns' mill to the main road that leads by the said James Moore's. —Joseph Gill.
7. From Captain John Meeting-house to the plantation of Zachariah McCubbin. —William Wallace, Sr.
8. From Leonard Davis' to Henry Cuggette's, and from Leonard Davis' to the Muddy Branch, and from said Davis' to Joseph Wilson's quarter, and up to Luke Bernard's road.—Peter Brown.
9. From Seneca to the mill branch, and with the said road to the end.
10. From Sligo to Mrs. Carroll's plantation, to the county line on the church road, and out of that road to Sligo, to Walter Beall's mill, and out of the first road to Rock Creek bridge, near Mr. Charles Jones'. —Dent Summers.
11. From John Lee's, on Sligo, to the road to Bladensburg, to the county line, and from said Lee's to the cross-roads below Thomas Crampin's, and from the Northwest, by Walter Beall's mill, on the direct road to church, to Sligo Branch.—John Watson.
12. From Muddy Branch to Seneca bridge, by Henry Crampin's plantation, and from the fork of the road over the bridge to Graff's mill.—Ninian Beall, Philip House.
13. From John Flechalls to John Wilcoxon's road.—Benjamin Gatten.
14. From the eastermost side of the branch, where the bridge is, near Charles Hays', to Seneca, and from Charles Hays' bridge to Wilcoxon's old road.—Benjamin Summers.
15. From Monocacy to the east side of the bridge near Charles Hays'. —Jeremiah Jacobs.
16. From Seneca bridge, near Lodwick Youst's, to the county line above Little Bennett's Creek, and to the ford on Seneca above Richard Watts'. —John Fryer.
17. From Joseph Wilson's quarter to the bridge on Seneca near Lodwick Youst's.—James Rut.
18. From the bridge on Rock Creek to the cross-roads that leads by Mrs. Carroll's, and from Thomas Williams' mill to the Watery Branch, near where Thomas Raley lived.—Thomas Nicholls, son of Thomas.
In 1778 the Levy Court, at the November term, appropriated £100 for the erection of a bridge over Seneca Creek near Ludwick Yost's tavern, the same amount for the building of a bridge over Rock Creek near the Chapel, and a similar sum for a bridge over the same creek near the plantation of Charles Jones. It must not be imagined, however, that the fine system of roads which now makes traveling a pleasure rather than a burden in this portion of Maryland was immediately established.

The first roads of which there is any record were:

The old Indian road from Washington to Frederick crossed Seneca ("Sinicair") Creek a few yards above the present county road crossing, and a road from Sandy Spring, a settlement commenced by James Brooke in 1726, which entered the highway from Frederick to Baltimore at Porter's tavern, a distance of eighteen miles. The first public roads mentioned in the county are the roads from Frederick to Georgetown, that from Georgetown to the mouth of the Monocacy, and the road from the mouth of Monocacy to Montgomery Court-house, in the act of Assembly of 1789 to straighten and amend the public roads in the several counties; and the road from the mouth of Watts' Branch to the same place, provided for in the loan granted to the several counties for road purposes by the act of Assembly of 1784.

The planters at that early period did not use wheeled vehicles, but attached a sapling to each end of a tobacco hogshead, and thus formed a pair of shafts, by which they hauled the hogshead for shipment to Europe, to Bladensburg, Georgetown, Elk Ridge, Sandy Springs, and Baltimore, and brought back their supplies of groceries and other necessaries on the backs of horses. Public highways were unknown. "Rolling roads," made by tobacco hogsheads which were rolled to the inspection warehouses, and bridge-paths, used by pack-horses, were the chief means of communication.

They even brought their annual supply of herring and shad, in this manner. Their clothing and bed-linen were chiefly woven from home-grown flax and wool. Their personal travel was done exclusively on horseback.

The turnpike from Rockville to Georgetown, the first paved road in the county, was originally charted in 1806, but was actually constructed under an amendatory act, containing the chief provisions of its present charter, passed 1817. The Union turnpike, leading from Washington to Brookville, was chartered in 1849. It has recently built several branch roads. The Washington, Colesville and Ashton turnpike road was chartered in 1870. The Conduit road, from Georgetown to the Great Falls of the Potomac, has just been completed. It follows the line of the Washington Aqueduct, and crosses Cabin John Branch on a bridge of a single arch of the longest span in the world. This aqueduct is also a Montgomery work, having its source and almost its entire line within the limits of the county, and its permissive right from the State of Maryland.

The Columbia road runs from Washington to Westminister through Brookville. The old Baltimore road runs through the county, commencing on the Monoceny near its mouth. The river road runs along the Potomac from Georgetown to White’s Ferry. The old Annapolis road runs from the Brookville turnpike near Mitchell’s Cross-roads to Annapolis.

In 1791 the grand jurors at the November court were

In 1800, at November court, the grand jurors were

Western Mail-Stage.—In 1819 the Frederick Town mail-stage started from Mr. John Davis', Washington City, on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, at two o’clock in the morning, calling at Mr. Tenison’s (the Washington Hotel), at Mr. Oneit’s (the Franklin House, in Washington City), at the stage-office (at the Union Tavern) in Georgetown, and breafasted at Mr. Campbell’s, at Rockville, and thence to Frederick Town, in time for the Western mail-stage. Returning, it left Mrs. Kimball’s (the old stand), Frederick, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 9 A.M., and arrived in Washington at an early hour those evenings. The fare through was four dollars. The passengers going by the above line were entitled to a preference for seats in the mail-stage from Frederick to Hagerstown, Pittsburg, or Wheeling.

The first railroad in operation in Maryland it is said was built in Montgomery County. The rails were laid and a line of road four or five miles in length constructed to facilitate the transportation of stone from the great “White Quarry,” at the foot of the Sugar-Loaf, for the building of an aqueduct by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company over the river Monoceny at its junction with the Potomac. Excavations for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad may have commenced before excavations for this little mountain road, but it is quite certain that here the first rails were laid, and here the first railroad in Maryland, and perhaps the first in the United States, was put in full operation. Iron rails were not used, but wooden, or “string-pieces,” as they were called, consisting of nothing more than trunks of trees, generally oak, cut from twelve to sixteen feet long, so as to allow the diameter at the smaller end to be not less than eight or ten inches. Along the whole length of these string-pieces a groove or triangular trough was cut with an adze from the circumference to the centre, taking out a fourth part of the wood, which left two flat surfaces, forming a right angle at the heart or centre of the log. The trackway was graded, and the log or string-piece put down with one of its flat surfaces parallel with the surface of the ground, and the other perpendicular to it. The perimeter of the car-wheel ran on the flat surface of the groove or trough, and the outside or outward edge of the perimeter moved along the perpendicular surfaces of the string-piece on each side of the track, preventing it from running off. The track was firmly ballasted on the inner and outer side with blast-rock. A smooth path was made between the string-pieces to accommodate two horses abreast. No cross-ties were used, the weight of the string-pieces and stone ballast was sufficient to bind the track together. When one flat surface of the rail or string-piece was worn and split by the pressure of the wheel, the other was substituted by turning the rails “end for end,” or from “side to side” of the track, and thus the road was repaired, until it became necessary to put in new string-pieces. The road was built up-hill and down, through a rough and mountainous country for the greater part of the way, very little grading being done. The cars consisted of plain wooden platforms only, supported by iron wheels and axles. One wheel or more on each car had cogs on the inside of the perimeter, into which an iron lever could play, so as to lock a wheel or two in going down-hill. The lever was held in the hands of the driver of the horses, and when the wheel or wheels were locked, the car, with its great load of hewn rock,would, to the relief of the horses, slide down the hill like a locked wagon on an earthen road. Snow was removed from the track by laborers with shovels. A car containing tools and provisions, with “gigger” cups and big jugs, was dispatched from each terminus of the road to clear off the snow, and when the two parties met on the road, doubleiggers were dealt out by the “grog boss,” and great hilarity presently followed, unless the laborers happened to be hostile, and then an attempt might be made to repeat the battle of the Boyne.

The road was kept in active operation until the
The officers of the company for 1854 were:

The charter called for its location "from Georgetown by the most eligible and central route through Montgomery County, crossing the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at a point not exceeding five miles from the Monocacy Viaduct, by the line of said railroad to Frederick City, in Frederick County, thence by the most convenient and practical route through Frederick and Washington Counties to Hagerstown."

Preliminary surveys were made of four lines, as follows, to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and city of Frederick:

Line No. 1.—The first line examined started from "Cox's Corner," in Georgetown, leaving the city on the west, crossing the head-waters of the small tributaries of the Potomac, and passing about three-quarters of a mile west of the village of Rockville; thence, taking a general course ranging a little to the west of the city of Frederick, it passed on the east side of the Sugar Loaf Mountain, descending Bennett's Creek, crossing the ridge between Bennett's Creek and the Monocacy River, and from the Monocacy River to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad near Rockeytown Station. From thence the line took a direct course to the western part of the city of Frederick.

Line No. 2. was surveyed by the party returning from Frederick to Georgetown, and commenced at the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at the point of crossing by the first line, and diverging westwardly from the first line, crossed the Monocacy River at a point about a mile north of the county line between Frederick and Montgomery Counties and west of the Sugar Loaf Mountain; thence to a point on the stream known as the "Long Dranght," about six miles northwest of Rockville, where it crossed the first line (No. 1) and kept to the east until it reunited with it about one mile west of Rockville.

Line No. 3. was surveyed from Georgetown to Frederick, commencing at a higher elevation in the town above "Cox's Corner," near the northwestern limits of the city, and taking a more easterly direction from the starting-point than No. 1, ascending the ridge dividing the tributaries of the Potomac from those of Rock Creek, passing on the east side of the village of Rockville to the head-waters of the tributaries of Seneca Creek, and keeping for a greater part of the distance on Rock Creek or the eastern slope of the ridge; curving to the east of the general course in passing the tributaries last mentioned, the line crosses the Seneca, and passes to the east of Charlesburg, Hyattstown, and Urbans, and strikes the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad on Bush Creek, about two miles southeast of the Monocacy Viaduct. Following mainly parallel with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to the Monocacy Station, it there crosses the main track of that road, and keeping on the west of the Frederick Branch, passes through the southern part of the city of Frederick to a point in common with the line first surveyed to that place.

Line No. 4. diverges to the west of No. 3 near Rockville, and passing about one-half mile east of Gaithersburg, crossing the...
Georgetown and Frederick turnpike and Seneca Creek near Middlebrook, and striking No. 1 on the Seneca Ridge, between Seneca Creek and Little Seneca; thence in common with No. 1 to Ten-Mile Creek, where it diverges westwardly, taking a route across Parr's Ridge at a low pass about a mile east of Barnesville, and uniting with line No. 2 on the ridge between the Monocacy River and Little Monocacy.

In addition to these lines numerous subordinate lines have been run at various points between Georgetown and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which are mainly as follows:

An improvement of No. 1, commencing at a lower elevation in Georgetown near Prospect Street, keeping more westwardly along the Potomac slope of the ridge, and uniting with No. 1 about five miles out of Georgetown.

An oblique cross line connecting No. 1 and No. 3 on the ridge between Georgetown and Rockville; it diverges eastwardly from the former at a point about seven and a half miles from Georgetown, and connects with the latter about three and a half miles south of Rockville.

A line diverging westwardly from No. 4 about a mile east of Gaithersburg, crossing the Georgetown and Frederick turnpike near Gaithersburg, and crossing the Seneca Creek about three-quarters of a mile above Clopper's mill, falls into line No. 4, on the Seneca Ridge.

A line diverging from line No. 4 on a spur of Parr's Ridge, between Ten-Mile Creek and Buck Lodge, and crossing Parr's Ridge by a considerable sweep to the east, descends along the head-waters of Little Monocacy in a westwardly direction, then turns northwardly and crosses the spur of the Sugar Loaf near its western base, thence crossing Bennett's Creek and the Monocacy River connects with line No. 1, about half a mile west of the latter stream.

A line commencing on the Rockville Ridge for the purpose of shortening the most eastwardly line (No. 3) where it passes around the head-waters of the tributaries of Seneca Creek, and running with that line on the Seneca Ridge, about one and one-half miles southeastwardly from Nealsville.

A line was also traced in the immediate valley of Rock Creek, commencing at the "Paper-mill bridge," and extending up the creek about three miles.

During the progress of the foregoing examinations a crest-line was run on Parr's Ridge, commencing near Clarksburg and terminating on the eastern bank of the Potomac River. Line No. 3, the middle line, was recommended as the most eligible route by the engineers, and the total expense of completing the road from Georgetown to Hagerstown was estimated at $3,465,000. The road was not built by this company owing to unforeseen difficulties, among which were the financial depression of 1857, and the civil war which ensued four years later. But by 1873 the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad had built and completed a branch from Washington to its main road at Washington Junction (Point of Rocks).

Richard Randolph located, as assistant engineer, the whole road, and was then transferred to the Virginia Valley Railroad. James A. Boyd had the first contract, which was for Section 11, Parr's Ridge, which is here two hundred and fifty feet lower than the Parr's Ridge on the main line; this was a deep cut three-fourths of a mile long, running from grade to thirty feet cut in one-fourth; then thirty feet for one-fourth of a mile; then running out in the next fourth of a mile. About the time this section was finished several of the next heaviest were put under-contract. James A. Boyd took Sections 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16. Henry Gantz, 17, 18, 19, and 20. E. D. Smith, Section 7, including the masonry of the bridge over Monocacy; the grade is ninety feet above low water over this stream, and there is a very heavy embankment on the west side. The greatest height is seventy feet, with a long rock cut on the east side, twenty to thirty feet deep for more than three-fourths of a mile. The iron superstructure for this Monocacy bridge was built by the company at their Mount Clare shops. It has three spans of two hundred feet each, and one of one hundred. This one-mile section cost, including graduations, masonry, and bridge superstructure, three hundred thousand dollars. Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, including the Calico Rocks, were built by the company's forces. Sections 5 and 6 by Bernard Riley, 8 and 33 by Peter McNamara, 9 by White and McArdle, 21 by Timothy Flaherty, 22 and 23 by B. R. Codwise, 24, 25, and 26 by Michael Buoy, 27 and 30 by Dennis Murphy, 28 and 29 by Timothy Cavan, 31, 32, and 33 by G. M. Watkins, 34 and 37 by Patrick McCabe, 35 by Alfred Ray, 36 and 39 by James Farward, 40 by Thomas A. Waters, and 41 and 42 by the company's force.

Not finding materials for bridges at the crossing of the Little Monocacy, Little and Big Seneca, these streams were crossed on trestles, constructed by the company's force. Little Monocacy and Big Seneca trestles are seventy feet high and Little Seneca one hundred and six. The intention is to replace these trestles, as they wear out, with permanent structures of stone and iron.

The maximum grade is fifty feet per mile, the minimum radius of curvature one thousand feet, and the elevation at Gaithersburg five hundred and sixteen feet above tide. The distance from Point of Rocks to Baltimore by the old line is sixty-nine miles, and from Point of Rocks to Baltimore via Washington, eighty miles.

All important passenger trains of the Baltimore and Ohio Company, including local and fast freight, pass over the Metropolitan Branch, affording unprecedented facilities to the people for personal travel and transportation of productions and supplies. There are twenty-eight stations on the road from Washington to Point of Rocks, or the Washington Junction, the intersection with the main stem, a distance of forty-two and a half miles, viz.:
METROPOLITAN BRANCH.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Stations</th>
<th>Miles</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Washington</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Metropolitan Junction</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Queen-town</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Terra Cotta</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stout's</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brightwood</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Springs</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lindsay</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Forest Glen</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roy's Quarry</td>
<td>94</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Knowles'</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Windham's</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Halpin</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rockville</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Derwood</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington Grove</td>
<td>282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Graftonburg</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Germans-town</td>
<td>261</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Seneca</td>
<td>285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boyd's</td>
<td>293</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnsville</td>
<td>351</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dickerson</td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tuscarara</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sugar Leaf</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington Junction</td>
<td>424</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Baltimore, Cincinnati and Western Maryland Railroad was chartered several years ago by the States of Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, and Maryland, and, if built, will pass diagonally through the county from near Brighton, via Brookville, Gaitersburg, Darnestown, and Dawsonville to the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, or mouth of Goose Creek, over a distance of thirty miles.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.—When the war of the Revolution had ended, and the people began to think how best they could perpetuate the independence which had been gained after a seven years' arduous struggle, there were none who felt the task before them more difficult than the men of Maryland. In this emergency, George Washington, who, patriotic to his country in war, had shown himself equally so to his native State in peace, and even during the perils and dangers of military life had become impressed with the importance of opening a route to the West, turned, after retiring to private life, with fresh enthusiasm to his cherished scheme of making the Potomac navigable from Fort Cumberland to the Great Falls at Georgetown. In 1774 he had procured the passage of a law from the Virginia Legislature empowering the opening of the Potomac so as to make it navigable from tide-water to Wells' Creek, and, although the Legislature of Maryland objected to a concurrence in the law, the project seemed to favor success, when the battle of Lexington turned the attention of the colonists elsewhere, and the call of Gen. Washington to the field caused a temporary suspension of the movement. But as soon as the need for his military services had ended, he entered into an extensive correspondence with prominent gentlemen in Maryland, in order to try and secure their co-operation. On the 29th of March, 1784, he wrote to Mr. Jefferson, stating that ten years before he had been struck with the importance of the subject, and added, "My opinion coincides perfectly with yours regarding the practicability of an easy and short communication between the waters of the Ohio and Potomac,—of the advantages of that communication, the preference it has over all others, and of the policy there would be in the State of Maryland to adopt and render it facile." His ideas, as frequently expressed, were that unless artificial communications were formed to draw the future trade of the vast region beyond the Alleganies to Atlantic ports, either Spain, which held the mouth of the Mississippi, or England, which possessed the St. Lawrence, would secure it; that these communications must be made through Maryland, Virginia, New York, or Pennsylvania, and that if the two former did nothing, the latter would step in and win the prize. In the fall of 1784 he made a journey West on horseback, traveling in all six hundred and eighty miles, crossing the mountains by Braddock's road through Allegany County, Md., and returning through the valleys of the Cheat and Shenandoah Rivers. Soon after his return, in October of the same year, he sent a letter to the Governor of Virginia, in which he dwelt fully on the practicability of the scheme which he had previously suggested, and, in fact, it may be said, sketched, with a bold and free hand, the original outline of nearly all the internal improvements which have since been adopted by these sister States. His object was to link together these distant States by the strong bonds of a common interest, and to this task he addressed himself, addressing a letter to a member of Congress of similar import that sent to the Governor of Virginia, and taking not only a commercial, but a national and political view of the subject.

The communication to the Governor of Virginia was submitted by him to the next Legislature of that State, and while it was being discussed by the members, Gen. Washington and the Marquis de Lafayette paid a visit to Richmond. Washington succeeded in the promise of the Legislature's support for the measure, and as the concurrence of Maryland was necessary, the Potomac being within her limits, he went to Annapolis, still with Lafayette, and laid his views before the Legislature there. A few days afterwards he wrote to Joseph Jones and James Madison, of the Virginia Legislature, recommending the appointment of deputies by the Legislatures of the two States to meet and agree upon a bill. The Virginia Legislature at once appointed Gen. Washington, Gen. Gates, and Col. Blackburn to go to Annapolis and confer with a similar committee from the Maryland Legislature, while the Maryland Legislature as soon as it went into session had the subject before it, and on Dec. 22, 1784, requested the Senate to appoint some of its members to join the gentlemen nominated by this House to meet and confer with the commissioners appointed by the State of Virginia. The Senate agreed to this, and appointed Thomas Stone, Samuel Hughes, and Charles Carroll of Carrollton to join John Cadwalader, Samuel Chase, John De Butts, George Diggles, Philip Key, Gustavus Scott, and Joseph Dashiell, appointed by the House to meet and confer with the Virginia commissioners.

Gen. Washington and Gen. Gates went to Annapolis (Col. Blackburn being prevented by indisposition), and on Dec. 22, 1784, a conference was held, with Gen. Washington, chairman, and R. B. Latimer, clerk. Provisions looking to the establishment of the Potomac Company were unanimously agreed to, and bills in conformity with them afterwards drawn up, adopted, and passed by the Legislatures of the two States, each State at the same time authorizing a subscription for fifty shares of the capital stock, which both of them subsequently increased.

Messrs. Cadwalader, Chase, De Butts, Diggles, Key, Scott, and Joseph Dashiell of the commissioners brought in the bill in accordance with the report of the convention, and Mr. Cadwalader delivered the bill to the speaker on the same day. By concurrent action of the two States the Potomac Company was then formed. The charter provided that the capital stock should consist of five hundred shares of one hundred pounds each, with power of enlargement if found necessary; that the navigation should be improved from tide-water to the highest practicable point on the North Branch or to Fort Cumberland, so as to permit the passage of boats drawing twelve inches of water; that the company should be authorized "to construct canals and erect such locks and perform such other work as they may judge necessary" for the purpose; that the work should be commenced in one year, and the improvements be completed from the Great Falls to Fort Cumberland in three years, and from the Great Falls to tide-water in two years, under the penalty of a forfeiture of charter.

Such was the public affection for Gen. Washington that within a few months nearly all of the capital stock was subscribed for. The company went into operation on May 17, 1785, Gen. Washington being its first president, and holding that position until he was called to the Presidency of the United States. Thomas Johnson and Thomas Sim Lee, the two first Governors of Maryland, were associated with him after the Declaration of Independence in the board of directors, and James Rumsey, who claimed to be the first discoverer of the practical application of steam to purposes of navigation, was general superintendent of the work. In the ensuing August operations were commenced, and no doubt those who prepared and helped to pass the acts of incorporation thought that three years and fifty thousand pounds sterling would be sufficient to complete the work on the proposed plan and within the specified limits. But when the three years had expired the work was only slightly advanced, and on application of the company acts were passed by the Legislatures of Maryland and Virginia in 1786 amending the charter and granting a further term of three years. In 1790 the term was again extended for three years, and so on from time to time until the year 1820, when the public became satisfied that the bed of the Potomac River could not by any expenditure at command be so improved as to answer the purposes intended.

When this decision had been arrived at the Board of Public Works of Virginia, in pursuance of a resolution of the General Assembly of Jan. 8, 1820, appointed Thomas Moore principal engineer, "to examine the waters of the Potomac above the upper line of the District of Columbia, and to explore the country between the Potomac and Ohio on the one side, and the Potomac and Rappahannock on the other, with a view to ascertain and report upon the practicability of effecting a communication by canal between the three rivers." Early in 1821 the States of Maryland and Virginia appointed a joint commission, consisting of Moses T. Hunter, William T. T. Mason, William Naylor, Athanasius Fenwick, and Elie Williams, "to examine the affairs of the Potomac Company, the state of navigation of the river Potomac, its susceptibility of improvement, and to make report whether the said company had complied with its charter granted by the two States, and its ability to comply within a reasonable time, and whether any, or what aid should be given to the company, and what would be the best means of effecting an improvement in the navigation of the said river." In July, 1822, assisted by Thomas Moore, civil engineer, of Virginia, they began their work, and in December following transmitted a report to the Governor of each of the States, by whom it was communicated to their respective Legislatures in January, 1823. The substance of it was that the Potomac Company had failed to comply with their charter; that they could not possibly effect the objects of their incorporation; that they had not only expended their capital and the tolls received, with the exception of a small dividend declared in 1822, but had incurred a heavy debt, which they could never discharge; that it would be imprudent and inexpedient to give them any further aid, and that the only alternative was to divest them of their charter and adopt some more effectual mode of improving the navigation of the river.

After reviewing the different kinds of improved inland navigation, the commissioners declared their preference for an independent canal, or still-water navigation, the cost of which from Little Falls to Fort Cumberland, a distance of one hundred and eighty-two miles, was estimated to be $1,578,954. Thomas Moore, civil engineer, of Virginia, having died before the survey was completed, Isaac Briggs, of Maryland, was appointed to fill his place. The commissioners recommended that Maryland and Virginia should each furnish one-half of the required sum, viz., $789,477, and proposed that the money, in the first instance, should be raised by the two States by loan for sixteen or twenty years. They expressed the opinion that the proposed canal, if constructed, would make Cumberland the entrepôt of the commerce of the West, and that nothing would be wanting to insure to the citizens of Baltimore the largest share of the advantages to accrue from it except a connection with that city by a lateral canal from the head of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, or Bladensburg, to the Patapasco at Elkridge, supposed, by the required route, to be about twenty-five miles; or if it should accord more with the wishes and interest of the Baltimoreans to connect with the canal at a higher point of the Potomac, they suggested that a survey be made to test the practicability of a branch from the foot of the Catoctin Mountain, or any point below it, to Baltimore. What had been more speculation in regard to the settlement and growth of the West in 1784 was in 1822 a substantial fact, and the importance of a convenient channel for trade and intercommunication had become obvious to all, and out of this general sentiment sprang the idea of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

The advocates of this means of communication between the tide-waters of the Potomac and the Ohio River entered into the enterprise early in 1823 with great zeal and energy, and in accordance with the feeling which had been started in favor of the new project, the Potomac Company, on the 3d of February of the same year, adopted a resolution signifying their willingness to surrender their charter to a new company, and, during the same winter, acts were passed by the Legislatures of Maryland and Virginia to incorporate a joint-stock association, entitled "The Potomac Canal Company." These acts, however, proved abortive, because they did not provide for the necessary co-operation of the United States, as sovereign of the District of Columbia, and also because of disagreement in some of their provisions. The people of Baltimore, especially, objected to the Potomac Canal, because, under the bill in question, it was to terminate, as at present, in Georgetown, and the privilege was virtually denied them of tapping it so as to connect it with a canal to Baltimore if they so desired, and besides, the State was asked to cede to the company all its right to the waters of the river, thus virtually preventing the future connection of the canal with the city of Baltimore.

In order to bring about united action in the next session of the Legislatures of the two States, meetings were held in various parts of the country, the first being at Leesburg, Loudon Co., Va., on Aug. 23, 1823. It was followed by others both in Maryland and Virginia, and on Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1823, a convention was held at Washington City, with delegates from Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia. Dr. Joseph Kent, of Prince George's County, a member of Congress, was chairman. The convention determined on the formation of a joint-stock company, with power to cut a canal from the tide-water of the Potomac, by way of Cumberland, to the mouth of Savage River, and ultimately to the navigable waters of the Monongahela or Ohio Rivers, also giving authority to the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania to make connections with it by lateral canals. Committees were also appointed to petition the Legislatures of these States and Congress for a concurrent act of incorporation and for assistance in constructing the works, the committee from Maryland consisting of Grafton Duvall, George Mason, of Charles, C. Thomas Kennedy, J. C. Herbert, and James Forrest. The name fixed upon was "The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company," and a resolution was also passed looking to the ultimate extension of the works to Lake Erie. A central committee, consisting of Charles Fenton Mercer, John Mason, Walter Jones, Thomas Swann, John McLean, Wm. H. Fitzhugh, H. L. Opie, Alfred H. Powell, P. C. Pendleton, A. Fenwick, John Lee, Frisky Tilghman, and Robert W. Bowie, was appointed to take charge of the whole subject and obtain the consent of the Potomac Company to the measure.

Memorials were accordingly sent to Congress and to the Legislatures of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania for an act of incorporation. In the mean time, however, a meeting was held in Baltimore on the 20th of December, 1823, to take into consideration "the expediency of promoting a connection between the Ohio and the Chesapeake at Baltimore by a canal through the District of Columbia," and also as to whether the citizens of Baltimore "preferred a canal to be made first to the Susquehanna River or to the Ohio." Gen. Robert Goodloe Harper made an exhaustive speech explaining his views "on the expediency of promoting a connection between the Ohio at.
Pittsburgh and the waters of the Chesapeake at Baltimore, by a canal through the District of Columbia."

The reason for this difference in opinion and sentiment on the part of Baltimore is obvious. Georgetown, Alexandria, and Washington feared the advantages which Baltimore would have through improved communication with the West. Baltimore at that time enjoyed all the trade of Pennsylvania between the Susquehanna and the mountains, as well as the whole downward trade of that river, and that of Frederick and Washington Counties in Maryland, thus enabling her to leave Georgetown and Alexandria far behind. These advantages, however, she feared would be overcome by the small towns on the Potomac, and therefore the majority of citizens at the meeting referred to preferred a canal to the Susquehanna to one from Cumberland to Georgetown. On account of this strong opposition, and because the act submitted did not provide sufficiently for the connection of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal with the city of Baltimore, the Maryland Assembly adjourned without passing the measure. On the 27th of January, 1824, the Virginia Legislature passed it, with amendments to remove the objections of Baltimore, and on Jan. 31, 1825, the Maryland Legislature confirmed it. On March 3, 1825, it was ratified by Congress, and on Feb. 9, 1826, by Pennsylvania.

On May 16, 1825, the Potomac Company surrendered their charter to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. By the amended charter the new company was authorized to construct a navigable canal of not less than forty feet at the surface, twenty-eight feet at the bottom, and not less than four feet deep from the tide-water of the Potomac in the District of Columbia to Cumberland, or the mouth of Savage Creek, and thence across the Alleghany Mountains to some convenient point of navigation on the waters of the Ohio or its tributary streams. The company was also empowered to connect the canal by a branch improvement from the town of Cumberland to the Savage River, with a view to the development of the coal-fields at that point. Two years was allowed from the organization of the company for the commencement of the work, and twelve years from the date of its commencement for the completion of the section from tide-water to Cumberland. The capital stock was to be six million dollars, in sixty thousand shares of one hundred dollars each, with power of future enlargement. At the November session of Congress in 1823, the subject was laid before it by President Monroe, and that body, on April 3, 1824, appropriated thirty thousand dollars for necessary surveys, plans, and estimates. In May following the President appointed

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sections</th>
<th>Distances</th>
<th>Ascent per Mile</th>
<th>Number of Locks</th>
<th>Amount of Est.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Eastern</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Middle</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>1010</td>
<td>1061</td>
<td>246</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Western</td>
<td>85</td>
<td>410</td>
<td>610</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The board divided the line into three sections,—eastern, middle, and western. The first began at Georgetown, running thence to the northern or Maryland side of the Potomac to Cumberland. The middle began at Cumberland and ended at the mouth of Cassieman's River on the Troughgrohny. The western extended from thence to Pittsburgh.

Gen. Bernard estimated that in the first six years after the opening of the canal the advantages to be derived from it by augmentations in the value of lands, revenue from customs, etc., would amount to $81,625,- 585. The estimated cost of the several sections took the public mind, however, by surprise, and the commissioners who had been appointed to open books for subscription to the capital stock felt it prudent to defer the matter. The central committee again summoned the Canal Convention which met on Dec. 5, 1826, in Washington City, and adopted a resolution that a committee be appointed to submit an estimate of the cost of the canal, founded upon the report of the United States Board of Internal Improvement of Oct. 23, 1826, to the War Department. The following were appointed as the committee: A. Stewart, C. F. Mercer, J. B. Alexander, Chauncey Forward, Josiah Malin, John McHenry, James Adams, John Hoye, J. Mason, O. H. Williams, B. S. Pigman, John McPherson, and John McLean. Three days afterwards they reported that the United States engineers had been betrayed into great errors in their estimates, and that the work could be constructed for about one-half the amount of the estimate. The convention ordered that the report be printed, but it was viewed with distrust by the great mass of the community, and on March 3, 1827, a memorial signed by thirty-two members of Congress was presented to John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, requesting that the estimates both of the United States Board of Internal Improvement and of the Canal Convention Committee be submitted to practical civil engineers to reconcile their apparent disagreement and verify their accuracy. The President accordingly appointed James Geddes and Nathan S. Roberts, and their report of the cost of a canal from the upper boundary of Georgetown to Cumberland was transmitted to Congress on March 10, 1828. They made the distance one hundred and eighty-six and three-fourths miles, and presented estimates of a canal of three different dimensions, passing over nearly the same ground indicated by the United States engineers. The general estimates were as follows: for a canal forty feet in width at the surface and four feet deep, $1,008,005.28; for one forty-eight feet surface and five feet deep,—the dimensions upon which Gen. Bernard's estimate was based,—$1,330,991.68; and for a canal enlarged where practicable to sixty feet, with a proportional breadth at bottom and five feet deep, $4,479,346.93. This report was generally received as correct, and as its results had in the mean time been sufficiently known to justify such a proceeding, the commissioners on Oct. 1, 1827, opened books for subscription to the capital stock, and on that and the following day a considerable amount was subscribed.

At December session, 1825, the State of Maryland had passed a law authorizing a subscription to the capital stock to the whole amount of stock owned by the State in the Potomac Company, and of the debts due the State from the company, and also of $500,000 payable in current money, on condition, as regarded the money subscription, that Congress should subscribe one million dollars to the capital stock of the eastern section and secure a connection with the city of Baltimore. The condition requiring the United States subscription to the "capital stock of the eastern section" was repealed by the Legislature in March, 1827. In March, 1828, the same body passed a supplement, authorizing the treasurer to make the subscription payable in five per cent. State certificates whenever the commissioners on the part of the State should certify that the sum of $2,500,000 had been subscribed to the capital stock. By act of May 24, 1828, Congress authorized a subscription of one million dollars, and on the same day authorized the cities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria to subscribe and pay for shares of stock in the company. The commissioners then called a general meeting of the stockholders in the city of Washington for the 20th of June, 1828. They reported at the meeting that there had been subscribed, payable in current money, the sum of $3,060,000, besides subscriptions to the amount of $190,149.77 in the stock of the Potomac Company. On the same day the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was formally organized by the election of the following board: President, Hon. Charles Fenton Mercer, then a member of Congress from Virginia; Directors, Joseph Kent, Phineas Janney, Walter Smith, Peter Lenox, Andrew Stewart, and Frederick May. The western terminus of the canal was to be at Pittsburgh. On the 23d of June the board entered on their duties, and on the 25th of the same month appointed Benjamin Wright chief engineer, adopting the route which had been surveyed by the United States engineers and by Geddes and Roberts as the line of the canal between Georgetown and Cumberland. The 4th of July, 1828, was fixed upon for the celebration of the commencement of the work, and on that day John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, dug the first spadeful of earth from the site marked out for the channel of the canal.

On Aug. 15, 1828, the Potomac Company surrendered its charter and property to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, and on Sept. 1, 1828, work on the canal was commenced, the capital subscribed at that time being $3,659,400. In September, 1828, the canal was ordered to be extended to the mouth of Rock Creek, in Georgetown, and thence to the mouth of the Tiber, in Washington City.

An important item in the history of the canal may now be mentioned, namely, the controversy between the company and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. In June, 1827, the railroad company surveyed a route for their road from Baltimore to Point of Rocks, and thence up the Potomac Valley, over the same ground which had been surveyed with a view to the location of the canal. The canal company accordingly united with the Potomac Company, which had not then formally surrendered its charter, and on June 10, 1828, prayed an injunction against the railroad company, which was granted. On the 23d of the same month the railroad company obtained an injunction against the Chesapeake and Ohio and Potomac Companies. The controversy continued until 1832, when the Court of Appeals of Maryland decided the question in favor of the canal company. In May, 1833, an arrangement was effected between the companies, the chief feature of which was that the canal company would so locate the canal at different points below Harper's Ferry as to afford a passage for the railroad. The railroad company agreed to pay to the canal company two hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars, and not continue their road farther than Harper's Ferry until the canal should be, by 1840, extended to Cumberland. The friends of both works now began to co-operate together in favor of the prosecution of the canal. In February, 1833, the State of Virginia authorized a subscription to the capital stock of the canal company of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and on March 14, 1834, the State of Maryland authorized an additional subscription of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, payable in five per cent. bonds of the State, and also a further subscription to the same amount in case Congress should subscribe one million dollars.

On Oct. 18, 1834, the citizens of Allegany County, Md., met in the court-house, Cumberland, to take steps leading to the further prosecution of the work. Wm. McMahon presided, with David Shriver and William Ridgely vice-presidents, and Thomas J. McKaig and James Smith secretaries. Resolutions were passed to hold a convention in the city of Baltimore on Dec. 8, 1834, to be composed of three or more delegates from Maryland, District of Columbia, and the several States taking an interest in the completion of the canal. The convention accordingly met, with George C. Washington, of Maryland, president; Elissa Whittlesey, of Ohio, Eliza Boyd, of Virginia, William A. Bradley, District of Columbia, and William Robinson, Jr., of Pennsylvania, vice-presidents; and John P. Kennedy and Joseph Shriver, of Maryland, secretaries. Among the delegates present were the following: Allegany County, David Shriver, John Hoge, M. C. Sprigg, S. P. Smith, M. N. Falls. Thomas J. McKaig, Joseph Shriver, James Smith, Thomas Perry, William Matthews, Robert Swan, Andrew Bruce, Alphens Beall, John J. Hoffman, Richard Beall, R. C. Hollyday; Washington County, Joseph Galby, Frisky Tlgman, O. H. Williams, Robert Wason, John Blackford, Joseph I. Merrick, William Price, Daniel Weisel, Joseph C. Hays, John Welty, Charles A. Warfield, Andrew Kershner, John R. Dale, Michael A. Finley, Joseph Weast, Abraham Barnes, Isaac Nesbit, John O. Wharton, Joseph Hollaman, Samuel M. Hitt, N. B. Robinson, Thomas Buchanan, Jr., Charles Wilson, William Holliday; Frederick County, Outerbridge Horsey, John Thomas, Richard Johnson, of William, John Cost, James Simmons, S. R. Waters, Roderick Dorsey, Plummer Ijams, Anthony Kimmell, John Kinser, Isaac Shriver, Washington Van Bibber, John McKalab, W. B. Gwynn, Isaac Bangher, John Stewart, Martin Eichelberger, William Todd, Jacob Poe, Brooke Baker, William Tyler, J. H. McElfresh, Thomas Carlton, George Bowus, John Sifford. The principal acts of the convention consisted in the appointment of a committee to report on the "probable revenue of the canal," and a committee to report "an estimate of the probable cost, and the time required for its completion," also, committees to memorialize Congress, the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, and the authorities and citizens of Baltimore, for the necessary means to finish the canal to Cumberland. The committee on cost reported that the completion of the works is expected to carry the total cost of the eastern section of the canal to the amount of very near $8,500,000, and on this "estimate" was predicated the Maryland loan of December session, 1834. In regard to the time required for the construction of the works to Cumberland, the committee felt assured that if the line of seventy-eight miles below Cumberland were placed under contract, eighteen months, or two years at most, would suffice.

On the 7th of March, 1835, the Maryland House of Delegates, by a vote of 44 to 30, passed a bill providing for $2,000,000, the amount represented as necessary to complete the canal to Cumberland. The citizens of Baltimore assembled in town-meeting on the 10th of the same month, and adopted resolutions expressive of the hope that the Legislature would approve and pass the bill. On March 18th it was taken up in the Senate, and passed by a vote of two to one, thus becoming a law. The sum of $2,000,000 was granted in the form of a loan to the company, the State reserving the power to convert it into capital stock, at any future period, if deemed expedient. To secure payment of the principal and interest a mortgage was required to be given to the State on the lands, water-rights, etc., and this mortgage was executed on April 23, 1835. This loan caused an exultation among the friends of the canal corresponding with the importance that was attached to it, and in the spring of 1835 the engineers were directed to locate and make an estimate of the unfinished line to Cumberland, and on Jan. 6, 1836, C. B. Fisk and Messrs. Gruger and Porell, who had been detailed for the purpose, reported that the aggregate cost would amount to $8,560,619.

On Jan. 30, 1836, a memorial was presented by the president and directors of the canal to the Maryland House of Delegates soliciting additional aid, showing that the deficiency of means to complete the canal amounted to $2,961,402. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements. On March 8th the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means made a report, in which the completion of the canal to Cumberland was strongly recommended, and also offered a bill to carry his views into effect. It was taken up on the 29th of the month, and referred to the next General Assembly by a vote of 35 to 34, or, in other words, rejected. Two days afterwards a communication was presented by citizens of Baltimore, inclosing resolutions which had been passed at a mass-meeting that the prosperity of Baltimore and the advancement of the State depended mainly on the success of the measure. A select committee of five members, to whom the resolutions were referred, reported a bill similar to that which had been rejected, but before finally acting on the measure the Legislature adjourned, after appointing a joint committee of five, with instructions to investigate the subject and report by bill or otherwise after the recess.

On Monday, May 2d, an internal improvement convention was held in Baltimore, at which delegates were reported from Baltimore City and County, and from Frederick, Washington, Allegany, Anne Arundel, Montgomery, Prince George's, Charles, St. Mary's, Harford, Queen Anne's, Kent, and Worcester Counties. Resolutions were passed declaring that it was the duty of the State to supply the means for the speedy completion of the canal to Cumberland, and a committee was appointed to present them to the Legislature.

On May 20th the General Assembly of Maryland reassembled, and on May 25th the majority of the joint committee of both houses, to whom the subject of internal improvement had been committed, reported, urging the propriety of making no further appropriation to the canal company until the practicability of an eligible connection, by canal, with Baltimore, so as to give the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal an eastern terminus within the State of Maryland, had been ascertained. At this period the company had received but one-half of the $2,000,000 loan, only $1,211,000 of which had been disbursed for the construction of work done subsequent to the date of the act under which the loan was made, two-thirds of the residue having been applied to the payment of debts of the company, and to repairing the finished portion of the canal. The minority of the joint committee offered as a substitute for the majority report a bill embodying the views of the convention of May 2d, which was passed by the House on June 3d by a vote of 48 to 29, and on the following day was assented to by the Senate by a vote of 11 to 2. This was the law known as the $8,000,000, and it authorized subscriptions to the capital stock of the canal company to the amount of $3,000,000.

By the acceptance of the act the company was required to release the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company from the restriction which arrested it at Harper's Ferry, and allow the railroad to be constructed pari passu with, but without preceding, the canal along the valley of the Potomac. By the act $500,000 were subscribed to the Maryland Canal Company, but the subscription to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was not to be made until the Maryland Canal Company had certified that a sufficient amount had been subscribed to their stock to justify the commencement of the construction of their canal and to insure its completion by the most northern practicable route.

The citizens of Baltimore exhibited unusual manifestations of gratification at the success of the measure, but the act was not welcomed with the same satisfaction by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. The chief objections rested on the provision which required the Maryland Canal Company to construct their canal by the most northern practicable route, and exception was also taken to the clauses relating to the future construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The subject was referred by the stockholders to a committee, who, on July 28, 1836, reported that it would be premature in the company to accept the act until the Maryland Canal Company had determined upon their route and an understanding had been effected with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

The commissioners appointed to carry into effect the charter of the Maryland Company met in Baltimore, April 3, 1836, and adopted, for their canal, the route surveyed by Dr. Howard. By the 12th of May they had received subscriptions for 16,105 shares of $100 each, more than half the amount considered necessary for the construction of the work, and on May 18th the company duly organized by the election of a president and directors. George W. Hughes and Charles B. Fisk, engineers, who had been appointed to conduct a survey, made a joint report on July 26th, in which they came to the conclusion that the most northern practicable route from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to Baltimore was on or near the location traced by Dr. Howard in 1827, through the District of Columbia. The Maryland Canal Company adopted the route, and soon afterwards it was reported that 33,000 shares, amounting to $3,300,000, the full amount required, had been subscribed.

The stockholders of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company met again on July 25th, and received the ascent of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to certain propositions which had been made to them by the canal company in regard to an explanation or modification of the provisions of compromise. They also gave their consent to the several provisions of the Maryland act of December, 1835, declaring, however, that their acceptance of the act should not be final, until the Maryland Canal Company had entered into an agreement to connect their canal with the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal at a suitable point in Georgetown, and within three months give the required certificate in reference to the means for the commencement and completion of their work. These stipulations were at once satisfactorily arranged, and on August 1st the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company formally communicated their acceptance of the act to the Governor of the State, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company having done so on July 26th. On September 9th the Maryland Canal Company certified that a sufficient amount of capital stock had been subscribed to justify the commencement of the construction of their work, and on September 21st the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company executed an instrument guaranteeing to the State, after the expiration of three years, a dividend of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually out of the net profits of the canal and works, on the amount authorized to be subscribed to its capital stock, and the treasurer of the State accordingly made the subscription of $3,000,000 to the capital stock of the company.

The act of 1835 authorized the city of Baltimore to subscribe to the capital stock of both the Maryland Canal Company and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. In regard to the first company the power was not availed of, but on Sept. 27, 1836, the city subscribed $3,000,000 to the capital stock of the railroad, with a proviso that the whole sum should be applied exclusively to the prosecution of the work from Harper's Ferry westward. The railroad recommenced operations, and adopting a route through Virginia, gave a wide berth to the canal and pushed forward their road to Cumberland, which they reached in November, 1842.

It may be of interest here to give a short summary of the movements which now took place in regard to the contemplated work of the Maryland Canal. After July, 1836, Messrs. Fisk and Hughes made a more minute survey, and on March 3, 1837, submitted a final report declaring the Westminster, Linganore, and Seneca routes impracticable, and declaring the most northern practicable route for an extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to Baltimore to be from Georgetown.

In September, 1836, Isaac Trimble was appointed by the city of Baltimore to examine localities and determine upon the practicability of a cross-cut canal within this State. In March, 1837, he made a report, in which he expressed the opinion that the Seneca route was practicable, the cost being estimated at $6,324,300. At the session of the Legislature in December, 1837, memorials were presented praying that the Maryland Canal Company be required to construct their works by way of Seneca and Patuxent Rivers, and the Committee on Internal Improvements were directed to inquire into the surveys that had been made. Messrs. Fisk, Hughes, and Trimble appeared before the committee and gave testimony. On the 8th of March, 1838, the Legislature by joint resolutions declared that the Maryland Canal Company were entitled to no subscriptions on the part of the State unless they would agree to locate their canal by the most northern practicable route of the routes by the valleys of the Monocacy and Patapsco, or by a route diverging from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, at the mouth of Seneca River, and authorized the Governor to direct a further survey of these routes to be made. In April following the Secretary of War granted the services of Col. J. J. Abert to make the necessary examinations. The conclusions of his report were that the Westminster, Linganore, and Seneca routes were each impracticable, but that there was a route, which he called the "Brookville route," connecting, on the one side, with the Seneca, at the mouth of Whetstone Brauch, and on the other with the Patuxent, at the mouth of Hawlings' River, which was "practicable with due supply of water." He next proceeded to make an estimate of cost, and in February, 1839, reported that the length of the route was seventy miles, but that the estimate had only been made for twenty-one and three-fourths miles, this portion being computed to cost in round numbers $11,670,000, or more than five hundred thousand dollars per mile. He was then informed that it was unnecessary to proceed any further.

The subsequent proceedings which took place in carrying into effect the provisions of the act of 1835, ch. 395, may now be taken up. On the acceptance of the act by the canal and railroad companies the Governor and Council were authorized to appoint three commissioners to go to Europe and dispose of the stock of the State, out of the proceeds of which the subscriptions to the capital stock of the companies were to be paid. Six months after the passage of the act the commissioners were appointed, and in the spring of 1837 they departed on their mission. Owing, however, to the financial crisis, which was then somewhat advanced, it was found impracticable for them to dispose of the stock at the premium required by the act. The subject was brought before the Legislature in December, 1837, and that body passed resolutions to the effect, as regarded the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, that the company should receive certificates of stock to the amount of $2,500,000, at the par value thereof, upon giving to the State treasurer a receipt in full payment of the $3,000,000 subscribed to the capital stock of the company under the act of 1835, and that the residue of the certificates, five hundred thousand dollars, should be retained by the treasurer as security for payment of the premium.
These resolutions were acted upon, and the certificates issued to the company in April, 1838. The payment was not, however, made in current money, but in State securities, and the company transmitted $1,500,000 to its London agent with authority to sell, or failing in this to negotiate a loan. Another portion of the stock was advertised for sale in this country. But the precious metals had become scarce, and as the price of stocks necessarily fell, no offers were made here.
In London, the objection to the securities was the form in which they were issued and the rate of interest that they bore, and the agent then advised a change of the six per cent. certificates into five per cent. sterling coupon bonds. The company, however, thought that public opinion would not sanction them in selling at a price far below that which they had contracted to pay the State, and so they determined to borrow money upon a hypothecation of the certificates of stock, and apply to the next Legislature for authority to change the form of the securities into an equivalent amount of five per cent. sterling bonds. The agent in London obtained large loans upon a hypothecation of the stock, in most instances at $87.50 on the $100. The contractors on the work, which was being pressed forward, were sustained by money borrowed from banks and the scrip or promissory notes of the company. The money received from the loans in England and the United States was applied to redemption of scrip, payment of arrears to contractors, regular estimates for work on the canal, and interest on the $2,000,000 loan from the State. Before the close of the year 1838 about four-fifths of the whole amount of certificates of stock delivered to the company by the State had been hypothecated.
At the December session, 1838, both the canal and railroad companies made application to the Legislature for authority to change the six per cent. certificates into five per cent. sterling bonds. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company also asked further aid from the State, and submitted a "revised estimate" of the work yet required to be executed to finish the canal to Cumberland. The amount remaining to be done on Jan. 1, 1839, was, in round numbers, $3,450,000.
In April, 1839, the $71 miles between dam No. 5 and dam No. 6, at the Great Cacapon, were completed and navigation opened to the latter point, which continued to be the western terminus of the canal until its final completion to Cumberland in 1850. After the presentation of the memorials a committee was appointed to investigate the affairs of the company. They recommendated that a proposition be made to Congress either for the general government to aid the company, or transfer to this State the interest of the United States in its capital stock, on condition that Maryland would provide the necessary means to finish the canal to Cumberland.
On April 5, 1839, an act was passed releasing the company from the twenty per cent. premium stipulated to be paid by it, and authorizing the commissioner of loans to issue to the company five per cent.
stirling bonds to the amount of $3,200,000, as an equivalent for and in lieu of the $4,000,000 of six per cents. The company was required to redeem the six per cents, by a substitution of five per cents, where the former had been hypothecated, and return the whole amount to the State to be canceled. It was also required to pay the interest on the bonds for three years and execute a mortgage to the State to secure payment. Another act authorized an additional subscription to the capital stock of the company of $1,375,000, payable in five per cent. sterling bonds. These acts were promptly accepted by the company and their provisions complied with. On June 1, 1839, the means of the company, over and above its liabilities, were $2,087,139.94, and the cost of the work remaining to be done at that date was $2,935,103. On Nov. 9, 1839, the president of the company notified the Governor of Maryland that the board could not command the means to pay the interest on the bonds and at the same time comply with its other indispensable engagements. The company made a formal application to the next Legislature, which commenced in December, 1839, for further aid from the State, showing that the amount necessary to complete the fifty miles between dam No. 6 and Cumberland was $2,410,222. Two modes of relief were discussed by the Legislature,—one of them that the State bonds to be issued should be disposed of at par for money and the proceeds paid over to the company, the other that the bonds should be delivered to the company to be sold by them at par for money, or exchanged at their normal value for the evidences of debt of the company. Each, however, had its adva-cates, and between the two contending parties the whole measure fell to the ground, and the Legislature adjourned without making any appropriations.
The chief engineer represented to the company at this juncture that the losses likely to result from a total suspension of the works would amount to $1,000,000,
Contractors and merchants residing contiguous to the canal solicited a continuation of the works and an issue of scrip of the company. The company concluded to let the works proceed, and during the year 1840, and from January to April, 1841, issued scrip amounting to $555,400, without any pledge to sustain it.

At the session of the Legislature, December, 1840, another appropriation for aid was again asked for by the company. The sum of money still required to finish the canal to Cumberland was $1,825,892, and in addition it was said that, estimating the State bonds unsold at eighty per cent., the company would need $700,000, exclusive of the interest to the State, to redeem the scrip and pay arrears to contractors. The Legislature again adjourned without adopting any measure of relief.

The company now began to contract its operations on the canal and pay off the old loans by a sale of the five per cent. sterling bonds. The company transmitted a large number of these bonds to their London agent for sale, and bills of exchange were drawn upon him. The agent made considerable sales at a large discount, but failing to dispose of bonds sufficient to meet the drafts as they fell due, he pledged them at reduced rates. The company again began a hypothecation of the bonds in this country, and soon came a series of forced sales, exhaustion of appropriations, public complaints, private reproaches, and, finally, absolute discredit.

In March, 1841, an application was again made to the Legislature for further assistance, and an act was passed for an additional loan of $2,000,000, payable in the six per cent. stock or bonds of the State. The act, however, required the several companies of Allegany County to construct a railroad from the mines to the canal, and complete the same simultaneously with its completion to Cumberland, and also to guarantee payment to the company of at least $200,000 per annum for the transportation of their own coal on the canal. The securities offered by the coal and iron companies were, however, not deemed sufficient by the State treasurer, and the act proved abortive, and was subsequently repealed by the Legislature. At December session, 1841, another application for relief was made to the Legislature, but without success, and immediately after the adjournment of that body the contractors stopped work, and the prosecution of the work was not again resumed until after the passage of the act of March 10, 1845.

At the December session, 1842, the General Assembly of Maryland passed a law authorizing the State treasurer to sell its interests in the various companies which the State had sustained by its aid. He was authorized to sell the whole interest of the State in the canal, at that time amounting to $8,000,000, for $5,000,000, payable in State bonds bearing five per cent. interest, the company to secure to its creditors payment of their claims within twenty years from the date of transfer, with annual interest at six per cent. Advertisements of the sale were published in the leading cities of this country and Europe, but no bids were received, and the act became a dead letter.

In August, 1843, the company had reached its lowest point of depression. In addition to its liabilities to the State, its debts and obligations due to individuals amounted to $1,174,566,31, and some of its creditors had been reduced from affluence to absolute poverty. Eighteen and three-tenths miles of work had to be done to complete the canal to Cumberland, the cost of which was estimated at $1,545,000. In consequence of heavy breaches in the canal, produced by the great freshets of April and September, 1843, the deficit at the close of that year was unusually large. The whole revenues of the year amounted only to $47,625.51, and the current expenses to $83,792.80, showing an excess of expenses over income of $36,157.29.

In January, 1844, the company succeeded in rescuing from assumed forfeiture £15,500 of the sterling bonds which had been hypothecated in England in 1839, and a small amount of coupons overdue, which enabled it to discharge to a considerable extent debts for current expenses and put the canal in better order. An arrangement was also concluded with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, by which that company agreed to fix the charge for the transportation of coal at two cents per ton per mile from Cumberland to dam No. 6, there to be transferred to the canal. By this arrangement the tolls of the company for the year 1844 exceeded $50,000; but the agreement was, however, abandoned by the railway company in May, 1845.

A memorial was presented to the State Legislature at the December session, 1843, suggesting the waiver by that body of the State liens on the revenues of the canal, so as to empower the company to issue its bonds, with preferred liens on its revenues, to an amount not exceeding $2,000,000. The Legislature was, however, not prepared to adopt the measure, but at the December session, 1844, the application was renewed. Although the opposition to it was influential, there were members in the House of Delegates who fully appreciated the deep importance of the completion of the canal, and after a long and arduous struggle the act waiving the liens of the State was passed. It authorized the president and board of directors to borrow, or raise on the bonds of the company, secured by a pledge of revenues and tolls hereafter to accrue, such sums of money as would be required to pay for the completion of the canal to Cumberland, and also to pay the interest on the bonds issued under the act in aid of the net revenues until they became sufficient for the purpose, with a proviso that the whole amount of bonds issued should not exceed $1,700,000. The interest on the bonds, at the rate of six per cent, per annum, was to be made payable semi-annually, and the principal in not less than thirty-five years. So soon as the revenues should be more than sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds and on the certificates of debt issued to the creditors of the Potomac Company, which was not to exceed five thousand dollars per year, the company was to pay to the State treasurer out of the surplus net revenues such sum, not exceeding an average of twenty-five thousand dollars a year, dating from the 1st of January next after the completion of the canal to Cumberland, as might be necessary to constitute an adequate sinking fund, the treasurer to invest and accumulate the same until a sufficient amount should be obtained to pay the principal of the bonds that might be issued, which he was directed to pay at maturity. The act was, however, not to take effect until one or more of the companies of Allegany County should guarantee to the canal company an aggregate transportation on the entire length of the canal of not less than an average of one hundred and ninety-five thousand tons of tonnage per year for five years, dating from the end of six months after the canal had been completed to Cumberland.

In the charter of the canal company, prior to 1844, there was no express power given to it to borrow money for the construction or completion of the canal. Besides this, the time limited by the charter for its completion to Cumberland had expired in 1840, and no steps had been taken to procure amendments on these points. The president and board of directors, therefore, believing that the measure suggested by the company for the completion of the work would, sooner or later, prevail, memorialized the Legislature of Virginia at the session of 1843 for the passage of an act providing for the amendments indicated, and also enlarging the powers of the company in regard to extending the canal by a slack-water improvement to the mouth of Savage River. The Legislature of Virginia passed the bill on Jan. 29, 1844, providing for an extension of the time for completing the canal to Cumberland to Jan. 1, 1855, and conferring authority on the president and directors of the company to borrow money, issue bonds, and pledge the property and revenues of the company for payment of the same, with a proviso waiving the prior rights and liens of the State of Maryland under the mortgages which had been executed to it by the company. The act of the Maryland Legislature was given to this act on Feb. 8, 1844, and it was confirmed by Congress, and approved by the President of the United States on Feb. 7, 1845.

At a general meeting of the stockholders of the company, held at Frederick on April 29, 1845, the act of the General Assembly of Maryland was accepted, and a mortgage executed to the State bearing date Feb. 18, 1846. The amendments to the charter, which have been described, were finally ratified by Congress, about one month before the passage of the act waiving the liens for the completion of the canal. On the 1st of December, 1842, the chief engineer estimated the amount required to complete the canal to Cumberland at $1,545,000, and another estimate in August, 1845, placing the amount at $1,404,471. By persevering exertions the full amount of guarantee required by the act was obtained from the incorporated companies of Allegany County, and the instruments of guarantee received the approval of the Governor and the Maryland State agents on July 29, 1845.

The act of 1844 did not place any money at the disposal of the company, but merely authorized the president and directors to issue the company's bonds, upon a pledge of its disencumbered revenues, to an amount not exceeding $1,700,000. Owing to the general depreciation of American securities, a sale of the bonds at par was unattainable, and resort was had to a contract payable in the bonds. On Sept. 25, 1845, the president and board of directors concluded an agreement in which, for the consideration of $1,025,000 of the bonds to be issued under the act of 1844, the contractors bound themselves within two years to finish the canal to Cumberland, to pay to a trustee, for the use of the company, in twenty-one monthly installments, one hundred thousand dollars in money, to enable the board to liquidate land claims and incidental expenses, and to pay the interest on the bonds to be issued until the work had been finished. Soon after the date of the contract the contractors began work between dam No. 6 and Cumberland, and prosecuted it until June, 1846, when, their private means being exhausted, and the Legislature having adjourned without passing an act to restore the credit of the State, they suspended operations.

One of the contractors now went to England and succeeded in arranging for a negotiation there, predicated upon the resumption of payment by Maryland. On March 8, 1847, the Legislature of Maryland passed a law for funding the arrears and paying the interest accruing on the State debt after October 1, 1847. The Legislature of Virginia passed an act on March 8, 1847, authorizing a guarantee of the bonds to the amount of three hundred thousand dollars, and the district cities and certain citizens of Alexandria subscribed on similar terms for one hundred thousand dollars of the bonds at their par value. The London parties, however, withdrew from their negotiations, on the ground that a change had taken place in the money market, and the prospects of the company were at this period discouraging. During the years 1846 and 1847 considerable damage was done to the canal by a series of freshets, particularly on the lower division, and the increased expense of mending the breaches thereby occasioned was exceedingly embarrassing.

On Oct. 13, 1847, the contractors, through the medium of three distinguished gentlemen of the North, succeeded in concluding a negotiation, by which, assuming that $600,000 of the bonds had been disposed of at par, they agreed to sell to certain parties in Boston, New York, and Washington City, at the rate of sixty cents on the dollar, $833,333 of the bonds they were to receive from the company at par, leaving still a margin of $191,667 of the bonds as a reserve fund. The Maryland State agents and the president and board of directors accordingly consented to issue and pay out the bonds as the work proceeded.

Two of the original contractors withdrew from the copartnership after the execution of the contract for the completion of the canal, and Thomas G. Harris, of Washington County, Md., became associated with the remaining two, who were James Hunter, of Virginia, and William B. Thompson, of the District of Columbia, the three forming a firm under the name of Hunter, Harris & Co. In 1847 operations were resumed, and prosecuted under their management until March 11, 1850, when they were suspended in consequence of the pecuniary difficulties of the contractors. The suspension, however, only lasted a few days, the firm making an assignment of their interest in the contract for the benefit of their creditors. The work was again started, and continued until the middle of July, 1850, when the assignees abandoned it from inability to complete the canal with the remaining means that were applicable to the purpose.

On July 15th of the same year the president and board of directors entered into a new contract with Michael Byrne, of Frederick County, for the final completion of the canal. Mr. Byrne commenced the work promptly, and on Oct. 10, 1850, the canal was opened for the purpose of navigation throughout the entire line to Cumberland, and the through trade then commenced. He, however, still continued to press forward the work, which was then of an external character, and on Feb. 17, 1851, the final payment was made to him under his contract. From that period may be dated the completion of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to Cumberland.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, between Georgetown and Cumberland, lies on the north or Maryland side of the river, and follows the valley of the Potomac throughout its entire length, except at Paw-Paw Bend, twenty-seven miles below Cumberland, where it passes through the mountain by a tunnel 3118 feet in length. From the Rock Creek basin in Georgetown to the basin at Cumberland is 18419 miles, and the total rise from the level of mid-tide at Georgetown to the Cumberland basin is 609.4 feet. This ascent is overcome by 74 lift-locks and a tide-lock that connects Rock Creek basin with the Potomac. At the mouth of the Tiber in Washington City, is another tide-lock which connects it with the Potomac River. The canal is constructed for a depth of six feet throughout. From Georgetown to Harper’s Ferry it is sixty feet wide at the surface and forty-two feet at the bottom. From Harper’s Ferry to dam No. 5, forty-seven miles, the width at the surface is fifty feet, and at the bottom thirty-two feet; and from dam No. 5 to Cumberland, seventy-seven and a half miles, the surface width is fifty-four feet, and the bottom thirty feet. The average lift of the locks is a little over eight feet. The locks are one hundred feet long and fifteen feet wide in the clear, and are capable of passing boats carrying one hundred and twenty tons (two thousand two hundred and forty pounds).

The cost of the canal from the mouth of the Tiber, in Washington City, to the city of Cumberland, a distance of 185.4 miles, for construction, engineer expenses, lands, and other contingencies, amounted in the aggregate to the sum of $11,071,176.21, or $59,618.61 per mile.

On Thursday, Oct. 10, 1850, the opening of the canal for continuous navigation from Alexandria to Cumberland was commemorated at the latter place with imposing ceremonies. Among those who arrived in Cumberland to take part in the celebration were Gen. James M. Coale, president, and Messrs. John Pickall, William C. Johnson, William A. Bradley, George Schley, S. P. Smith, directors of the canal company; ex-Governor Sprigg, Gen. Tench Tilghman, and J. Van Lear, State agents; Hon. William D. Merrick, formerly United States senator from Maryland; John L. Skinner, editor of The Plow, the Loom, and the Anvil; Henry Addison, mayor of Georgetown, and a number of gentlemen from various parts of Maryland and Virginia. On the morning of the celebration a procession was formed which marched through the streets to the canal-locks, and when everything had been arranged five canal-boats, laden with the product of the mines of Allegany County and destined for Eastern markets, passed through the locks. Mr. William Price then delivered an address, to which Gen. James M. Coale, president of the canal company, made a reply. The company then embarked on the canal-packet "Jenny Lind" and the canal-boat "C. B. Fisk," and proceeded down the canal, followed by the Eckhart Light Artillery, the coal-boats "Southampton," "Elizabeth," "Ohio," and "Delaware," belonging to the Merchants' Line of Messrs. McKaig & Agnew, and the "Freeman Rawdon," belonging to the Cumberland Line of Mr. Ward, bringing up the rear. The company disembarked at a large spring ten miles east of Cumberland, and then returned on board and partook of a collation prepared by a committee of the canal company,—Messrs. S. P. Smith, W. A. Bradley, and John Pickall. On their return to Cumberland they were entertained by the citizens at Barnum's Hotel, J. A. Hefelfinger, proprietor, and after the cloth had been removed, Hon. William Cost Johnson, the tried friend of the canal, and who, as chairman of the Committee of Internal Improvement of the House of Delegates, at December session, 1844, reported the act under which it was completed, rose and offered the following toast: "The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad: the former has happily reached its ebony harvest amid the coal-fields of the Alleghenies; may the latter journey vigorously on, westward, until it rejoices amid the golden plains of the far Californias."

A List of the Presidents, Directors, and Chief Officers of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company from its organization in June, 1828, to its completion on Feb. 27, 1851.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Period of Service</th>
<th>From</th>
<th>To</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Presidents</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andrew Stewart</td>
<td>June 21, 1828</td>
<td>June 6, 1832</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederic May</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; 11, 1831</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Price</td>
<td>June 11, 1831</td>
<td>&quot; 27, 1834</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John J. Albert</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Dec. 21, 1839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Gunton</td>
<td>June 6, 1833</td>
<td>&quot; June 5, 1839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard H. Henderson</td>
<td>June 27, 1834</td>
<td>April 29, 1855</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Bender</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 26, 1836</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. St. Clare Clarke</td>
<td>&quot; 13, 1835</td>
<td>&quot; July 16, 1838</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Carbery</td>
<td>&quot; 22, 1836</td>
<td>&quot; July 16, 1838</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Hoye</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 2, 1839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Perry</td>
<td>June 5, 1839</td>
<td>&quot; Dec. 21, 1839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Carrold</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 2, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jacob G. Davies</td>
<td>Dec. 21, 1840</td>
<td>April 21, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph White</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 2, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert P. DeLop</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Dec. 21, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington Fisk</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 2, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John W. Manly</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederic A. Schley</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; April 2, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Swan</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 2, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John McPherson</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Lucas</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; April 2, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Tyler</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jacob Moger</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; April 2, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frishy Tichman</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 22, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John R. Iittal</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 2, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John O. Wharton</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Aug. 5, 1843</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Barkhart</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Aug. 5, 1843</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James M. Coale</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 23, 1845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John P. Ingle</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 6, 1845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Price</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 24, 1847</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Durie</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Aug. 17, 1843</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert B. Bowie</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; June 24, 1847</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William A. Bradley</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Aug. 17, 1843</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Dargenfield</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 23, 1845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Will. Cost Johnson</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 6, 1845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Pickell</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Schley</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; July 9, 1845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel S. Smith</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Dec. 29, 1846</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chief Engineers</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Benjamin Wright</td>
<td>June 23, 1828</td>
<td>Nov. 13, 1829</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Morris</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>&quot; Sept. 26, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles B. Fisk</td>
<td>April 13, 1841</td>
<td>April 13, 1841</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Clocks</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ass. Rogers</td>
<td>June 28, 1828</td>
<td>Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John P. Ingle</td>
<td>July 5, 1828</td>
<td>Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Sawyer</td>
<td>&quot; 8, 1843</td>
<td>Declined</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Watter S. Ruggold</td>
<td>Dec. 20, 1846</td>
<td>Declined</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Treasurers</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Clement Smith</td>
<td>July 5, 1828</td>
<td>July 7, 1854</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Barnard</td>
<td>&quot; 18, 1834</td>
<td>Nov. 14, 1840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel Tyler</td>
<td>Nov. 11, 1840</td>
<td>April 13, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Barnard</td>
<td>April 14, 1841</td>
<td>June 4, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. C. Cranmer</td>
<td>April 14, 1841</td>
<td>June 4, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ezra Bonck</td>
<td>Aug. 6, 1841</td>
<td>Aug. 6, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph Schell</td>
<td>Sept. 16, 1841</td>
<td>Sept. 15, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Barnard</td>
<td>Dec. 22, 1841</td>
<td>Dec. 22, 1841</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philibon Chew</td>
<td>Feb. 13, 1846</td>
<td>Feb. 13, 1846</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lawrence J. Brungen</td>
<td>April 15, 1846</td>
<td>April 14, 1846</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The present president of the canal is Hon. Arthur Pue Gorman, one of the most distinguished of the living public men of Maryland, whose rare ability has placed him in the United States senate at the early age of forty-one. Mr. Gorman's rapid advancement has been the result of conspicuous talents, calm judgment, and keen appreciation of the opportunities of life. He was born in Woodstock, Howard Co., Md, HISTORICAL NOTES.

on the 11th of March, 1839. His ancestors were descended from Presbyterian stock of the North of Ireland. John Gorman, his grandfather, came to the United States in 1784, and settled in Harrisburg, Pa. For a number of years he was engaged in cattle-trading between Harrisburg and Baltimore, and was attracted by the thriving prospects of the latter city, to which he finally removed and settled in "Old Town." Here was born Peter Gorman, the father of the senator, a sturdy, self-reliant, clear-headed man, with all the vigorous characteristics of that old Irish Presbyterian stock which furnished so much to the cause of liberty in this country during and after the war of the Revolution. Peter Gorman became one of the pioneers in the construction of that great enterprise, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and was one of the early contractors who built the first section of the road.

It was while engaged in this undertaking that he found it necessary, in order to facilitate his work, to remove to Woodstock. Here he married Elizabeth A. Brown, daughter of John R. Brown, whose family had settled in the colony when it was a part of Anne Arundel, in colonial days. Members of the Brown family had served with distinction in the Revolution and in the war of 1812, and its descendants were people of consequence in the county. One of the fruits of this marriage was Arthur P. Gorman, whose continued success in life has attracted general attention. Besides him, there were two sons and two daughters. Young Gorman was but six years of age when his father removed from Woodstock to the present homestead and residence of the senator, near Laurel. His father was at this time active and prominent in political affairs, was a great organizer, and exerted a very large influence. He was frequently sent as a delegate to the State conventions of his party, and represented the State in several national conventions, although he would never become a candidate for office. At an early day he identified himself with the Douglas Democracy, and became one of its recognized leaders in Maryland.

When young Gorman was thirteen years old his father, through his influence at Washington, aided by Gen. Hammond, the congressman from his district, and Governor W. T. Hamilton, who was also at that time a member of Congress, succeeded in having him appointed page in the House of Representatives, where he attracted the attention and won the friendship of Stephen A. Douglas, who had him transferred to the Senate. Senator Douglas at once became his patron and friend, and the young page, who was himself at a much later day to become a member of the Senate, learned his first lessons in the great problem of politics at the feet of this distinguished statesman. The observant and reflecting mind of the young page quickly caught and utilized the instructive wisdom evolved from the great discussions going on about him. No period in the history of the Senate could have better afforded him the opportunity for obtaining a clear insight into the theory of our government, its splendid possibilities and its great dangers, than that of the five years immediately preceding the war, and the career of Senator Gorman since has shown how well his mind imbued the knowledge which was so liberally poured out to him, and how greatly the evolution of some of the greatest problems of our Constitution impressed his youthful but sturdy character.

Under the tutelage of Mr. Douglas young Gorman's mind and character expanded, and under the patronage of the same friend his fortunes were rapidly advanced. He was received as a member of the Illinois senator's family and became his private secretary. So well also did he commend himself to the favorable notice of the other senators that he was successively advanced to the positions of messenger, assistant doorkeeper, assistant postmaster, and finally postmaster. In the mean time he maintained his confidential relations with Senator Douglas, who could not fail to appreciate the extraordinary activity and good judgment of his young friend, whose ability as an organizer began to be conspicuous and command attention.

When, therefore, Mr. Douglas was about to undertake that famous campaign in Illinois in which he was to meet Abraham Lincoln in a contest which attracted the breathless attention of the whole country, Mr. Gorman was asked to accompany him. From this undertaking he returned to Washington with a strong hold upon the confidence and esteem of the Douglas wing of the Democratic party, with which by this time he had become completely identified. In the ensuing session of Congress the great fight over the Kansas-Nebraska bill occurred, and the tact, calm judgment, activity, and physical powers of Mr. Gorman were relied upon by the Douglas Democrats to manage the voting strength of the friends of the bill, and to defeat, by keeping their organization in vigorous action, the filibustering efforts of its opponents.

His activity in this contest naturally aroused the hostility of the opponents of the measure, and strong efforts were at once made to have him removed from the postmastership of the Senate. These efforts were, however, of no avail. The charges which were preferred, after being submitted to Vice-President Breckenridge, were dismissed as not sustained, and it was decided that no cause for removal existed. At this time Peter Gorman was still closely connected... with the Douglas Democrats in Maryland, and viewed with great satisfaction the considerable part which his son was taking in the interest of that party. The elder Gorman, although not a member of the Charleston Convention of 1860, was the recognized leader of the Douglas party at the convention, and it was his management which succeeded in nominating Mr. Douglas for the Presidency. The result is too well known to be more than referred to here. After the Breckenridge bolt, which divided the Democratic party and resulted in the election of Abraham Lincoln and civil war, the Gormans, father and son, adhered to the Union cause.

Peter Gorman died in 1862, shortly after his release from Libby Prison, Richmond, where he was confined by order of Governor Letcher. He had been sent by the government at Washington to Richmond for the purpose of preventing by his influence the passage of the ordinance of secession by the Virginia Legislature. Immediately upon his arrival, however, he was placed under arrest and sent to Libby Prison, from which he was not released until the State had seceded. His prison-life and the excitement of the scenes in which he was engaged affected his health and caused his death.

In the mean time his son had been retained in his position as postmaster of the Senate, although by the withdrawal of the Southern members the political complexion of that body had undergone a radical change and it was controlled by the Republican senators. He held his place throughout the war, and was engaged during that time in special work which required great tact and wise management.

The Committee on the Conduct of the War found his services especially valuable, and he was constantly being dispatched to important points for information to be used in the committee's investigation. Upon one occasion he found himself at Gen. Grant's headquarters, near Petersburg, Va., and witnessed the great mine explosion which occurred before that city. During all this time Mr. Gorman had been naturally drifting into the Conservative party, and after the close of the war he became one of the organizers of the Conservative party in Maryland. He took a very active part in the contest between the radical Republicans in the Senate and President Johnson, and successful efforts were made to remove him from his office, although they were nearly defeated by the strenuous efforts of Senator Wade, of Ohio, then President of the Senate. He was at once appointed collector of internal revenue in the Fifth Federal Collection District of Maryland, the appointment being obtained by Reverdy Johnson, Thomas A. Hendricks, Montgomery Blair, and several conservative Republican senators.

He assumed charge in September, 1866. It was one of the most extensive in the department, and was in arrears to the amount of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. When he resigned the office this had been made up, all his accounts adjusted, and a settlement made in a very few weeks,—a record which was not surpassed by that of any other officer in the service. During his residence in his district he had taken great interest in local politics, and the internal knowledge that he had obtained of the conduct of public affairs in his long service at Washington gave him a decided advantage, which he well understood how to use. His first State office was a directorship in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, to which he was appointed in 1869, and at once took a very prominent part in the direction of the conduct of canal affairs. His administrative qualities were instantly recognized, and his influence in the board of directors became very great.

In the mean time he was elected a member of the House of Delegates from Howard County, Judge William M. Merrick being his colleague, and represented the county in the Legislature of 1870-72. He was re-elected to the next Legislature, and was chosen at the first session Speaker of the House. Almost immediately after the adjournment of the Legislature, Mr. Gorman's services to the canal, as one of its most astute and far-seeing directors, were recognized by his appointment to the presidency. The influence of the new president's administrative ability was at once manifest. He entered upon the discharge of his duties with the same zeal and sagacity which had characterized his life as an officer of the United States Senate, and which had so greatly advanced his fortunes. Under his management the affairs of the canal were placed in excellent condition.

In 1875 he was a candidate for the State senatorship, and was elected to succeed the Hon. John Lee Carroll, who was elected Governor of the State. By this time his talents as an organizer had been recognized by his party in the State, and in 1877 he was unanimously chosen chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, a position which he has ever since held. In 1877 he was re-elected to the State Senate from Howard County, where his popularity had become unbounded. In the Senate he at once became the recognized leader of his party, and until his elevation to the United States Senate his influence at Annapolis was unbounded. He was always eager to advance the material interests of the State and the best interests of his people, and was most actively engaged in settling the difficulties which had for a long time existed between the State and the railroad corporations within its limits.

In 1880, when the Legislature met, it was a foregone conclusion that he was to succeed Hon. William Pinkney Whyte as United States senator in Congress, and he was elected to that high office by a unanimous vote, having received in the caucus nearly two-thirds of the Democratic voters present, constituting a very large majority of the Democratic members of the Legislature, and he took his place in the Senate on the 4th of March, 1881, being the youngest member of that body. His political course since his election to the Senate has been dignified and eminently creditable. He has held himself aloof from the contests of factions, and has maintained a most exemplary position of independence and conciliation.

It may be said of his management of the affairs of the canal, of which he is still president, that during the two first years of his administration it has yielded a net income of one hundred thousand dollars a year, which is more than double the amount yielded in any of the twenty years previous.

Mr. Gorman has been since his election to the Senate recognized by that body as a member worthy of the most exalted confidence, and he has been placed upon the most important committees.

Senator Gorman's private life has been uneventful. He is a man of strong domestic nature, in all the busy whirlpool of politics finding the chiefest pleasures of life in the bosom of his interesting family. His country residence at Laurel has for years been his retreat in which he sought rest and relief from the annoyances and fatigues of his public career. Since his election to the United States Senate he has taken possession of the house on Fifteenth Street so long occupied by ex-Governor Swann, and adjoining the somewhat famous residence of the late Fernando Wood, of New York. Here the senator disburses a generous hospitality to his personal and political friends.

The true manliness of Senator Gorman's character has never been fully appreciated, except by those who are fortunate enough to possess his intimate personal acquaintance. His views are broad and his judgment calm and serene. He seldom makes a false step, and never a foolish one. He possesses qualities of the highest grade of statesmanship, although circumstances have made him appear to be a politician.

His talents are not of the brilliant and showy character which attract the admiration of the multitudes, but are of that quiet, strong, and unostentatious nature which command the respect of men of high character and transcendent ability, among whom he is acknowledged to be a man of extraordinary judgment and force. His nature is generous and warm-hearted, but he is undemonstrative in his friendship, and although easy of approach is difficult of intimate acquaintance. His friends love him, and every one who is thrown within the circle of his influence is insensibly won by a persuasive power more easily felt than understood. He is a strong though not a brilliant writer and speaker, his force in debate being at times so tremendous as to wake the unwilling admiration of his opponents.

Those who imagine that Senator Gorman's ability as a politician is the strongest part of his character make a mistake, and in the great future which is before him he will display those other and higher qualities which have long commanded for him the unqualified admiration of those who know him best and are best qualified to pass judgment.

The following statement shows the amounts paid upon the subscriptions to the capital stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, and the balances that were due on the same to the 1st of November, 1850:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Subscriptions made by the</th>
<th>Amount Subscribed</th>
<th>Amount Paid</th>
<th>Balances</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>$1,000,000</td>
<td>$500,000</td>
<td>$500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State of Maryland</td>
<td>$600,000</td>
<td>$200,000</td>
<td>$400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State of Virginia</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corporation of Washington</td>
<td>1,000,000</td>
<td>1,000,000</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a George-town</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>a Alexandria</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>250,000</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shepherdstown</td>
<td>2,000</td>
<td>2,000</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Individuals</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington</td>
<td>$217,000</td>
<td>186,506</td>
<td>30,494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Georgetown</td>
<td>229,700</td>
<td>199,512</td>
<td>30,188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexandria</td>
<td>47,300</td>
<td>31,928</td>
<td>15,372</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maryland</td>
<td>48,700</td>
<td>25,803</td>
<td>22,897</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virginia</td>
<td>37,800</td>
<td>30,984</td>
<td>6,816</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pennsylvania</td>
<td>18,700</td>
<td>9,070</td>
<td>9,630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>$843,800</td>
<td>$82,263,390</td>
<td>$831,100</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From the above statement it will be seen that the State of Maryland is the holder of five million dollars of the $8,226,593 composing the capital of the canal, holding fifty thousand shares of the stock, equal to about five-eighths of the whole capital stock.

On the 31st of December, 1866, the total cost of the canal had been $27,000,000. The State of Maryland held a first lien on the corpus of the canal, and a second lien on its tolls and revenues for $5,968,850.94, and besides that was entitled to preferred stock and guaranteed dividends for $10,806,250. The total indebtedness of the canal company to the State at the present time is about $22,000,000.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY DISTRICTS.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

CRACKLIN DISTRICT, No. 1.

Although Montgomery County was created in 1776, it was not divided into election districts until 1798, when an act of Assembly was passed for this purpose, which was confirmed in the following year. The returns of the commissioners appointed to lay off the districts under these acts is not of record, so that it is now impossible to indicate with certainty their original boundaries. In 1821, however, they were directed to be laid off anew, and under this division Cracklin District, No. 1, was assigned the following metes and bounds:

"Beginning at Mershberger's old mill on Patuxent, and running down Patuxent to the mouth of Hawling's River; then running up said river to the mouth of Reed's Branch, from thence to the head of the late Gerard Brook's spring; thence to the pole bridge near where Cyrus, a black man, formerly kept a blacksmith-shop; then with a small road, leaving the house formerly owned by Surratt Dickerson on the right, until it intersects the road passing in front of Mrs. Magruder's house at the corner of her fence; thence with said road, leaving the house where the late Capt. Benjamin Ricketts did live on the right, until it intersects the Bladensburg road at the lower end of said Ricketts' plantation; then with the road through the place where Zadok Ricketts once lived to the head-waters of Muddy Branch; then down said branch to the Georgetown road; then with said road to Middlebrook Mills on Seneca; then up Seneca to the head thereof; then with a straight line by Darnall's spring to the main road; then with said road until it intersects a road leading by Benjamin Benton's; thence with said road to the beginning."

These boundaries continued unchanged until 1875, when a portion of the district was taken to form Mechanicsville, and in 1880 it was still further reduced by the creation of Gaithersburg District, No. 9.

Cracklin is bounded on the north by Clarksburg District, on the east by Howard County, on the south by Mechanicsville District, and on the northwest by Gaithersburg District. The Patuxent River divides it from Howard County, and Great Seneca Creek forms a part of its northern boundary line, separating it for a portion of the distance from Clarksburg District, No. 2. The land is well watered by Whetstone and Cabin Branches in the west, by Goshen Branch in the centre, Scott's Branch in the east, by Rock Creek in the southwest, and by Hawling's River, which rises in the district and flows southeast through Mechanicsville into the Patuxent.

Among the earliest settlers in the district were John Banks, Benjamin Wallingford, Benjamin Penn, and Higson Belt, who were followed by the Griffiths, the Darbys, Mackalls, Gaithers, Neels, Allnatts, Bells, Plummer's, Popes, Riggins, Warfields, Bowmans, Stewarts, Crawfords, and the Waters'.

The first representative of the last-named family in Montgomery was Dr. Richard Waters, who was born about 1760 in Prince George's County. He served as a surgeon in the Revolutionary war, and was distinguished both as a surgeon and physician. At the close of the war he purchased a large estate, called "Spring Garden," in Montgomery County, on the road leading from Goshen to Gaithersburg. He married Miss Margaret Smith, of Prince George's, by whom he had several children, among whom were Somerset, a commission merchant of Baltimore, and for many years State tobacco inspector, and Hon. Richard Waters, who was born at the old homestead on the 19th of December, 1794. The latter became prominent in politics at an early age, and held many positions of trust and honor, filling the important office of sheriff with fidelity and efficiency, and representing his county in the State Legislature. In his canvass for the General Assembly he discovered that the State appropriation for the education of poor children was often misapplied by the trustees, and making this the great issue in his campaign, he was elected by an overwhelming majority. He at once directed his energies to the removal of the evil, and succeeded in securing the passage of a bill providing a general system of public education. This was the initial movement in the important work of establishing the present public-school system of the State, and Mr. Waters' services were so much appreciated by his constituents that on the expiration of his first term he was again chosen to represent them in the General Assembly. Mr. Waters left several children, some of whom are still living. His son Samuel is an eminent divine in the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, another, William, is the agent of the Adams Express Company in Cincinnati, a third, Somerset, is a leading physician in Carroll County, and has served several terms in the General Assembly, and a fourth, George, resides near the old homestead. His only daughter, Rebecca, married Jesse T. Higgin, formerly of Poolesville, and now a merchant of Baltimore.

Unity.—The village of Unity is situated near the southeastern boundary of the district, on a part of a tract of two hundred acres surveyed for John Philburn on the 21st of December, 1724, and called, after the curious fashion of that day, "John and Sarah," probably in honor of the first master and mistress of the estate. Unity was created by act of Assembly prior to 1806, but the first house, which is now occupied by Rezin Duvall, was not built until 1811.

In 1827 the village comprised six dwellings. William Price resided in the house now occupied by John G. Kinsey; Elisha R. Gaither lived in the house now the residence of Rezin Duvall; Philemon Plummer in that of Charles F. Townsend; Philemon Griffith in that of Mr. Nimrod Davis; Francis Simpson in the house now occupied by Francis Grooms, and Erasmus Daly in that of James E. Harvey. Garret Gaither, the first merchant known in this place, commenced business there as early as the year 1813. His place of business was situated between the residence of Mr. Nimrod Davis and the store of Colliflower & Harvey. The pioneer blacksmith of this vicinity was a man by the name of Smith. Hugh Anderson kept the first hotel in the place, occupying what is now the residence of Mr. Davis for that purpose. After a few years he was succeeded by Mr. Levi Chambers, who about the year 1818 sold out to Mr. Graff, by whom it was conducted until about 1860. Dr. Anderson settled here about 1831, and was the first resident physician of the town. Edward Bell, who was the pioneer teacher, and renowned as "a learned man" in those days, was succeeded in his duties by William Musgrove, who for many years was the schoolmaster of the neighborhood. Daniel Grant, the first shoemaker in the neighborhood, worked at his trade in the house now owned by Judson Balswaer. Unity boasted for many years the third oldest post-office in the county, but it was finally discontinued, and the mails are now received at Sunshine Post-office.

Bartholomew Protestant Episcopal Church is located about one mile from the village, on the road leading from Laytonsville to Unity. The congregation belonged originally to Prince George's Parish, and was organized in 1821. Among the founders and original members were Thomas Griffith, Henry Griffith, Henry C. Gaither, Thomas Davis, Nathaniel Chagett, and Jesse Wilcoxen. The church was erected about the time of the formation of the congregation, but was remodeled and otherwise improved in 1871. Among its pastors have been Rev. Mr. Allen, Rev. Levin Gills, who was its rector for many years, Rev. Chandler Hutton, Rev. Mr. Duncan, Rev. Dr. Mason, and Rev. Mr. Lorne. The vestrymen are Elisha Griffith, Col. Edward Owen, Richard Lansdale, Charles Higgins, John F. D. Magruder, F. Griffith.

The Presbyterian Church was erected in 1874, and is situated in the village of Unity. The congregation was organized the same year, prior to the building of the church, under the charge of Rev. Thomas Duncan. The erection of the church was chiefly due to Dr. James H. Maynard and Nimrod Davis, the former of whom solicited the greater part of the funds necessary for its construction, the latter giving the lot upon which the building stands. The original trustees were Elisha Griffith, Col. Edward Owen, Thomas Lansdale, Charles Higgins, John F. D. Magruder, Richard Lansdale, and F. Griffith. Rev. Mr. Duncan was succeeded as the pastor by the Rev. Dr. Mason, and he by Rev. Mr. Lorne. The congregation now numbers thirty-five members, and the officers are as follows: Treasurer, Richard Lansdale; Secretary, Charles Higgins. The vestry are the same as at its organization, with the exception of one deceased.

The Methodist Protestant Church (Mount Carmel) is located between Unity and Triadelphia.

Sunshine.—This is the post-office for the village of Unity, and is situated about ten miles from Gaithersburg and one mile from Unity.

Laytonsville.—This village is part of an addition to "Brooke Grove," surveyed for James Brooke, Sept. 4, 1728. The locality was originally settled by the Layton family among others, and to John L. Layton it is indebted for its name. It is situated seven miles from Gaithersburg, on the road leading from Goshen to Unity. F. L. Beall is the postmaster, and Dr. B. B. Crawford, born in Howard County, has been its physician for thirty years. The Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in 1867; the present pastor is Rev. J. Thomas Cross. Attached to the church is a cemetery, in which among others are the graves of Rev. Henry Walker, born Feb. 22, 1809, died March 16, 1877; Lizzie C., wife of George W. Mobley, born Sept. 24, 1843, died Dec. 5, 1875, aged thirty-two years, two months; Mollie F., wife of George W. Mobley, born Nov. 27, 1853, died Sept. 7, 1880. Brooke Chapel, near the village, was built in 1871, and rebuilt in 1879.

Goshen is situated five miles northeast of Gaithersburg, on Goshen Branch. The Goshen mills, which are located at this point, are under the care of J. S. Davis and J. W. Lewis. A. R. Martin is the postmaster.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South was erected in 1869-70, and was dedicated to divine worship Sunday, May 21, 1870, the dedication services being conducted by Rev. Dr. Munsey, of Baltimore City, assisted by other eminent clergymen. The burying-ground in the rear of the church contains among others the graves of Rev. James Layne, born in Sussex County, Del., died March 1, 1840; joined the church of which he was a minister in 1792.

Joshua W. Dorsey, died June 6, 1875.
Wm. Thompson, born Feb. 14, 1812; died June 22, 1872.
Redland.—This point is two miles from Derwood Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. H. S. Thompson and H. B. Penn are merchants,—the latter postmaster. The physicians are Drs. J. W. and J. Magruder. One mile north is situated Emory Grove Methodist Episcopal Church. Redland is on "Banks' Venture," surveyed for John Banks, Nov. 29, 1752.

Hazel B. Cashell, whose post-office is Redland, is one of the most prominent of Montgomery County's farmers and one of its largest landholders. He was born Nov. 5, 1808, in Montgomery County, about five miles from his present home. His father (George) emigrated to America from Ireland, and settled upon a farm in Montgomery County. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hazel Butt, a native of Montgomery County. Their children numbered nine, of whom the living are Hazel B., Hamilton, Samuel, Jackson, Thomas, Mrs. Elizabeth Grommes, and Mrs. Emily Miller. George Cashell died in 1838, aged eighty-four. His widow died in 1860, aged seventy-two. Hazel B. Cashell resided with his father until he reached his twentieth year, when he leased of Samuel White a farm known as "Charles and Benjamin," and then began his first active experience as a farmer on his own account. Later he leased a farm of Roger Brooke, and in 1848, purchasing a farm of five hundred and thirty acres (his present home), he took up his residence thereon in 1849, and has since resided ever since. In 1847 he was elected county commissioner on the Democratic ticket, and served as such until 1851. In 1854 he was chosen judge of the Orphans' Court to fill the unexpired term of Judge Magruder, and thereafter Judge Cashell was chosen to the office for four successive terms of four years each. During the war of 1861–65, and while upon the bench, he was arrested by the Federal authorities upon a charge of treason to the government. He was tried by a military court and acquitted, but the Secretary of War disapproved the finding and remanded the case to the civil courts. The trial was therefore renewed before the United States Court sitting in Baltimore, Judge Cashell being in the interim allowed his liberty upon parole. The case was ended by an abandonment thereof by the government. Mr. Cashell has long ranked as a representative farmer, and beginning, as has been said, the pursuit of husbandry as a tenant, he is to-day the owner of fourteen hundred acres of valuable farming lands.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Caroline, daughter of James Grommes, of Montgomery County, to whom he was united in 1832. She bore him five children, of whom the survivors are four. James, Thomas, and Lycurgas, the living sons, are well-known Montgomery County farmers. In 1859, Mrs. Cashell died, and after a lapse of eleven years Mr. Cashell married for his second wife, in 1870, Harriet, daughter of Thomas and Mary Jones, of Caroline County, Va. The JONESES were among the early settlers in the Old Dominion, and bore a name that in that region has had an honorable place in history. By the second marriage there have been two children, both sons. Since 1860 Mr. Cashell has been president of the Rockville and Washington Turnpike Company.

Claysville.—This place is situated midway between Mount Zion and Laytonsville, and contains a store and several shops.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, S. W. Davis, Unity P.; No. 2, J. M. Woodfield, Damascus P. O.; No. 3, A. R. Martin, Goshen P. O.; No. 4, E. M. Holland, Reiland P. O.; No. 5, E. M. Beene, Laytonsville P. O.

There are two colored schools in the district. The magistrates are Samuel Biggs, of G., J. T. Warfield, J. W. Wallick.

CLARKESBURG DISTRICT, No. 2, is bounded on the north by Frederick County, east by Howard County, south by Craciklin District, southwest by Gaithersburg District, and west by Darnestown and Medley Districts.

Into Great Seneca Creek, in its southwestern, empty Magruder's and Wild-Cat Branches, while the Patuxent River separates it from Howard County. In its southwestern section flow Ten-Mile Creek, Cabin Branch, and Little Seneca Creek. In the north, Bennett's Creek flows into Frederick County, as does Little Bennett's Creek, and into the latter empty Wild-Cat and Soper's Branches.

As originally laid out it was bounded as follows:

Beginning near Benjamin Gaither's blacksmith shop, and running with the road leading to Clapper's mill, the late Samuel Simmons', and the late Richard Hoggins', to the road leading from the mouth of Monocacy to Green's bridge on the east side of Joshua Perry's plantation, there with the road by John Willson's to the mouth of his lane, then with a north line to the line of Frederick County, then with said line to Parr's spring, then down Patuxent to Mershberger's old mill, then down Seneca to the beginning near Benjamin Gaither's blacksmith-shop.

In the formation of Gaithersburg District, in 1880, a small part of the territory of Clarkesburg was taken, thus reducing the above limits slightly.

The first settlers in the district were Ellsworth Beane, Samuel Saffell, Thomas Whitten, John Crampton, and Henry Griffith, who were soon followed by the Howards, Laytons, Neels, Claggetts, Warrings, Hyatts, Prices, Warfields, Tablers, Watkinses, Purdums, Windsors, Waterses, Kemps, Bealls, Darbys, Kings, Linthicums, Willamsses, Lowises, and others.1

Greenbury Willson, on Aug. 1, 1811, had a mill in operation on the farm of Edward Magruder, on Wild-Cat Creek.

Clarkesburg, after which the district was called, is beautifully located on the Washington and Frederick road, thirty miles from Washington, fifteen from Frederick, and four and a half from Boyd's Station. The town occupies a portion of a tract of three hundred and eighty-five acres, surveyed on the 10th of February, 1761, for Henry Griffith, lying on both sides of Little Seneca Creek, and known originally as the "Cow-Pasture" survey. The first house was erected in 1780 by John Clark, whose daughter married William Wilson, the father of Leonidas Wilson, the present owner, who for a long time was a successful merchant of the place. It is now occupied by Lewis & Williams. Mr. Clark kept the first store. The first dwelling-house was that now occupied by Leonard Dent Shaw, in the upper part of the town, and was built in 1777. In the garden of Mr. Scholl, at the east end of the town, the celebrated Catawba grape, which has since gained such a worldwide reputation, was probably first cultivated in America. The property is now owned by Hon. George W. Hilton, and is annually visited by numbers of pomologists and curiosity-seekers. Dr. Horace Wilson was among the earliest physicians.

Before the era of roads the town was on the direct road from the West to the national capital, and the stage-lines and many private conveyances on their way to and from those points passed through the place. At one time it contained three taverns,—one kept by Mrs. Schell, where L. D. Shaw lives, one by Mr. Pritchard (now the Thompson House), and the third by Mr. Griffith, where Hon. G. W. Hilton now resides.

Among the first blacksmiths was Benjamin Browning. John G. Clark, the founder of the town, came from the North. The oldest native inhabitant of the place is Leonidas Wilson, who was born in 1812. He is the son of William, grandson of John, and great-grandson of Jonathan Wilson, who came up from Prince George's County before or during the French and Indian war.

William H. Buxton is postmaster, and Drs. T. K. Galloway, R. H. Thompson, and William A. Waters physicians.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The present neat brick edifice was built in 1853, and is on or near the site of the old log structure it succeeded. The first rude church building was erected between 1782 and 1784, and in it Bishop Asbury several times preached. Rev. Randolph R. Murphy, a native of Clarkesburg, is the present pastor, and is a son of one of the old pillars of the church.

In the cemetery adjoining the church are the following interments:

Charles H. Murphy, died Aug. 14, 1879, aged 82; and his wife, Julia, April 23, 1883, aged 49.

Maria Louise, wife of Obad Harley, died April 16, 1861, aged 42; and Jane, wife of same, died Nov. 5, 1853, aged 50.

Freeborn G. Miles, born April 1, 1812, died Jan. 31, 1845.

Nancy W. Thompson, born Nov. 20, 1794, died May 20, 1866.

Synthia R. Thompson, died Feb. 26, 1876, aged 64.

Ann Elizabeth, wife of Philemon M. Smith, and daughter of Dr. Horace Wilson, died Jan. 29, 1875, aged 32.

Leah, wife of Dr. Horace Wilson, died June 22, 1842, aged 50.

Maria, wife of Rev. James G. Henning, born April 25, 1813, died Dec. 25, 1842.

John W. Deal, died Sept. 5, 1866, aged 63.

Howard Young, died Oct. 3, 1877, aged 66.

Nancy A., wife of Hezekiah Barber, died April 23, 1873, aged 66.

Martha Judy, died April 12, 1867, aged 73.

William Levi Harley, died July 19, 1874, aged 76.

Prof. J. Mortimer Harley, died April 8, 1879, aged 50.

"The Clark Private Burying-Ground" contains the remains of John Clark, born August, 1752, died February, 1869; and Ann, his wife, died March 27, 1816, aged 61.

Gustavus Wilson, born Feb. 11, 1811, died 1812.

John Clark Wilson, born Aug. 25, 1802, died Dec. 6, 1893.

William Harris, nephew and adopted son of Rev. Buckel Carl, pastor of Presbyterian Church in Rahway, N.J., died May 5, 1817, aged 21.

1 In the Maryland Gazette of 1754 appeared the following notice: "Five Pounds Reward. Ran away, Sept. 12th, from the copper-works near Seneca Creek, in Frederick County Maryland, a convict servantman, John Run."

1 "Jas. Perry, John Bond.

1 "N.B.—Whoever takes up said servant, and brings him to Jas. Perry, near said works, at Rock Creek, in Frederick County, or to John Bond in Baltimore, shall have £5 reward."
Clarkesburg Lodge, No. 100, I. O. O. F., was instituted Aug. 28, 1888, the charter being issued on that date to Rufus K. Waters, William P. Winsor, Dr. R. Thompson, C. R. Murphy, A. M. Layton. The lodge received three members into the fellowship at their first meeting, making a total of eight members. The first election of officers resulted in the choice of Dr. R. T. Thompson as Noble Grand, A. M. Layton as Secretary, Rufus K. Waters as Vice-Grand, and C. R. Murphy as Treasurer. Their hall was purchased in 1871 from C. R. Murphy. The lodge only numbers six members at present, though at one time the membership reached one hundred.

The present officers are G. W. Darby, Noble Grand; Nathan H. Darby, Vice-Grand; John H. Gibson, Treasurer; C. R. Murphy, Secretary; John Lemon, O. G.; William R. Winsor, P. G.

Methodist Episcopal Church South.—This congregation was formed in 1865 under the direction of Rev. J. P. Hall, who was its first pastor, and numbered about twenty-five members at the time of its organization.

Robert Smith followed Rev. Mr. Hall as pastor, and was assisted by Rufus Willson. In 1870, Rev. Benjamin F. Ball succeeded to the charge, and it was during his pastorate that the present church edifice was erected. The church was dedicated in 1871, Mr. Ball preaching the dedicatory sermon. In 1872, Rev. Mr. Tabbs became the pastor, and was succeeded in 1874 by William McDonald, who was assisted by Mr. A. C. McNair. In 1876, Rev. William Wade assumed charge of the church, and was followed by Rev. Mr. Gover and Rev. Mr. Watts, the present incumbent. The steward is C. R. Murphy, and the trustees are C. R. Murphy, John A. Lewis, Edward Lewis, W. W. Welch.

Clarkesburg Literary Association was established in 1879. President, C. R. Murphy; Vice-President, William R. Windsor; Treasurer, John S. Belt; Corresponding Secretary, Col. T. H. S. Boyd; Recording Secretary, Thomas A. Burdette.

Among the former prominent representatives of the Methodist Protestant Church in Clarkesburg was the Rev. Reuben T. Boyd. Mr. Boyd was born July 3, 1794, on the old estate of the Boys, known as "Boyd's Delay," on Rock Creek, three miles east of Rockville. He studied for the ministry, and was authorized to preach the gospel in the Baltimore District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Nov. 26, 1825. His certificate was signed by Rev. Joseph Frye, president, James R. Williams, secretary, and was renewed Dec. 30, 1826. For several years preceding and during this time a great reform was being agitated in the Methodist Episcopal Church, the object of which was a change in the form of government so as to admit of lay representation in the councils of the church.

Mr. Boyd took an active and zealous stand in behalf of the projected reform, and was a constant contributor to the columns of a paper published by William Stockton, father of the late Rev. Thos. Stockton, one of the most eminent pulpit orators of his day, and chaplain of the United States House of Representatives. This paper was published in the interest of the reformers, and soon brought down on them the censure of the bishop and elders of the church. The agitation finally resulted in the expulsion of eleven ministers for advocating the rights of the laity, Mr. Boyd being the youngest of the eleven. The reformers were not to be crushed, and soon gathered around them a strong following. They assumed the name of the Associated Methodist Churches, and at the Maryland Annual Conference of Ordained Ministers and Lay Delegates, held in Baltimore, April 5, 1829, Mr. Boyd was ordained to the office of deacon, and authorized by the Conference to administer the ordinance of baptism, to assist the elder in the administration of the Lord's Supper, to celebrate marriage, and to preach and expound the Holy Scriptures. His certificate was signed by Rev. Nicholas Snethen, president, and Luther J. Cox, secretary.

At the Maryland Annual Conference of Ministers and Delegates, held in the city of Georgetown, D. C., April 8, 1832, Mr. Boyd was ordained to the office of elder in the new organization, which had changed its name to the Methodist Protestant Church, and authorized by the Conference to administer the ordinance of baptism, to assist the elder in the administration of the Lord's Supper, to celebrate marriage, and to preach and expound the Holy Scriptures.

His certificate on this occasion was signed by Rev. Eli Henkle, president, James Hanson, secretary. Mr. Henkle was the father of ex-Congressman Henkle, from the Fifth Maryland District. Their church membership increased rapidly, and new Conferences were formed, especially in the South and West. Feeling that his sphere of usefulness would be enlarged by removing to the West, Mr. Boyd was transferred to the Illinois Conference in 1838, and from there to the Ohio Conference in 1840, where he remained nine years. On Nov. 28, 1840, a license was issued by W. H. Harrison, then clerk of the court of Hamilton County, Ohio, and afterwards President of the United States, authorizing Mr. Boyd, as a regular ordained minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, to solemnize marriages throughout the State of Ohio.
He returned to the Maryland Conference in 1849, where he continued an active and efficient minister until 1859, when health failing him, he was placed on the superannuated roll of the Conference. After an active and continuous life of thirty-four years in the ministry he was compelled to seek rest. He bought property in Clarkesburg, and removed there with his family in 1859, spending the remaining days of his life in the happy enjoyment of a consciousness of a bright future beyond the grave. He died seated in his easy-chair, surrounded by his books and papers, on the 15th of February, 1863, in his seventy-third year. At peace with God and mankind, honored and respected by all, he left behind a record worthy of example. During his life he was a constant and voluminous writer, and his publications in the Methodist Protestant and Western Recorder attracted universal attention.

George W. Hilton, one of the most influential citizens of Clarkesburg, was born in Laytonsville, Oct. 2, 1823, and was educated in Georgetown, D. C. He taught school in the old mountain school-house in the Third District (Medley's), and subsequently in Clarkesburg and Cracklelin Districts. In 1847 he was appointed deputy sheriff and collector, and held these positions until 1852, when he became a merchant in Damascus, where he prosecuted his business successfully for seven years. In 1859 he purchased property in Clarkesburg, and transferring his business to that place, continued it successfully until 1872, when he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He was elected to the Legislature in 1863, and was re-elected in 1871, serving on the committees on Corporations and Printing. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor John Lee Carroll a member of the board of control and review for the revision of tax assessments, and performed the duties of the position with intelligence and efficiency. Mr. Hilton is a gentleman of large experience, fine judgment, and ability, and has won deserved popularity by the integrity of his private life, and the conscientious and upright manner in which he has discharged the public trusts committed to his hands.

Catawba Grape.—It has been claimed that this celebrated grape was originally discovered by the late Darius Claggett, of Washington City, D. C., in the mountains of Virginia, and that cuttings were brought by him to Georgetown, where he planted them in his garden. This claim, however, cannot be sustained, as it is susceptible of proof that Maj. Adlum was making wine of this grape in 1824, three years before Mr. Claggett first got his cuttings from Virginia. This will appear by reference to Maj. Adlum's book on native grapes and vines published in 1824, to be found in the Congressional Library, as well as from the last edition, published in 1827. W. Viers Bouic, in a letter published in The Advocate, says "he knew Mr. Claggett well, and never heard him claim to be the discoverer of the Catawba grape." He also knew Maj. Adlum, and heard him tell Jeremiah Orme, a native of Montgomery County, at that time an extensive grocer in Georgetown, D. C., that the Catawba wine which he offered to sell him was made from grapes from vines which were grown from cuttings obtained from the garden of Mr. Scholl, of Clarkesburg.

In the "American Encyclopedia," vol. iv. p. 555, it is claimed that the Catawba grape was first discovered in a wild state about the year 1801, near Ashville, Buncombe Co., N. C., near the head-waters of the Catawba River, and that about a quarter of a century later that grape was found by Maj. Adlum in a garden of a German near Washington, and that Gen. Day, of Rocky Mount, on the Catawba River, was the original transmitter of a few plants to Washington City, while a United States senator, some time previous to 1816.

The same work shows that through Maj. Adlum this grape found its way to Cincinnati, and thence was disseminated through the West and Southwest with great rapidity. In 1829 or 1830 the late Zakok Magruder, then a distinguished lawyer of Rockville, procured a number of plants from Maj. Adlum. All the vines in the old gardens of Rockville were obtained from Mr. Magruder, except those in the garden at Rose Hill farm, now owned by Miss Henrietta Dunlap. Those were procured by Mrs. Beall, who then owned the farm, from her brother, Singleton Wootton, late of New Market, Frederick Co., Md. Mr. Wootton got them from the original vine in the garden of Jacob Scholl at Clarkesburg. Jacob Scholl was the grandfather of John E. Willson. He was of German descent, but was born in Frederick County, Md., and kept a large hotel at Clarkesburg. He is the person alluded to in the "Encyclopedia" as the German from whose garden Maj. Adlum got his cuttings of this celebrated grape. Mountjoy Scholl, the only surviving child of Jacob Scholl, wrote to Mr. Bouic from Clarksville, Pike Co., Mo., under date of July 17, 1878, stating that he was born in 1792, at Clarkesburg, where his father then and long after resided. He cannot state the exact time, but when he was a small boy, a traveler who stopped all night at his father's hotel gave his father two grape-cuttings, which were planted in the garden, and from the vines thus raised Maj. Adlum obtained his cuttings. Maj.
Adum told his father that he had been all over Europe hunting for this grape without success. He said it came from the Toke Mountains in Germany. Mr. Scholl says his father always called it Toke or Tokay. He never saw the word spelled, and is not certain that he has spelled it correctly, but he is positive it was never called Catawba. The first time he knew it to be called Catawba was in a newspaper article published in St. Louis after the grape had reached there from Cincinnati.

Hyattstown is situated on the old Frederick and Washington road, sixteen miles from Rockville, and seven miles from Monrovia. The first house erected in the town was that now occupied by H. Dutteral, which was built about the year 1800, and was then the residence of F. Poole. In 1811 the village comprised twelve houses. Among the families then residing there were those of Jesse Hyatt, H. Poole, Thomas Foster, George Cover, Levi Philips, Daniel Collins, and George Davis. Thomas Foster was the blacksmith, and his shop stood on the present site of Tabler’s restaurant. Jacob Smith was the first carpenter of the place; Henry Poole the first storekeeper. Mr. Philips was the proprietor of the first hotel, and employed for the purpose the house now occupied by O. W. Dutteral. Mr. Hyatt succeeded Mr. Philips, but removed the hotel to the house now used as a store, etc., by Mr. Welsh. Mr. Collins was the first tailor in the village; he lived in a house that was situated upon what is now known as the Christian Church property. Samuel Soper was the pioneer school-teacher, and taught his few scholars in the old Methodist church. Warner Welsh was the principal merchant until 1856. The town was founded by and named in honor of Jesse Hyatt, who was born Dec. 14, 1763, and died Jan. 12, 1813. Since 1856 Hyattstown has improved rapidly, and now comprises several fine stores, etc. It was created by an act of Legislature in the year 1809.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This old congregation was first organized in 1804. A lot was purchased from Eli Hyatt and wife, and a church was erected under the management of Samuel Hobbs, Basil Soper, Charles McIntosh, John Smith, and Joseph Benton. The building was a log structure, and stood upon the site of the present edifice. The congregation at its formation numbered about eighteen members. Of those who connected themselves with the church prior to 1819, Perry Browning is the only survivor. In 1852 the church was destroyed by fire, and in June, 1856, under the care of Rev. Charles Reed, the cornerstone of the present edifice was laid. The dedication took place in 1857, Rev. Benjamin F. Brown, the presiding elder, preaching the dedicatory sermon. The builder of the church was John Gardner, and the building committee consisted of William Browning, William Mclain, and Jacob R. Smelser. The church is of brick, and two stories in height. The congregation was divided in 1863, but now numbers about fifty members. The steward is J. Nelson Soper; Trustees, Perry Browning, J. N. Soper, Zachariah Harris, Charles T. Browning, and James Corlett. Among the pastors of the church have been Revs. Francis Asbury, Enoch George, Beverly Waugh, Alfred Griffith, Frederick Sier, Hamilton Jefferson, Jesse Lee, Christopher Fry, James Paintey, Tobias Riley, Thomas Larkin, Job Gees, Caleb Reynolds, Basil Barny, Andrew Hemphill.

Among the graves in the burial-ground of the church are the following:

Philemon Smith, Sr., born Feb. 2, 1794, died March 14, 1879; Elizabeth, his wife, born Feb. 17, 1794, died March 16, 1824; Ada, second wife, born Jan. 29, 1802, died June 9, 1858. John Gardner, died Nov. 11, 1879, aged 76; Eli, his wife, born Sept. 9, 1807, died Jan. 25, 1879.

Warner Welsh, born June 24, 1818, died Aug. 11, 1873; Mary Ann, his wife, died Feb. 11, 1857, aged 32.

Mary A., wife of Asa Hyatt, died April 2, 1859, aged 62; Asa Hyatt, born Dec. 11, 1787, died Aug. 20, 1848.

Wetson Lee Philips, died September, 1846, aged 15.

George Rhodes, born May 25, 1838, died Aug. 11, 1847; Ann Maria, his wife, born Dec. 1, 1789, died Aug. 5, 1849.

Martha J., wife of A. J. Tabler, and daughter of Joshua and Catherine Norwood, born May 1, 1829, died Jan. 21, 1868.

Harriet, wife of William Tabler, and daughter of John and Charlotte Smith, born May 2, 1817, died May 13, 1861.

Lewis Tabler, born June 28, 1781, died Aug. 1, 1847; Mary, his wife, and daughter of Gideon Cristina Lee, born March 9, 1789, died Sept. 6, 1867.

Samuel B. Benton, born July 19, 1812, died April 11, 1865; William Browning, died April 1, 1869, aged 72; Mary Browning died Aug. 3, 1879, aged 72.

Levino Hobbs, born Sept. 17, 1789, died Dec. 21, 1862.

John R. Lewis died March 25, 1879, aged 62.

Elizabeth A., wife of G. A. Darby, died Sept. 8, 1873, aged 38.

William McIain, born Oct. 27, 1802, died Dec. 12, 1872.

Harriet McIain, died Jan. 30, 1855, aged 44.

Evan T. Anderson, born Nov. 7, 1817, died July 6, 1863.

Adam Hagen, born May 22, 1852, aged 64.

Mary A., wife of John D. Krantz, born May 21, 1823, died Feb. 14, 1847.

Mary, wife of Barrock Hall, born June 8, 1791, died Dec. 22, 1854.

Margaret Nichols, wife of Camden R. Nichols, born June 22, 1803, died June 28, 1856.

Martha Garratt, born March 26, 1783, died Oct. 21, 1850.

Margaret P., wife of B. P. Phillips, died March 30, 1864, aged 46.

Christian Church.—This church was established in 1840, the congregation worshiping in the houses of the different members until the erection of their church in 1845. Among the founders of the church were Eli Wolfe, William Richards, Charlotte Richards, Lavina Wolf, Sarah Hyatt, and Sarah A. Price. The first elders of the church were Eli Wolfe and William Richards. The church edifice, which was erected in 1845, stood upon the cemetery lot. In 1871, under the auspices of Rev. Alfred N. Gilbert, of Baltimore, they built a new two-story frame church, at a cost of three thousand dollars. The lot was donated by Jacob B. Thomas and wife, of Baltimore. On Aug. 20, 1871, the church was dedicated, and a reorganization effected with the following officers: Elder, Levi C. Ziegler; Deacons, Thomas Price, P. C. Dutrow, C. Harrison, Lutheran Norwood. The pastors of the church have been Neal McCollum, John P. Mitchell, and William H. Shell. At its reorganization the congregation numbered about forty members, and at present numbers thirty. The present officers are B. F. Hawkins, Thomas Price, Seymour Poole.

The cemetery of the Christian Church is situated in the outskirts of the town, on the old Frederick road, and contains the graves of Jesse Hyatt, born Dec. 4, 1763, died Jan. 12, 1813.

Mary E., wife of E. G. Harris, born Aug. 29, 1846, died Sept. 8, 1876.
Eleanor Ann, wife of David A. Ziegler, born April 13, 1815, died Aug. 23, 1874.
Eli Wolfe, died June, 1871, aged 70.
Caroline Wolfe, died April, 1862, aged 68.
Charlotte Richards, born March 29, 1796, died Aug. 22, 1868.
Suan Fowler, died March 26, 1856, aged 18.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South was established in 1805, by Rev. John P. Hall. It began with twenty members, and now numbers sixteen. The first steward of the church was William B. Lewis, and the present steward is W. W. Welsh, who is also Sunday-school superintendent. The building is a frame structure, and was erected in 1876–77, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars. The pastors in charge have been Rev. J. P. Hall, Robert Smith, Benjamin F. Ball, Rev. Mr. Tebbs, Mr. McDonald, Wm. Wade, and Rev. Mr. Gover. Rev. Mr. Watts is the present pastor, and has been assisted by J. G. Greishen and John Miller.

Boyd's Station is on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, seventy miles from Baltimore and thirty from Washington, D. C. As late as 1869 the site of the present flourishing town was still an unreclaimed waste. The former owner of the property on which the town is situated was Camden R. Nichols. The station takes its name from Capt. James A. Boyd, who, with James E. Williams and Mr. Lewis, have rapidly built up the place. The first house was built by James E. Williams. Capt. Boyd has expended over a hundred thousand dollars in improvements in the past few years. The location is very healthy, being over five hundred feet above the level of the sea. James E. Williams is postmaster, merchant, railroad and express agent, and F. P. Meigs, pomologist. Boyd Presbyterian church is a pretty frame structure, erected in 1876, of which Rev. James Henderson is pastor.

In the cemetery adjoining are only two tombstones:

William M. Williams, died Nov. 6, 1879, aged 34 years; and his wife, Florence M., died Sept. 20, 1879, aged 20 years.

Agriculture, Peach-Culture.—The keeping and propagation of bees in the county is assuming considerable importance. It requires but small capital and a very limited amount of labor, while attended with little or no risk. Bee-keeping has become a science, and those who patiently learn its ways have no fear of being stung. Neither are whole swarms of these industrious little creatures destroyed in order to secure their treasures of sweetness. On the contrary, they have really become pets of those who take a loving care of them. To such perfection has the art of raising honey been brought that not a bee is sacrificed in taking away the honey, while the comb is even saved. By a new and ingenious method, with a little machine, the fresh combs when taken from the hives are deftly unsealed and the honey extracted from the comb by the principle of suction, and the comb, perfectly uninjured, is returned to the hive to be filled again in a few days by the same bees. This honey is the purest known in the market, and is put up in sealed glasses. The feeding and keeping of bees is very easily learned, and is said by those employed in it to be a most delightful business. Two hundred and fifty dollars will stock a yard of bees that will with proper care annually yield one thousand dollars. Mahlon T. Lewis, of Clarkesburg, and Capt. F. P. Meigs, of Boyd's Station, are extensively engaged in the business.

Owing to the destruction of peach-trees by insects on the Peninsula, the peach, like the tobacco-plant, must continually seek new land, since soil that has been planted in peach-trees cannot be successfully replanted until it has been allowed a rest of many years. This is eventuating in the transfer from the Eastern Shore of the peach-culture to the uplands of Montgomery and adjoining counties.

Damascus.—This village is seven miles from Mount Airy. In 1810 it contained three houses, one of which was occupied by Stephen Anderson, and another by James Whiffen, who kept a store at the place. Thomas Foster was the first blacksmith, and Evan Thompson the first school-teacher. The only physician living in Damascus is Dr. B. F. Lonsdale, and the merchants are J. H. Claggett, Marcellus Etchinson, Luther N. King, and P. M. Smith, who is also postmaster. Damascus Grange, No. 80, is located here, of which Joseph M. Burdett is Master, and C. W. Browning, Secretary.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The church edifice, a frame structure, was built in 1869. Rev. Randolph R. Murphy is pastor. In its cemetery are buried

George W. Gue, born March 4, 1815, died Feb. 26, 1879; and Sarah E., his wife, born April 3, 1819, died Jan. 27, 1875.

Aden H. B. Gue, died July 13, 1876, aged 31; and Ella, his wife, Sept. 5, 1877, aged 24.

Rhoda Ann Warthen, born July 9, 1829, died Nov. 6, 1899.

Charlotte, wife of Thomas Young, born Sept. 28, 1868, died March 21, 1877.

Montgomery Lodge, No. 88, I. O. O. F.—This lodge was instituted Jan. 20, 1854, and held its first meeting in a room over P. M. Smith’s store, Feb. 8, 1854. The charter was granted to Joseph Kemp, Green S. Etchinson, William Barnes, James S. Kemp, and Jeremiah T. Browning. At the first meeting the lodge comprised only the five charter members, who received and initiated two persons,—Grafton Watkins and Francis M. Waters. The following officers served the first year: N. G., Green S. Etchinson; V. G., James S. Kemp; Sec., J. Thomas Browning; Treas., William Barnes. At the meeting March 6th in the same year, F. M. Waters was chosen as R. S. N. G., and James Etchinson L. S.; Rufus Darby R. S. V. G., and Rufus Waters L. S.

The successive officers have been as follows:

For the term beginning in January and ending in June, 1864, the following-named gentlemen served as officers:

In 1860 the hall was erected at a cost of twelve hundred dollars; it was dedicated on July 20, 1876, the address being delivered by Dr. David A. Wilson, Grand Chaplain of the I. O. O. F., Grand Lodge of Maryland. The lodge is in a very flourishing condition, and numbers about twenty-six members in good standing. They have given several very successful and creditable celebrations and public installations.

Neelsville.—This place is situated on the Frederick and Washington road, between Gaithersburg and Clarkesburg. It takes its name from the Need family, one of the oldest in this section.

Presbyterian Church.—This edifice, built in 1877, is a frame structure and of Swiss architecture. In its rear is the old frame church built about 1830. Rev. James Henderson is the pastor.

In the church graveyard are buried:
- Joanna Fredericka, wife of Jacob F. Snyder, born Aug. 22, 1834, died Aug. 27, 1851.
- Emma V., daughter of Wm. H. and Jane Benson, born May 9, 1856, died Jan. 11, 1881.
- Savilla, wife of B. H. Bennett, born Oct. 25, 1827, died March 19, 1877.
- Mary E., wife of G. F. Linthicum, died June 4, 1878, aged 82; and Ellinora G., wife of same, died March 2, 1880, aged 34.
- Joshua Dorsey, born Jan. 20, 1825, died Feb. 8, 1877.

Middlebrook is on the Frederick road, near Big Seneca, eight miles from Rockville. George H. Clements is merchant and postmaster.

Cedar Grove is five miles northeast of Germantown. O. T. Watkins is merchant and postmaster. Salem Methodist Episcopal church is located here. White Oak chapel is on the road from Damascus to Goshen, and Cedar Grove Methodist Episcopal church on the road from Hyattstown to Damascus.

Browningsville.—This place is in the northern part of the district, five miles from Monrovia, eighteen from Rockville, thirty-seven from Baltimore, and near Bennett’s Creek. It derives its name from the Browning family, who were among the earliest settlers in this vicinity. Near the village are the Bethesda Methodist Episcopal and Mount View Methodist Protestant churches. The merchants are S. M. Benton & Brother, Reuben Engle, and Samuel Hobbs, the latter being also postmaster. Brownings & Jacobs have a carriage-making establishment.

Claggettsville, so named from the Claggetts, who settled near it before 1750, is southeast of Browningsville. Montgomery chapel is located here, and here reside Capt. W. C. and John H. Claggett.

At Kingsville, in King’s Valley, is King’s distillery and saw-mill, operated by L. G. King.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 for this district are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, L. C. Hammond, Damascus P. O.; No. 2, Kemp, Damascus P. O.; No. 3, T. G. Day, Browningsville; No. 4, F. Prettyman, Hyattstown; No. 5, A. Isebenus, Gaithersburg; No. 6, W. H. Pace, Boyd’s; No. 7, L. M. Watkins, Cedar Grove; No. 8, J. C. W. Kemp, Damascus; No. 9, J. T. Bryer, Browningsville.

There are four colored schools.

The magistrates are J. C. W. Kemp, John S. Belt, George W. Darby, J. D. Gardner.

The Claggetts were of English descent, and settled in Prince George’s and other lower counties about 1665. Ninian M. Claggett, son of John Claggett, of Prince George’s, married a daughter of Edward Burgess and settled in this district. He died in 1840, aged seventy-three years. His father-in-law, Edward Burgess, resided also in this district, and was a captain in the Revolution and one of the first justices of the County Court. Thomas Claggett, son of Ninian M. Claggett, was born in this district, and is a wealthy private banker in Frederic City.

MEDLEY DISTRICT, No. 3. is bounded on the north by Frederick County and Virginia, east by Clarkesburg District, south by Darnestown District, and southwest and west by Virginia. From the State of Virginia it is separated on the west, southwest, and northwest by the Potomac River. Little and Big Seneca Creeks divide it from Darnestown District. Broad Run, Horse-pen Branch, Beaver Dam Branch, and Great Seneca Creek all empty into the Potomac. On the east Little Monocacy flows north and empties into the Potomac just below the point where the Monocacy joins the Potomac. Dry Seneca Creek, Russell’s Branch, and Bucklodge Branch are in the south and southwest. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal skirts its northern and western border.

Its boundaries, as defined by the survey of 1821, are as follows: Beginning at the mouth of Monocacy and running down the Potomac, including the islands, to the mouth of Seneca, then up Seneca to Clopper’s mill, then with the line of the Second District to Frederick County line, then with said line to the beginning. This was one of the original five districts created by acts of 1798 and 1799, and its boundaries, as established by act of 1821, were not altered until 1878, when a portion of its southern territory was taken to help form Darnestown District, No. 6.

The first settlers in the district were John Haines, Cornelius Etting, Dr. Patrick Hepburn, John Norris, Richard Brightwell, Robert Peter, Jeremiah Hays, the Dawsons, Brewers, Poole, Speneses, Whites, Sellmans, Harrises, Reimsburgs, Rawlingses, Dyesons, Alnuttts, Youngs, Joneses, Chiswells, Hempstones, Metzgers, Fishes, and others.

Isaac Young was born at Kilmaine, Medley Dis-
In the fall of 1863, Isaac Young was elected to represent his county in the House of Delegates of Maryland, and re-elected in 1866 to the Senate; in 1869 he was again renominated, but declined, in consequence of ill health in his family. He was appointed by Governor Bowie a director in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and served during that executive term. He has always been most active in the cause of education, and his exertions in that behalf while in the Legislature were so appreciated and approved that he was placed upon the board of school commissioners by the suffrage of his fellow-citizens, as well as by appointment by the Legislature, and for several years has been a trustee of the Poolesville Academy. He has always been an active and charter member of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry of Poolesville, of which he was Worthy Master, and was made Lecturer of the grange at Barnesville; he was elected Worthy Master of the County Grange in 1879, and re-elected in 1880. He gave to the order the benefit of his time, talents, and experience, frequently addressing meetings and assemblies in his own county and in Frederick. As a farmer, he delighted in good cultivation, the rearing of fine stock, always procuring, as far as his means would permit, the best, and he was ever ready to give all in his power to promote the general welfare of his fellow-citizens, and he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Mr. Young is a conscientious and zealous member of the Presbyterian Church. This has been manifested since his connection with it, as he has been an elder in the church since 1856, and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

In politics he is a Democrat; strictly adhering to the principles of his party, he always voted the "ticket." He was a member of the State Convention when Tilden was nominated, and of the Congressional Convention in 1879. He has been a strong advocate of local option, making many speeches in 1880 in advocacy of that measure.

Among those connected with the early history of the district was William Darne, of "Mountain View," who removed from his home at the foot of Sugar-Loaf Mountain to Darnestown, to which he gave his name.1 Mr. Darne several times represented the county in the Legislature, and was a director in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. His farm contained about one hundred and fifty acres, watered by the Little Monocacy on the northeast, and bounded on the south and west

---

1 One of Mr. Darne's daughters married Capt. Smoot, of the navy; another, Capt. Lay, of the army; and another, Dr. Bell, of Montgomery.
by the county road, leading from Barnesville to Major Hempston’s old brick mill. The lands of the Gotts and Plummer families lay adjacent on the south, those of Abraham S. Hayes and Z. G. Harris on the east and southeast, and those of Colmore Offutt and Hanson Hayes on the north. Patrick McDade’s old mill was located on Little Monocacy, about half a mile north of “Mountain View.” McDade died about 1836.

On the old John Jay farm, over a mile from the mill, in an upper room of the two-story family dwelling, Thomas Veith taught school. He was a well-educated old gentleman, small in stature, of sharp visage, and dark, piercing eyes. He wore the old bell-crown hat and the long, drab sartout coat, without which the old gentlemen of the day could not pass in fashionable society, or think themselves fortified against the cold blasts blowing from the tall peak of Sugar-Leaf. From this old farm and school, in a direction bearing a degree or two west of north, about two miles distant, is “Braddock’s Pass,” through which the British general marched to the fort at the old furnace, where he crossed the Monocacy. From this pass along and up a deep ravine towards the old “Johnson House,” built in the days of Governor Eden, not far from the furnace and ford, which are in Frederick County, the rails of the first railroad in Maryland were laid by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company to transport stone from the quarry, at the foot of Sugar-Leaf, for the purpose of building an aqueduct over the Monocacy at its junction with the Potomac. On the road to Barnesville, at Hempstone’s brick mill, was a small stone house, 12 by 16 feet, kept by the jolly Richard Venable Morton. Near the brick mill, on the north side of Little Monocacy, stood “Old Bethlem” meeting-house. Here Revs. Basil Harry and Thomas W. Green were old-time preachers, and Daniel Price, Thomas Mulligan, and Z. G. Harris class-leaders. This old log structure fell into ruins in 1836.

Newport.—John Garrett laid out a town which he called Newport, on the west side of the mouth of the Seneca, in 1787, just above the Seneca Falls on the Potomac River, twenty-two miles above Georgetown. He disposed of the lots by lottery on Oct. 15, 1787, at five pounds per ticket. The town did not realize the hopes of its founder, and the place is now known as Seneca.

Barnesville is seventy-three miles from Baltimore, seventeen from Rockville, and one from the Metropolitan Branch Railroad, and is situated in the midst of a rich tobacco-growing region.

The site of this town, as well as Sellman’s Station and Post-office (called also Barnesville Station), one mile from Barnesville, on the Metropolitan Railroad, is a part of a tract of land surveyed for Jeremiah Hays, Dec. 10, 1747. Barnesville was created by the General Assembly in 1811, and called in honor of William Barnes, who owned land here, and who subsequently removed to Ohio and laid out the town of Barnesville, in Belmont County in that State. Mr. Barnes built the first house on the lot upon which the residence of William Hilton now stands. The second house erected was that now occupied by Mrs. Sarah Claggett, and is a weather-boarded log building. The first store was kept by Leonard Hays, and the second by John Plummer. Among the first tavern-keepers were Benjamin Tucker and William Trail. Jacob Stiers kept the first blacksmith-shop in a house now owned by Solomon Plummer, and on the lot occupied by Zachariah Lloyd. About the earliest physician was Dr. Lisle. The oldest people now living in the town are the brothers Solomon and Leonard Plummer, aged respectively eighty-one and eighty-three years. They were born in the country, a few miles from Barnesville, and were the sons of John Plummer. Solomon Plummer married a Miss Knott, daughter of one of the first settlers, and when he first remembered the place, in 1805, it had but five or six houses. John Poole had a tannery establishment where William Sellman lives about 1810, and was succeeded in the same business by Ira Elder. John Plummer settled near the site of Barnesville in 1792, and Zachariah Knott and William Barnes before that time.

One of the early inhabitants of Barnesville was Capt. James Gleeson. He served with distinction in the Revolutionary war, and was the hero of a hundred Indian battles, winning laurels under Gen. Wayne and under St. Clair in the disastrous campaign of 1792. He lived in the last house in the town on the right of the road leading northward towards the Sugar-Leaf Mountain. South of the “Old Captain” lived Silas Ward, who in 1828 was at the height of his fame. He lost his life by falling accidentally over the aqueduct at the month of the Monocacy. Next to his house was that of Frederick Nuse, who started at the “foot of Barnesville” as a dealer in furniture, but in fifteen years removed to Keokuk, Iowa, where he became the founder and builder of that city, and in the lumber business amassed a large fortune, still carried on by his son, George Ross Nuse. Two lots farther south lived Abraham S. Hays, a gentleman of the old school and magistrate for many years. He held his courts generally in his parlor, and so quiet and orderly were the sessions that his family were never disturbed by boisterous litigants nor the pleadings of the learned counsel. No one witness was allowed to hear the testimony of another. In a northern and eastern direction from Squire Hays' residence was his farm of two hundred and fifty acres. Opposite his town dwelling was his blacksmith-shop, in which his slave Old Ned was the smith. On his farm, about a furlong to the eastward of the village, stood "Hays' School-house," subsequently called Barnesville Academy. It consisted of one room only, sixty feet long by thirty feet wide, built to accommodate about one hundred scholars. Old-style desks carefully made with drawers to keep the books in safe condition were ranged around the walls. Two tin-plate stoves, made for burning wood, half the cord-stick in length, warmed the hall; shelves extended all around the upper part of the walls near the ceiling for the storage of lunch-baskets, and nails were driven in the walls close under these shelves for the hanging up of cloaks, hats, bonnets, and shawls. The principal's desk was placed at the south end of the hall. From 1830 to 1836, the halcyon days of the academy, Thomas Carr Lannan, a graduate of Belfast College, Ireland, was the principal, and for a time Mr. Rogers and Mr. McCary, two young candidates for holy orders in the Catholic Church, his assistants.

1 The two oldest residents of the town are Mrs. Mary J. Hawkins (daughter of William Trail), born there in 1823, and John W. Brown, who settled there in 1829.

Among the young ladies who graduated high in Mr. Lannan's classes were Miss Henrietta Harwood, whose home was near the mouth of the Monocacy, Miss Mary Plummer, Miss Caroline Murphy, Miss Martha Hayes, Miss Mary Nicholls, Misses Frances and Jane Trail, Sarah Ellen Hayes, Ellen Jones, Mary Pearre, Catharine Pearre, and Henrietta Wilcoxen. Among the young gentlemen who attended the academy at this period were Edward Hayes, Mor- timor Trail, Oscar Trail, Thomas Nichols, Richard Belt, Thomas Harwood, John Sellman, Gassaway Grimes, Howard Sellman, Thomas Johnson, James Pearre, Thomas Austin, Stephen Jay, Pickering White, George Pearre, David Hershey, John Hershey, Lemuel Beall, Avery Bell, William Sellman, Robert Seafell, Hamilton Anderson, King Jay, Reuben Carley, Philemon Plummer. Gassaway Grimes, Richard Thompson, and John Reid belonged to the higher Latin and Greek classes. They entered upon the study of medicine, graduated, and attained high rank in the profession. Dr. Thompson now lives in Clarkesburg, and Dr. Reed in Washington County, Md. Dr. Grimes died in early life; not long after he commenced to practice, Oscar Trail, Edward Hayes, Richard Belt, Thomas Johnson stood foremost in academic studies. Mr. Trail commenced the mercantile business in Baltimore, where he became a highly respected and successful merchant. Messrs. Hays, Belt, and Johnson embraced learned professions. George Pearre studied law in Frederick, and is now Judge Pearre, of Allegany County. John, William, and Robert Sellman were respectable and earnest scholars, and made successful business men. John removed to Baltimore, and has been a member of the City Council; Robert holds the position of inspector of flour in the same city; William, who still lives in Montgomery, has represented it in the Maryland Senate.

John Hershey won all the Latin and Greek prizes, and became an eloquent divine. Another pupil was Hon. Allen Bowie Davis, who before eighteen years of age was the teacher at Murphy's and Konem- burg's school-houses, not far from each other, on the northeastern slope of Sugar-Leaf Mountain, where he succeeded Thomas Ponder and Elisha M. Swift.

About 1836, Mr. Lannan, the principal of Barnesville Academy, relinquished the school and removed to Missouri, where he remained a number of years. Not realizing his anticipations in the then far West, he returned to Montgomery, and died a few years since at Poolesville.

Among those whose names appear in the early history of the district is that of Jonathan Willson. The "Willson family" came originally from Prince George's County, and either before or shortly after their arrival in Montgomery became the owners of a tract of land (about nine hundred and fifty acres) near what is now the division line between Montgomery and Frederick Counties. The tract still bears the name then given to it, "Willson's Inheritance," and its beginning, a large flat stone full four feet high, forms a conspicuous object on the left of the present road from Hyattstown to Barnesville. The tract is now owned by the Hershey family, John Sellman, and perhaps others. Here lived one hundred years ago Jonathan Willson, whose name appears as a member of the State Legislature when the county of Montgomery was formed. He almost accomplished a centennial in his own person, having lived to the age of ninety-eight years and a few months, the immediate cause of his death even then being the result of an accident. The family tradition is that he was a man of much intelligence, energy of character, and influence. His only son, John, who inherited the estate, lived in the house now occupied by C. R. Hershey. He also lived to the advanced age of ninety-three.

John had four sons and a daughter, who married a Dr. Magruder and became the mother of the late Dr. William B. Magruder, near Brookville, and of other children, ten in all, whose descendants are numerous and widely scattered. Of the sons, the eldest, John, lived and died on the paternal acres, a quiet, highly-esteemed "gentleman of the olden times" and a bachelor. He died in 1849, aged eighty-nine. The second son, Thomas P., settled in Rockville, was for many years a prominent merchant there, and died at that place about the year 1832. His descendants are now living in Frederick City and County. The fourth son, Charles, lived for many years in Medley District, first as a merchant at Poolesville, then on a farm which he purchased not far from the mouth of the Monocacy, which is now owned by the White family, and finally moved to the southern part of Kentucky, where he died. His descendants are to be found in Tennessee, Virginia, and Baltimore County, in this State. The third, William, very early in life engaged in merchandising in Clarke's burg, and continued the business uninterruptedly at the same stand for about forty-five years, dying in 1859, at the age of eighty-three. He married the eldest daughter of John Clark, one of the oldest residents of the village (which was named after him), and to his business upon his death William Willson succeeded. Leonidas Willson, his son, resides in Clarke's burg.

This Mr. Clark was the father of two sons, John and Nelson, who very early in life—John not yet being of adult age—removed from their native village to Baltimore, and immediately went into business on their own account, were each more than ordinarily successful, and died in the possession of considerable property, the fruit of energy, skill, and enterprise. Nelson, the younger of the two, died about twenty-four years since, in the prime of life, married, but without children. John died in 1867, at the age of seventy-four. He was singularly unfortunate in the death of his children. Of a family of nine, all of whom with one exception attained adult age, and several married, he had buried all several years before his death. After providing well for his grandchildren, all of whom are now living in Baltimore or its vicinity, and making other bequests, he left property to the value of half a million of dollars to a beneficiary society which at his instance had been incorporated in connection with St. John's Church of Baltimore. The family name became extinct with him, only female branches surviving.

Another prominent family in this district is that of the Gotts.

Benjamin Collinson Gott resides upon the farm where he was born, May 28, 1814. His father, Richard, was born March 25, 1770, in Anne Arundel County, from which locality he came with his father, Richard, to the present Gott farm, in Montgomery County, in 1792, since which time the property has been in possession of a Gott. Richard Gott the younger was a lieutenent in the war of 1812. He married Sarah Collinson, of Anne Arundel County, and became the father of thirteen children, of whom eleven grew to maturity. The living are Benjamin C., Thomas N., Mary C. White, and Elizabeth Ann Gott. Losing his wife by death, Richard Gott married for his second consort Miss Mackenzie, whose father was an officer in the United States navy. She died before her husband, whose death occurred in 1859, after he had passed his eighty-third birthday. By the second marriage there were no children. Benjamin C. Gott was bred a farmer, and a farmer has continued to be all his days. The tract of seven hundred acres left by his father he has increased to eight hundred and fifty. The stone house his father built in 1812, Benjamin Gott improved and enlarged and still occupies.

Mr. Gott has been married twice. His first wife was Susan E., daughter of George Darby, of Montg-mery County. The two surviving of the three children of that marriage are George R. Gott, an attorney-at-law in Baltimore, and the wife of Dr. Stephen Beard, of Prince George's County. Mrs. Gott died May 28, 1855, and May 18, 1858, Mr. Gott married Mary R., daughter of William Cissell, of Montgomery County, where she was born, May 17, 1837. William Cissell lives near Poolesville.

Eight of the ten children born of the second mar-rriage survive, seven of the eight being sons. Benjamin Gott has long enjoyed the distinction of being one of Montgomery County's representative farmers, and in matters appertaining to the field of advanced and profitable agriculture is a practical exponent and recognized authority. In his own quiet way, he makes his influence and example felt in the community to much better purpose perhaps than if he chose to seek a similar effect through the method of public life, for be it understood that his tastes run not in the last-named direction. Early a Whig and now a Democrat, he has always believed in a watchful interest in the government of affairs, local and national, but he is no lover of office. The only office he ever held was that of county commissioner, to which he was chosen, against his will, in 1864.

St. Mary's Catholic Church.—This church was organized and the edifice built in 1808, under the supervision of Father Plunkett, who then had charge of the mission, embracing the whole county. The present church building is the original structure with additions made at various times. This church was under the charge of the priests resident at Rockville until 1869, when the present pastor, Rev. J. S. Birch, took charge of it. He also has St. Rose's Church under his care, and is the first resident priest and pastor of both. Father Birch, since his residence here, has completed the church edifice and parsonage, and shortly after his arrival had St. Mary's Hall built, which is used as a parochial school. The church is a solid and elegant oak building.

The ground on which the church property stands was a donation from Zachariah Knott, an early settler in the district. The membership of the church from its organization in 1808 has been almost entirely English.

Among the interments in the church cemetery are

James Moore, born June 6, 1789, died Aug. 18, 1879.
Columbus F. Wallace, died Feb. 7, 1862, aged 25.
Abigail Higgins, born in Cloyne, County Cork, Ireland, died Oct. 22, 1833, aged 25.
Zachariah Knott, died Nov. 23, 1820, aged 70.
William Edelin, died May 8, 1841, aged 56.
Henry Jones, born March 20, 1778, died Dec. 3, 1839; and his wife, Eleanor, born Aug. 3, 1778, died April 23, 1814.
John Beall, of L., born Dec. 25, 1781, died Aug. 26, 1831; and Charlotte, his wife, born Feb. 18, 1787, died Jan. 23, 1867; and their son, John R. Beall, born Sept. 8, 1823, and died Sept. 19, 1845.
Peter Mattoe, born in County Down, Ireland, died July 25, 1855, aged 55.
Lloyd S. Jones, born Aug. 4, 1807, died Feb. 9, 1863.
Sallie E., wife of Geo. H. Clements, died July 14, 1871, aged 52.
Maria, wife of John Carlin, born Sept. 5, 1808, died Jan. 5, 1879.
Mary E., wife of Thomas Trundle, born Feb. 21, 1836, died May 9, 1862.
Hezekiah W. Trundle, born March 29, 1810, died April 20, 1863; and his wife, Emily A., born Dec. 21, 1814, died Nov. 7, 1878.
Otto T. Austin, born April 15, 1833, died Feb. 6, 1860.
Mary E., wife of Thomas Ward, died May 5, 1875, aged 55.
Robert T. Power, native of County Downan, town of Waterford, Ireland, died May 29, 1851, aged 58.
Rebecca, wife of George Redmond, and daughter of William Murphy, died Sept. 26, 1829, aged 20.
Anna Murphy, died May 29, 1852, aged 70.
Joanna V., wife of Stephen R. Austin, died July 15, 1875, aged 20.
Teresa, wife of Brook Jones, born 1785, died July 20, 1876; and her husband, died July 19, 1856, aged 73.
Mary A. Jones, born April 10, 1814, died April 19, 1864.
Mary R., wife of James B. Reid, died Jan. 28, 1832, aged 68.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This two-story frame edifice was built in 1843. Its present pastor is Rev. Randolph R. Murphy. In the burying-ground in the rear are interred Leonard Hays, born July 20, 1793, died April 24, 1861; and Eliza Hays, born June 28, 1807, died July 21, 1874.

Elisha Howard, died April 27, 1874, aged 84; and his wife, Eleanor, born July 12, 1791, died Feb. 8, 1873.
Laurea V., wife of Richard T. Pyles, born Nov. 6, 1842, died Sept. 17, 1863.
Elizabeth M. Hawkins, died June 10, 1867, aged 22.
Jacob Nichols, born Oct. 2, 1788, died Nov. 25, 1857; and his wife, Sarah, born Feb. 19, 1798, died April 27, 1867.
Sarah Ellen, wife of Benjamin S. White, and daughter of Jacob and Sarah Nichols, died May 15, 1856, aged 26.
Hattie Brown, born Jan. 28, 1801, died Dec. 28, 1871; and his wife, Deborah, died Feb. 16, 1866, aged 75.
Abigail, wife of William Trail, born June 5, 1799, died May 10, 1857.

Thomas L. Hays, born Nov. 20, 1816, died Oct. 1, 1873.
Sarah A. Plummer, born Sept. 29, 1820, died Feb. 26, 1873.
Mary Plummer, born May 4, 1817, died June 18, 1874.
Isaac Bell, of N. Y., died Aug. 17, 1841, aged 55; of English descent, and his mother's maiden name was Poole.
John Smith, born Dec. 18, 1801, died July 19, 1872.
Elizabeth, wife of Jacob Feaster, died July 30, 1858, aged 79.
Sarah A. Plummer, died July 19, 1856, aged 55.
Mary Anne, wife of Colmore Ottou, born Feb. 6, 1788, died Sept. 2, 1845; and her husband, died Feb. 7, 1855, aged 67.
Willimine Harris, died Jan. 22, 1848, aged 54.
James P. Wado, born Aug. 7, 1825, died April 15, 1858.
James Edelin, born March 27, 1777, died March 21, 1822; and his wife, Eleanor, born Nov. 18, 1786, died Sept. 28, 1832.

Baptist Church.—Its edifice, a two-story frame building, was erected about 1869. Its pastor is Rev. D. E. Hatcher.

Protestant Episcopal Church.—This church building, a frame structure, was erected a few years ago, and is situated near the town on the road from Sellman's Station. Its pastor is Rev. H. Thomas, of Poolesville.

The Hayes Family Burying-Ground.—This graveyard is on land now owned by John W. Brown.

Leonard Hayes, died Sept. 14, 1823, aged 63; and his wife, Eleanor, Oct. 29, 1833, aged 73.
Samuel S. Hayes, born April 2, 1875; died Sept. 5, 1857; and his wife, Anna, born Sept. 7, 1796, died March 8, 1853; Sarah, their daughter, born Dec. 28, 1829, died Jan. 17, 1847.
Martha M. Nichols, daughter of S. S. Hayes, and granddaughter of Leonard Hayes, died Sept. 1, 1810, aged 17.

Barnesville Grange, No. 87.—This grange of Patrons of Husbandry was very early instituted. Its Master is E. J. Chiswell, and Secretary Otho Hayes.
R T. Pyles is postmaster at Barnesville; the physicians are Drs. G. W. Bowlen and R. Vinton Wood.

Prominent at an early day among the residents of Barnesville and its vicinity was the Saffell family. W. T. R. Saffell, the author and historian, was born Sept. 18, 1818, about two miles south of Barnesville, on a farm called "Knott's Place," where his father, Lameck Saffell, resided at the time. Among the venerable residents in the vicinity at that period were William Darne, Dr. S. N. C. White, William Poole, Abraham S. Hayes, William Bennett, Brook Jones, Francis C. Clopper, Joseph I. Johnson, Nathan Hempstone, Jacob Nicholls, Horatio Trundle, Hezekiah Trundle, Richard Harding, William Trail, Thos. C. Lannan, the esteemed schoolmaster, Rev. Thos. Green, Dr. Horatio Willson, William Willson, and Rev. Basil Barry.

Charles Saffell, a Revolutionary soldier and pensioner, lived on a farm five miles north of Rockville, near Gaithersburg. He died there in 1837, at the age of ninety years. At the beginning of the Revolution he lived with his father, a French musician, in Prince George's County. From that county he marched to Annapolis and joined the regiment of the Maryland Flying Camp under command of Gen. Rezin Beall, and sailing to the Head of Elk, he marched northward in the company commanded by John Hawkins Lowe. Charles was a drummer, fifer, and bugler at the battles of Long Island, Fort Washington, Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. He was an auctioneer, and in later days visited all parts of the country in that capacity. As a violinist, also, he amused himself in his feeble old age, and often reproduced the melodies of the Revolution.

Poolesville is situated on a portion of a survey made to Robert Peter, May 17, 1784, containing one thousand seven hundred and ninety six acres, and known as "The Resurvey on part of Forest."

The Peter family originally came from Scotland, where they possessed considerable landed estates. Robert Peter, who emigrated to this county some time during the last century, was born in 1726, at Crossbasket Castle, Lanarkshire, Scotland, and died at his residence in Georgetown in 1806. Mr. Peter settled at Georgetown and was its first mayor, serving as such from 1789 to 1798. He was one of the younger sons of Thomas Peter, of Crossbasket, by Jane Dunlop, daughter of James Dunlop, of garnkirk. James Dunlop's wife was Lillias Campbell, of Blytheswood, in Lanarkshire. Thomas Peter, father of Robert, was a younger son of Walter Peter, of Chapel Hall, in Mearnsshire, in the northeast of Scotland, whose ancestors owned the estate from the Nor-adier-generalship, which the condition of his private affairs compelled him to decline; but in 1813 he volunteered his services and commanded a battalion of flying artillery. Among the privates in this battalion were George Peabody and Francis Scott Key, besides several others who afterwards became distinguished citizens. In writing of this battalion, W. W. Corcoran, the eminent banker, says the list of its members represented the wealth, worth, and talent of the town at that time. Previous to the war of 1812, Maj. Peter accompanied Gen. Wilkinson in the organization of the Territorial government of Missouri, leaving Washington April 1, 1805, and arriving at St. Louis on the 4th of July following. Maj. (then Lieut.) Peter established the first cantonment on the banks of the Missouri, at Bellefontaine, and fired the first salute on the return of Lewis and Clarke from their expedition to the Pacific. He also served under Gen. Wilkinson at New Orleans during Gov. Claiborne's administration, before Louisiana was admitted into the Union. His army life at St. Louis and New Orleans, and also at Niagara and Fort Columbus, N. Y., was the theme of many interesting and vivid reminiscences. Maj. Peter was also present as a witness at the trial of Aaron Burr.

In 1815 he was elected to Congress from the Sixth District of Maryland, but his seat was contested on the ground that he was not a resident of the congressional district. At that time he was a resident of Georgetown and a member of the Town Council, but had large farms in Maryland. The House of Representatives, however, decided in his favor, and admitted him to his seat. He was the first Democrat ever elected to Congress from the Sixth District of Maryland, and was re-elected in 1817, and again in 1828. He served several terms in the State Legislature, and in 1855 was elected by the Democratic party a Commissioner of Public Works for the State of Maryland. He was a man six feet in height, straight as an arrow, and of splendid physique. The portrait accompanying this sketch is copied from an original by St. Memin, and was taken when he was about twenty-five years of age. He always kept open house, his manner was always polite, dignified, and courteous, and his hospitable home was scarcely ever without company. He was married three times. His first wife was Ann Plater, of Maryland; his second, Agnes Freeland; and his third, Sarah Worlfeet Freeland, of Petersburg, Va. Maj. Peter was one of the largest land-owners and farmers in Montgomery County, and carried on these farms up to the date of his death, which occurred at Montanverd near Darnestown, June 22, 1861. When he died, Maj. Peter was nearly eighty-two. Dr. Armistead Peter, a distinguished physician at Georgetown, D. C., and Hon. George Peter, of Montgomery County, are his sons.

In 1804 Poolesville comprised only three or four houses, occupied by the families of John Poole, Melton, and Campbell. The first house was erected in 1793 by John Poole, from whom the town received its name. He was the first merchant in the vicinity, and kept his store in his dwelling-house. The Melton family occupied the house now used by Wm. Poole. Campbell, who was a cabinet-maker, lived on the road near the millinery-shop of Mrs. Rice; the house is not in existence, having been destroyed some years ago.

The house which is now occupied by Mr. Cator was then used as a tavern and kept by a Mr. Riney, who was succeeded in the management by Mr. Fowler, who was followed by Mr. Taylor. Mr. Powell was the shoemaker, and Melton the tailor. Dr. Lyles was the first physician, and resided a short distance from the village. A Mr. Herbert was the pioneer schoolmaster, and taught in the old log school-house which stood upon the farm now owned by Dr. Gotts. Mr. Jarbel was his successor; they were both residents of the town. The Benson family, quite prominent in the early history of the district, resided upon the farm which is now occupied by Mr. Steffler.

A town hall and public-school building was erected a few years prior to the late civil war, but was destroyed by fire. The first postmaster of the town was Dennis Locklin, who was succeeded by Philip Reed, Wm. Metzgar, and Samuel Cator, who has served in that capacity for twelve years.

Among the educational institutions of Poolesville is the Briarley Hall Boarding and Day School for young ladies. It was established in 1873, and is situated about three-fourths of a mile from the town. The principals are Mrs. M. E. and Miss W. E. Porter.

Presbyterian Church.—The Presbyterian Church of Poolesville was organized April 16, 1817. It consisted at first of only two members, Robert J. Graff and Mrs. Lyles, but others rapidly united with it. Rev. C. H. Nourse was instrumental in effecting the organization of the church, and continued in charge of it ten years. It was then served for several years by Rev. H. R. Smith, of Leesburg. During the war the regular services were much interrupted. For a time Rev. D. Motzer, of Darnestown, preached in the church. In the spring of 1868, Rev. C. N. Campbell, of Charlestown, W. Va., was invited to the church, and after preaching about one year was regularly installed pastor, and still continues in charge of the congregation. The fine church edifice was erected in 1848. The church now numbers thirty-four members. Robert J. Graff was the first elder. The elders at the present time are Isaac Young and Thomas Milford, and the deacons William Shafer and Eugene Hughes.

Baptist Church.—On Nov. 5, 1860, the following persons, who had been members of the Rockville Baptist Church, withdrew and formed a congregation in Poolesville: M. F. Williams, Emma Higgins, M. J. Hoskinson, M. J. Trundle, Wm. F. Jones, Greenbury Griffin, P. L. Trundle, R. P. Spates, and J. P. Bowie. W. T. Jones was chosen deacon, and J. P. Bowie, clerk. The church was incorporated Feb. 13, 1864, with the following gentlemen as incorporators: Wm. F. Jones, George D. Powell, John W. Booth, Jamer H. Money, James N. Miles. The congregation worshiped in the Presbyterian church until 1864, when a brick edifice, twenty-five by forty feet, was erected, which was dedicated on May 28, 1865, Mr. G. N. Samson, of Columbian College, delivering the dedicatory sermon, assisted by Elders White and G. F. Adams. The cost of this neat structure was about twelve hundred dollars. In September, 1865, Elder White, after having served the church as its minister since its organization, resigned. He had been untiring in his efforts to promote the interests of his charge, and his departure was greatly regretted. H. J. Chandler, of Norfolk, Va., was his successor, and occupied the pulpit until 1869. Mr. Davis followed him, but only remained a short time. The church was without a pastor for some time, but the vacancy was finally filled by Rev. Mr. Woodson, who was followed by Mr. Kearns. In 1876, C. L. Any began his pastorate, which, terminated by the succession of Mr. Hatcher, Nov. 1, 1880. The congregation now numbers about fifteen members. The deacon is Wm. T. Odds, and the clerk J. M. Meyers.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This congregation, which is the pioneer church of all the denominations in this vicinity, was formed about 1816. Their church was erected in 1826, and is still standing, although it has several times been remodeled and repaired. The congregation was very prosperous and in an extremely flourishing condition until its division in 1866. Among the pastors of the church have been Rev. Mr. Hempfield, Rev. John A. Collins, Rev. Horace Holland, Rev. John W. Stout, Rev. Mr. Brown, Rev. Mr. Shipley, and Revs. William Hank, Robert Bean, John Lanhan, Gilbert, Phelps, Browning, Balaska, and Morgan. The steward of the church at present is Wm. Cissell; the trustees are Wm. Cissell, Samuel C. Cator, Richard Ashland. The congregation numbers about twelve. Rev. Mr. Murphy is the pastor.

The graveyard surrounding the church contains the remains of

A. P. Eversole, born April 27, 1836, died Aug. 13, 1864.
Mary E. Hyatt, died March 27, 1854, aged 26 years.
George F. Hughes, died Jan. 3, 1862.
John W. Hughes, died July 12, 1855, aged 66.
Ann West, wife of James W. Reed, died July 6, 1862, aged 32.
R. P. Spates, born Dec. 25, 1792, died March 3, 1863; America, his wife, born 1795, died July 19, 1855.
Ellen Hieer, born in Shepherdstown, Sept. 4, 1808, died June 19, 1850.
Daniel Heffer, born 1782, died June 29, 1801.
Jane Hughes, died Aug. 7, 1857, aged 57.
Ruth Eagle, born 1817, died 1839.
Mary E. Gooley, born 1825, died 1846.
Elizabeth R. Leipley, born July 17, 1827, died Sept. 29, 1847.
Margaret A. D., wife of George N. Leipley, died Jan. 26, 1859, aged 31.

Methodist Episcopal Church South.—This congregation was formed on the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1866. Prominent among the principal promoters of this church at that time were Ludwick Young, George Hughes, William Hughes, and John O. Merchant. The congregation at its first establishment numbered about twenty-four members, and was under the charge of Rev. John P. Hall. George Donohue and B. F. Reed were the stewards. They worshiped in the Baptist church until the erection of their own church in 1867. This church was dedicated in May, 1868, under the auspices of Samuel Register, the presiding elder of Baltimore. It is a neat frame structure, situated in the southwest part of the town, and cost about $1500. Previous to the erection of the church the congregation had increased to between twenty-five and thirty members, and after its completion and on the succession of Rev. Robert Smith to the pulpit increased to fifty members. Mr. Smith, who delivered his first sermon in 1868, was assisted during his two years of service by Rufus Willson, a young minister. In 1870, Benjamin F. Ball was appointed to this charge, and in 1872 was followed by Rev. Mr. Tebbis, who in turn was succeeded by Mr. McDonald in 1874. Rev. William Wade was the next pastor, and Rev. Mr. Lloyd assisted him in his duties. Rev. Mr. Gover, assisted by Mr. Willson, occupied the pulpit until the present minister, Rev. Mr. Watts, began his pastorate in 1880. The church numbers sixty members, and under its supervision is a large Sunday-school superintended by Mr. Devilbiss. The stewards of the church are Thomas Hoskinson and Etta Mouldin. The church belongs to the Montgomery Circuit.

St. Peter’s Parish.—The congregation of St. Peter’s was organized before or during the Revolutionary war, and prayers for peace were offered in the church during that memorable period. In May, 1799, the following gentlemen were chosen vestrymen: John Poole, Jr., George B. Hayes, John White, Alexander Whitaker, Maj. John Harwood, Charles Crabb, Thomas Brown, and Col. David Luckett. Hugh Smith Dunn and Thomas Veatch, Jr., wardens; William Dunn, register. At their meeting May 13, 1799, a request was sent to Right Rev. T. J. Clagett to recommend a minister to the parish. John Poole was appointed to officiate as reader until the appointment of a minister.

On the 18th of August, 1799, Rev. Thomas Scott accepted a call and preached his first sermon to the congregation. He was employed at a salary of eighty-five pounds for one year from that date. He resigned in 1802, and the charge remained vacant until April 2, 1804, when the vestry made a contract with Rev. John Fowler Reynolds "to pay him for performing divine service, at the expiration of one year, the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars." During the vacancy the church was repaired and remodeled. Rev. Thomas Reed was the next pastor. In 1810, Rev. John Chandler was engaged, his term expiring in 1812, when, on July 26, 1819, Rev. William Armstrong began his pastorate. Rev. Spencer Wall preached here in 1821. In 1822 the congregation gave its support to the establishment of a theological seminary, a question which was then deeply agitating the Episcopal Church. During Mr. Armstrong’s pastorate in 1823 a vestry-room was added to the church. Rev. Allen Mervin was the pastor in 1833, Rev. Mr. Bean in 1834, Rev. Joseph Tropnell in 1836, Rev. A. S. Colton in 1849, Rev. William Tropnell in 1860, followed by Rev. D. D. McCabe, Rev. John Towles, and the present pastor, Rev. Henry Thomas, who began his duties in 1878. The congregation numbers about fifty members. The wardens are Wallace Poole and N. Talbott; Vestrymen, F. S. Poole, John Jones, Dr. Thomas Schaeffer, L. I. Hayes, Dr. Hellen, R. T. Pyles, Thomas Frye; Thomas Story; Register, Dr. B. W. Walling. The original church edifice stood on what is now called Monocacy Cemetery.

Poolesville Lodge, No. 115, I. O. O. F.—This lodge of I. O. O. F. was instituted on Thursday, July 8, 1869. The instituting ceremonies were conducted by Joseph B. Escaville, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Maryland. Its first officers were: N. G., Joseph W. Miles; V. G., R. T. Hillard; Sec., Dr. R. T. Gott; Treas., John R. Grimes. It has now surrendered its charter.

Among the prominent citizens residing in the neighborhood of Poolesville is William Augustus Schaeffer, of "Pleasant Grove." Mr. Schaeffer was born Jan. 31, 1831, near Boonsborough, Washington Co., of which county his father, Leonard Schaeffer, was likewise a native, the birth of the latter occurring Dec. 23, 1778. Leonard Schaeffer married (1806) Mary, daughter of Frederick Schroder, one of the earliest settlers in Funkstown. Leonard Schaeffer was for a number of years a successful merchant, and later in life was a farmer and miller. He died April 5, 1832; his widow, Sept. 20, 1853. They had fourteen children. The living are Gustavus, in Frederick County; Thomas and William A., of Montgomery County; Mrs. Ann Dorsey, of Baltimore; and Mrs. Caroline Hoffman, of Oregon.

William A. Schaeffer was but one year old when his father died, and to his mother’s careful and excellent training he was indebted for the sterling principles that supported his struggling footsteps in early life and set him at last upon a sure foundation, from which he evolved the structure of a useful and profitable after-life. He was bred to farming pursuits, and obtained but a brief school experience. At the age of sixteen he chose to begin the task of supporting himself, and obtaining employment as clerk in a store in Frederick, where he remained four years. At the age of twenty he embarked in mercantile trade on his own account, at Utica Mills, Frederick Co., and successfully held his way as a merchant until 1857. In that year he disposed of his store business and bought a small unimproved farm near Utica Mills. That property he labored upon with industrious determination to increase its value, and succeeded so well that at the end of twelve years he sold it for just double the money it had cost him. He then purchased the fine farm tract known as Pleasant Grove (near Poolesville), containing about three hundred and ten acres, and thereon has since had his home. To the improvement of his estate Mr. Schaeffer has given his close attention, and in the pursuit of his business cares has found neither time nor desire to seek public distinction by way of political strife or clamor for office. Sept. 13, 1853, he was married, by Rev. Jesse Shreve, to Emily Ann, daughter of John P. Gallion, a native of Harford County, Md., where. he was born Jan. 17, 1800. His father and mother were natives of England. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Joshua Brown, of German descent. John P. Gallion died in Frederick County in 1876, sixteen years after the death of his wife. Their living sons and daughters are Mrs. W. A. Schaeffner, Mrs. Mary Cramer, Albert W. Gallion, and George F. Gallion. Of Mr. and Mrs. Schaeffner's children, those surviving are William L., Frank G., Elizabeth A., Mary N., and Thomas W.

Monocacy Cemetery and Beallsville.—Monocacy Cemetery was laid out upon the site of "Old St. Peter's Church," or, as it was frequently called, "Old Monocacy Chapel," an ante-Revolutionary relic and time-honored place of public worship, which must have been one of the first ever built in the State, as stones erected to the memory of the dead in the churchyard date back as far as 1735. Old St. Peter's church was built about the year 1737, was torn down and rebuilt on the same spot, and at the breaking out of the late civil war, in a very fair state of preservation, was used and occupied for religious purposes.

During the war the Federal cavalry frequently stalled their horses in it, burnt up the seats and weather-boarding, and otherwise damaged the building so as to render it unfit for service. Under these circumstances the vestry transferred their grounds to several public-spirited gentlemen to be used in common with other land adjacent purchased by them as a public cemetery, comprising about nine acres of land. In January, 1872, the association was chartered as "The Monocacy Cemetery Society of Montgomery County," with F. S. Poole, Dr. N. Brewer, W. W. Poole, Howard Griffith, N. W. Allnutt, John A. Jones, and Isaac Young as incorporators. At a subsequent election of the lot-holders a board of managers were elected, with Dr. N. Brewer as president and Isaac Young secretary and treasurer, which positions they still hold, with the same gentlemen above named as managers. This cemetery is located at Beallsville, a thriving village about two and a half miles from Barnesville Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, some distance from Poolesville and the mouth of Monocacy River.

Among the graves in the cemetery are the following:

John Cross, died Sept. 13, 1838, aged 25 years, 7 months, and 23 days.

Hannah Lawrence, born Dec. 25, 1784, died Feb. 25, 1865.

Francis Bostin, died July 4, 1829, aged 18.

Mary White, consort of Capt. James White, of Montgomery County.

William T. Johnson, born Feb. 17, 1818, died July 18, 1861.

Sarah Ann, his wife, died Aug. 3, 1856, aged 62.

Alonzo Sellman, born Sept. 17, 1844, died Oct. 27, 1878.

Wallace Sellman, born Nov. 12, 1842, died May 22, 1863.

Mary, consort of Capt. Clement T. Hillery, died June 20, 1816, aged 22.

James S. Pleasant, died Oct. 6, 1863, aged 46.

Elisha Williams, died at Longwood, Sept. 1, 1854, aged 76.

Warren King, born Jan. 31, 1794, died June 12, 1871.

John D. Poole, born Sept. 4, 1828, died June 6, 1876.

John Seringer, died November, 1839, aged 23.

Margaret A., wife of H. J. Norris, died July 9, 1881, aged 38.

Mrs. Harriet E. Vinson, died Sept. 16, 1850, aged 38.

Mary A. Benson, born Feb. 23, 1833, died June 1, 1872.

Mrs. Anna Vinson, died May 4, 1862, aged 73.

Sarah Ann Gunner, died Oct. 31, 1842, aged 25.

Rev. T. Dale, died Feb. 6, 1822, aged 86.

John Douglass, of Castlewest, Wigtounshire, Scotland, died Nov. 21, 1832, aged 56.

Mary Cross, born Jan. 22, 1812; died Aug. 8, 1855.

John Cross, born Aug. 25, 1825, died Oct. 4, 1854.

Mrs. Mary Cross, died Feb. 6, 1845, aged 52.

Joseph Thomas Cross, died Aug. 4, 1842, aged 25 years, 4 months.

William Arpilton Cady, died April, 1861, aged 42.

John S. Muiny, died March 8, 1847, aged 48.

Benjamin Poole, died Dec. 6, 1843, aged 71; Ann W., his wife, died Oct. 4, 1852, aged 58.

Dorocea Hammotree, died Feb. 21, 1856, aged 37.

John Manly, died Nov. 25, 1816, aged 64; Mary, his wife, died June 18, 1823, aged 52.

Henry W. Talbott, born Nov. 12, 1789, died Feb. 7, 1859.

Solomon Davis, died July 10, 1822, aged 48.

Robert Wilson, born Sept. 13, 1862, died March 4, 1853.

Eleanor, his wife, born July 21, 1775, died August, 1851.

Pannie E. Poole, born March 31, 1840, died March 11, 1860.

Ruth, his wife, died March 11, 1864, aged 74.

Henrietta Dawson, died March 31, 1855, aged 76.

Henrietta Dayne, born March 24, 1818, died March 17, 1877.

Elizabeth Allnutt, died Aug. 6, 1872, aged 84 years, 9 days.

John R. Hall, born March 29, 1822, died June 9, 1880.

Gerhard Metzgar, born March 2, 1810, died Sept. 5, 1814.

Amy Robertson, died March 9, 1860, aged 70.

William D. Poole, born Aug. 8, 1808, died April 3, 1869; Rebecca, his wife, born Dec. 29, 1846, aged 71 years, 8 months.

James N. Allnutt, died June 1, 1854, aged 63; B. A., his wife, died Feb. 27, 1874, aged 64.

Thomas F. Chitwell, born Sept. 10, 1810, died May 7, 1851.

Mary E. Chitwell, born March 31, 1810, died Jan. 27, 1873.

William Poole, died June 29, 1875, aged 91.

Dr. Thomas Poole, died March 17, 1879, aged 66; Sarah A. E. Willson, his wife, born April 15, 1808, died June 21, 1844; Reginald, their son, died April 11, 1861, aged 28 years, 1 month, 7 days.
Griffith, R. Fisher, died April 17, 1802, aged 43 years, 2 months, 24 days.

Jos. H. Dawson, died March 29, 1857, aged 21 years, 11 months, 20 days. Robert T. Dawson, died Sept. 11, 1874, aged 30 years, 2 months, 14 days.

Bennoni Dawson, died Jan. 11, 1857, aged 53 years, 2 months, 19 days. Sarah, his wife, died April 17, 1879. Jesse Vears, died March 19, 1871, aged 77. Sophia Vears, died Dec. 28, 1875, aged 64. Molley Vears, died Jan. 25, 1877, aged 28.

Benjamin F. Reed, died Aug. 20, 1874, aged 39 years, 11 months. Warner Bollinger, born April 18, 1814, died Nov. 15, 1877.

Mary, his wife, died Oct. 25, 1879, aged 66. Samuel Young, died Oct. 18, 1877, aged 69. Henrietta, wife of Peter Stang, born Dec. 9, 1853, died Sept. 13, 1877.

R. G. White, died Jan. 3, 1879, aged 52 years, 2 months, 17 days.

H. Henderson White, died July 1, 1862, aged 31 years, 8 months, 18 days.

Sarah White Riebel, died Jan. 19, 1880. Martha, wife of Mrs. Nicholas Brevier, and daughter of W. W. Williams, Esq., died March 2, 1854, aged 25 years, 11 months.

Virgil M. Hickerson, died March 24, 1880, aged 22. William Jones, born Jan. 21, 1800, died June 5, 1876. Morgan Jones, born May 12, 1802, died September, 1876. Deo. A. Hoskinson, died Oct. 26, 1875, aged 49 years, 5 months, 27 days.

Beallsville.—This village is eighteen miles from Rockville, seventy from Baltimore, and three and a half from Sellman’s Station. The place was first called Beall’s Cross-roads. In 1872, John A. Belt opened a store here, and in 1878 was succeeded by Chiswell & Davis. The physicians are Drs. B. W. Walling, John W. Aylor, and R. T. Gott, and the postmaster, F. M. Griffith.

Among the best-known citizens in this neighborhood is Hon. Howard Griffith. Mr. Griffith is a gentleman of high character, of much practical ability, and of considerable experience in public affairs. A farmer by occupation, and taking great interest in the advancement of agricultural prosperity, he has been called on to serve in several public capacities. He was born March 20, 1821, near Goshen, Montgomery Co., Md., and resides near Beallsville, Montgomery Co., Md. He is the son of the late Maj. Greenbury Griffith, who commanded the Alexandria Artillery in the war of 1812, and was born near Goshen, May 20, 1787. His mother’s maiden name was Prudence Jones, born Nov. 5, 1796, in Washington City, and now living, in her eighty-sixth year. His paternal grandfather was the late Howard Griffith, and his great-grandfather was the late Greenbury Griffith. His maternal grandfather was Charles Jones, of Ireland, who, espousing the cause of American independence, raised an Irish brigade, and fought gallantly in the American cause. Jan. 12, 1847, he married Sarah Newton Chiswell, a daughter of Capt. Wm. Chiswell, for many years county surveyor of Montgomery County. Her mother was Sarah, the daughter of Col. George W. F. Fletchall, of Montgomery County. There were four children by this marriage,—Charles G. and Julia, each married, and Georgiana and William, unmarried. On the 24th December, 1878, he married Angelica, the daughter of the late John Young, near Poolesville, in Montgomery County. He was educated at Goshen Seminary, under Prof. Wm. Musser. His family, on both sides of his ancestors, has been always connected with the Baptist Church. His maternal great-grandfather came from England to Providence Plantation with Roger Williams. He has represented his county in the Legislature in the sessions of 1860, and the extra session of 1861, and in 1876 and 1878. His politics have always been those of a Democrat, and so were those of his parents. By occupation he is a farmer and cattle broker, and he has met with very fair success in his business.

Dawsonville.—This place, named after the Dawson family, one of the oldest and most wealthy in the district, is four and a half miles from Boyd’s Station. Pleasant Hill Lodge, No. 97, I. O. O. F., has just been removed here from Darnestown. Of Bethel and Seneca Baptist Churches, situated in the vicinity, Revs. Charles Yates, E. B. Wynn, Sr., and M. Urner are pastors. Dr. N. S. White is the physician; A. A. Williams, merchant; and H. C. Allnutt, postmaster.

The Allnotts are the largest landed proprietors in the district. Since the year 1750 the name has been identified with the history of what is now known as Montgomery County, and since that time too the land upon which the first of the name settled in the county has been in possession of his descendants. The progenitor of the family in Montgomery was James Allnutt, who came hither from Prince George’s as early as, if not before, 1750, and made his home in the wilderness near the present site of Dawsonville. For his first wife he married Miss Lawrence, and for his second Miss Coberth. There were three sons by both marriages,—Lawrence, who married Eleanor Dawson; James, who married Belinda Dawson; and Jesse, who took Eleanor Chiswell to wife. The three brothers lived to be very old. James and Lawrence spent their lives near their native place. Jesse moved to Virginia, where he died at the age of eighty-seven. Lawrence (one of the three sons named) was grandfather to Benoni Allnutt, of Montgomery County, whose father (likewise named Lawrence) died in 1858. The surviving sons of Lawrence last mentioned are Nathan, Benjamin, and Benoni. Benoni Allnutt was born Jan. 2, 1835, about half a mile from his present home, upon a farm tract now owned by James N. and Benjamin W. Allnutt. Benoni resided at home until his father’s death in 1858, and under the will received a farm, which now forms a portion of his present place. He took possession at once, and bestirred himself zealously to make mark as a successful farmer. Nov. 20, 1860, he married Emily, daughter of Benoni Dawson, of Montgomery County. The Dawsons were known to Prince George’s County before 1759, and in Montgomery County have been residents since about that time, for they came to this part from Prince George’s about the time the Allnutt’s did. Thomas Dawson, great-grandfather to Mrs. Benoni Allnutt, was the first of the name to come hither. He located on property now owned and occupied by Americus Dawson, near Dawsonville, and owned by a Dawson since Thomas cleared it, about one hundred and thirty years ago. Thomas Dawson had two sons, Robert and Nicholas. The former volunteered, while yet a youth, as a soldier for the Revolutionary war. He was sorely wounded in action, but lived through the campaign and many years thereafter. The sword and scabbard worn by him during his service are still owned by his descendants. He had seven sons, of whom one was Dr. Benoni Dawson, a physician of high repute and father of Mrs. Benoni Allnutt. He married Sarah, daughter of Joseph W. Jones, who served through the Seminole war. He died in 1850, and his widow in 1878. Seven of their eleven children are living. The Jones’ ancestry goes back to early times in Prince George’s County, to which section Edward and Richard Jones emigrated from Wales early in America’s history. It is worthy also of remark that Mrs. Benoni Allnutt boasts descent from Sir Isaac Newton; the first New-tons who came to Maryland being known to have been two children who were stolen by gypsies and carried from England to America.

Benoni Allnutt has devoted himself faithfully and to some purpose to the business of his life—farming. His possessions embrace one thousand valuable acres, lying within a model and handsomely improved farm. The success that has attended his efforts has come simply as the result of untiring industry and wisely, directed exertions. As a citizen, his influence is felt for good, and as a sterling member of the great army of useful workers, his example is acknowledged to be worthy of imitation. Mr. Allnutt’s home is one of the finest in the county. His residence, built in 1871, was constructed of native stone, and is not only a handsome architectural specimen, but embodies all the comforts and conveniences that improved skill and refined taste could suggest.

Martinsburg.—This village is situated on “John’s Delight,” which was surveyed and granted to John Harris, June 14, 1755. The merchants are Phillips Brothers and Reed & Offutt. James W. Reed is postmaster.

Dickerson.—This station is on the Metropolitan Branch Railroad, seventy-six miles from Baltimore and twenty from Rockville. Dr. W. D. Hellen is the physician, and W. H. Dickerson (after whom the place was named) is merchant and postmaster.

Monocacy.—This place is on the Monocacy River, near the crossing of the Metropolitan Railroad. Frederick Sellman is postmaster and merchant.

White’s Ferry.—This ferry is on the Potomac River and Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. It is seven miles from Dickerson, fifteen from Rockville, and seventy from Baltimore. It takes its name from the old and well-known White family. L. C. White is postmaster, William Rollinson, ferryman, E. W. Mercer, merchant, and White & Wootton, grain dealers.

Edwards’ Ferry.—This ferry is on the Potomac River, between Sycamore Landing and Ball’s Bluffs. George W. Spates is postmaster.

Sellman’s Station.—This station is on the Metropolitan Railroad, four miles west of Boyd’s, nine east of the Point of Rocks, and one from Barnesville, for which it is the railway station. Samuel Darby is railroad and express agent.

School-Meetings.—In School District No. 2, on July 22, 1839, at a school-meeting held under the superintendence of manager Dr. Benoni Dawson, John Cross was elected president, and Elisha M. Swift clerk. The following trustees were then chosen: Collmore Williams, John Cross, and Jesse Viers. The meeting voted for an assessment on the district of eight hundred dollars, and that the new school-house be erected on the site of the previous one.
In District No. 6, on July 23d, at its meeting, Thomas G. Reid was elected president, and John A. Chiswell clerk. The trustees selected were Thomas Hall, Elias Spalding, John A. Chiswell.

In District No. 5, on July 15th, John Gott, Sr., presided at the meeting, and Nathan S. White was clerk. The trustees chosen were Joseph C. White, George Hoyle, and Nathan S. White.

On July 30th, in the Third District, Joseph J. W. Jones was president of the meeting, and Henry W. Talbott secretary. The trustees chosen were Joseph J. W. Jones, H. W. Talbott, and Richard A. Harding. The site selected for the school was on the land of Benjamin White, near a spring in the woods, and five hundred dollars for its construction was levied.

August 3d, in District No. 3, Abraham Hays was chosen president of the meeting, and John C. Gott clerk. The trustees elected were Thomas W. Hyde, William Baine, and John Gott. The former school-house near Barnesville was selected and ordered to be rented. Six hundred and fifty dollars was levied on the taxable property of the district.

In District No. 4, at the meeting of August 11th, James M. Dawson, Sr., was president, and J. M. Dawson, Jr., clerk. It adjourned without action to Aug. 9, 1840.

At a special meeting of District No. 8, on August 19th, its previous levy of six hundred and fifty dollars was reduced to three hundred and twenty-five dollars.

In District No. 1, at the meeting of August 20th, John P. C. Peter was president, and Thomas B. Dawson clerk. The trustees elected were John Dawson, William Dyson, and Lawrence Allnutt.

At a special meeting of District No. 2, on September 21st, the levy of previous meeting of eight hundred dollars was reduced to six hundred dollars, and at another meeting on October 2d, the old site for the school-house was selected by a vote of 18 to 2.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, T. W. Welsh, Dawnsville P. O.; No. 2, E. H. Darby, Darnestown P. O.; No. 3, Sallie Elgin, Poolesville P. O.; No. 4, J. E. Phillips, Martinsburg P. O.; No. 5, J. P. Birnie, Martinsburg P. O.; No. 6, L. R. Gutt, Dickerson P. O.; No. 7, Thomas Story, Barnesville P. O.; No. 8, J. H. Davis; No. 9, vacant; No. 10, C. R. Biggerly, Poolesville P. O.; No. 11, C. Pyles, Barnesville P. O.; No. 12, G. W. Foddall, Beallsville P. O.

There are four colored schools. The magistrates are S. S. Hays, G. W. Chiswell, N. T. Talbott, S. George Donehoe.

ROCKVILLE DISTRICT, No. 4, is bounded on the north by Darnestown District, northeast by Gaithersburg District, southeast by Cracklin District, east by Mechanicsville District, south by Berry and Bethesda Districts, and west by Great Falls District. Rock Creek flows through the southeast part of the district, and separates it from Mechanicsville and Berry Districts. Cabin John Creek, having its source near Rockville town, flows southwest into the Potomac. Watts' Branch, also having its head near Rockville, flows northwest into the Potomac. Crabbs' and Mill Branches in the east empty into Rock Creek.

Under the act of 1821 the district was assigned the following metes and bounds:

Beginning at the mouth of Seneca, and running down Potomac, including the islands to the line of the territory of Columbia; then with said line to Rock Creek; then up said creek to Robertson's mill; then up the Bladensburg road until it intersects the line of the Second District at the lower end of the late Benjamin Ricketts' plantation; then with the line of the said Second District to Clopper's mill; then down Seneca to the beginning.

In 1878 part of the above territory on the north was taken to form Darnestown District, No. 6, and part on the south to form Bethesda. In 1880 a small part on the northeast was taken for the formation of Gaithersburg, and all its western limits taken to make Great Falls, No. 10. Thus from its original area one whole district has been created, and parts of three others.

Among the earliest settlers in the district were James Moore, Thomas and William Beall, Arthur Nelson, Edward Dawson, Joseph West, James Hallard, Caleb Litton, the Magraders, Viers, Graffs, and Watkins.

Rockville, the county-seat, is situated in the eastern part of the district, on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. It occupies a portion of a tract originally known as "Survey Exchange and New Exchange Enlarged," which was surveyed Dec. 20, 1721, for Arthur Nelson, and contained sixteen hundred and twenty acres.

When Montgomery County was created, Sept,
6, 1776, the town was a little hamlet, consisting of Charles Hungerford’s tavern (kept subsequently by Leonard Davis), which is still standing, and occupied by Mrs. Susan Russell, whose grandfather, Joseph Wilson, built and owned it; the Anderson house, in which Miss Julia Anderson lives, and one or two others. The hamlet had no name until the erection of the county, when it was designated as Montgomery Court-House.

The first court was held at the house of Leonard Davis, the famous old Hungerford tavern, on the 20th of May, 1777.1

The old court-house was built shortly afterwards, and the first court held in it in 1779.

On Aug. 3, 1784, William Prather Williams purchased the land around the court-house, and immediately thereafter caused it to be laid off into streets and town-lots by Col. Archibald Orme, and called it Williamsburg. At the November session, 1801, of the Legislature an act was passed, which, after reciting that the titles to these lots were uncertain, because there was no record of the survey thereof made by Col. Orme, erected the place into a town called Rockville, and appointed commissioners to resurvey it. At the November session, 1802, there was a supplemental act passed, and in 1803 the commissioners caused the resurvey and a plan of the town to be made by William Smith, county surveyor. It was first meditated to call the town Wattsville, but Watts’ Branch being regarded as too insignificant a stream, it was finally concluded to name it after its more pretentious neighbor, Rock Creek. The old Hungerford or Russell house is not only the oldest building in the place, but also from its associations the object of greatest interest to the antiquary. Mrs. Richard Wootton, a sister-in-law of Thomas Sprigg Wootton, who moved the erection of the county, danced in it at a ball given more than one hundred and ten years ago.2

The first addition to Rockville lies principally to the north and northward of the town, and is part of "Resurvey on Valentine’s Garden Enlarged," which was surveyed April 10, 1753, for Henry Wright Crabb for two thousand and eighty-five acres. On March 4, 1873, the second addition was made to the town, and embraces that part recently laid out in the vicinity of the railroad depot and fair grounds. This new section is on "Hammond’s Addition," which was surveyed for John Hammond, Nov. 10, 1743, and contained three hundred acres. The present court-house was erected about 1840. The first jail stood where Mrs. Almoney resides, nearly opposite the court-house, and on the second present site of Rabbit’s livery-stable.

The nearest mill was on Watts’ Creek, and was owned by Mr. Perry, afterwards by Strove & Perry, then by Mr. Braddock, and was on the property now owned by Mr. Stonestreet. The oldest native inhabitant is George R. Braddock, deputy clerk of the court, who was born in 1818, in the house now occupied by Agnes Noland. The earliest merchant remembered was a Mr. Milsted, who was followed by John Braddock, who kept a store where Mrs. Bowie’s boarding-school now stands. Subsequent storekeepers were Mr. Higgins and Mr. Adamson. John Lodge kept a tavern near the property now occupied by Fields & Rabbit, and was succeeded by William Sands. Dr. James Anderson was one of the earliest physicians. Benjamin S. Forrest was probably the oldest resident attorney. The first blacksmith’s shop was that of William Braddock, who also kept a store where Dawson’s store now stands. One of the earliest carpenters was Francis Kidwell, who lived on the site of the Montgomery Hotel, and built the court-house.3

The following list of lot-owners in Rockville (then called Williamsburg) in 1793 is taken from the assessment books:

- Allen Bowie, 1 House and lott.
- Enoch Beeson, 1 House and lott.
- John Sutton Crawford, 2 unimproved lots; 1 House and lott.
- Walter Clagett, 1 unimproved lott.
- Bryan Dayley, 1 House and lott.
- Hezekiah Ford, 1 House and lott.
- Dr. Joseph Hall, 1 House and lott.
- Edward Harding, 1 House and lott.
- Philip Jenkins, 2 Houses and lots; 2 unimproved lots.
- John Lyons, 1 unimproved lott.

1 Present, the worshipful Charles Jones, Samuel W. Magruder, Elisha Williams, William Deekins, Richard Thompson, James Offutt, and Edward Burgess; Brook Beall, clerk, and Clement Beall, sheriff.

2 Address of T. Anderson, Esq., at Montgomery County Centennial Celebration.

3 The glorious event of peace and independence was celebrated at the court-house, April 13, 1783, by eighty ladies and gentlemen, who participated in an elegant dinner. The "Hessian Band" from Frederick Town was in attendance. The following toasts were drank: 1. The United States in Congress; 2. Gen. Washington and the Northern Army; 3. Gen. Greene and the intrepid officers and soldiers of the Southern Army; 4. His Most Christian Majesty and the Queen and Royal Family of France; 5. Perpetual alliance and mutual good offices between France and America; 6. The Count De Rochambeau; 7. Marquis De Lafayette; 8. Chevalier De la Luzerne; 9. The Ministers of France and America at Paris; 10. Governor Paca and the State of Maryland; 11. The shades of those gallant heroes who nobly fell in defense of American liberty; 12. May Literature, philosophy, and all the sciences meet with every encouragement from the Legislature of Maryland; 13. The truly virtuous and patriotic ladies of America, who rejected luxuries, and even the conveniences of life, for the salvation of their country.
The building of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad gave a new impetus to the business prosperity and progress at Rockville, and in 1860 it was incorporated by the General Assembly and raised to the dignity of a city. As the records of the corporation prior to 1864 have been destroyed, it is therefore impossible to give the officers during that period.

The principal officers of Rockville from 1864 to 1881 have been as follows:

1864.—W. Viers Bouie, president; John H. Higgins, and M. Green; M. Morgan, clerk; and John B. Miller, bailiff.

1865.—William Viers Bouie, president; James W. Campbell, George Peter, commissioners; M. Morgan, clerk; and Melchisedek Green, chief bailiff.

1866.—Melchisedek Green, president; David H. Bouie, John H. Higgins, commissioners; M. Morgan, clerk; and Henry Lyday, chief bailiff.

1867.—William V. Bouie, president; George Peter, Richard M. Williams, commissioners; James F. Braddock, chief bailiff; and M. Morgan, clerk. Upon the resignation of Mr. Peter, O. Z. Muncaster was elected to the board.

1868.—John R. Miller, John H. Higgins, R. M. Williams, commissioners; Thomas G. Peddecord, chief bailiff; J. Davis, Jr., clerk.

1869.—M. Field, president; E. B. Prettyman, M. Green, commissioners; S. T. Mailleau, chief bailiff; and R. S. Patterson, clerk.

1870.—M. Field, president, E. B. Prettyman, M. Green, commissioners; G. W. Dore, chief bailiff; and R. S. Patterson, clerk.

1871.—Same re-elected.

1872.—W. Viers Bouie, president; E. B. Prettyman, M. Green, commissioners; William Connell, chief bailiff; and R. S. Patterson, clerk.

1873.—W. Viers Bouie, president; Reuben A. Bagley, M. Green, commissioners; R. S. Patterson, clerk. James Bixton was elected chief bailiff, but declined, and William Connell was appointed to fill the place.

1874.—W. Viers Bouie, president; Reuben A. Bagley, M. Green, commissioners; R. S. Patterson, clerk; and William O. Kingsbury, chief bailiff.

1875.—Same re-elected.

1876.—W. Viers Bouie, president; M. Green, S. C. Jones, commissioners; H. W. Talbott, clerk; and James T. West, chief bailiff.

1877.—W. Viers Bouie, president; M. Green, S. C. Jones, commissioners; Henry Viste, chief bailiff; H. W. Talbott, clerk.

1878.—W. Viers Bouie, president; M. Green, J. P. Riggs, commissioners; H. W. Talbott, clerk; and Thomas F. Monday, chief bailiff.

1879.—Same re-elected.

1880.—W. Viers Bouie, who resigned, and was succeeded by N. D. Offutt, president; M. Green, Charles E. Sommers, commissioners; H. W. Talbott, clerk; and William O. Kingsbury, chief bailiff.

1881.—The present officers, Charles Sommers, N. D. Offutt, president, M. Green, commissioners; Mr. Kingsbury and Mr. Talbott, clerk and bailiff respectively.

The Advocate was established in November, 1872, by William B. Green, who published it until 1875, when he sold the paper and office to William Brewer. In 1879, Albert J. Almoney became associated with Mr. Brewer in its publication as editor and publisher. The Advocate is a neat four-page paper of thirty-six columns, edited with unusual ability. Special prominence is given to local news, in the collection of which it employs an able corps of correspondents in all sections of the county. It is a stanch supporter of the Democratic party.

The Independent Montgomeryian was established by William B. and Walter O. Green in September, 1880, and on Saturday, Sept. 10, 1881, it entered on its second volume. It is a four-page sheet of thirty-six columns, and its motto, "Partiality to none, justice to all," indicates the broad principles upon which it is conducted. It is ably edited, and its columns are devoted largely to local news from every part of the county. W. B. Green was formerly of the Montgomery Advocate.

The Montgomery County Sentinel was established Aug. 11, 1855, by Matthew Fields, sheriff of the county. In the spring of 1864, Mr. Fields was arrested by the United States military authorities, and released in June following. During the three months of his arrest and imprisonment the paper was not published. George R. Braddock for a short time was its editor. Mr. Fields died in August, 1871. The paper is still owned by his widow, and is ably conducted by her son, William Fields. It is an excellent local journal, and a firm advocate of Democratic principles.

Rockville Journal and Maryland Journal.—The Rockville Journal was in January, 1836, edited by M. Stewart, who subsequently changed its name to the Maryland Journal. In 1855 the Journal was edited by Mr. Parker, and later managed and controlled by Kilgour, Wood & Co., and subsequently, by Angel & Gibbs. It suspended just before the late civil war. It was a Whig, and afterwards an American paper.

Mizpah Lodge, No. 144, A. F. and A. M.—This lodge was instituted in February, 1869. Its Worshipful Masters have been in the following order: Thomas J. Peddicord, Hattersly W. Talbott, Spencer C. Jones, E. Barrett Prettyman, William Brewer, Hattersly W. Talbott. The following were the charter members, and the lodges to which they originally belonged:

At the first meeting of the lodge for work, on Feb. 23, 1869, the following persons were initiated: Cooke D. Luckett, Reuben A. Bogley, Edward E. Stonestreet, M.D., and Thomas Anderson, all of whom in the following March were raised to the degree of a Master Mason. Spencer C. Jones was lodge secretary from its organization until July, 1881, when D. F. Owens was elected. The officers for the quarter beginning July 1, 1881, were:

The lodge has a membership of forty-three, and meets every other Tuesday evening at its hall in the public-school building.

Richard G. White, who received the Master's degree March 19, 1872, died Jan. 3, 1879, and Charles M. Keys, who was admitted by demit from New Jerusalem Lodge, No. 9, D. C. In the winter of 1881 the lodge was entered by burglars, who stole the lodge jewels, made of silver, and valued at one hundred and fifty dollars.

Prince George P. E. Parish.—On the 12th of April, 1712, it was ordered by the vestry of St. John's Parish that the Rev. J. Frazer preach in the East Branch Hundred once a month on Sunday. This was the hundred west of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, and extended to the Paint Branch. This appears to have been the beginning of what was afterwards known as Rock Creek Church. Mr. Frazer's monthly services continued until 1719, when steps were taken towards building a chapel of ease. At the request of the inhabitants of Eastern Branch and Rock Creek Hundreds, Mr. Frazer appointed Sept. 8, 1719, for them to meet and make choice of a site and contribute towards the erection of a chapel. Accordingly, twenty-seven persons assembled, and unanimously selected a place “near James Keas', on John Cash's or Capt. Beall's land.” The subscriptions were: in tobacco, John Bradford, 1000 pounds; William Smith, 400; George Bussy, 300; Thomas Stump, 250; L. Morgan, 250; William Harbine, 250; James Hook, 200; Richard Hooker, 200; John Henerick, 100; Walter Evans, 300; Matthew Markland, 200; and John Reed, 100,—making 3550 pounds. In money, “W. F.” subscribed £3; Thomas Lucas, £2; William Blattry, £1 10s.; Henry Thickpenny, £15; William Thompson, Isaac Harden, Leonard Howell, Groves Tomin, John Harden, John Chilton, James Moor, Thomas Wilson, each £1; William Williams, Philip Evans, and Benjamin Thrasher, 10s. each,—in all, £17 5s. Subsequently 800 pounds of tobacco were subscribed, and £27 15s., and John Bradford gave 100 acres of land, on which the chapel was erected. On the 10th of February, 1724, the vestry ordered 1000 pounds of tobacco for the repair of the church. This proves that a chapel had been built, and so long before that it needed repairing. In 1726 St. John's Parish was divided: Pisataway and New Scotland Hundreds, containing 791 taxables, yielding 31,640 pounds of tobacco, were constituted St. John's Parish, and the Eastern Branch, Rock Creek, and Potomac Hundreds, having 791 taxables, yielding 21,800 pounds of tobacco, were constituted a new parish, named Prince George Parish, and the chapel at Rock Creek was made the parish church for the new parish. The act creating the new parish was passed by the General Assembly in July, 1726, and it was provided that the division should go into effect from and after “the fourth Tuesday of November next following.” The parish embraced all the country northwest of a line “beginning with the mouth of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, and running up therewith to the fork thereof, and thence continuing the course of the East Branch to its head, and by a straight line until it strikes the Patuxent River.”

It therefore comprised all the territory now embraced in Montgomery, Frederick, and Washington Counties, part of Carroll County, and part of the District of Columbia. It was, however, a frontier parish, and had not more than two thousand four hundred inhabitants. On the 3d of December, 1826, the freeholders of the parish came together at the parish church at Rock Creek, afterwards known as St. Paul's, and chose a vestry, as follows: Nathaniel Wickham, John Flint, John Powell, Joseph Chew, James Holmes, and John Pritchard. Caleb Latton and William Harbin were elected church-wardens, and William Jackson, register. Mr. Frazer, whose efforts had done so much towards building up the church, and who seems to have been an industrious, conscientious man, terminated his connection with the Rock Creek Church in 1726, and restricted himself to St.
John's Parish. On the 29th of December, 1726, the Rev. George Murdoch, a native of Prince George's County, received his appointment as rector of Prince George Parish. On Sunday, January 8th following, he held his first service. On the next Tuesday the vestry met and received his letters of induction from Governor Charles Calvert.

Mr. Murdoch was ordained deacon at St. Paul’s Cathedral, London, Feb. 20, 1724, by Dr. Gibson, then Bishop of London, and priest by the same bishop, February 29th of the same year, in the royal chapel of St. James. At the time of his ordination he was a married man, and had a family. After returning to this country he went to Virginia and had a parish there, probably St. James', Northam, Goose-land Co. On the same day on which he was received as rector the vestry of Rock Creek Church engaged Mr. George Beall to build a "vestry house," sixteen feet by twelve, having eight feet pitch, for two thousand five hundred pounds of tobacco, and to put a plank floor in the church, which before had been without one. On the 3d of April the vestry consented that Mr. Murdoch should preach every third Sunday in some convenient place to the upper inhabitants of the parish. This was probably not far from the present town of Rockville, and the building is said to have stood on the present site of the graveyard, near the former residence of the late Judge R. J. Bowie.

On the 28th of May the vestry sent for a large folio Bible and a Book of Common Prayer. On the 1st of August they procured a record book for registering their proceedings, and ordered a well to be dug and fourteen pews to be put up. In February, 1728, certain residents of the upper portion of the parish petitioned the Governor and Council for permission to fix the site of the proposed new church, alleging that they had not been properly treated by the vestry with regard to the matter. The petition was granted and a meeting of the freeholders was held, and it was decided that the chapel at Rock Creek was to be the parish church. The subscribers for building the proposed chapel in the upper part of the parish were Joseph West, Thos. Sheppard, John West, John Rogers, William Smith, Ignatius Perrot, Benjamin Thrasher, Nathaniel Wickham, Sr., Luke Barnard, John Nelson, Jeremiah Plomer, Bryan Kelly, Samuel Pottinger, James Edmondson, Nathaniel Wickham, Jr., Stephen Hampton, Caleb Lyttton, Joseph Gold, Arthur Nelson, Robert Pottinger, Wm. West, Thomas Thompson, William Sheppard, Jeremiah Dickin-son, Samuel Richards, Charles Perry. On the 7th of November, 1738, Thomas Williams offered two acres of land upon which to build a chapel of ease, and it was accepted. The land was situated one mile east of Rockville. A chapel was evidently erected upon it some time prior to November, 1743, for under that date we find that the vestry agreed to petition the court for an assignment of twelve pence per poll towards building a new church and defraying parish charges. In the following year an act was passed by the General Assembly constituting the chapel a chapel of ease and the former church the parish church. The church near Rockville was uniformly termed Rock Creek Chapel, and the parish church was denominated Rock Creek Church, both being near Rock Creek, though twelve miles apart.

At a meeting of the vestry on the 11th of April, 1748, it was determined that Rock Creek chapel was to have divine service every other Sunday, and that the services at Paint chapel should be discontinued.

Paint chapel stood on the boundary line which now divides Montgomery from Prince George's County and not far from the Patuxent. Hence it was often called "Paint Chapel on the Patuxent." It was erected, not by the public funds, but by private contributions, and there is no record as to when it was built. Up to 1748 occasional services were held there, but, as we have seen, they were discontinued in favor of Rock Creek chapel. In 1748 Frederick County was created, and the parish of Prince George embraced the whole of the new county and a portion of Prince George's County. In 1749 Rev. Richard Hartwell assisted Mr. Murdoch as curate. In 1750, for the accommodation of the increasing congregation at the Rock Creek chapel, a gallery was built. Early in 1751 mention is made of the Rev. Moses Tabbs, curate. In the following year Mr. Tabbs became the rector of William and Mary Parish, St. Mary's County. There is also a record in 1751 of the death of Mr. Alexander Magruder, a prominent vestryman. Several improvements were made at the chapel in the same year, such as an addition to the pulpit, the removal of the desk, etc. In 1756 the vestry had imposed on them the duty of returning to the Gov-ernor a list of the bachelors in the parish. A law had been passed by the General Assembly taxing all bachelors; the tax being designed to assist in raising money for the French and Indian war. Those bach-elors worth three hundred pounds and over were tax-ed twenty shillings, and those worth over one hundred pounds and under three hundred pounds, five shillings. This tax was continued for six consecutive years.

The following is a list of the bachelors returned by the vestry, with their residences as far as known, valuation of property, and the years in which they were taxed:
In 1757 the following petition from King George and Prince George Parishes was presented to the Governor, praying the erection of a new parish:

“To his Excellency Horatio Sharpes, Esq., Governor and Commander-in-chief on and over the Province of Maryland, and to the Honourable the Upper and Lower Houses of Assembly.

The humble petition of Sandry of the Freeholders of King George's and Prince George's parishes most humbly sheweth that they live at so great a distance from the said parish churches that they nor their families cannot go to hear divine service, and that the per pole of the two parishes is sufficient to maintain three ministers; therefore your humble petitioners pray that your honors will take it into your pious consideration and create a parish out of the two above mentioned, according to the bounds specified below, after the death of either of the present incumbents, the Tobacco arising in that part of the parish may be applied towards the building of a church in the parish erected, and your humble petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray, &c.

The bounds of parish to include the north part of King George's parish and the south part of Prince George's parish, bounded by the north side of the Eastern Branch from the north thereof unto the ferry thereon, and with the road that leads from thence to the westernmost bounds of Queen Anne's parish, with the bounds thereof northward unto Patuxent river, and with the said river westward unto a bridge thereon near Peter Murphy's; then with a straight line to northeast main fork of the Fall's branch, and with the said branch into Potomack river, and with the said river to the north of the Eastern branch. We also pray that the place for the churchstand may be [determined] by the freeholders of the said parish, and as may be appointed for that purpose, and at the dwellinghouse of Mr. William Selby's, being near the centre of the parish.

The petition was not granted.

A similar petition was presented in 1758, but the Governor did not lay it before the General Assembly. This petition was as follows:

“To His Excellency Horatio Sharpes, Esq., Governor and Commander-in-chief on and over the Province of Maryland, and the House of the Upper and Lower Houses of Assembly:

The petition of the vestrymen, church wardens, and freeholders of Prince George Parish, in Frederick County, sheweth—

That the parish is so extensive, which makes it so inconvenient, that the chief or greatest part of the inhabitants thereof can but very seldom repair to public worship to the great discouragement of religion and virtue, and we therefore take leave, as the said parish is now very sufficient to support two ministers, to pray your honors will make so act to divide the said parish by a line drawn from the lower falls of Potomack to William Richardson's bridge that crosses Patuxent River by said Richardson's dwelling plantation, or at any other place your honors or your greater wisdom may think more convenient, and your petitioners in duty bound will pray.

that he was employed in any clerical capacity. On the 24th of March, 1767, it was agreed to erect a third addition to Rock Creek chapel. This was a structure twenty feet square to be added in front. A petition was also presented to the General Assembly for permission to build a brick church. In 1769 this petition was repeated, and in the following year twenty-six pews were ordered to be built in Rock Creek chapel. Thus far, however, they were unable to procure the consent of the State government to the erection of the proposed brick church. On the 10th of October, 1771, Daniel, of St. Thomas Jenifer, delivered a petition from the Upper to the Lower House, praying that the rector, vestry, and freeholders of Prince George Parish be empowered to levy ninety-six thousand pounds of tobacco for building a new church at the place where the old church then stood. A bill was prepared and passed both houses granting the subject matter of the petition, but the vestry did not immediately proceed to put it into execution. A bill subsequently passed the Assembly for the division of Prince George's County, but it does not appear to have been carried into effect.

Rev. John Bowie, a native of Maryland, having received orders, was licensed by the Bishop of London on the 28th of July, 1771, and on his return to this country became curate for Mr. Williamson. In 1772, Mr. Williamson's health failed, and he was forced to sail for Barbadoes. Mr. Bowie left the parish soon after, and in 1773 was appointed to a parish in Worcester County. Having signified his loyalty to the Crown, though afterwards an earnest sympathizer with the cause of his fellow-citizens, he was subjected to much harsh treatment at the hands of the revolutionists, but was finally permitted to reside in Montgomery County with his brother, Allen Bowie, ancestor of Hon. A. Bowie Davis, and afterwards officiated as rector in Worcester, Dorchester, and Talbot Counties. In 1774 the vestry advertised for contractors to erect a new church in place of the old one. The edifice was to be fifty feet square, with a pitch of twenty-four feet. The walls were to be twenty-two inches thick in the first story and eighteen in the second. The foundation was to be of stone, three feet thick, and the roof to be of cypress shingles. The next curate was the Rev. Thomas Read, a native of Matthews County, Va. Mr. Read was ordained and licensed by the Bishop of London, and soon after his return to America became the assistant of Mr. Williamson. He remained in this capacity until 1776, when the church livings were abolished by the provisional government of the Revolution. One year later he became the rector of St. Ann's, Annapolis.

Mr. Williamson, rector of Prince George Parish, retired about the same time to his estate, about five miles above Georgetown, where, being a man of wealth, he built a handsome residence, which afterwards fell into the possession of Judge Dunlop, who lived there for a number of years. About 1777, Mr. Read left Annapolis and returned to Prince George Parish. On the 14th of October, 1779, he married Sarah Magruder, of Montgomery County, daughter of Samuel Wade and Lucy Magruder. The walls of the church at Rock Creek were completed and the roof finished prior to 1775, but the Revolution coming on work was suspended, and the building remained in an uncompleted state for a number of years.

In the Maryland Journal of June 27, 1780, the following notice appeared:

"The subscribers, appointed by the contributors for the purpose of employing a clergyman of the Protestant Church to officiate at Rock Creek Church, in Montgomery County, give notice that a very genteel salary will be given to any gentleman of that profession by application to Jos. Wilson, Elias Harding, Thomas Johns, Thomas Crampin, Jr., Richard Wooton, James Perry, Elijah O. Williams, Trustee."

In the Diocesan Convention of 1789 the parish was represented by the rector, Mr. Read, and by Mr. Deakins as lay delegate. In the following year Mr. Read was made a member of the standing committee of the diocese. In 1790, Mr. Read's parish had a population of fifteen thousand and four places of public worship. In August, 1790, the vestry proposed building a chapel where the old Rock Creek chapel stood.

In 1794 Prince George Parish was divided, and all the territory lying within the boundaries of the District of Columbia was constituted a separate parish called Washington Parish. Rock Creek, or St. Paul's Church, thus fell into the District of Columbia, together with all the territory lying between the northern boundary of Washington City and the northern boundary of the District of Columbia. About 1793, Rev. Joseph Jackson, a native of the North of England, became the assistant for Mr. Read. Mr. Jackson had previously been teacher of a school at Barnaby Manor, the residence of the Rev. Henry Addison, during which time he also acted as lay reader at Hawling's River and Paint Chapels, Montgomery County. Mr. Jackson remained as curate for Mr. Read about a year. In 1797 the Rev. William Swann became the assistant in Prince George Parish, and officiated at Hawling's Run and Paint Chapels. Mr. Swann remained about a year, but for three years officiated partially at Hawling's Run and Paint Chapels, combining these charges with St. Peter's and Zion, in Frederick. Subsequently he removed to Westminster Parish, where he conducted a school. In 1798, Mr. Read began to preach at Seneca Chapel, at Middlebrook, north of Rockville, on the Frederick road. The land had been presented by a Mr. Benson, and on it a frame building had been erected. In 1801 the vestry decided to build the proposed new church, to replace the old Rock Creek chapel, and in 1802 contracted with William Orr for the work. The structure was to be of brick, and was to cost £225. Subsequently the vestry agreed to give Mr. Orr the material in the old structure in addition to the money subscribed. On the 1st of August, 1803, the vestry examined the work of the new chapel, and determined to endeavor to raise a subscription for the repair of the Rock Creek church. On the records the death is noted of Mr. Allen Bowie, long an active and influential member of the vestry. The chapel was not finished for some time afterwards. In 1806 Rock Church complained to Bishop Chaggett that Mr. Read had told them that he should henceforth restrict his ministrations to Rock Creek Chapel, and had advised them to employ another minister, but that afterwards he had informed them that he did not intend to relinquish the glebe lands which belonged to Rock Creek Church. Bishop Chaggett replied that it was not legally competent for Mr. Read to relinquish the glebe, as he was merely a tenant at will. Subsequently Mr. Read officiated alternately at Rock Creek Church and Rock Creek Chapel. On the 11th of September, 1808, the new chapel was so far advanced that it was consecrated by Bishop Chaggett with the name of Christ Church. In his journal the bishop states that the new chapel was situated near the site of the old one. After the consecration he confirmed twenty-nine persons, and a sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Conte, rector of William and Mary Parish, Charles County.

The deed of consecration states that the ancient wooden fabric had been found a few years ago so much decayed as to be unfit for use, but that "several benefactors had contributed to the erection and completely finishing a new, spacious, and elegant two-story brick fabric," and that the vestry had, by their solemn act and deed, given and returned back to God "all their right, title, claim, and interest in and to the said building," and that therefore the bishop had consecrated it to the service of God.

About 1809 Rock Creek Church appears to have been without a regular pastor, as we find that Franklin Anderson, a law student in the office of Francis Scott Key, afterwards the author of the "Star-Spangled Banner," in Washington, acted as lay reader there, and that Mr. Key also served in the same capacity until 1829. In 1811 Paint Chapel was established as a separate congregation, and was authorized by the convention to take the name of Zion Church. In the same year a petition was presented to the Diocesan Convention from Rock Creek Church, asking to be constituted a separate parish, but the convention refused, on the ground that, in granting the petition, it might be considered as having transferred the Prince George Parish glebe to the new parish.

One year later a petition was presented to the Diocesan Convention asking for the erection of a new parish from the Hawling's River congregation. Leave was granted to form themselves into a separate congregation under the general incorporation act. The new parish was named St. Bartholomew's. Its boundaries, however, were not finally established until 1829.

In October, 1812, the vestry of Prince George addressed a note to Francis C. Clopper, complaining that he had converted Seneca chapel into a stable and carriage-house. It seems that Mr. Clopper had appropriated the chapel and land to his own use, although both had been given to the parish by William Benson. This would seem to indicate that the chapel had not been used for some time. The difficulty appears to have arisen from the fact that Mr. Benson died intestate, without having given a deed for the land. Possibly the confusion and trouble arose from the difficulties preceding the resignation of Mr. Read, which was handed to the vestry in April, 1814. Mr. Read resigned because "the parishioners would not be governed according to the discipline of the Protestant Episcopal Church," and because there seemed "no probability of my (his) being any longer profitable to them." Mr. Read did not cease his ministerial labors, however, but became the rector of St. Bartholomew's, or Hawling's River Parish. He continued as pastor for two years and then resigned, after which he resided on his farm, three miles north of Rockville, on the Frederick road, until his death, which occurred on the 5th of January, 1838, in the ninetieth year of his age.

Mr. Read was succeeded by the Rev. Alfred Henry Dashiel, who preached every other Sunday at Rock Creek chapel. In the following year (1815) it was agreed to raise a subscription of two thousand dollars for building a new church at Rockville. In 1817, Mr. Dashiel resigned the pastorate and removed to Virginia. The parish was vacant for some time, and during the interval the Rev. Mr. Addison officiated at intervals at Rock Creek church. No vestry having been elected on Easter Monday, the parishioners, in November, 1818, after due notice, met at Rock Creek church and elected a vestry. A few days after, the new vestry held a meeting and determined to repair Rock Creek chapel. Subsequently, however, it was decided to be inexpedient to attempt the repair of the chapel, and that it was "wholly unsafe to perform divine worship in it." It was added, that besides "the bad arrangement and plan of the building, it seems now in a state of ruin." The vestry therefore decided to recommend the erection of a new edifice, and addressed the bishop of the diocese, requesting him to authorize the sale of the glebe lands and to select a minister for the church at Rockville. The bishop consented to the sale of the glebe, and a committee was appointed to settle any dispute that might arise in connection with the proposed transaction.

On the 1st of March, 1821, Solomon Holland conveyed to Prince George Parish vestry a deed in fee-simple for the lot on which the present church stands. It contained five thousand six hundred and seventy square feet of land, and was conveyed solely for the erection of the church, and not to be used as a burial-place. This tract was a part of lots numbered six and seven on the plat of Rockville. This deed was witnessed by Jesse Leach and Richard T. O. Waters, and recorded April 24, 1821, and the consideration was five dollars.

In the same year the Rev. Thomas G. Allen was chosen rector. Mr. Allen was a native of New York, but had studied for the ministry under the Rev. Dr. Wilmer, of Alexandria, and had been ordained by Bishop Moore, of Virginia. He settled in Virginia and married there, and removed thence to Prince George Parish. On the 20th of February, 1821, a contract was entered into for the erection of a new church at Rockville, to cost one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five dollars, exclusive of plastering and painting inside. On the 22d of September, 1822, the church, which had been completed, was consecrated and named Christ Church. In 1827 the trouble with Francis C. Clopper concerning Seneca chapel was adjusted by an arrangement that Clopper should furnish the timber and scantling for a new frame church in place of the structure which he had transferred into a stable and carriage-house, and that the church should be at once rebuilt.

On the 29th of January, 1828, John Taylor and his wife, Anne, conveyed to the parish through its rector and vestrymen, Charles J. Kilgour, George C. Washington, Benjamin S. Forest, James Anderson, Jr., Arnold J. Windsor, John Cook, Richard Butt, and John Adamson, one acre and fifty-two perches, part of a tract called "Middlebrook." The consideration was five dollars, and the deed was witnessed by James Ord and R. S. Briscoe. Later in the same year Mr. Allen resigned. After a vacancy of five months the Rev. Henry C. Knight was called to the parish, and accepted the charge. He was then only a deacon, but on the 20th of December, 1828, he was ordained priest by Bishop Henry M. Onderdonk, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Knight had charge of Bartholomew's, in connection with Prince George Parish. At the end of a year he removed to Massachusetts, and was succeeded by the Rev. Levin J. Gilliss, who officiated both at Rockville and at St. Bartholomew's, Hawling's River. Mr. Gilliss was a native of Somerset County, and had been ordained deacon by Bishop Kemp on the 24th of May, 1818. He had previously been rector of Queen Anne's, and afterwards of St. Paul's Parish, in Prince George's County. During all these years nothing had been done with the glebe lands of the parish, and no mention is made on the records of Rock Creek Church.

From this it is evident that the three last rectors of the parish did not officiate there. It was, however, still the parish church of Prince George Parish. From other sources it is learned that from 1817 the Rev. Mr. Addisson, the Rev. C. C. Addison, and the Rev. Mr. McCormick officiated there. At the suggestion of the Rev. Dr. Ethan Allen, in the spring of 1828, a vestry was elected for Rock Creek Church, who sent a deacon to the Diocesan Convention, who was admitted to a seat. Dr. Allen, who was the rector of the church at Rockville, also officiated there at irregular intervals. In 1829 another deacon was sent to the convention, but his seat was contested on the ground that it was merely a chapel and had no regular minister. Dr. Allen, however, demonstrated to the convention that Rock Creek church was not a chapel, but the parish church itself. The deacon was allowed to retain his seat, but the right of representation was not accorded to the church. In 1830, Rock Creek Church presented itself again to the convention with a rector, the Rev. Mr. Ash, and a lay delegate, and after considerable discussion it was constituted a separate church and granted the right of representation. In 1833, Mr. Gilliss, rector of Prince George and St. Bartholomew's, reported to the convention that considerable repairs had been made to the churches in both his parishes, and that a neat and comfortable parsonage had been built at Rockville.

Mr. Gilliss continued rector for fourteen years. His ministry was one of quiet progress and great usefulness. In 1844 he removed to Washington.
City, where he assisted in organizing and establishing the Church of the Ascension. He was succeeded by the Rev. Edward Wayler, a native of England, ordained by Bishop Griswold in 1837, who came to the parish from Pennsylvania. Mr. Wayler did not officiate at St. Bartholomew's, which was henceforth disassociated from the church at Rockville. In his report in 1845 he stated that the interior of the church had been renovated, a more convenient vestry-room made, and a new fence put around the yard. He only remained one year, and was succeeded by the Rev. George F. Worthington, a native of Anne Arundel County. Mr. Worthington was ordained by Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, Aug. 24, 1840, and was for some years in charge of St. John's in the Valley and Sherwood Chapel, Baltimore County, and afterwards was located at Catonsville, where he organized St. Timothy's Church. Mr. Worthington occasionally officiated at Seneca chapel, Middlebrook, in addition to performing his regular parish duties. In May, 1847, a bell was purchased for the church at Rockville, and in 1849 the parsonage was repaired and funds were procured for the purchase of an organ. In the spring of that year he was succeeded by the Rev. David Kerr, a native of Talbot County. Mr. Kerr was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, and was ordained deacon by Bishop Stone, afterwards priest. He officiated in various churches until 1849, when he was called to the rectoryship of the Rockville Church. In 1852 he resigned, and subsequently withdrew from the ministry. He died about 1877. Mr. Kerr was succeeded by the Rev. Lorenzo S. Russell, a native of Massachusetts, who reported in 1854 that the chancel had been enlarged and new altar-desks and furniture provided. Mr. Russell was ordained by Bishop Whittingham on the 24th of February, 1850, and took charge of St. Philip's Church, Laurel, whence he removed to the Rockville Parish. The present rector is the Rev. Benjamin F. Brown. In addition to the parish church at Rockville and the old church, St. Paul's, Rock Creek, there have been created from time to time St. Bartholomew's, or Hawling's River Church, St. Mark's, or Paint Chapel, St. John's, Mechanicsville, St. Peter's, St. Alban's, and Seneca Chapel. The history of St. Bartholomew's has already been given in connection with that of Rock Creek Church. St. Peter's, or Zion Parish, was originally known as Eden Parish, and before its creation as a parish was the Monocacy District of All Saints'. It embraced portions of what are now Frederick and Montgomery Counties, lying between the Monocacy and Seneca Creeks. Subsequently the parish was divided into two parishes,—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>St. Peter's, in Montgomery, and Zion, in Frederick. The two, however, appear to have formed one charge. The present church at Rockville is still known as Christ Church, the parish church of Prince George Parish. Interments in Protestant Episcopal Church (now Rockville) Cemetery:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
sons, Russells, Muncasters, Almoneys, etc. This and the Bethesda Church are offshoots of "Cabin John Church," established in 1723 by Rev. John Orme, V.D.M. For a full history in detail of the Rockville, Bethesda, and Cabin John Churches, see Bethesda District, where, under the head of "Bethesda Presbyterian Church," a very elaborate account is given, covering a period of one hundred and twenty years, with references to the earliest Presbyterian families.

St. Mary's Catholic Church.—Up to the year 1866, when the learned Dr. Chappelle was assisted by the zealous Father Sullivan, Montgomery County was but a single parish, under the control of one priest.

The Catholics of Montgomery have always been fortunate in the appointment of their ministers, from the venerated Father Redmond, under whose auspices was laid the corner-stone of St. Mary's church, down to the present dignified and respected incumbent, Father Cunningham. The exact date of the erection of St. Mary's is not known, but the corner-stone was laid by Bishop Whittredge, assisted by the pastor, Father Redmond, in the latter part of 1817. Before the completion of the building, however, Father Redmond was called to another field of labor. Father Carroll succeeded him, and under his administration the church was rapidly completed. From this time to the present there has been little of historical importance in connection with the church.

Among the pastors of the church have been the venerable Father Piot, now a very old man, residing at St. Charles' College, Howard County, Md.; Father Thos. Foley, afterwards Bishop of Chicago, now deceased; Father McManus, now pastor of St. John's Church, Baltimore; Father Dougherty, now stationed at Ellicott City; Father Didier, now pastor of St. Vincent's Church, one of the most flourishing in Baltimore; Father Chappelle, since honored with the title of Doctor of Divinity, and now pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Baltimore; Father Sullivan, lately appointed pastor of St. Peter's Church, Washington, D. C.; Father Boyle, the eloquent pastor of St. Matthew's, Washington, D. C.; Father Starr, chancellor of the diocese, Cathedral, Baltimore; Father Mackin, assistant pastor St. Martin's Church, Baltimore; Father Casper Schmidt, stationed at Elk Ridge, Md.

But little change has been made in the original church edifice. Father Mackin built a room to the west of the sanctuary the size of the sacristy on the east, which is used for a Sunday-school. Just west of the church is the graveyard, which is susceptible of much improvement at a small cost. The congregation of St. Mary's numbers about eight hundred members.

Among the graves in the cemetery are those of the following persons:

J. Clayton Bael, born Sept. 21, 1854, died March 15, 1881.
William H. Bohrer, died Oct. 2, 1874, aged 22.
Richard Bean, died Nov. 17, 1879, aged 45 years, 2 months.
John Benn, born March 25, 1795, died aged 73 years, 9 months, 1 day; Mary, his wife, born Aug. 7, 1795, died May 2, 1866.
Mary J., wife of M. Morgan, born Nov. 18, 1835, died Feb. 9, 1874.
Nicholas Brooke, born Nov. 5, 1852, aged 46; Mary Ann, his wife, died Jan. 15, 1876, aged 58.
Mrs. Eleanor Brooke, died Oct. 11, 1842, aged 74.
Horatio James, died May 15, 1870, aged 68.
Wm. G. Robertson, born March 17, 1819, died June 26, 1861.
Michael Fitzgerald, died Dec. 7, 1853.
Rebecca, wife of Charles S. Hunter, died Dec. 19, 1856.
Maria Dugan, died Aug. 21, 1837, aged 73.
Charles Beckwith, died July 5, 1866, aged 67.
Joseph Gingal, born June 7, 1810.
Ellen J. Viets, died Dec. 4, 1867, aged 39.
J. Davis, Jr., died Sept. 19, 1870, aged 68.
Frances Flock, died Sept. 4, 1863, aged 56.
John Ph. Flock, born March 8, 1826, died Oct. 31, 1871.
Anthony Kleinbien, died June 17, 1855, aged 33; Mary C., his wife, born Nov. 24, 1834, died Aug. 7, 1877.
James L. Grier, born July 2, 1834, died Jan. 24, 1857.
Elizabeth, wife of Wm. Gamble, died Sept. 1, 1871, aged 63 years, 5 months.
Martha, wife of L. W. Finch, died Aug. 15, 1870, aged 82.
Margaret, wife of Thos. Lyddane, born Feb. 19, 1824, died March 1, 1880.
James E. Lyddane, born Nov. 16, 1815, died Nov. 29, 1883.
M. S. MacDonald, died Jan. 5, 1874, aged 84.
Hy. Clements, died April 5, 1855; Jane Clements, died Oct. 16, 1848; Teresa J. Clements, died Sept. 6, 1844; Elizabeth Clements, died Sept. 19, 1844; Mary Clements, died Sept. 26, 1844.
Elizabeth A., wife of Bennet Abel, of St. Mary's County, Md., died July 11, 1860, aged 71.
Leonel Clements, born Oct. 16, 1794, died Nov. 1, 1886.
John Scott, born at Chestertown, Md., March 26, 1878, died in the county, Aug. 19, 1883.
Mary E. Boswell, born May 1, 1823, died Dec. 15, 1855.
Catherine E. Lowe, born May 1, 1833, died Dec. 2, 1879.
Martha Gaither, born Dec. 3, 1802, died Feb. 27, 1876.

Before the erection of St. Mary's, Father Plunkett, in 1804, celebrated service at the residence of Mr. Digges, near Bladensburg, visited Carroll's chapel, now St. John's church, and held services at the residence of Harry Bevans. He remained in charge of the mission in this county for about ten years. His successor was Father Redmond, S.J., in 1814, who in 1817 built St. Mary's church. He visited Barnesville, St. John's, and Mr. Gardiner's, at Hawling's River (now St. Peter's); also Richard Bowier's, two miles east of Rockville, and remained four years. His successor, Rev. Francis Xavier Carroll, who resided at Rockville, had charge of all the missions of the county, and remained two years. Rev. John De Vas came in 1820. For fifteen years he had charge of all the missions, but his health failing he then attended St. Rose's congregation only, living with a family named Peddicora, where he said mass every Sunday. He left in 1844, and became a professor in Georgetown College. Father B. S. Piot then had charge for three years, and was succeeded by Father Gallagher, who built St. Rose's church and remained until 1846. Rev. Thomas Foley was pastor from 1846 to 1847; Father McManus, 1847 to 1849; Father King, in 1849, who died the same year; Father McGuire, 1849 to 1851; Rev. F. X. Boyle, 1851 to 1854; Rev. J. J. Dougherty, who built St. Peter's church, 1854 to 1861; Rev. E. Didier, 1863 to 1866; Rev. P. L. Chappelle, 1866 to 1871. Then the mission of Montgomery County was divided. The succeeding pastors were Revs. Mackin, Casper Schmidt, J. A. Cunningham, and Father Gallen, present incumbent.

Baptist Church.—The church edifice was erected in 1823, and rebuilt in 1861.

On the 19th of August, 1821, the following persons withdrew from the old Seneca Baptist Church, which was under the pastoral care of Elder Planum Waters, assigning, among other reasons, their dissent from the views of the pastor on the subject of missions: William Clingan, Jesse Leach, Willie James, William Brewer, William Chiswell, Mary R. Braddock, Mary R. Brewer, Sarah Chiswell; and these, with Joseph H. Jones, William Sedgwick, Martha Jones, Prudence Jones, Sarah Leach, Abraham Stallings, Sarah Stallings, were constituted a regular Baptist Church, Oct. 20, 1821, by Rev. John Ikeya, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Baltimore; Rev. Obadiah B. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Washington, D. C.; and Rev. Thomas Barton, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Washington, D. C. Elder J. H. Jones was elected pastor of the new congregation, and William Sedwick assistant. The latter was afterwards regularly ordained by request of the church, and Jesse Leach and William Chiswell were elected deacons, and Willie James clerk.

By a formal resolution a branch of this church was established near Dr. William Brewer's, to be called Upper Bethel. The name under which the church was organized in Rockville was "Bethel Baptist Church." The first addition after the organization was Edward Anderson.

The church joined the Baltimore Association, and reported in their first letter a membership of eighteen. Miss Margaret Pierce, who is still living, was received and baptized Oct. 20, 1822.

Dec. 30, 1831, by a resolution, the church resolved that the upper branch be called "Bethel," and the lower, "Rockville" Baptist Church. The last record by the clerk (Willie James) was May 4, 1837.

Prior to 1851, Elder Jones resigned, having served as pastor for about twenty-four years, during which time the church reached a membership of sixty-nine, by letter and baptism, as shown by the records.

For some years the church was without a regular pastor, receiving the ministrations of such as were invited to visit them, among whom were Dr. Samson, Dr. Cole, Dr. Adams, Rev. C. Meadows, and others. The membership was reduced to nine. In May, 1851, Rev. F. L. Kregel was called to the pastorate, and ordained by Revs. J. M. W. Williams, G. F. Adams, and J. H. Philips, and Charles Spates was elected deacon. An evangelist, Rev. N. B. Collins, held a series of meetings, which revived the interest and doubled the membership, and it became a member of the Maryland Union Baptist Association.

Mr. Kregel resigning after a period of about three years, Elder Thomas Jones was chosen pastor in February, 1855, and continued his labors until his health compelled him to leave, in the fall of 1858. In May of this year, Edward M. Viers was elected deacon, and still serves.

During the pastorate of Rev. Thomas Jones the church regained considerable strength. During his stay of nearly four years the membership increased from eighteen to seventy-three.

In January, 1859, a committee was appointed to purchase a lot and collect funds to erect a house at what is now called Mount Zion, where in 1860 a neat house, thirty by forty feet, was erected and dedicated free of debt. In January, 1859, Elder S. R. White, then a student of Columbian College, was invited as a supply. In June following he was called to the care of the church, and September 16th following entered upon his duties as pastor. During his pastorate the church has licensed three of her members to preach, all of whom were ordained, and one of whom, Rev. J. L. Lodge, D.D., of Newark, N. J., is still in the pastorate. Three houses of worship have been erected,—one at Poolesville, one at Georgetown, and one at Mount Zion, the two former becoming separate organizations. The Baptist Church in Georgetown, D. C., was also the result of efforts by the pastor of this church and two of its members. The house of worship in Rockville has been rebuilt and enlarged at a cost of three thousand five hundred dollars, and has now a neat and commodious audience-room, with baptistery, organ, tower, and bell.

During his pastorate of nearly twenty-one years Mr. White baptized two hundred and eighty-seven persons, preached one hundred and thirty-nine funeral sermons, married one hundred and thirty-four couples. The present membership is one hundred and seventy-seven. The officers are E. M. Viers and R. A. Bagley, deacons; D. H. Bouic, clerk and treasurer. Rev. D. E. Hatcher, present pastor, was called in 1879.

The burying-ground is on the right of the church, and among those buried there are

Col. Thomas F. W. Viason, died Sept. 8, 1845, aged 58.
Bricie Selby, died April 15, 1844, aged 70.
Charles Spates, died Oct. 15, 1873, aged 85. His tombstone was erected by the Baptist Church, of which he was a deacon thirty years; and his wife, Ruth, born June 17, 1888, and died Oct. 15, 1856.
Samuel Clark Viers, died Nov. 8, 1872, aged 73; and his wife, Juliana, born May 24, 1794, died Nov. 27, 1878.
William Braddock, died Oct. 31, 1856, aged 47.
Virginia Sophia Somers, died May 17, 1872, aged 44.
Peter A. Bouie, died Jan. 10, 1859, aged 57.
William Nelson Austin, died Sept. 23, 1864, aged 72.
Charles Smith, died Aug. 15, 1859, aged 52.
Ellen Brewer, wife of Spencer C. Jones, and daughter of John and Elizabeth S. Brewer, born July 22, 1815, died July 21, 1876.
Isaac Riley, died July 5, 1850, aged 76.
B. F. Riley, born Dec. 24, 1845, died Aug. 21, 1872.
William R. Ams, died April 2, 1875, aged 60.
Wallace A. Bohrer, died February, 1864, aged 17.
Cornelia L. Bohrer, died Sept. 10, 1874, aged 49.

Rockville Christian Church.—This church had its origin about the year 1829, mainly through the efforts of Elder William McClenahan, who at that time stood at the head of the English department of the Rockville Academy, which position he filled most acceptably for many years. He was an able teacher and zealous expounder of the word of God. His wife (Elizabeth) and his sisters (Mary and Sarah) and his mother were all co-workers in establishing the church in Rockville. About the year 1835, Elder McClenahan inmersed a number of persons, who were received into church fellowship, among whom were his daughters (Elizabeth Ann and Mary Jane), Miss Elizabeth Braddock (afterwards married to John R. Miller), Mrs. Mary Granger, Mrs. Sarah Jacobs, William Braddock, Benjamin Daily and his wife and son, since deceased, Robert Carroll and wife, and John Kelly and wife. From the year 1835 to 1858 the congregation held their meetings part of the time at the Rockville Academy, but most of the time at the private residences of some of its members.

During this period the church has experienced many vicissitudes of religious fortune, losing many members by death, removal, and other causes, whose places have been filled by gradual accessions of new converts.

On the 10th day of July, 1858, the trustees of the Rockville Presbyterian Church sold and conveyed to William Braddock their house of worship, located on the northwest corner of Jefferson and Adams Streets, and in August of the same year William Braddock agreed, for a valuable consideration, to convey the same to "The Rockville Christian Church."

On the 15th day of August, 1866, articles of incorporation were duly executed and recorded in the clerk's office of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County, and on the 26th day of September following Mrs. Roberta V. Braddock, administratrix of William Braddock, in pursuance of the agreement entered into by her late husband, executed to the trustees a deed for the aforesaid property, which the congregation has since used and still use as a place of public worship. The house has been from time to time repaired and improved, externally and internally; recently a baptistery has been added thereto, and arrangements are now nearly effected for some improvements of the interior.

The congregation has had the ministerial services of many visiting brethren from different parts of the country, in addition to those regularly employed, the latter serving in the following order: Joseph Braddock, at the time of his death and for several years previous, principal of the Rockville Academy; Elder John L. T. Holland, of Virginia; Elder Alexander Anderson, of Scotland; Elder J. W. Kemp, of Ohio; Elder D. Sommer, of Maryland; Elder William H. Schell, present pastor.

At a regular meeting of the church, held in pursuance of the articles of incorporation, on the 9th day of July, 1878, the following officers were elected, who still hold their places:

Pastor, Elder William H. Schell; Elders, John R. Miller and John W. Horner; Deacons, George R. Braddock, Edward Horner, E. Gilmore Duley, and Hezekiah Trail; Trustees, John R. Miller, Hezekiah Trail, George R. Braddock, Edward Horner, and E. Gilmore Duley; Clerk, George R. Braddock; Treasurer, Hezekiah Trail.

Elder Schell has been the regular pastor for three years. A flourishing Sunday-school is connected with the church. The congregation at present numbers sixty-eight members.
Methodist Episcopal Church South.—The brick church, built many years ago, after the division of the church in 1844 fell into the possession of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is now occupied by the colored congregation. In 1867 and 1868, under the pastorate of Rev. James E. Armstrong, the present frame edifice was built. Since the organization of the church in 1865 it has had the following pastors:

This church forms a circuit with seven other churches,—Emory, Goshen, Brookville, Gaithersburg, Darnestown, Potomac Chapel, and Harris' School-house.

Rockville Lyceum.—Officers for 1881:
President, J. W. Warren; Vice-President, W. V. Beall, Jr.; Secretary, A. M. Fletcher; Treasurer, E. C. Peter; General Committee, D. Laird, Rev. S. B. Wilte, E. C. Peter, Mrs. A. Wood, and Miss Agnes Matlock.

Rockville Academy.—The second classical institution established in Montgomery County was the Rockville Academy. The first school of any reputation in the county was a seminary for young men in the Wallace or Magruder neighborhood, established near the close of the Revolutionary war by Rev. James Hunt, a Presbyterian clergyman, on his farm, called "Tusculum," now memorable as the Alma Mater of William Wirt. It was there that he was prepared, as far as scholastic training could prepare him, for that brilliant career which has made his name one of the most illustrious in American annals. After Mr. Hunt's death in 1793 there was in the county no school in which any instruction beyond the rudiments of English education was pretended to be taught. The rising generation, whose parents were able to incur the expense, were sent to Frederick, Bladensburg, or Georgetown for education. In a few families tutors were employed, who gave instruction in the higher branches. Sparse as the schools were then, the earliest records of the county show that a class of men then existed who were most accomplished clerks. Penmanship was brought to great perfection; manuscripts were executed with the regularity, beauty, and precision of type; language was used with accuracy, conciseness, and perspicuity,—in fine, learning, although not generally disseminated as now, had its disciples, who were familiar with "the well of English undefiled." The germ of the Rockville Academy was first developed in an act of the General Assembly passed in 1803, and re-enacted in 1806. Upton Beall, Honore Martin, Lewis Beall, Thomas Linstead, Thomas P. Wilson, Richard Anderson, and Solomon Holland were appointed commissioners to raise the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars by lottery for the purpose of purchasing a lot to erect a school-house and buy a fire-engine. The sum to be raised, though comparatively small, considered in relation to the then population and property of the county, was equivalent to five times its present value. The scheme authorized by the Legislature was successfully executed. A beautiful lot was purchased, on which a substantial brick building was erected, which remains a plain but permanent monument with which the names of its projectors should ever be associated in grateful remembrance. To give stability to the institution and enlarge its usefulness, its founders and patrons obtained in 1809 a charter incorporating Richard Anderson, Solomon Holland, Lewis Beall, Jesse Leach, James Anderson, John Wootton, Joseph Elgar, and Honore Martin as "trustees of the Rockville Academy, in Montgomery County." The trustees were empowered to hold real and personal estate to an amount not exceeding five thousand dollars in annual value; to appoint professors, teachers, and assistants for instructing students and scholars "in the vernacular and learned languages, and such sciences and branches of education as they shall think proper." The Assembly in 1811 appropriated the sum of eight hundred dollars, to be paid annually to the trustees on condition that they should educate eight indigent pupils free of charge. The first principal was Rev. John Breckenridge, of Pennsylvania, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and during his administration the academy acquired considerable reputation. Pupils were attracted from remote points, while its influence enlarged as its patronage increased. Rev. John Mines, D.D., whose personal character and attainments were calculated to impress his pupils with high regard and profound respect, was principal twenty-five years. After he declined a re-election, for ten years, and until about 1857, the time of his death, he exercised a general oversight over the institution. Rev. William McLenahan, head of the English department and collaborator of Dr. Mines, was afterwards president of Princeton College. The records of the academy having been lost during the civil war, a full list of the principals and assistants cannot be given. For seventy-two years, without any material intermission, the academy has instructed from thirty to sixty students annually. Through the filial affection and generosity of one of its sons, the late Julius West, a beautiful and valuable farm near Rockville was, about 1868, devised to the academy in perpetual trust for educational purposes. In 1869 the academy was under the control of Rev. Thomas N. Conrad. His successor, the present principal, is Prof. Cooke D. Luckett, a graduate of the University of Virginia. Its board of trustees are Col. James W. Anderson, president; Hon. George Peter, secretary; Robert W. Carter, Esq., treasurer; Maj. J. G. Englund, Hon. W. Viers Bouie, E. B. Prettyman, N. D. Offutt, H. W. Talbott. The institution is divided into junior, intermediate, senior, and classical departments. The sessions are of ten months' duration, at the close of which gold medals are given for the highest standing in each department. Students are prepared for college, university, or active business pursuits of life.

1 T. Anderson's Centennial Oration.

Mutual Building Association of Montgomery County.—This association was incorporated April 22, 1879, with the following gentlemen as incorporators: Spencer C. Jones, John J. Higgins, Hezekiah Trail, William H. Rabbitt, D. F. Owens, R. A. Bagley, J. B. Edmonston. The stock of the association is limited to six hundred shares, of the par value of one hundred dollars per share, of which no member is allowed to hold more than twenty unredeemed shares. Two hundred and thirty-one of the shares are held by the members.

The total receipts for the first year were $3015; for the second year, $3325.30.

The following officers have served the association:

1879.—President, Spencer C. Jones; Vice-President, John J. Higgins; Secretary and Treasurer, Hatterly W. Talbott; Solicitor, James Dawson; Board of Directors, Spencer C. Jones, John J. Higgins, Hezekiah Trail, Reuben A. Bagley, John B. Edmondson, Dr. D. F. Owens, and William H. Rabbitt.

1880.—President, D. F. Owens; Vice-President, John J. Higgins; Secretary and Treasurer, H. W. Talbott; Solicitor, C. W. Prettyman; Directors, Dr. D. F. Owens, J. J. Higgins, Hezekiah Trail, John B. Edmondson, William H. Rabbitt, Dr. E. E. Stonestreet, S. B. Haney.

The present officers are: President, E. E. Stonestreet; Vice-President, J. J. Higgins; Secretary and Treasurer, H. W. Talbott; Solicitor, C. W. Prettyman; Directors, B. F. Owens, J. J. Higgins, Hezekiah Trail, W. H. Carr, W. R. Pumphrey, W. H. Rabbitt, S. B. Haney.

Rockville Library Association.—This association was organized in 1871, with the following officers: President, Richard J. Bowie; Secretary, Spencer C. Jones; Treasurer, William Viers Bouie. Its library and rooms were in the rear of the law-office of Anderson & Bouie.

Rockville Division, No. 49, S. of T.—This division existed for many years, and its officers in 1873 were:

Prominent among the citizens of Rockville for many years was Samuel C. Viers, who was born near Dawsonville, August, 1798. When young he removed to Baltimore, where he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Diffenderfer, whose youngest sister he married in 1819. He remained in business in Baltimore until 1833, when he removed to a farm purchased by him on Rock Creek. In early life he served many years as magistrate, and was postmaster of Rockville under Van Buren's administration, from 1837 to 1841. He was appointed chief judge of the Orphans' Court by Governor Grason. In 1851 he was elected by the people judge of this court, and re-elected in 1853. He enlarged the town by the erection of a large number of dwelling-houses, and to his enterprise Rockville owes much of its present prosperity. He joined the Baptist Church in 1824, under Elder J. H. Jones, and died Nov. 8, 1872, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

Another distinguished citizen of Rockville was the late Hon. Richard Johns Bowie. Judge Bowie was born in Georgetown, D. C., June 23, 1807, and was the son of Washington and Margaret Bowie. His father was a leading importing merchant of that town, where his childhood was spent. A pupil of Dr. Cranahan, who afterwards became president of Princeton College, he acquired an education, and commenced the study of law in his native town, in the office of Clement Cox, and was admitted to the bar at the youthful age of nineteen. He chose Montgomery County as his field of legal labor, and the following year removed to Rockville. His ability found almost instant recognition in the quick flow towards him of a lucrative practice, and in a little while he was admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court. The Whig doctrine found in him an earnest advocate, and Henry Clay a warm admirer.

On the 19th of November, 1836, the college of senatorial electors assembled at Annapolis, as provided by the constitution of the State, and Richard J. Bowie was elected a member of the Senate of Maryland. This was his first entrance into public life. Though then quite a young man (under thirty years of age), he was thought by the college of electors worthy to be ranked by the side of such associates as John V. L. McMahon, William Price, Richard Thomas, William Schley, James B. Rice, and the other distinguished men whose name and fame are identified with the Legislature of Maryland. The Senate of 1836, it is high honor to say of it, was unsurpassed for talents by any which ever assembled in Maryland. In that body Mr. Bowie held a prominent position, a conclusive evidence of his ability and worth, and took a leading part in many of the important measures agitated at the session of 1836 and 1837.

When the celebrated Bemis case occurred, and the demand for the surrender of Bemis' associates made by the Executive of Pennsylvania had been communicated by the Governor of Maryland to the General Assembly, with a view to obtain its advice upon the delicate and momentous question at issue, Mr. Bowie was one of the committee of conference between the two houses to whom the subject was referred; and it was he who drew up the resolutions which were subsequently adopted by both branches of the Legislature. Those resolutions asserted on behalf of the South the very rights afterwards conceded by the enactment of the Fugitive Slave Law; and the principles thus set forth by the youthful senator of Maryland were afterwards sanctioned to their fullest extent by the Supreme Court of the United States, in its decision of the case of Prigg and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The length of these resolutions precludes their insertion here, but they may easily be referred to in the volume of the laws of December session, 1837. They were offered by Mr. Bowie, in a spirit of compromise, at a time when more violent measures had been suggested for the action of our Legislature, and when it required the exercise of the utmost prudence to preserve the friendly relations between the two States, and at the same time secure the rights of the citizens of our own. It will be remembered that the amended constitution of Maryland was adopted by the Legislature at the sessions of 1836, 1837. The amendments then enacted were considered satisfactory to the most ultra reformers of that day. They provided for the election of a Governor and senators by the people; the abolition of the life tenure of clerks and registers, and their appointment for a term of seven years; an increase of representation to Baltimore and the larger counties. This was the reform demanded at that day, and it received the cordial support of Mr. Bowie.

By the operation of this amended constitution Mr. Bowie's term of service in the State Senate was reduced from five years to two. He retired from the Legislature with the session ending in the spring of 1838, and was never afterwards a member of either branch of that body.

In 1839, Mr. Bowie was selected by the Whigs of the district, composed of Frederick and Montgomery Counties, as their representative to the National Convention at Harrisburg. He went there the zealous supporter of the nomination of Henry Clay. The mode adopted by convention in making the nomination was to vote by States, the majority giving the whole vote of a State. Mr. Bowie had proposed, and advocated with much zeal, the plan of voting per capita,—that is, for each individual member of the convention to be entitled to cast his own vote.

Had this motion prevailed it is generally understood that Henry Clay would have obtained the nomination, and his friends afterwards deeply regretted that they had not sustained Mr. Bowie's motion. A nomination of Henry Clay at that election would have certainly made him President of the United States. After the nomination of Gen. Harrison, Mr. Bowie was placed on the electoral ticket, and with his colleagues from Maryland had the honor of voting for the hero of Tippecanoe.

From the time of his retirement from the State Senate in 1838 to the election of 1849, Mr. Bowie continued to devote himself to his profession, in which he attained a very high position, being not only the leading member of the bar of his own county, but also a frequent and distinguished practitioner before the Court of Appeals. In 1844 he was chosen prosecuting attorney for Montgomery County, and remained in that office until he was sent to Congress. In 1849 he was nominated by the Whig Convention of the district composed of St. Mary's, Prince George's, Charles, Calvert, Anne Arundel, and Montgomery Counties as a candidate for the House of Representatives, and elected in October of that year. While in Congress Mr. Bowie was emphatically a working man. He also frequently participated in the debates, and many of his printed speeches would do credit to any one of the ablest statesmen of the country.

To Mr. Bowie belongs the honor of having been the first member of the House of Representatives who took ground in favor of Mr. Clay's compromise bill. He made a beautiful and thrilling speech in its favor, which was highly complimented at the time.

Another speech delivered by him during his term was one (made Feb. 14, 1851) on the "River and Harbor bill," in which he strongly advocated the true national and Maryland side of the question.

In the fall of 1851, Mr. Bowie was re-elected to Congress. Though his opponent was an able and popular member of his own party, Mr. Bowie received the unprecedented majority of 774, and in his own election district all but 14 votes of some 300 polled.

Among the speeches delivered by him during his second term was one on the Homestead bill, made April 26, 1852, and one on the foreign policy of the government, made Feb. 25, 1853. As a member of the Committee on Claims, Mr. Bowie prepared several important reports. One of these, accompanied by a bill, failed of success from the delays of a Congress too much interested in the question of President-making to devote much of its time to the immediate interests of the general public constituency.

At the nominating convention of his congressional district, held in 1853, he declined to accept a third nomination, which there was every reason to think would have been cheerfully tendered him.

Upon the expiration of his second congressional term he was put in nomination as the Whig candidate for the governorship of Maryland against T. Watkins Ligon, the Democratic nominee, and suffered defeat. The power and influence of the Whig party was now on the decline, and Judge Bowie, in common with many others, retired from active participation in politics. The outbreak of the civil war awoke him, however, to the influence of the old active spirit, and as a devoted Union man he caused his voice and counsel to be heard and felt. In 1863 he was elevated to the bench as a member of the Court of Appeals, and as one of that body displayed such eminent judicial learning that Governor Bradford appointed him chief judge of the court. That high place he retained until the adoption of the new State constitution of 1867. In that year he was the Republican candidate for chief judge of the Sixth District against Madison Nelson, but at that election no Republican candidate was successful. Upon Judge Nelson's death, Judge Bowie was elected, in November, 1871, to be chief judge of the Circuit Court, and again became a member of the Court of Appeals.

During the tenth year of his service he was stricken with a fatal illness, and died at his home in Montgomery County, March 12, 1881. Up to within a year of his death he was remarkably active, and attended with regularity the sessions of the court. An obituary published at the time of his death recited that "few men in this State have more justly and in a greater degree enjoyed the honor and esteem of their fellow-citizens without distinction of party than Judge Bowie in his long public career. He was everywhere, and by all with whom he came in contact, recognized as a man of unblemished integrity, a nice sense of honor, never seeking political office, but belonging to that class of men, of whom few are now to be met with, who believed in the principle that the office should seek the man, and it frequently sought him. The trust reposed in him by his fellow-citizens was never betrayed. Though a consistent Whig, and afterwards an ardent Republican, he could always command votes from the opposition whenever a candidate for any office, and as a member of the Legislature, member of Congress, and as judge he discharged the duties of each position in a manner reflecting credit upon himself as well as upon his State." His widow (daughter of Gen. Otho H. Williams, of Hagerstown, one of the most distinguished citizens of Western Maryland) survives him, and resides at "Glen View," the home farm, near Rockville.

St. Mary's Institute.—This young ladies' boarding-school in 1869 was under the charge of Misses Dugan and Walley. It is now conducted by Mrs. Bowie and Miss Gardener.

Rockville Cemetery Association.—Its officers for 1881 were:

Hon. R. J. Bowie, president; Wm. V. Bowie, Jr., secretary and treasurer; W. R. Pumpheary, superintendent; Wm. V. Bowie, Jr., James B. Henderson, Hezekiah Trail, N. D. Offutt, E. B. Prettyman, Dr. E. E. Stonestreet, directors.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, J. L. Armstrong, Rockville P. O.; No. 2, C. B. Clemants, Rockville P. O.; No. 3, C. G. Petty, Mount Rose P. O.; No. 4, B. E. Bradbrook, Mount Rose P. O.; No. 5, Milford Offutt, Rockville P. O.

There are two colored schools.

The magistrates are Chandler Keys, J. W. M. Kiger, M. Morgan, S. W. Magruder.¹

Montrose.—This point is near Randolph Station, on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Charles A. Lownie, John Magruder, and Mrs. M. Heley, merchants. The latter is post-mistress.

¹ The Meadfield Rifle Company organized at Rockville elected, Dec. 17, 1859, the following officers: Captain, R. J. Bowie; First Lieutenant, W. Viers Bouie; Second Lieutenant, J. L. Dufet; Third Lieutenant, George Peter, Jr.; Ensign, Charles M. Price; First Sergeant, Henry Hurley; Second Sergeant, John T. Kilgour; Third Sergeant, M. Green; Fourth Sergeant, J. T. Bayley; First Corporal, Cornelius Bean; Second Corporal, William J. Ricketts; Third Corporal, William Atwood; Surgeon, Dr. A. H. Sommers; Secretary, S. A. Matlack; Treasurer, J. W. Spates.
BERY DISTRICT, No. 5.

This district is bounded on the north by Mechanicsville District, on the east by the Potomac River, dividing it from Prince George's County, on the south by the District of Columbia, and on the west by Bethesda and Rockville Districts. On the northwest Rock Creek divides it from Rockville District. Paint Branch, Sligo Branch, and Northwest Branch of the Patuxent flow southeast into Prince George's County. The boundaries of the district until 1878 were as follows: Beginning at the mouth of Hawling's River and running down Patuxent to Prince George's County line, then with said line to the Territory of Columbia, then with said Territory to Rock Creek, then up Rock Creek to Robertson's mill, then up the Bladensburg road until it intersects the line of the First District at the lower end of Benjamin Ricketts' plantation, then with the line of the Second District reversed to the beginning.

The limits of the district were reduced in 1878 by the erection of Mechanicsville, which was formed in that year from portions of Berry and Cracklin Districts.

Among the earliest settlers in the district were William Joseph, Alexander Beall, Richard Snowden, Neal Clark, the Duvalls, Dorseyes, Cashells, Rileys, Kemps, Van Horns, Bonifants, Stablers, Hardings, Shaws, and Fawcets.

School Meetings.—At a school-meeting of School District No. 2, held Sept. 5, 1839, Thomas Fawcett was president, and John McCutchen, clerk. Washington Duvall, John McCutchen, George D. Spencer, Thomas and William Valdenor were appointed a committee to ascertain the number of white children between the ages of six and sixteen years and select a site for a school, and report at the next meeting. At an adjourned meeting on the 13th the committee reported eighty-two children, and recommended for the school-house site the one near a spring situated east of the road leading from Colesville to the Burnt Mills, west of the Paint Branch, north of John Selby's residence, and south of the house then occupied by John Mullican, known as Patrick Arme's old place. The trustees selected were Thomas Fawcett, George B. Scaggs, George D. Spencer. Three hundred dollars were levied.

The First School District held its meeting on September 14th, at the house of David Parker, at Leesboro, of which Robert Y. Brent was president, and Charles Bunting, clerk. Adjourned until March 3, 1840.

The meeting of the Second District was held September 12th, of which John Cook was president, and John Brewer, clerk. Adjourned to June, 1840, without any further action.

District No. 4, on September 4th, held its meeting, of which Eden Beall was president, and Richard S. Anderson, clerk. The trustees elected were Richard S. Anderson, Eden Beall, and John Rabbitt. A committee was appointed to ascertain the legal number of school youths and look out a site for a new school-house, and report at the January meeting following. Four hundred dollars was levied.

Drumeldra.—On July 18, 1841, Abraham Brooke, Elizabeth Lukens, and Hannah Lukens opened a boarding-school for girls at this point, near Colesville. Being but fourteen miles from Washington City, and having an able corps of teachers, it was for many years one of the best institutions in the State.

Spencerville is seven miles from Laurel, twelve from Rockville, twenty-five from Baltimore, and near the Potomac River. The town derives its name from Wm. A. Spencer, who founded it in 1850. The first store of general merchandise was established and conducted by John Gainer. He was succeeded by Joseph Mabbitt about 1860, and the store is now owned by Andrew McCoy. In 1869, Mr. Chaney founded the business that is now so successfully carried on by Messrs. Chaney & Fair. Austin Black was the pioneer blacksmith of the vicinity. The post-office was established about 1860 by William Spencer. Wm. H. Phair is the present postmaster, having been appointed in February, 1881. Liberty Grove Grange, No. 50, P. of I., is located in the place, of which John E. Phair is the Master, and Wm. Rich, secretary. Dr. Charles H. Waters is the physician. The land in the vicinity of this village produces from fifteen to thirty-five bushels of wheat, and eight to twelve barrels of corn, and two tons of hay to the acre.

Union Cemetery Association.—This association was formed about 1862. The present officers are: President, C. W. Rich, and Secretary, W. H. Phair. The cemetery is situated about two miles west of Spencerville, on the road leading to Burtonsville. Among the graves inclosed within its limits are those of:

1. Mary Louis, wife of Griffith M. Smith, died May 2, 1862, aged 36 years, 2 days.
3. Hiram Spencer, died April 23, 1876, aged 37.
5. Amelia, his wife, died April 8, 1861, aged 31.
7. Mary A., wife of Charles S. Barnes, born Jan. 9, 1849, died Nov. 23, 1876.
George Reigle, Sr., died July 2, 1861, aged 73 years, 2 months, 26 days.
Eve, his wife, died June 4, 1863, aged 74 years, 9 months, 8 days.
J. M. Reigle, died Sept. 8, 1860, aged 25.
John D. Rich, died May 8, 1859, aged 60.
John Alex. Bennett, died May 21, 1866, aged 25.
Belinda, wife of Asher D. Bennett, died Oct. 15, 1861, aged 56.
Joseph Soper, born Feb. 6, 1817, died Feb. 16, 1878.
Lawrence Reigle, died March 6, 1865, aged 54 years, 4 months, 6 days.
Wm. H. Reigle, died Dec. 8, 1870, aged 21 years, 21 days.
H. Clay Pierce, died May 29, 1871, aged 35 years.

Spencerville Circuit of the Methodist Episcopal Church is composed of portions of circuits, and was first called Sandy Spring Circuit, in 1865, the Rev. John W. Cornelius being then in charge of it.
The circuit extends from the parsonage to Liberty Grove, one and a half miles; from Liberty Grove to Mount Pisgah, six miles; from the parsonage to Zion, four miles; from Zion to Oakwood, five miles; from Oakwood to Ashton, three miles.
Liberty Grove appointment for many years belonged to the circuit below, including Laurel (Prince George's Co.), Lavady, Elk Ridge. The circuit was called Laurel-Patuxent. Oakwood belonged to Rockville Circuit for years. Mount Pisgah belonged to the same circuit with which Liberty Grove was connected.
There was a circuit, which existed a short time, made up of Friendship, Federal's, Zion, Oakwood, and Sharp Street (colored). The Conference, in 1865, gave the circuit its present form, and appointed Rev. John W. Cornelius to the charge. The succeeding appointment was Rev. E. B. Richardson, who did much in the way of building up the circuit. He paid a heavy debt on Oakwood church, and built the Zion church, or rather completed it, as it was only a frame structure. He built Mount Pisgah, and he built Ashton after organizing the society. The class-leaders of the churches at present are: Liberty Grove, Wm. H. Phair; Oakwood, Joseph H. Ziegler; Ashton, Rev. James M. Haslup; Mount Pisgah, James I. Turner.
The ministers from 1870 of the circuit have been:
1870-73, Joseph A. McCauley, presiding elder; J. P. Wilson, pastor in charge; 1873-76, William F. Speake, presiding elder; Charles O. Cook, pastor in charge; 1876-78, B. P. Brown, presiding elder; J. W. Smith, pastor in charge; 1878 (and present), B. F. Brown, presiding elder; J. S. M. Haslup, pastor in charge.
We give a sketch of its congregations:
Old Federal Church is in the bounds of and belongs to the Spencerville Circuit, and is a half-mile south of Colesville. It is said by many persons to be the oldest Methodist Episcopal church now standing in Maryland, and that the Annual Conference met within its walls. From its pulpit the word of life has been dispensed by some of the mighty men of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Here Bishop Asbury preached Christ and the resurrection within its walls to the many who came to hear, and here the eloquent McKendrie pointed men to Christ and bade them look and live. Sneathing Shin, Robert Emory, George Sewell, J. A. Collens, and many other distinguished divines have also officiated here. The old church is no longer used for public worship.
Mount Pisgah.—This is the next oldest congregation on the circuit. It is regarded as the best church on the circuit, and is considered by many the best country church in the county. This is the third church built here in a short space of time, the two former having been destroyed by fire. In the vicinity of these are some attractive country-seats owned by persons living in Washington City, who attend service at the church. Among the former members were ex-Secretary of United States Treasury, McCullough and family.
Oakwood.—For a number of years the ministers preached in a small school-house. The Rev. Wm. P. Magruder, M.D., who was for a considerable period a member of the Baltimore Conference, and who on account of ill health was obliged to stop preaching, located near this appointment and joined this class, and about 1867 or 1868 commenced a protracted meeting, which resulted successfully. After this the desire of the people was a new church. The enterprise was undertaken by the Rev. J. W. Cornelius, and in a short time a church was erected, and dedicated by Rev. Dr. Littleton Mourgad and Rev. A. Mauship, of Philadelphia. The congregation is renowned for its liberality.
Liberty Grove.—This in a number of particulars is the best appointment on the circuit. They have a neat church, with a Sunday-school room below. The congregation is very large, and numbers two classes. The people are very liberal and kind-hearted.
Ashton.—In 1868 there was no appointment here, but in the following year Rev. E. Richardson commenced preaching in a small church belonging to the African Methodist Episcopal Church. When the winter came a protracted meeting was held, which resulted in the conversion of many persons and the erection of a church edifice. A short time before the Conference of 1869, Bishop Ames preached in the church, and collected money to complete it.
Zion is situated in the county of Prince George's, and was connected with this circuit at its formation.
Colesville.—This village, named in honor of the Cole family, who very early settled in the neighborhood, is six miles from Silver Spring Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, thirteen from Rockville, thirty from Baltimore, and near Paint Branch. It is located on "Beall Christie," granted to Charles and William Beall in 1720, and consisting of five hundred and six acres. The merchants are Mrs. A. Graff and John L. Bradford,—the latter postmaster. "Federal Methodist Episcopal church," already mentioned, a half-mile south of the village, was built just at the close of the Revolution, but is now used for worship, having been supplanted by the Andrews Methodist Episcopal church, erected in 1868 and 1869. This is a one-story frame structure, at the western end of the village. Its pastors have been Revs. Messrs. Armstrong, McDonald, Hatteway, Smith, Jones, Porterfield, Hasip, and Wolf. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is Benjamin Fawcett, assisted by James Ziegler. The trustees are William Shaw, Francis Lazehny, and Benjamin Fawcett. In its cemetery are buried Thomas Fawcett, born March 8, 1794, died Jan. 18, 1871, and his wife, Lydia, born June 28, 1800, died Feb. 14, 1874; Joseph Fawcett, born Aug. 15, 1836, died Feb. 20, 1874; Eliza Fawcett, born June 26, 1835, died Jan. 6, 1871; Ann F. Kidwell, born Nov. 10, 1841, died Jan. 2, 1890. Charles Cunningham was the first blacksmith in Colesville, and was succeeded by Allen Reed in 1868.

Burtonsville.—This place is five and a half miles from Laurel, and was named in honor of Isaac Burton, who owned most of the land surrounding the hamlet. The post-office was established some twelve years ago. The store was started in 1868 by Alexander Sims, who was succeeded by Burton & Carr, they by Mr. Chaney, and he by Bruce Small. Isaac Burton is postmaster, and Dr. Charles Waters, physician. Liberty Grove M. E. Church, which is situated in the vicinity, is described under "Spencerville Circuit."

St. Mark's P. E. Church, or chapel, belongs to Silver Spring Parish, and was erected in 1876. It is situated near Fairland Post-office, at the intersection of the Annapolis and Columbia roads.

Four Corners is a village two miles from Silver Spring Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. It contains a Methodist Episcopal Church South, built about 1871, of which Rev. Mr. Wolf is pastor. The merchants are George H. Jarbee and William E. Manakee. Lewis Miller is postmaster.

Knowles' is on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, five miles from Rockville and fifty-one from Baltimore. The postmaster is Joshua Carrick.

Wheaton is near Forest Glen Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The merchants are D. C. Anderson, Thomas Bean, Charles Davis, Samuel Jones, Richard Mitchell, Alfred Ray, and George Pyle,—the latter postmaster. Dr. Charles Osman is the physician.

Burnt Mills.—This hamlet is situated on the Colesville turnpike, and contains several shops.

Mitchell's Cross-roads is on the Brookville turnpike, and contains a post-office, store, and several shops.

St. John's Catholic Church (Carroll's Chapel).—The church edifice is a neat brick structure, situated at Forest Glen Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The church was organized prior to 1790 by Bishop Carroll, and around it cluster many interesting memories of that pious and distinguished prelate. Here came from Virginia and Maryland many of the oldest and best families to worship. Among the dead interred in its ancient burial-ground are the following:

John Rabbitt, born Feb. 22, 1779, died March 29, 1863.
Rebecca Rabbitt, born Aug. 10, 1785, died March 5, 1876.
Martha E. Barnes, wife of John T. Barnes, died Sept. 6, 1855, aged 32.
Mary E., consort of Joseph L. Carroll, and daughter of James W. Fling, died Jan. 1, 1865, aged 38.
Susan A., wife of George Kemp, died Dec. 17, 1874, aged 46 years, 10 months, and 27 days.
Lucinda Burrows, died Sept. 29, 1872, aged 60.
Lloyd A. Burroughs, died Nov. 7, 1833, aged 30.
Julia Ann Donougho, born in the County Galway, Ireland, died June 2, 1846, aged 76.
John Donougho, born in the County Galway, Ireland, died Sept. 15, 1852, aged 83.
Patrick Donougho, died 1812, aged 18.
Timothy Donougho, born April 25, 1808, died July 22, 1829.
Bridget Donougho, born March 4, 1804, died June 4, 1831.
Margaret Donougho, born July 24, 1807, died June 22, 1874.
Julia, wife of Joseph Bell, and daughter of J. and P. Ingram, died at Washington, D. C., March 21, 1874, aged 40.
Annie McDonald, died Feb. 21, 1858, aged 25.
Lewis Ratliff, died Aug. 8, 1819, aged 14 years, 9 months, and 7 days.
Charles Bunting, born July 1, 1765, died Sept. 18, 1833.
Susan M. Bunting, born Feb. 21, 1801, died May 25, 1874.
Lucretia, wife of J. N. Norton, born Sept. 28, 1829, died July 12, 1876.
William B. Mickum, died Nov. 25, 1866, aged 35.
Charles E. Brent, born at Washington, D. C., 1827, died Dec. 6, 1867.
Ann M., relict of Robert Leroy Livingstone, of New York, died Feb. 27, 1865, at New York City, aged 73.
Eleanor Carroll, wife of Daniel Carroll, died Feb. 3, 1876, aged 92.
Ann Brent, relict of Robert Brent, Esq., and daughter of Daniel Carroll, born July 13, 1733, died November, 1804.
persons instrumental in the formation of this parish in 1858 were Montgomery Blair, Josiah Harding, O. H. P. Clark, Hopkins Anderson, Mrs. Admiral S. P. Leland, William H. Batchelor. The venerable journalist, Francis P. Blair, Sr., was baptized and received into this church, in his residence at Silver Spring, in an upper chamber, where hung Sully's picture of his revered mother. The vestrymen of the church are Montgomery Blair, Joseph H. Bradley, Dr. James H. Davidson, Spencer Watkins, Horatio Carroll, William Riley, Jr., Julius Marlow, Franklin Pilling; and the wardens are Richard T. Ray and John Davidson. Its rector, Rev. James B. Averitt, was born in 1835 in North Carolina, and graduated at the university of that State, and also in the law school under Chief Justice R. M. Pearson. He served four years in the Confederate army, and was several years principal of the Winchester, Va., Seminary for Young Ladies. When he took the pastorate the church had forty-one, and now has two hundred and twenty communicants. The three chapels already mentioned have been built during his rectorship. Previous to his removal to this parish he had charge for several months of the Catoctin Mission of Frederick County. In the cemetery attached to the church are the remains of

W. P. Jackson, died Sept. 17, 1873, aged 25.
Deborah W. Ganby, born Dec. 6, 1802, died Dec. 6, 1864.
Eleanor Winthem, aged 36.
Elizabeth Winthem, aged 81.
Anna Winthem, aged 77.
John G. Fiddler, born April 23, 1823, died March 4, 1874.
Nancy Jones, died Feb. 26, 1873, aged 55.
George J. Schmidt, born Sept. 7, 1827, died June 27, 1877.

Sligo —This place is on the Brookville turnpike, near Silver Spring Station on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and is six miles from Washington. James L. Dorsey is postmaster, and Drs. Josiah Harding and C. G. Stone, physicians. The merchants are J. L. Dorsey, Samuel Jackson, and A. L. Graves. The Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant congregations have each a neat frame church edifice. Sligo and Silver Spring Station are both on the survey of "Girl's Portion," which was surveyed for Col. Henry Dulany in 1868. It extended from Rock Creek eastward to O. H. P. Clark's farm, three and three-eighths miles. The Ashton and Sligo turnpike passes through this tract, and the Brookville and Washington turnpike crosses it. The Blair estate, “Silver Spring,” is included in this survey.

St. Joseph’s Park lies on the east side of Rock Creek, and embraces Knowles’ Station, Forest Glen Station, and Linden Station, including the beautiful farms of Alfred Ray, William A. Batchelor, and Carroll’s or St. John’s chapel. The Brookville and Washington turnpike passes through it, from Augustus Burgdorf’s farm nearly to Grace Protestant Episcopal church.

St. Joseph’s Park comprises a tract of land granted May 20, 1869, to William Joseph, containing four thousand two hundred and twenty acres.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, Mary D. Hardy, Wheaton P. O.; No. 2, E. S. C. Weaver, Eligo P. O.; No. 3, Cyrus Grady, Barut Mills P. O.; No. 4, C. N. Warfield, Colesville P. O.; No. 5, Frank Miller, Spencer J. P. O.; No. 6, A. T. Porter, Sandy Spring P. O.; No. 7, Wm. Grady, Sandy Spring P. O.; No. 8, F. P. Clark, Silver Spring P. O.; No. 9, J. H. S. Roundhead, Fairland P. O.; No. 10, Mersey A. Griffin, Norbeck P. O.; No. 11, A. R. Wingate, Bethesda P. O.

There are three colored schools.

The magistrates are John T. Baker, Cauin Condick, James C. Haviland, Samuel R. Carr.

DARNESTOWN DISTRICT, No. 6.

This district was created Feb. 14, 1878, and was formed from portions of Medley and Rockville Districts. Its metes and bounds are as follows:

“Beginning at the crossing of Little Seneca Creek by the county road leading from Gaithersburg to Rockville and running down and with said Little Seneca Creek until it empties into Great Seneca Creek; thence down and with said Great Seneca Creek until it empties into the Potomac River; thence down and with said Potomac River to the mouth of Watts’ Branch; thence up and with said Watts’ Branch to the mouth of Piney Branch; thence up and said Piney Branch until the same is crossed by the public road near the residence of Mrs. Upton West; thence down and with public road in the direction of Darnestown, until the same intersects the road known as the Darners mill road; then with and up said road, as it is described in the plot recorded in Liber J. G. H., number seven, folio six hundred and three, of the land records of said Montgomery County, until the same intersects the Gaithersburg and Barnesville road, near Gaithersburg; then with said Gaithersburg and Barnesville road in the direction of Barnesville to the place of beginning, to include Harris and Watkins Islands in the Potomac River.”

This district is bounded on the north and northwest by Medley District, west by the Potomac River and Virginia, south by Great Falls and Rockville Districts, and east by Clarke’sburg and Gaithersburg Districts. Little and Great Seneca Creeks separate it from Medley District, and Piney Branch from Great Falls District. The other streams are Muddy Branch, flowing west into the Potomac, and Long Draught, northwest into Great Seneca Creek.

The earliest settlers were Walter Evans, James Plummer, John Chitten, William Offutt, the Dawsons, Pumphreys, Joneses, Wests, Du Feils, Purhams, Crosses, Vinechts, Rice, Higginsons, and Bentons.

DARNESTOWN.—This town lies five miles from Germantown, and was named in honor of William Darne. The oldest house belongs to the heirs of William Darne, and is occupied by Edward Green. The first store was kept by John Candler, and the first tavern by Andrew Barneycoloe. Dr. Edwards was the first resident physician. John Doud was the first blacksmith, and the first wheelwright-shop was carried on by Samuel Lecke, with whom Richard Hopple, his successor, and the present wheelwright, learned his trade. John Candler was the first postmaster, and J. S. Windsor is the present. Dr. Thomas Williams is the resident physician, and Dr. R. B. Beall, dentist. James S. Windsor and James F. Poole are the merchants.

Darnestown Grange, No. 33, is located here, of which L. A. Darby is Master, and E. L. Teshiffly, secretary. Pleasant Hill Lodge, No. 97, 1. O. O. F., was instituted at Pleasant Hill, where its meetings were held until after the war, when it was removed to this town. In September, 1881,—no meetings having been held here for several months,—the lodge was removed to Dawsonville.

The Presbyterian church, a frame structure, was built in 1855. The successful establishment of this church was chiefly the result of the faithful labors of its first and efficient pastor, Rev. Metzger. After his death Rev. James Henderson became pastor, who was succeeded by Rev. Charles Beach, and he by Rev. Henry Brown, the present incumbent.

In the rear of the church is a graveyard, in which are interred

Mary E. Warfield, born Sept. 18, 1829, died Dec. 27, 1880.
Wm. W. Warfield, born Sept. 17, 1858, died Nov. 8, 1874.
Mary A., wife of James Offutt, born Nov. 3, 1819, died April 6, 1879.
Elizabeth R., wife of Elbert Perry, born Dec. 3, 1829, died Feb. 18, 1890.
Bessie L., daughter of C. H. and Celisa E. Vincent, died Oct. 6, 1880, aged 7 years.
Elizabeth Claggett, died Dec. 7, 1872, aged 79.
Susan E. Claggett, died Feb. 5, 1872, aged 58.
Fannie E. Hays, died June 1, 1863.
Rose R. Offutt, died March 28, 1878, aged 19.
George H. Peter, born July 7, 1809, died May 23, 1880.
Ann, wife of M. F. Harris, born Dec. 30, 1810, died July 30, 1878.
John Israel, only son of J. P. and M. C. Phillips, died Feb. 19, 1862, aged 15.

An elegant monument and stone bears this inscription:

"Sacred to the memory of Andrew Small, born Aug. 28, 1794, in Loochee, Parish of Liff, Scotland, died in Washington City, D. C., April 6, 1847. In the year 1829, Mr. Small emigrated to America, and by industry and economy accumulated considerable wealth. Firmness of purpose, strictness of integrity, and sincerity were the leading traits of his character. Having purchased an estate in this county, he became much interested in the religious and educational interests of the Darnestown Presbyterian Church and community, and during his life made a liberal donation for the support of the gospel in this place. By his will he left to the trustees of the church means for the endowment of the Andrew Small Academy, and very liberally provided for the support of the Sunday-school and the widows and orphans of the church and community. He died a peaceful death. His last words were to the effect that he relied alone on the blood of Christ for salvation."

Andrew Small Male and Female Academy.—This institution is near the Presbyterian church. It grew out of a parochial school established and maintained for some years by the church. Mr. Andrew Small, a native of Scotland, but then residing in Georgetown, D. C., becoming acquainted with the neighborhood while filling a contract for making that part of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal which passes near by, and admiring the commendable efforts of the people to improve their educational facilities, was induced to leave to the Presbyterian Church the large bequest of forty thousand dollars. The larger part of this munificent sum was directed to be devoted to the erection of a suitable building for a school and the partial endowment of an institution which would bring the advantages of a liberal education within the reach of the whole community. The academy building—the largest school building in the county, and built of brick—was finished and first occupied in 1869, two years after Mr. Small's death. The institution was named after its liberal founder. The first principal was Prof. M. L. Venable, of Southern Virginia. He continued in charge four years, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rev. C. N. Campbell, who has had the advantage of a thorough collegiate training, having graduated with distinction at Princeton College. He is a Presbyterian clergyman. The institution is a boarding-school for both boys and girls, and numbers some sixty pupils, about one-third of whom are boarders. It is managed by a self-perpetuating board of trustees, duly incorporated, of whom F. A. Tschiffely is president, and G. R. Rice, secretary. The funds are, however, controlled by the trustees of the church, who are elected annually. The generous design of its establishment was to furnish to the people of Darnestown and the surrounding region a Christian school of high grade at moderate rates. Through Mr. Small's donation this effort has been accomplished. The course of instruction is full and thorough, preparing boys for college or for business, and affording to young ladies the means of a liberal education. Prof. Campbell is assisted by an able corps of teachers, and at the end of the scholastic year a public examination of a week is held in all the studies of the year. An annual public exhibition closes the school year, when certificates of proper department and of scholarship are given to those who deserve them. Prizes for the best compositions in the several classes are also awarded, and such other honors as are deemed proper.

Baptist Church.—This log edifice was built over a half-century ago by the Methodists, but for several years has been used by the Baptist congregation. Near it are the graves of the following persons:

Elizabeth Truman and her infant baby, wife and child of Josiah Truman, who died April 25, 1852, aged 22 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Samuel T. Magruder, died July 5, 1881, aged 65.
Mrs. Sarah Dorsey, born Feb. 9, 1800, died Dec. 20, 1879.
Worthington, only son of S. T. and Elizabeth Magruder, born July 30, 1845, died Sept. 29, 1854.
James Hawkins, Jr., died Dec. 29, 1855, aged 38.
Ara, wife of James Hawkins, died May 2, 1845, aged 57.
Ellen Maria, wife of Nathaniel Clegg, died Oct. 16, 1848, aged 23; and Ann Elizabeth, wife of same, died Dec. 20, 1857, aged 27.
Davie Norris, born May 28, 1786, died Jan. 18, 1807.
Elizabeth Podgett, died April 1, 1879, aged 66.
John H. Lewis, born Oct. 4, 1875, died Aug. 1, 1872; and his wife Lucinda, born Nov. 25, 1795, died Dec. 7, 1873; and their daughter, Catherine Cadwell, born Dec. 1, 1824, died May 24, 1846.

Susan Stewart, died June 30, 1853, aged 75.

Seneca Baptist church is at the mouth of Great Seneca Creek, and is a neat stone structure. Its pastor is Rev. Mr. Hatchey, of Virginia, who also preaches at the Baptist church between Darnestown and Germantown,—a new frame edifice.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Trustees.—No. 1, J. E. Montgomery, Geo. R. Rice, Winfield Magruder; No. 2, J. F. Poole, Wm. H. Rice, Wm. H. Vinceet; No. 3, H. A. Pumphrey, R. H. Bennett, Jacob Snider.

Teachers.—No. 1, J. F. Burn, Rockville P. O.; No. 2, Dr. T. E. Williams, Darnestown P. O.; No. 3, H. C. Hickerson, Germantown P. O.

There are two colored schools. The magistrates are Edward L. Hayes, Samuel Higgins.
ALFRED KAY.
Hunting Hill.—This post-office is forty miles from Baltimore, sixteen from Georgetown, D. C., and four from Rockville. J. B. Ward is merchant and postmaster; E. Holland, teacher; a cooper, blacksmith, and T. H. Herrington, carpenter.

BETHESDA DISTRICT, No. 7.

This district was created by an act March 20, 1878, and was formed from portions of Rockville, the Fourth, and Berry, the Fifth, Districts. Its metes and bounds are as follows:

"Beginning on the Potomac River at the point where the dividing line between Montgomery County and the District of Columbia crosses the same; then running with said dividing line in a northeasterly direction until the same crosses near the residence of Hon. Montgomery Blair; then with the said dividing line in a southeasterly direction until the same is crossed by the turnpike leading from Brookeville to Washington City; then with said turnpike in a northerly direction until the same is crossed by the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; then with said railroad in a westerly direction until the same crosses the county road east of Rock Creek and near Newport Mills; then with said county road until it intersects the turnpike leading from Rockville to Georgetown; then with a straight line to the intersection of the Oenendorf mill road with the old Georgetown road, near the residence of Isaac O. Rabbit; then with said Oenendorf mill road until the same is crossed by Thomas' Run; then down and with said Thomas' Run until the same empties into Cabin John Creek; then down and with said Cabin John Creek until the same empties into the Potomac River; then down and with the Potomac River to the place of beginning."

This district is bounded on the north and northwest by Great Falls District, north by Rockville District, east by Berry District, south by the District of Columbia, and west by the Potomac River and Virginia. Cabin John Creek and Thomas' Run separate it on the north from Great Falls and Rockville Districts. Rock Creek flows southerly in the east into the District of Columbia, while flowing westwardly are Bowie's Run into Cabin John Creek, Naylor's Branch into the Potomac, and Falls Branch into Receiving Reservoir.

The first settlers were Thomas Fletchall, Thomas Addison, James Stoddart, the Wilsons, Youngs, Austins, Councilmans, Loughboroughs, Beans, Renshaws, Pyles, Gingells, Andersons, Williamses, Huddlestons, Laurences, and Rays.

Alfred Ray, prominent in Montgomery as a farmer and stock-raiser, comes of one of the oldest of Maryland's families, following, indeed, his ancestry upon either side back to the time of Lord Baltimore's possession of the province. The Rays were of the first Protestant settlement made in what is now Anne Arundel County, and were active and zealous members of the Church of England.

Enos Ray, who was born in Anne Arundel County, moved to the District of Columbia about 1830. He had rendered excellent service as a soldier of the war of 1812, and in recognition of that service received from the government two sections of land. His wife was Sarah, daughter of Anthony L. Moreland, of Anne Arundel County, whose progenitors are supposed to have located in Anne Arundel County about the time Lord Baltimore came over. The Morelands afterwards became prominent landholders in Montgomery County. Enos Ray's wife died in 1826. He married for his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Osborn, of the District of Columbia.

Of the children by the first marriage the only one living is William Ray, of Montgomery County. Of the ten children by the second marriage, seven survive. Enos Ray died in April, 1881, aged eighty-nine. Longevity was in his ancestors a common thing. His grandmother Ray lived to be one hundred and four. Mr. Ray's wife died in April, 1880, aged eighty-four.

William Ray above named was born in the District of Columbia, Jan. 16, 1824. He attended school at Columbian College, his preceptor being the well-known Dr. Samson. William Ray's father was a very successful farmer, and owned so much land that he was enabled to give each of his children a farm. Thus, William, at the age of twenty-eight, received a farm located in the District, and entered at once upon active experience as a practical farmer. He lived upon the District farm until 1863, when he purchased the Montgomery County farm-tract known as "Highland," situated about nine miles distant from Washington. "Highland" was for years owned by the Brent estate, and from 1816 to the date of Mr. Ray's purchase was held by the Federal government, from the Congress of which, indeed, Mr. Ray obtained his title. To the six hundred and forty acres originally included in "Highland" Mr. Ray has added one hundred acres, and much enhanced the value of the property by material and valuable improvements. He gives especial attention to the growth of grass and dairying, but carries on likewise general farming upon a liberal scale. About one hundred head of stock are regularly maintained upon the place. From 1852 to 1863 Mr. Ray filled the important office of tax collector of the District of Columbia, and in the years 1862 and 1863 was United States revenue assessor for the District. The holding of public office, however, has never been to his taste. He has fulfilled important tasks as a railway contractor, and among other undertakings built the bridges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Washington and Point of Rocks, graded the road-bed between Forest Glen and Washington, and extended most of the arches on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Baltimore and Washington.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Lydia A., daughter of Capt. James White, of the District of Columbia. His second marriage was with Miss Ella M., daughter of Nicholas Gatch (died 1878) and Anna Merryman (died 1881), of Baltimore County. For five generations the Gatch family has been represented in Baltimore County. An old document, still in the possession of the descendants, testifies that Dec. 26, 1727, Godfrey Gatch (who came from Prussia to Maryland) and Maria, his wife, were authorized by Governor Leonard Calvert to pass unmolested and uninterrupted through the province, conditioned upon their "behaving themselves according to law." The land then owned by Godfrey Gatch in Baltimore County is now owned in part by Mrs. William Ray. Mr. and Mrs. Ray have nine children living.

Silver Spring—The Blair Family.—Hon. Francis Preston Blair, the veteran journalist and editor of the Globe during Jackson's administration, was attracted to Silver Spring under singular circumstances. He had purchased a very fine saddle-horse, Selim, of Gen. William Lingan Gaither, another of Montgomery's representative men, who had repeatedly served his native county with credit and ability in both branches of the State Legislature. In taking a ride with his daughter beyond the limits of the District of Columbia and in the lower part of Montgomery County, Selim became frightened, threw his rider, and ran down among the thick growth of pines in the valley to the west of the road. Mr. Blair followed, and found the horse fast to a bush, which had caught the dangling reins of the bridle. Near the spot he spied a bold fountain bubbling up, the beautiful white sand sparkling in the water like specks of silver. Mr. Blair became so charmed with the spot and the spring that he resolved at once, if possible, to possess it. He sought its owner, and soon a bargain was made at what was then considered a good price by the seller, but in the eyes of Mr. Blair as very cheap. These are the circumstances which led to the proprietorship of the far-famed and classic seat of Silver Spring, where its owner, venerable and distinguished, spent in easy retirement the last twenty-five years of his long and eventful life, and died peacefully, full of years and honors, at the advanced age of eighty-seven, Oct. 18, 1876.\(^1\)

\[^1\] "Centennial Celebration of Montgomery County."

Mr. Blair was born in 1789 in Abingdon, Va., and early in life settled in Kentucky, where he married Eliza Violette Howard Gist, the fourth daughter of Col. Nathaniel Gist, who was a colonel in the Virginia line during the Revolutionary war, and died early in the present century at an old age. Col. Gist left two sons, Henry Carey and Thomas Cecil Gist; and his eldest daughter, Sarah Howard, married Hon. Jesse Bledsoe, a United States Senator from Kentucky, and a distinguished jurist, whose grandson, B. Gratz Brown, was the Democratic candidate for Vice-President in 1872; his second daughter, Anne (Nancy) Gist, married Col. Nathaniel Hart, a sister of Mrs. Henry Clay; his third daughter married Dr. Boswell, of Lexington, Ky.; and his fifth daughter married Benjamin Gratz, of the same place. Mrs. Blair's father, Col. Nathaniel Gist, was the third child of Christopher Gist, who married Sarah Howard, the second daughter of Joshua and Joanna O'Carroll, by whom he had four children: Nancy, who died unmarried, and Thomas, Nathaniel, and Richard. Christopher, with his sons Nathaniel and Richard, was with Braddock on the fatal field of Monongahela, and for his services received a grant of twelve thousand acres of land from the King of Great Britain.

It is said that the third brother, Thomas, was taken prisoner at Braddock's defeat, and lived fifteen or sixteen years with the Indians in Canada. Richard settled in South Carolina, where he married, and was killed at the battle of South Mountain. Thomas Gist after his release from captivity lived with his father on the grant in Kentucky, and became a man of note, presiding in the courts till his death, about 1756. Col. Nathaniel Gist, father of Mrs. Blair, married Judith Carey Bell, of Buckingham County, Va. Christopher Gist, the father of Nathaniel, because of his knowledge of the country on the Ohio and his skill in dealing with the Indians was chosen to accompany Washington on his mission in 1753, and it was from his journal that all subsequent historians derive their account of that expedition. Christopher was the son of Richard Gist, who in 1705 married Zipporah Murray, and who became surveyor of the Western Shore, and was one of the commissioners in 1729 for laying off Baltimore Town, and was presiding magistrate in 1736. This Richard was the only child of Christopher Gist, who died in Baltimore County in 1691, and whose wife, Edith (Cromwell), died in 1694.

The Gists were early emigrants to Maryland, and took an active part in the affairs of the province. Francis P. Blair took an active interest in the politics of the country up to the year of his death. In 1860 he was one of the Republican delegates from Maryland to the Chicago Convention that nominated President Lincoln. His son, Gen. Francis P. Blair, Jr., many years represented St. Louis in the National House of Representatives, and was a major-general in the Union army, in which, in the civil war, he served with distinction. He was the Democratic candidate for Vice-President in 1868. Hon. Montgomery Blair, son of Francis P. Blair, Sr., resides at Silver Spring, at the old Blair seat. He is one of the most distinguished lawyers in the country. He was a strong Union man, and supported President Andrew Johnson in the great fight made by the Republican party to impeach him. Since then he has been identified with the Democratic party, of which to-day the country has no able adherent.

He was born in Franklin County, Ky., on May 10, 1813, and graduated at West Point in 1835. Entering the Second Artillery, he served in the Florida war, but resigned on May 20, 1836. He studied law, and began practice in St. Louis in 1837. He was United States District Attorney for Missouri in 1839-43, and was judge of the Court of Common Pleas, 1843-49. In 1842 he was also mayor of St. Louis. In 1852 he removed to Maryland, and was a delegate from the then Sixth Congressional District to the Chicago Convention in 1860 that nominated Abraham Lincoln. From March, 1861, to Sept. 23, 1864, he was United States Postmaster-General. He was the only member of Mr. Lincoln's cabinet who opposed the surrender of Fort Sumter in 1861. He opposed strenuously the arrest of private citizens during the war and the reconstruction measures, including the Wade-Davis bill. In 1863, in a speech at Rockville, Montgomery Co., he publicly denounced the principles of those measures. This speech, which was widely published, gave great offense to the Republicans, and was approved by the Democrats. There was a strong Republican pressure to force his withdrawal from the cabinet, but he had the fullest confidence of Mr. Lincoln to the last. In October, 1864, the resignation of Mr. Blair, which had been tendered long before, was accepted. In 1865, Mr. Blair organized the movement that restored self-government to the people of Maryland. In 1877 he was elected to the House of Delegates, and took the lead in all important measures affecting the best interests of his State and county. His most notable efforts were to secure a protest against, or an investigation of, the title of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency, and to economize by reducing expenses in our State affairs. In the Legislature Mr. Blair was one of the ablest and hard-working members. To his personal influence was due the passage of the resolutions by both branches of the Legislature directing the attorney-general of the State to take legal steps looking to the adjudication by the Supreme Court of the right of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency. Before the repeal of the Missouri Compromise he had been a Democrat, but afterwards attached himself to the Republican party, and was removed by President Buchanan from the office of solicitor of the Court of Claims, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. Mr. Blair participated in the argument before the Supreme Court of all the great constitutional questions since 1853, such as the test oath law, the enforcement act, etc. In the famous Dred Scott case he was counsel for the plaintiff. Mr. Blair is now one of the ablest statesmen in the country, of tall and commanding figure, of pleasing manners, great intelligence, and public spirit.

Cabin John.—This town is on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, nine miles from Rockville, forty-eight from Baltimore, and derives its name from Cabin John Creek,—originally Captain John,—which here enters the Potomac River. This creek is crossed by a stone-arch bridge, of a single arch, the longest span in the world. It was built by the government to carry water from the Great Falls of the Potomac to Washington. This magnificent structure crosses the creek at a height of one hundred and one feet. It is erected of immense blocks of granite, with Seneca parapets and coping, and leaps the ravine in a single arch of two hundred and twenty feet, with fifty-seven and a half feet rise from the springing line. It is twenty feet wide, and its extreme length four hundred and twenty feet. It cost two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars. It is the largest stone-arch bridge in the world, the second being part of the Grosvenor bridge, with a span of two hundred feet, which crosses the river Dee. It was constructed by Gen. M. C. Meigs, during the administration of Jefferson Davis as Secretary of War under President Pierce. For a long time the name of Mr. Davis was among those inscribed on a stone tablet which marks the bridge, but by the official order of Secretary Simon Cameron it was erased at the beginning of the late war, and is now truly conspicuous by its absence.

Bethesda Presbyterian Church.—The Presbyterian congregations of Rockville and Bethesda form one church, organically and historically. They have one bench of elders and one communion roll, though they are distinct congregations, worshiping in different churches. The name of the church was originally Captain John, latterly called Cabin John. Of the early history of the church very little can be gathered, as one or two of the first volumes of the records have been lost. The date of the organization of the church is unknown, but there is reason to believe that the church existed prior to the Revolutionary war. The father of one of the elders (Mr. De Sellum) was baptized by the Rev. James Hunt, pastor of Captain John Church. He was born in 1773. Mr. Hunt’s name occurs for the first time in the records of the Presbyterian Church in 1761. Whether at that time he was pastor of Cabin John on the one hand, or whether the church existed before he became minister, we are unable to decide. The impression is that he was the first minister, and that the church had its origin about 1761. The first pastor, Rev. James Hunt, was born in Hanover County, Va., where his father, about 1740, was one of four seeders from the established church who formed a Presbyterian Society, whose first pastor was Rev. Samuel Davies. Mr. Hunt, in 1783, had lived for a considerable time at his residence, some three miles west of Bethesda church, on his farm, which was called by the classic name Tusculum.

At this date his school was one of high standing, and doubtless widely known in the State. It seems he sustained his family partly by the revenue from this school while nursing the infant church, which was probably unable to give him an adequate support. Among his pupils was William Wirt. We have the following concerning Wirt’s early days from “Kennedy’s Life of Wirt.” In 1783 (says he) “I was removed from the grammar school of Mr. Dent, in Charles County, to that of the Rev. Mr. Hunt, in Montgomery County.” The author continues: “Wirt remained at Mr. Hunt’s school in Montgomery County until it was broken up in 1787. During the last two years of this period he was an inmate of Mr. Hunt’s family.”

Mr. Hunt seems to have exercised a happy influence over the character of his pupils. He was a man of cultivated mind, liberal education, and philosophical temper. He possessed a pretty good library, a thing uncommon in those days. He had, besides, a pair of globes and philosophical apparatus. He was communicative, and quick to appreciate the taste of his scholars, and from all accounts kindly and indulgent in his intercourse with them. Young Wirt found much in this association to advance him on his way. He acquired some insight into astronomy, some taste for physics, some relish for classical study, but, above all, some sharpness of appetite for the amusement afforded by “the run of the library.” He studied law with William P. Hunt, son of Rev. James Hunt, at Montgomery County Court-house.

On the stone which marks Mr. Hunt’s grave at the site of old Cabin John church are engraved the words:

“In memory of the Rev. James Hunt, who departed this life the 2d of June, 1793, aged 62 years.”

“He was set apart to the work of the ministry early in life, in which he continued till death, laboring for the good of souls and the glory of his Heavenly Master.

“Be ye followers of me as I was of Christ Jesus. By grace ye are saved.”

The successor of Mr. Hunt occupied his place a comparatively short time, dying in the year 1800. His name was Adam Freeman. He was succeeded by one of the most remarkable men the Presbyterian Church has ever produced in this country,—Dr. Conrad Speece. His connection with the church was a short one, and ended in 1805. Dr. Speece spent the greater part of his ministerial life in Virginia, where he is still remembered by many of the elder people as a preacher of great power. He was a man of originality and genius. Of the fourth pastor, Dr. Samuel Martin, no particulars can be learned, except that his connection with the Presbytery of Baltimore, and doubtless with this church, ceased in 1814.

He was succeeded by the Rev. Joshua T. Russell. Some of the oldest members of the church still remember him as a man of unusual oratorical powers. During his ministry occurs the following entry in the record book, dated Dec. 14, 1818:

"Whereas, The Session are fully persuaded of the importance of family worship, and of the duty of each member of the church to maintain such worship, as prescribed in the Directory, chap. xv. 3, &c., and whereas, They have reason to fear that this duty is too much neglected by the members of this church; therefore,

Resolved, That two members of the Session be appointed as a committee to inquire of all male members of this church who are heads of families whether this duty is regularly attended to in their families, and that they report to Session the result of their inquiries at their next meeting.”

Under date of Jan. 2, 1819, is recorded the report of the committee, which was to the effect that they had found only one member who entirely neglected family worship, and another who had occasionally neglected it. “The Session,” says the record, “conversed with the latter, and received encouragement that he would in future be constant in the discharge of this duty. A committee was also appointed to converse with the neglector and endeavor to persuade him to maintain family prayer in the future.”

The day following, Jan. 3, 1819, there was a very solemn communion, in which eight persons were admitted to the Lord’s table. Rev. Elias Harrison preached the sermon to a very large congregation. In one of his letters he states that he often preached to more than one thousand persons at Cabin John church.

In 1820 a committee was appointed by the Session to consult with gentlemen in the neighborhood now occupied by Bethesda congregation as to the propriety of erecting a meeting-house in the vicinity of Mr. McCubbins's, and to propose the organization of a congregation there as a branch of Cabin John Church.

After 1820 there seems to have been no pastor for two years, and it was perhaps in this interim that the Rev. John Breckenridge preached to the congregation in the Bethesda neighborhood. During the time of his supplying this church the first Bethesda church was built.

Dr. Carnahan, afterwards president of Princeton College, also ministered to the church at this time, though never its pastor.

In 1822, Dr. Mines, whose memory is fragrant among the members at this day, began a pastorate of thirty-five years. His name is inscribed on the tablet which is a prominent object in the Rockville church. Dr. Mines performed the double duty of pastor and teacher. He was for a long time principal of Rockville Academy, and in this position was as efficient as in his work in the church. Says a late contributor to the Montgomery Sentinel, "In the academy he had a continuous re-election for twenty-five years, and had to decline by reason of age and infirmity (he being about forty years of age when he took charge), but he had a general oversight until the day of his death."

Under his principalship the academy prospered, and took high rank in general education and the preparatory collegiate course. His pupils are now among the most worthy citizens, filling the posts of the farmer, mechanic, lawyer, judge, preacher, and physician. Two of his sons and five pupils were brought into the church and entered the ministry.

During the summer vacation of the academy he generally held a protracted meeting, sometimes in the woods, where churches were not convenient, and with good result. In social life he was a pattern worthy of imitation, hospitable, cheerful, bright, and happy. During the latter years of his ministry Dr. Mines was assisted by Rev. Randolph A. Smith, who became co-pastor in 1846. During his co-pastorate the church at Bethesda was consumed by fire. It was built of unhewn stone, and stood within what is now the cemetery.

Through the indefatigable efforts of Mr. Smith the adjoining parcel of land on the south, consisting of about thirty acres, was purchased, and the present commodious church edifice built on a much more eligible site than that occupied by the first building. Mr. Smith also accomplished the building of a comfortable mansion about four hundred yards south of the church.

In the year 1852 the Rev. William T. Eva became pastor of the church. He is described by those who knew him as a hard student, an excellent preacher, and a most faithful pastor in every respect. The church prospered greatly under his ministration. In one year about forty persons were added to the congregation. He is now pastor of a very large church in Philadelphia. He resigned the charge of the Bethesda and Rockville Church in 1857.

In 1859 the Rev. Edward H. Cumpston became pastor. During his pastorate, in 1864, the membership of the church was larger than ever before, numbering one hundred and eighty-six, according to the statistical report. He resigned the charge in 1874, and is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Hancock, Md.

The present pastor, Rev. Parke P. Flournoy, entered upon his work, April 1, 1875. The elders in office in 1818, the date of the earliest sessional records, were Thomas Scott, William Scott, Osgood Offutt, and Richard Gattom. Nicholas Clapper was ordained 3d January, 1819; Otho Magruder and Zachariah Gattom, Oct. 1, 1820; William Talbott, 1845; Richard Cromwell, 1846; O. W. Treadwell and William Gibbs, 1856; Isaac Hawn, March 1, 1857; Greenbury Watkins, March 1, 1857; C. W. Lansdale, in 1857; John Breiver and W. M. Talbott, May 12, 1861; Frederick L. Moore and Julian Magruder, in 1866. Most of these are deceased. The elders of the church now living are C. W. Lansdale, J. Lewis Bohrer, and Henry Renshaw, who attend Bethesda Church, and John T. De Seelum, W. M. Talbott, and Julian Magruder, who attend Rockville Church. Mr. Moore removed to Georgetown some years ago. The deacons are George Huddleston and Clayton Williams, at Bethesda, and George M. Graffit, Rockville.

For many years Cabin John church was the only one within convenient distance of a large population. Among the families connected with the church at Cabin John as members, attorneys, or supporters in the past and present are the Gattons, Cloggetts, Spateses, Magruders, Offuts, Scoats, Cloppers, Fishers, Perrys, Bradleys, Manncsters, Youngs, Ormes, Doughlasses, Willits, Lodges, Peterses, Boalls, Councilmans, Donds, Washings (George C.), Watkinses, and Seals; among the names connected with the Bethesda branch are the Dunlops, Bradleys, Belts, McCubbines, Lairds, Huddlesons, Magruders, Youngs, Wilsons, Lodgeses, Tomlinsons, Bohrers, Williamses, ...
HUGHESES, Holmeses, Sylexes, Tomlinsons, Wallaces, Renshaws, Watkiness, Splatees, Joneses, Burnettts, Shoemakers, Laffboroughs; while the Rockville Church reckons on its lists such names as those of the Magruder, Gattons, Brewers, Anne Searle, Jones, Hallards, Belts, Groffs, De Seeloms, Ormes, Rickettes, Talbotts, Treadwells, Martins, Splatees, Hughes, Dunlaps, Mineses, Bealls, Johnsons, Russells, Muncasters, Almoneys, etc. In addition to these offshoots of Cabin John Church, Neilsville, Darnestown, Poolsville, and Hermon Churches may be counted as its branches, as Cabin John Church was the first Presbyterian Church in the county.

The ancestors of the congregations now comprising these churches worshiped at Cabin John Church, and it is believed that Rev. John Orme, V.D.M., as early as 1723, established the Cabin John Mission, when Montgomery was part of Prince George's County, he being in charge of the Upper Marlborough Presbyterian Church at that date, and known to be a frequent visitor in the vicinity of Rockville, where he married, and where many of his descendants are still living.

The Bethesda church is on the Rockville turnpike, two miles northwest of Bethesda Post-office, and is the old survey of "Leeke Forest," surveyed for Col. Henry Dulany in 1688. This tract lies west of "St. Joseph's Park," on the west side of Rock Creek, and extends west one and seven-eighths miles. The farms of the late Samuel Perry and William Huddleston, on the old Georgetown road, are also in this survey.

Bethesda Post-office.—This place is on the Rockville and Georgetown road, five and a half miles from Georgetown, and three and a half from Knowles'. The merchants are C. B. Peirce and R. C. Lester,—the latter postmaster. Hon. Joseph H. Bradley, the distinguished lawyer of Washington City, has an elegant seat near here, and among the prominent farmers of this region are Spencer Watkins, H. G. and James Carroll, William Councilman, George and William Huddleston, the Renshaw Brothers, the Wilsons and Gingells.

Mount Zion Baptist Church is near Magruder's school-house, and was dedicated Sept. 8, 1861, Rev. Dr. Samson, of Washington, D. C., preaching the sermon. It belongs to the Rockville Circuit, and its pastors have been Revs. S. R. White and D. H. Hatchey.

Concord Methodist Episcopal Church is situated near Cabin John, and on the road leading to Offutt's Cross-roads.

St. John's Chapel is near Bethesda Post-office, and was erected in 1876. It belongs to the Silver Spring Parish, and is a mission of the Grace P. E. Church. Its pastor is Rev. James B. Averitt.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, Thomas L. Venable, Bethesda P. O.; No. 2, R. V. Griffith, Bethesda P. O.; No. 3, M. L. Venable, Bethesda P. O.; No. 4, E. C. Hobbs, Cabin John P. O.

The magistrates are C. W. Lansdale and J. H. Dodge.

Bethesda Church Cemetery contains the remains of Rebecca Perry, the wife of Ebbert Perry, died March 17, 1856, aged 68 years; Wesley L. Magruder, died May 20, 1877, aged 63 years; Mary Ann Levis, born Dec. 8, 1805, died March 30, 1875.

MECHANISVILLE DISTRICT, No. 8.

This district was created by an act of the General Assembly of 1878, and was formed from portions of the Cracklin District, No. 1, and Berry, No. 5. Its metes and bounds are as follows:

"Beginning at Brown's bridge, on the Patuxent River, and following the county road known as the Limekiln road to its crossing of Ashton and Coalesville turnpike; then with the continuation of said Limekiln road to Holland's Corner; then with the Norwood branch of the Union turnpike to the crossing at Holland's branch; then continuing with said Limekiln road to the Rockville and Washington turnpike; thence with the said pike to the Baltimore and Rockville road; then with said Baltimore and Rockville road to the bridge crossing Rock Creek; then following up and with the eastern branch of Rock Creek to the bridge crossing said creek at William E. Muncaster's mill; then with the county road leading to the village of Redland, to where the said road crosses the western branch of Rock Creek, at what was formerly known as Ricketts' ford; then following up and with said western branch of Rock Creek to where it crosses the road leading from Rockville to Unity, near the farm of Walter M. Talbot; then following said road to its intersection with the road leading from Mechanicsville to Laytonsville, near the residence of Fletcher R. Veatch; then following the road leading from Laytonsville to Brookville to the crossing of a public road near the Catholic church and the village of Mount Zion; then with said public road to Hawling's River, near the residence of Thomas D. Gaither; then down and with Hawling's River to the Westminster road, near Allen Bowie Davis' mill; then with the said Westminster road to the intersection of the road leading to Triadelphia, north of the store of Frederick O. Gaither; thence with the said road to the bridge across the Patuxent River at the village of Triadelphia; then down and with said Patuxent River to Brown's bridge, the place of beginning."

The district is bounded on the north by Cracklin District, west by Rockville District, south by Berry District, and east by the Patuxent River, separating it from Howard and Prince George's Counties. In the north Gold and Ready Branches flow into Hawling's River, which flows southeast into the Patuxent. Rock Creek in the northwest separates it from Crack-lin District, and in the southwest the North Branch of Rock Creek divides it from Rockville District.

First Settlers.—The earliest settlement in this district was made by Robert Brooke, who established a Protestant colony, June 29, 1630, of forty persons, including his wife and ten children, on the Patuxent River. Among the subsequent settlers were James Brooke, a descendant of the above, John Bradford, Benjamin Gaither, Thomas Sprigg, Richard Simmons, John Boyd, Thomas Gittings, Thomas Davis, the Stablers, Waterses, Baronesleys, Magruders, and Fair-Quars.

The Quakers, or Friends, found in Maryland province a refuge and home from their persecutors. In Massachusetts laws had been passed that prescribed them as a "cursed sect." They were there imprisoned without bail, and sentenced to banishment upon pain of death. They were to be maimed, whipped, and "men or women to have their tongues bored through with a red-hot iron." These persecutions led George Fox, a zealous leader of the sect, to come to Maryland; being delimited with the country, and learning that the laws and liberal policy of the province placed no restrictions on religious liberty, he remained in the colony, and preached the doctrines of his sect both to the settlers and the Indians. The members of the General Assembly and the Council, men of distinction, justices of the peace, and even the heir of the proprietary himself, came to listen to him preach. The Friends established settlements or meetings through Prince George's and Montgomery Counties, and accomplished a great deal towards promoting the material development and intellectual advancement of the region. The first house built by the Friends in Montgomery County was by James Brooke, on "Brooke Grove," surveyed for him Sept. 4, 1728, and resurveyed Nov. 15, 1741. It contained three thousand one hundred and fifty-four acres, and was again resurveyed, Sept. 29, 1762, for Mr. Brooke, so as to include adjacent property, which resurvey contained seven thousand nine hundred and six acres. After this addition to his Grove he had eleven thousand and sixty acres granted by patent, and six thousand by purchase, and owned at the time of his death nearly twenty thousand acres. This tract extends from Thomas J. Holland's farm some eight or nine miles in a northwesterly direction, beyond the Big Seneca. The town of Brookville, named after the Brookes, which was founded in 1780, and Laytonsville are situated in it.

The road from Brookville to Laytonsville passes through this tract, which embraces some of the finest farms in the county, including those of E. J. Hall, the late Dr. William B. Magruder, John Riggs, Charles Brooke, the late Walter Magruder, David L. Pugh, Thomas D. Gaither, and Samuel Riggs, of R. This was the largest tract of land owned by one person in the county, and gives an example of the wealth and influence enjoyed by the early leaders of the Friends Society. On and near "Brooke Grove" the Friends gathered in sufficient numbers to establish a flourishing "meeting," and more than a century ago they took a step that distinguished them from surrounding communities by the emancipation of their slaves. The house is occupied at present by William J. Schofield. By their patient industry and persistent verance, combined with their intellectual culture, social intercourse, agricultural knowledge, their fidelity to the principles of moral truth and human advancement, the Quakers, or Friends, have left an impress upon the character of the whole people of the county, a stimulus to their aims and energies.

The Lloyds, the Thomases, the Snowdens, the Richardsons, the Shipleys, and many other families came, it is supposed, from the Principality. The Severn and the Wye (in Talbot County), upon which the Hon. Edward Lloyd resided, were no doubt named after the rivers of Wales, in honor of his native country. The Thomases, it is said, first lived on Kent Island, but according to the earliest recorded information we have been able to obtain, they resided in Anne Arundel, near Thomas' Point, about 1655. Philip, the emigrant, was a privy councilor, and many of his descendants held high public positions, including Philip Evan Thomas, the projector and first president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The Snowdens arrived about 1660. They were the ancestors of the large family living in Prince George's and this county. The Richarldsons resided many generations upon West River. They came probably about 1655. The Shipleys, a family of planters in Anne Arundel, and subsequently in Montgomery and Carroll Counties, arrived at a period but little later; and two of the largest families of Maryland, the Magraders and Beales, undoubtedly came from Scotland. So also did the Bowies, the Edmonstons, and other families. The Magruders arrived about 1655. One of their earliest seats was upon the western branch of the Patuxent. Alexander, the emigrant, died about 1680, leaving six children,—Alexander, Nathaniel, James, John, Samuel, and Elizabeth. The Beales came some time after the Magruders. Col. Hinton Beale was the earliest. One of the oldest residents in the county is Edward Stabler, born in 1795. He has been postmaster at Sandy Spring for fifty years, and is probably the oldest postmaster in the United States. He was the originator and founder of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County, organized in 1848. About 1841, Caleb Stabler purchased four hundred acres at two dollars and five cents per acre. This land was without house or fencing, but he built a comfortable two-story log house, and called his place "Drayton." This place, under his skilful culture, became a garden-spot, and was subsequently divided by its venerable owner into six parts, and each of his sons and sons-in-law built and settled on his portion, the old people retaining the homestead. This family reclaimed an almost barren waste and converted it into one of the most fertile and beautiful farms in the county.

Among the tracts of land surveyed early in the eighteenth century was "Benjamin's Lot," granted to Benjamin Gaither in 1725, part of which is now the famous Triadelphia mill property, which was founded in 1809 by three brothers-in-law, Isaac Briggs, Thomas Moore, and Caleb Bentley, and is now the residence of Hon. Thomas Lansdale. This gentleman was born in Berry District in 1808; moved to Ohio early in life, and returned to Savage Factory, in Anne Arundel, now Howard, County, and was extensively engaged there in mechanical operations for a number of years. He was one of the inventors and builders of the first wood-planing machines. He also invented the metallic yoke for swing-bells. He came to Triadelphia in 1842, remained five years, and went to Ellicott's Mills, on the Patapsco River, in Baltimore County, to build, superintend, and operate the granite factory. He was the first manager who introduced steam into a factory for heating purposes, which he did about the year 1852, exciting the surprise and admiration of the visitors from different parts of the country interested in such matters. This factory was burned down twice, rebuilt, and finally swept away by the destructive flood of 1868, which left hardly a vestige behind to mark the site of its repeated calamities. Being unsuccessful in his efforts to gain control of the granite works by purchase, he returned to Triadelphia about the year 1856. From that time until war, fire, and flood had made many changes in that, as in other localities simultaneously visited, Triadelphia was a busy, thriving, and attractive village of three hundred or four hundred inhabitants and about thirty dwellings, besides the large three-story stone cotton-factory, saw, plaster, bone, and grist-mills, store, and mechanical shops. Mr. Lansdale was a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1864, and was elected to the Senate of Maryland in 1865. He was active in lending his aid to various public works for the material advancement of the State and county, and liberal in fostering local institutions designed to promote the welfare of the people. He died in 1878.

Prominent among the noble band whose deeds have added lustre to the name and fame of the Friends' Society of Sandy Springs and of Montgomery County, stands the commanding figure of Benjamin Hallowell, philosopher, philanthropist, orator, farmer, and teacher; gifted with an extraordinary variety of knowledge, prominent in the many fields of investigation in which he exerted his powerful energies, and prosecuting his researches with one ultimate end, the happiness of his fellow-creatures. He was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1799; came to Montgomery County, Md., in 1819, as a teacher of the Friends' school at Frederick Hill; in 1824 he established a school at Alexandria, and received among his pupils many who have since attained position and honor. In the summer of 1842, Mr. Hallowell came to live upon his farm, "Rockland," near Sandy Springs, upon a tract of poor land, which by judicious draining, fertilizing, and grass-seeding he completely reclaimed. In 1859 he was unanimously elected first president of the Maryland State Agricultural Society College without his knowledge or consent. Shortly afterwards he took up his residence in the county. He was prominent in organizing the Farmers' Club of Sandy Springs, the first meeting of which was held at the residence of Richard T. Bentley. In 1846 he delivered an address at the first regular meeting of the Agricultural Society of Montgomery County, and was a frequent lecturer before various associations on scientific and agricultural subjects. He was Professor of Chemistry in the Medical Department of Columbian College, Washington, a member of the American Philosophical Society of Philadelphia, and one of the foremost in the Baltimore Yearly Meeting to adopt plans for the improvement of the condition of the Indians on our Western borders. He died in 1877, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, regretted and beloved by all who knew him, and leaving behind him a name which will be perpetually fragrant with the aroma of a long life of labor for others and good will towards men.

Caleb Bentley was another of the early residents of the district. He was born in 1762 in Chester County, Pa., and kept the first store in Brookville and Sandy Springs. He died in 1852. He belonged to the Society of Friends.

Another of the early inhabitants, Rev. Thomas McCormick, was born in Loudon County, Va., in 1792, and when six years old was taken by his uncle, Thomas Moore, with whom he remained until his fourteenth year. He was then taken by his father to Baltimore, where he learned the trade of a carpenter. In 1817 he built the fine mansion of E. J. Hall, and was subsequently engaged in the mercantile business until 1829, when he purchased a farm, "Longwood," near Brookville, where he spent fifteen years. He carried butter to market in the first refrigerator ever made,—the patent of Thomas Moore, who died in 1823.

John Thomas, who sixty years ago lived about six miles from Triadelphia, near Green's bridge over the Patuxent, established an interesting industry for the collection of pine sap from the pine-trees in the adjacent forests. This was done by removing a small chip from the foot of the tree, near the root; the opening thus made would receive the falling sap, which was gathered in the morning, taken to Mr. Thomas, who paid ten cents an ounce for it. The revenue derived from this source was, however, not sufficient to meet the expectations of the projector, and it was abandoned.

Ephraim Davis settled and built in 1755 in Mechanicsville District, on what is now the "Greenwood" estate. During President Washington's administration his son, Thomas Davis, who was born Dec. 10, 1769, raised a company and marched to Pennsylvania in 1794 to help suppress the "Whisky Insurrection." While thus engaged he was elected to the Legislature, and frequently thereafter filled the same position. He was also elector of the Senate under the old constitution, and a member of the Governor's Council. He served as a justice of the peace, a member of the board of tax commissioners, judge of the Levy and Orphans' Court, and also as one of the associate judges of the County Court before the change requiring all three of the judges to be taken from the legal profession. He was likewise a noted conveyancer and surveyor. He was one of the founders and trustees of the Brookville Academy and of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church, in whose vestry and communion he died in 1833, aged sixty-five years. His son, Allen Bowie Davis, was born Feb. 16, 1809, and resides on the old homestead, "Greenwood," which has been in the family since 1755. He succeeded his father in the board of trustees of Brookville Academy. In 1840 he was elected a member of the State Board of Public Works, in which he exercised his influence in favor of the representation of the minority and the abolition of political agencies in the management of public trusts. In 1850 he was elected to the State Constitutional Convention, and was made one of the first trustees of the State Agricultural Society, and subsequently president of the board. About the same time he was elected president of the Montgomery Manufacturing Company of Triadelphia, with encouraging financial results in his administration. As president of the County Agricultural Society he introduced reforms and changes which were instrumental in laying the foundation for its growth and prosperity. In 1849 he obtained the charter of the Brookville and Washington Turnpike Company, and served sixteen years as its president. In 1865 he was elected to the Legislature, and made chairman of the Committees on Roads and Agriculture. During his term of office he extended the prohibitory liquor law over an area greater than that embraced in its early provisions, with a corresponding improvement in the health, morals, and prosperity of the people. About 1869 he was elected president of the State Agricultural Society, and presided at the first meeting for its organization. In January, 1850, he was appointed by the court one of the public school commissioners, and is now the present of the board. Mr. Davis has been twice married. His first wife, Rebecca Comfort, was the eldest daughter of Chief Justice Thomas Beale Dorsey, of Elk Ridge. She died in 1836, and in 1839 Mr. Davis married his present wife, Hester Ann Wilkens, the daughter of William Wilkens, formerly an eminent dry-goods merchant of Baltimore City. Mr. Davis is a model farmer, and his beautiful estate, "Greenwood," is one of the garden spots of Montgomery County.

St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Parish.—It is strange that none of the four parishes within the county possesses even a record of its metes and bounds. Formerly the whole county was comprised by Prince George Parish, the parish church, called Rock Creek church, standing where the cemetery now is, near the residence of the late Judge Bowie. In 1758 a petition, numerously signed by the Browns, Gartrells, Griffiths, Rigges, Davises, and others, was presented to Governor Sharpe and his Council for permission to lay off a parish and erect a "chapel of ease" on a branch of the Patuxent, called Hawling's River, the petitioners stating that they were too remote from the parish church at Rock Creek, and were able to erect a church and support a minister if their petition was granted. Consent was given, and a chapel erected very near the site of the present St. Luke's church, Crowtown. All traces of the building are gone, and with the exception of Mr. William Brown, who was baptized in the church, there is probably no one in the neighborhood who remembers the edifice.

St. Bartholomew's Parish was carried out of Prince
George’s in 1821 by the Diocesan Convention of that year. Its bounds were as follows: “Beginning at a bridge near Harry W. Dorsey’s, on Seneca River, running with the road by John Belt’s to Snell’s bridge, on the Patuxent, including the upper part of Montgomery County, lying between the Seneca and Patuxent Rivers.” The next year, 1822, the convention extended the boundaries “to include the farm of Jonathan Duly, lying on the road from John Belt’s to Snell’s bridge.” The boundaries of the parish have since been changed, but its present extent cannot be definitely ascertained. But though the parish was not formally erected until 1821, the churchmen of this section seem to have acted as if the parish had legal existence, for on Easter Monday, 1813, a meeting of the parishioners was held at Bowman’s store for the election of vestrymen, and the following persons were chosen: Thomas Davis, Ephraim Gaither, James Whiting, Edward Burgess, John H. Riggs, Rezin Darby, H. C. Gaither, and Anthony Ricketts.

At a special meeting held June 7th, of the same year, Thomas Davis was chosen the first lay delegate to attend the “convention to be held in Baltimore on Whit-Sunday.”

May 2, 1814, the vestry resolved that “on the fourth Monday of that month the vestry shall meet at Bowman’s store, to select a site for the church.” A list of adjourned meetings fills up the time (from which it appears the lack of quorums is not a modern evil) till Aug. 13, 1814, when a committee, consisting of H. C. Gaither and Henry Griffith, was appointed to contract for building a church “according to the determined plan.” The next year (Aug. 7, 1815) Frederick Bowman was added to the building committee, a fact showing that the church was then still incomplete. Indeed, from the fact that the first order for the payment of “any bills that may be presented” is dated as late as Nov. 6, 1815, it is probable that the building was not begun till the summer of that year. But by Easter Monday, 1816, such progress had been made that the parishioners could meet at the church for the election of vestrymen, yet it stood unfinished several years, for as late as March 13, 1819, Frederick Gaither, Jesse Wilcoxon, and H. C. Gaither were directed to contract for “plastering and for any carpenter’s work necessary in connection therewith.” This work was pushed with dispatch, for on May 9, 1819, application was made to Bishop Kemp to consecrate the church, and the ceremony was performed the same day. As the application was made on the very day of the consecration, the bishop must have come on a “visitation,” the pre-notification of which to the vestry was the occasion of stirring them up to complete the house according to the order of March 13th. If the present rule, that a church cannot be consecrated till it is out of debt, was then in force, this church must have been fully paid for at the time of the bishop’s visit. Previously, however, there had been some difficulty in collecting some of the subscriptions, for on Nov. 8, 1817, the vestry directed legal proceedings to be taken against all delinquents who should not pay the amount promised by them by December 11th, and the order was directed to be “set up in all convenient places.” However, with all its delays and struggles, the church was at last completed, and still stands on Hawling’s River, about two miles east of Laytonsville. From its beginning to 1843 this church was associated with the one at Rock Creek, subsequently at Rockville, in the employment of a minister.

The first minister was a Mr. Wheaton, from Dec. 13, 1818, to December, 1819. Aug. 7, 1820, the vestry elected Rev. Thomas G. Allen “for one year.” It appears from the vestry-book that Mr. Allen visited the parish without a formal invitation, bringing a “certificate of standing” from Bishop Kemp. (Perhaps the bishop had been applied to to recommend some one.) Mr. Allen preached his trial sermon August 6th, and was called to the charge of the church the next day. He continued until 1823, being re-elected from year to year, Rev. H. C. Knight was elected in his place. It is not said whether he accepted. If so, he remained but a year, for Sept. 20, 1829, the Rev. Levin J. Gillis was chosen. He continued till 1843. Mr. Gillis seems to have caused the severance of this church from the one at Rockville in 1844. April 4, 1844, the Rev. O. Hutton, D.D., was called. He took charge June 1st, and continued therein until 1861, when he resigned. Yet there is another minute, accepting the doctor’s resignation, dated July 19, 1866. We suppose that, owing to the war or for other reasons, the first resignation was withdrawn, though there is no record of the fact. But parish records are provably fragmentary. When the doctor assumed the rectorship St. John’s Church, Mechanicsville, was associated with St. Bartholomew’s. The exact date of the building of St. John’s cannot be ascertained, but in the resolution of association, at the time of calling Dr. Hutton, it is spoken of as “the chapel recently erected near Mechanicsville.” After Dr. Hutton’s resignation St. John’s was for a short time connected with the Rockville Church, but soon returned to its former association, which still continues. Revs. Tinsley and Poindeexter held short rectories, and were followed by Rev. Thomas Duncan in 1868 to 1874 or '75. By his energy and devotion St. Luke's, at Crowtown, and the chapel at Unity were built, supplying pressing needs to those communities. Mr. Duncan was succeeded by Dr. Mason in 1875, but ill health compelled him to resign in a little more than one year. On Easter Sunday, 1877, the Rev. Mr. Laird entered upon the charge, and continues to hold it. He is very energetic in his labors, and has met with deserved success.

On Feb. 19, 1825, Margaret Brooke conveyed by deed to the vestry of St. Bartholomew's Parish one acre of land, being a part of a tract called "The Addition to Brooke Grove," bounded northerly by a tract called "Tuscalum," and southerly by the public road, and including the church of said parish and the burying-ground and yard to the church attached. The consideration of the indenture was twenty-five dollars, and it was witnessed by Richard Butt and Benjamin Higgins.

Sandy Spring.—The village of Sandy Spring is eight miles east of Rockville and eleven from Laurel, and is situated in the midst of a settlement of Friends. The village derives its name from a spring half a mile south of it, the waters of which were formerly considered especially adapted for washing and scouring purposes.

The name of the village and neighborhood has caused among strangers a double deception. On first hearing it they conceive it to be a regular watering-place, and the agricultural traveler expects to find it a light, sandy soil, the very opposite of which is soon made apparent to his conception by the condition of the winter roads. It appears from the earliest land warrants laid in this section that the first settlements were commenced just after the beginning of the last century. The tract of land called "Snowden Manor," that now forms the resting-place of all the families in the eastern and southeastern part of this section, was surveyed for Richard Snowden, Dec. 10, 1715, and contained one thousand acres. The Ashton and Sligo turnpike runs through the estate, and the road from Ashton to Laurel. The tract embraces the lands of William John Thomas, the farms of William Lee, Warwick Miller, Asa Stabler, and the farm and bone-mill of William Bond. "Beall's Manor," adjoining it on the south, was granted Feb. 14, 1720, to Charles and William Beall, and contained seventeen hundred and eighty-seven acres. It is situated on the head-waters of West Point Branch, beginning in Thomas Winpenny's house-yard, a mile north of Colesville, on the Ashton and Sligo turnpike. On it are located the farms of Thomas Winpenny, Mr. O'Hare, Lloyd Green, J. W. Barcroft and others.

The "Charles and Benjamin" tract, beginning at a point not far from Hawling's River, and extending nearly through the heart of the neighborhood, beyond its southeastern border, was surveyed and granted to Charles Beall, July 2, 1718, and comprised two thousand two hundred and eighty acres. This tract extends from Hon. E. J. Hall's farm down the Brookville and Washington turnpike to Higg's tavern, embracing the farms of Z. B. Waters, Thomas Waters, Josiah W. Jones, Samuel Cashell, and others. "Charley Forest," of twelve hundred and thirty acres, was granted to Maj. John Bradford. The "Addition to Charley Forest" was surveyed to Maj. Bradford, Sept. 16, 1720. These two surveys united extend from Mechanicsville to within a short distance of Snell's bridge. The turnpike from Mechanicsville to Sandy Spring and Ashton, and the road to Snell's bridge, as also that to Bright, passes through it.

On this tract are situated Sandy Spring and Ashton, including the valuable farms of "Fair Hill," and those of William H. Farquhar, Albin Gilpin, R. T. Bentley, Edward Thomas, and many others. The tract is located on the dividing ridge that separates the head-waters of the Northwest Branch and Cabin Creek. When the first settlements were made an unbroken forest covered the whole region, except in a few spots where the wigwams of the natives showed a little patch of corn or tobacco. The forest then was not like that of the present day, filled with the undergrowth that mars its beauty. As an illustration of this, it is related that on one occasion a horse escaped from one of the settlers on the place next above the present residence of Thomas P. Stabler, and came down towards the spring through the woods. Its owner was able to follow the animal the whole distance by the tracks left in the clear soil of the forest, where only large trees grew. No Indian burial-places or Indian remains have ever been discovered in the vicinity, but arrow-heads and a few rude culinary utensils have been turned up in the fields from time to time. Evidences of the existence of various wild denizens of the woods are still present in the names given to many of the first tracts of land taken up in the county. "Bear Den," "Deer Park," "Wolf Den," and designations similar to these are quite numerous, while "Bear Bacon," a very ancient tract lying on the Laurel road, directly east of "Snowden Manor," serves as a significant indication of the uses to which these wild beasts were put before the introduction of domestic animals. In the minutes of the ancient "Monthly Meeting," held at "The Cliffs," on Herring Creek, is contained the first mention of a meeting of Friends at Sandy Spring, which probably occurred in the Seventh month and 27th day of 1753. The first members composing this meeting appear to have belonged to the Brooke and Thomas families. It was in 1742 that Richard Snowden, proprietor of "Snowden Manor," conveyed five hundred acres of its northwestern part to Philip Thomas.

Roger Brooke was born at Brooke Grove, in Montgomery (then Frederick) County, on the 24th of November, 1774. His ancestor was Robert Brooke, who emigrated from England in 1650. Robert Brooke was born in London on the 3d of June, 1602, and his wife, Mary Baker, was a native of Battel, in Sussex. They were married on the 25th of February, 1627. Their children were Baker, Mary, Thomas, and Barbara. Robert Brooke's second wife was Mary, second daughter of Roger Mainwaring, Dean of Worcester. Their children were Charles, Roger, Robert, John, Mary, William, Ann, and Francis. On the 29th of June, 1650, Robert Brooke arrived in Maryland with his wife and ten children. Besides these were the following servants: men-servants, Mark King, Mark Lovely, William Bradney, Philip Harwood, Richard Robinson, Anthony Kitchen, William Jones, John Clifford, James Leigh, Benjamin Hammond, Robert Sheale, Thomas Joyce, Henry Peere, Thomas Elstone, Edward Cooke, Ambrose Briggs, Robert Hooper, William Hinson, John Bocock, David Brown, Henry Robinson; maid-servants, Anne Marshall, Katherine Fisher, Elizabeth Williamson, Margaret Watts, Abigail Montague, Eleanor Williams, and Agnes Neale. Robert Brooke was then forty-eight years of age. He was the first settler on the Patuxent, and located himself about twenty miles up the river, at a place which was afterwards known as Delabrook, and in 1652 removed to an adjoining estate, which he named Brooke Place. After his arrival in Maryland three children were born,—Basil, who died on the day of his birth, and Eliza and Henry, twins. Robert Brooke died on the 29th of July, 1656, and his widow died on the 29th of November, 1663. Soon after reaching Maryland, Robert Brooke was appointed commander of Charles County, and was chosen by Crowell's commissioners Governor of Maryland. Early in the next century, James Brooke, a descendant of Robert Brooke, born at Battel Creek, Feb. 21, 1705, removed to the locality known as Sandy Spring neighborhood, in what is now Montgomery County. His father was Roger Brooke, Jr., son of Roger Brooke, who was the son of Robert Brooke. James Brooke patented large tracts of land, over twenty thousand acres in all, on which his children settled. Roger Brooke, the subject of this sketch, was his grandson, and occupied the house built by his father, who bore the same name, within a mile of the original mansion of James Brooke, the first permanent settler in that part of Maryland.

At the age of sixteen his father's death left him with many cares and responsibilities, his mother and five sisters being still at home, each with considerable landed estates, requiring much attention, from the fact that they had all been worked down by the culture of tobacco. In 1804, Roger Brooke was married to Mary Pleasants Younghusband, who was born March 10, 1770, near Richmond, Va. She was the daughter of Isaac Younghusband, a native of England, who had been the captain of a merchant vessel trading between Liverpool and Richmond. At the latter place the captain became acquainted with and married Mary Pleasants, whose ancestors removed from England to Virginia in 1668. She was the daughter of Thomas Pleasants and Mary Jordan. After the death of his first wife in 1838, Roger Brooke married, in 1840, Sarah T. Gilpin, a daughter of Bernard Gilpin. His education was only such as the common schools afforded, but he had been trained with the utmost care by his intelligent and pious mother, Mary Matthews, who, born near Monocacy, Md., was married to Roger Brooke's father in 1758, and survived him eighteen years. Five children were born to Roger Brooke, of whom four outlived him. The elder, a daughter, was married to Dr. Charles Farquhar; the second, also a daughter, to Elisha John Hall, who, like his brothers-in-law, Roger and George E. Brooke, has been widely known as an active and successful farmer. In this respect the children followed the occupation of their father, whose life was devoted to the pursuits of agriculture.

A somewhat notable fact in this connection is that all the descendants of Roger Brooke have remained in the same locality, and all the male members of the family have devoted themselves exclusively to farming, and have succeeded remarkably in improving their lands and increasing their productive capacity. The children of Roger Brooke were Sarah B., who married Dr. Charles Farquhar; Mary B., who married Elisha John Hall; Roger, who died some years ago; and George E. Of Mrs. Farquhar's children there are now living Anna F., wife of Charles H. Brooke, her second cousin; Roger B., Mary Edith, Charles, Granville, and Eliza Elzar Farquhar. Of Mrs. Hall's children there are now living Mary Kate, wife of Samuel A. Janney, and Louisa P., wife of George F. Nesbitt. Roger Brooke married Sara Pleasants, of Virginia, and their surviving children are William L., Martha R., wife of Frederick Stabler;
Mary P., Walter, Roger, Deborah, and Albin. George E. Brooke married Eliza Jordan, and their children now living are Alice, wife of James P. Stabler; Charles, and Annie.

Roger Brooke may be regarded as a pioneer in adopting the improved system of farming in Maryland. He devoted much of his time and attention to planting orchards, draining low grounds, ridding the fields of the stones with which they were heavily encumbered, and procuring improved stock. His industry and his progressive policy first showed the possibility of redeeming the poverty-stricken lands of this region of Maryland. The convincing evidence of his method of farming was that it proved remunerative. The profits of one farm enabled him gradually to purchase several additional estates, it being his conviction through life that the safest investment for money was in land. He was a prominent member and promoter of the agricultural societies, both county and State, and in the infancy of the latter he exerted himself with vigor and effect in its behalf. Although preferring always the quiet and independence of home life, his interests were not confined to that narrow space, but extended to national questions, both of a political and economic character. For more than fifty years he was a subscriber to the National Intelligencer of Washington, and frequently wrote short articles for that paper, which the editors gladly received. He never failed to cast his vote on the day of election, encouraging the young men always to do likewise. His connection with politics extended thus far, but no farther. He would not accept any office except that of member of "the Levy Court," as the board of county commissioners was then called.

Roger Brooke was one of those men gifted by nature with a mind that assure its own education. This was exhibited to a remarkable degree in the knowledge which he acquired of nature and nature's productions, from the feathered songster to the tiniest flower of the forest. Although he was entirely unacquainted with the literature of botany, there seemed to be not a single plant to be found in field or woods that he could not name, and with whose qualities, especially its medical properties, he was unacquainted. It was no doubt owing to his love of nature and outdoor life, added to his fondness for sport, inherited from a long line of British ancestry, that he became noted for a lively interest in fox-hunting, which continued nearly to the close of his life. This interest, however, never seemed to interfere with his religious duties, to which he was steadily devoted in youth, manhood, and old age. From his birth he was attached to the Society of Friends, and fully indorsed their doctrines and principles. To his influence, and that of his associates, may be attributed the order and sobriety which have thus far characterized the neighborhood where he resided. He was, however, remarkably social in his nature, offering to friends and strangers of all sects and conditions a hospitality seldom surpassed. Being gifted with a rich humor, and possessing a fund of anecdotes hid up in an unequaled memory, his society was sought and enjoyed by a great variety of persons, from the patriot and statesman down to the humblest neighbor on the adjoining lands. In his latter days he often remarked that few people had realized more enjoyment than he, and in his old age it was his great pleasure, seated with a friend beneath the sturdy old sycamore which so aptly illustrated the rugged strength of his character, to relate the varied experiences of his long and eventful life, or to discourse of those topics with which experience and a careful study of men and things had made him so conversant. In connection with this sycamore, it is related that, returning home from mill on one occasion, while still a lad, he got into an altercation with a boy, and having wrested from his antagonist a small sycamore shoot or sapling, bore it home in triumph, and planted it before the door of his father's dwelling. Before his death the sapling had grown to be a large and vigorous tree, beneath whose shade he whiled away many a pleasant hour. On the 31st of December, 1860, he died, calmly and peacefully, having attained the age of eighty-six years, and his remains were laid with those of his forefathers. In accordance with his oft-reiterated wish, the spot remains unmarked by any stone or monument.

The Brookes continue as in the past to be one of the most influential families in Western Maryland. The late Chief Justice Taney's mother was the daughter of Roger Brooke, one of the descendants of Robert Brooke, the emigrant, and the family connection is very extensive.

The Brooke family, like the Calverts, were Catholic, and the first to change his faith to Protestantism was James Brooke, who on June 5, 1725, married Deborah, eldest daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Snowden, of the Society of Friends. As elsewhere stated, James Brooke, in 1728, settled in this neighborhood, leaving his relatives behind in the lower counties. Roger Brooke, Sr., son of James Brooke, married Mary Elgar. It is said that when James Brooke built his house, in 1728-29 (still standing, and owned by William J. Schofield), it was the only frame house between this point and Canada. When James Brooke was hunting, in 1756, with six dogs, they came upon a very large panther. The ferocious beast attacked the dogs and laid them sprawling on every side of him. At this juncture, it is said, the old man came up, and fired ineffectually on the enraged animal, which now turned upon him. He endeavored to reload, but found he had shot away his last bullet, it being during the French and Indian war, when there was a scarcity of ammunition. But the men of those days were trained for all such emergencies. Cutting off one of the metal buttons of his coat, he dropped it down the capacious mouth of his old musket and blazed away at the panther, striking him right between the eyes, and killing the beast at once. Tobacco was the principal agricultural staple, but an act of the Assembly required every planter to put out annually two acres of corn, in order to avert any famine. Richard Snowden at one time had twenty-four tobacco-houses on one tract of land. For a number of years there was only one pair of boots in the settlement, such was the simplicity of manners and of living. This rare article was in the possession of the head of the Thomas family, and was loaned out in the spirit of brotherly kindness to such of the neighbors as were about to undertake the serious enterprise of a journey to Annapolis. It is also known that a single great-coat served the purposes of the whole community for similar important occasions.

The Friends' meeting-house had no fire for years, and when it was first proposed to have a stove in it a vehement opposition arose as a piece of hurtful indulgence. At length the advocates of the innovation prevailed. It happened that on the first meeting-day after the stove was put up no fire was kindled in it, and one of the elders who had opposed most strongly the introduction of the stove coming along, spread his hands wide over it, and feeling no heat, exclaimed, "Oh, the dumb idol!" and at the same time taking off his great-coat, laid it across the stove and took his seat. The next "meeting-day" being a cold one, a fire was made in the stove, and the same Friend coming in, ignorant of the change, pulled off his great-coat at the door, setting an example to the effeminate ones, and stalking up the aisle, again threw his coat across the stove, and took his place in the gallery. A slight commotion ensued among the younger members, and impressed at so extraordinary a manifestation he lifted his eyes, and saw his outer garment enveloped in smoke. The idol was no longer dumb.

The Friends in general took no active part in the Revolution, but were rather suspected of leaning to the cause of the mother-country. Not so, however, was it with the people here. The Brooke's in particular—a race of large, stalwart men, trained up in the love of independence—went in heart and hand for the patriot cause. One of the sons of the old patriarch, James Brooke, became a colonel in the Continental army, and was of course dismissed from the meeting for this breach of faith. Evan Thomas, born in 1738, then resided in the old brick house near Colesville, and attended regularly the Sandy Springs meeting, of which he was a solid and faithful minister. At the beginning of the Revolution he entered the exciting political arena, and was elected a member of the first convention that met at Annapolis. Being re-elected, the conviction was soon forced upon his mind that the convention's resolves meant war, and he retired from the path into which events were leading him and came back to the tenets of his faith. But a thorny road it proved to him for years. For preaching without secular authority he was forcibly dragged from the gallery where he stood, fined and imprisoned; but the next meeting-day after his release he was again at his post. One of his sons was Hon. Philip Evan Thomas, the projector of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and to the erection of the Friends' meeting-house in 1817 he contributed five hundred dollars.

A year or two afterwards came the establishment of the Fair Hill Boarding-School. Contemporaneous with the introduction of fertilizers a "Farmers' Club" was established, about 1845, and these combined agencies have resulted in a wonderful improvement of the soil in this neighborhood, and in the agricultural methods of the surrounding farmers. The famous "Lyceum" did much to stimulate investigation, and no location in Maryland can boast better-tilled farms, more elegant improvements, or people of broader and more liberal culture than Sandy Spring and the adjacent region.

Friends' Meeting-house.—The first edifice was a frame structure, built about 1742, and which, with some additions and repairs, remained standing until 1817, when the present substantial brick edifice was built. In the graveyard attached are interred the remains of Mahlin Kirk, died 4th mo. 13, 1860, aged 76.

Albert G. Palmer, born Aug. 23, 1829, died March 6, 1860.
Joseph Gilpin, born May 7, 1780, died March 29, 1858.
H. Russell Stabler, born 5th mo. 4, 1835, died 2d mo. 15, 1857.
Martha A. Stone, died 12th mo. 21, 1855.
Jacob Weller, born Jan. 3, 1806, died Sept. 13, 1876.
Roger Brooke, born 10th mo. 5, 1819, died 3d mo. 15, 1888.
Catherine Chandlees, died 2d mo. 10, 1872, aged 78.
Wilson Scott, died 6th mo. 4, 1872, aged 54.
Mary Pleasants, born 1st mo. 13, 1825, died 9th mo. 8, 1899.
Elizabeth T. Kirk, born 6th mo. 1, 1825, died 10th mo. 4, 1869.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

Rebecca N. Palmer, born Aug. 2, 1804, died Aug. 6, 1867.
William P. Palmer, M.D., born Nov. 19, 1792, died Dec. 27, 1859.

Arethibald D. Moore, born 2d mo. 8, 1811, died 5th mo. 27, 1864.

Mary H. Brooks, died June 29, 1864, aged 25 years.

Wm. Thomas, born 8th mo. 29, 1848, died 1874.

Sarah M. Sullivan, born October, 1839, died Sept. 23, 1875.

Sas. H. Stone, born 24th of 6th mo., 1815, died 8th of 12th mo., 1890.

Haanah C. Pierce, born 3d mo. 29, 1789.

Joshua Pierce, born 16th of 3d mo., 1781, died 1863.

Hannah G. Birdsall, born 20th of 5th mo., 1803, died 22d of 3d mo., 1877.

Mortimer Osburn, born March 30, 1810, died April 8, 1875.

Virginia F. Moore, born 20th of 3d mo., 1841, died 10th of 3d mo., 1873.

Benjamin J. Hallowell, died 7th of 9th mo., 1877, aged 78 years, 21 days.

Margaret E. Hallowell, died 1st of 5th mo., 1873, aged 76 years, 8 months, 13 days.

Jacob W. Ziegler, died Sept. 16, 1865.

George Brooke, born 4th of 8th mo., 1846, died 1st of 1st mo., 1876.

Edward S. Hallowell, died 18th of 3d mo., 1866, aged 18.

Timothy Kirk, died 15th of 10th mo., 1865, aged 87.

Anna H. Moore, died 22d of 8th mo., 1863.

J. Edgar Hallowell, died June 12, 1863, aged 27.

W. T. Parnale, died Aug. 11, 1863, aged 22.

Warwick Guion Miller, died 1866, aged 28.

The first store in Sandy Spring was kept by Caleb Bentley. The Orthodox meeting-house was erected in 1850. The Sandy Spring Lyceum occupies a neat building near the Friends' meeting-house. The other organizations here are the Montgomery County Branch of the Prisoners' Aid Society, the Enterprise Farmers' Club, the Montgomery Farmers' Club, the Sandy Spring Horticultural Society, the Sandy Spring Home Interest Society, and the Sandy Spring Young Folks' Sociale.

On June 10, 1734, a tract of land called "Rockland," of one hundred and seventy-four acres, was granted Allen Farquhar, which now embraces part of Union Bridge, a thriving town of Carroll County. In 1735, Allen Farquhar sold this land to his son, William Farquhar, who became one of the leading business men in what is now Carroll, then a part of Frederick County. From him descended Amos, father of William H. Farquhar. The latter married Margaret, daughter of Isaac and Hannah (Brooke) Briggs. The Farquhar family has been in this county for nearly two centuries, and has always been zealous members of the Society of Friends. William H. Farquhar, the leading representative of the family in the county, is one of the best farmers in Montgomery County.

The Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County, one of the largest mutual fire insurance companies in Maryland, is located at Sandy Spring. It was incorporated by the General Assembly at its December session of 1847. The incorporators and first directors were Edward Stabler, Dr. William P. Palmer, George E. Brooke, Robert R. Moore, William H. Farquhar, Joseph Gilpin, Richard T. Bentley, Joshua Peirce, Edward Lee, Samuel Elliott, Henry Stabler, Francis P. Blair, Sr., and Caleb Stabler. From its organization its president has been Edward Stabler, and its secretary and treasurer Robert R. Moore, now assisted by Thomas L. Moore. In 1876 the directors were:

Edward Stabler, William H. Farquhar, B. Rush Roberts, Henry C. Hallowell, Joseph T. Moore, Sandy Spring; Nathan S. White, Dawsonville; Isaac Hartshorne, Bright; Charles Abert, Norbeck; James B. Matthews, Matthew's Store, Howard County; Thomas F. Shephard, Uniontown, Carroll County; Robert B. Dixon, Easton, Talbot County; William J. Albert, Cambridge, Baltimore County; William Dowery, New Market, Frederick County.

The directors of the company in 1881 were:

Edward Stabler, president; Wm. Hly, Farquhar, Sandy Spring, Montgomery County; James B. Matthews, Glenwood, Howard County; Thomas F. Shephard, Uniontown, Carroll County; Isaac Hartshorne, Bright, Montgomery County; Henry C. Hallowell, Sandy Spring, Montgomery County; Robert B. Dixon, Easton, Talbot County; Joseph T. Moore, Sandy Spring, Montgomery County; Charles Abert, Norbeck, Montgomery County; Aris M. Stabler, Spencerville, Montgomery County; Richard T. Bentley, Sandy Spring, Montgomery County; W. B. Chichester, Oney, Montgomery County; Charles G. Porter, Sandy Spring, Montgomery County.

A General Statement of the Operations of The Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County, Md., from June 1, 1848, to May 1, 1876.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>COUNTIES</th>
<th>Amount Insured</th>
<th>Amount of Premium Notes</th>
<th>Losses by Fire</th>
<th>Rate per cent. of Loss on Premium Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Montgomery</td>
<td>$3,893,305</td>
<td>$270,241</td>
<td>$4,436</td>
<td>30%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Howard</td>
<td>2,779,104</td>
<td>192,793</td>
<td>40,010</td>
<td>21%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederick</td>
<td>2,216,385</td>
<td>14,862</td>
<td>17,609</td>
<td>22%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baltimore</td>
<td>2,119,597</td>
<td>147,289</td>
<td>14,125</td>
<td>14%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carroll</td>
<td>1,960,256</td>
<td>128,967</td>
<td>16,290</td>
<td>17%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince George</td>
<td>1,614,256</td>
<td>114,257</td>
<td>16,290</td>
<td>17%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anne Arundel</td>
<td>1,347,378</td>
<td>74,385</td>
<td>14,125</td>
<td>27%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Queen Anne</td>
<td>635,176</td>
<td>41,060</td>
<td>10,000</td>
<td>25%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>District of Columbia</td>
<td>5,110</td>
<td>3,141</td>
<td>5,600</td>
<td>3%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caroline</td>
<td>25,094</td>
<td>1,017</td>
<td>2,700</td>
<td>17%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. Mary</td>
<td>116,098</td>
<td>7,064</td>
<td>None</td>
<td>6%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegany</td>
<td>56,900</td>
<td>7,064</td>
<td>2,462</td>
<td>27%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Washington</td>
<td>94,975</td>
<td>5,032</td>
<td>5,032</td>
<td>53%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles</td>
<td>60,440</td>
<td>4,252</td>
<td>2,861</td>
<td>23%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calvert</td>
<td>4,701</td>
<td>2,632</td>
<td>2,632</td>
<td>58%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harford</td>
<td>21,650</td>
<td>1,672</td>
<td>None</td>
<td>8%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garrett</td>
<td>14,215</td>
<td>1,462</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cecil</td>
<td>13,260</td>
<td>8,656</td>
<td>53</td>
<td>53%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dorchester</td>
<td>6,306</td>
<td>459</td>
<td>None</td>
<td>8%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kent</td>
<td>1,246</td>
<td>39</td>
<td>1,246</td>
<td>58%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Somerset</td>
<td>825</td>
<td>49</td>
<td>None</td>
<td>6%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

$19,047,094 | $1,339,588 | $3,062,235
HISTORY OF WESTERN MARYLAND.

Report showing the Condition of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County, Md., to Jan. 1, 1881.

Amount insured Jan. 1, 1880........... $13,434,501.83
Increase of risks during the year........ 299,637.00
Amount of premium notes Jan. 1, 1880.... $913,770.65
Increase of premium notes during the year.. 23,652.56

Estimated Assets.
City of Baltimore stock 1890 at par........ $20,000.00
Northern Central Railroad bonds (gold interest).................. 6,000.00
Northern Central Railroad bonds (currency interest)........... 2,000.00
Interest on premium notes now due and payable on or before thirty days from the first Monday in January, at 4 per cent. $77,472.92
Interest on investment 1881................ 4,730.00
Interest on investment now due............. 780.00
Office and lot at Sandy Spring........... 1,597.70
Rates................................ 300.00
Cash in the National Park Bank drawing interest............... 10,544.58
Cash on hand and due by agents........... 2,566.72

$136,823.21

Liabilities.
Claims for losses by fire, adjusted and un-adjusted........... $4,250.00
Directors and Executive Committee attending meetings and mileage, 1880..... 409.40

$4,659.40

$110,562.98

William Pennill Palmer, one of the first incorporators of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County, and one of its best citizens, was descended from John Palmer and Mary Southey, who came from England to Pennsylvania about 1680. Their son, John Palmer, married Martha Yeardy, and Moses Palmer, the son of John and Martha, married Abigail Sharpless, whose son, Moses Palmer, born in Concord, April 12, 1757, and died Aug. 29, 1840, married Hannah Pennill, born Dec. 17, 1770, and died Aug. 3, 1801, the daughter of John Pennill and Sarah Meredith. William Pennill Palmer, the son of this last marriage, was born in Concord, Chester Co. (now Delaware Co.), Pa., Nov. 19, 1792, and was educated at the Friends' School at Westtown. He made several voyages to England and one to China, as captain's clerk. He studied medicine under Drs. Chapman and Rush, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1815, in which year he settled in Brookville, Montgomery Co., Md., where he practiced his profession in conjunction with Dr. Henry Howard until the spring of 1822. He purchased that year "Woodlawn," near Sandy Spring Post-office, to which he removed, and there continued to reside till his death, Dec. 27, 1869. He married, Sept. 26, 1822, Martha Gray, daughter of William Gray and Rachel Hill, of Gray's Ferry, Pa., who died in 1825, leaving two sons,—William Gray Palmer, now practicing medicine in Washington, D. C, and Moses Gray Palmer, attorney-at-law, St. Louis, Mo. May 17, 1831, he married Cleora Duvall, daughter of Dr. Benjamin Duvall (of Montgomery County, who was born April 13, 1768, and died Feb. 19, 1857), and Deborah Mordent Jackson (a descendant of one of the Mordents, Earls of Warwick), born Feb. 13, 1768, and died Dec. 16, 1851. Cleora, now in her seventy-seventh year, lives at "Woodlawn," having around her three children, survivors of nine, and a fair allotment of grandchildren.

Dr. Palmer was a member of the Society of Orthodox Friends till his second marriage, when he was "read out of meeting" for marrying a non-member. He was a lifelong Democrat, but never held nor aspired to any political office. He was from 1844 to his death one of the directors of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Montgomery County. While eminently successful in his general practice,—covering a period of fifty-two years,—he was held in especial esteem as a surgeon and obstetrician. He was peculiarly fitted for a country pioneer physician, with a sound mind in a sound body, a quick and vigorous intellect, an iron constitution, with energy and will-power. He always made his visits on horseback, and never knew any distinction between those who paid and those he called "God Almighty's patients." Of Dr. Benjamin Duvall the following obituary notice recalls the virtues of an early physician and prominent citizen of Western Maryland:

"With feelings of more than ordinary grief we record the death of Dr. Benjamin Duvall, in the ninetieth year of his age, which transpired at his late residence in this county on the 19th of February last (1857). His life was one of long usefulness, and by his death our county has been deprived of the services of a skilful and attentive physician. Dr. Duvall commenced the practice of medicine in 1788, and was very successful in his profession, accumulating a large property, which he well husbanded and improved. He voted at every Presidential election since the adoption of the Federal Constitution, not excepting the last, when he was brought in his carriage and voted for Mr. Buchanan. He was a Federalist till 1824, at which time he voted for Gen. Jackson, and from that time to his death was a true Democrat. He represented the county in the Legislature in 1821, with Forrest, Darne, and Riggs. The deceased was all his life of active constitution physically and mentally, and at the time of his death was fully possessed of his mental faculties. He has left behind him numerous descendants and a large circle of friends."

Savings Institution of Sandy Spring.—This institution was incorporated by an act of Assembly approved by the Governor March 25, 1868. The incorporators were Caleb Stabler, R. T. Beutley, Joseph T. Moore, Allan Gilpin, Robert R. Moore, H. C. Hallowell, William H. Farquhar, B. Rush Roberts, P. T. Stabler, Francis Miller, William John Thomas, Samuel Ellicott, Warwick P. Miller, Isaac Hartshorne, Warwick M. Stabler, Henry Stabler, William W. Moore, Charles Stabler, Charles G. Por-
REPORT OF THE SAVINGS INSTITUTION OF SUNDAY SPRING, MONTGOMERY COUNTY, FOR THE YEAR ENDING MARCH 1, 1881.

Balance as shown by the Twelfth Annual Report, March 1, 1880.................................................. $18,088.11

Receipts for the Year:
Cash received from depositors................................. $16,053.37
Amount on hand at close of the fiscal year................. 2,000.00

Total receipts for the year.................................. $18,053.37

Payments for the Year:
Cash paid depositors........................................... $14,677.21
Amount of interest paid depositors for the year ending March 1, 1881............................................ 9,045.00

Balance on hand March 1, 1881................................ $13,606.34

The officers in 1881 were:

Olney.—This pretty town, often called Mechanicsville, is eight miles from Rockville, on the Brookville and Washington turnpike. The first house built in the neighborhood was "Fair Hill," which also was formerly the name of the town. The first settlers were Whitson Canby and William Kelley. The latter came about 1800 from Newtown, Bucks Co., Pa., and carried on a blacksmith and wheelwright-shop. From the same place shortly afterwards came Moses Barnsley. The latter was father of James F. Barnsley, born here in 1816, and who has been the toll-gate keeper since 1861. Benedict H. Daley kept the first store. Enoch Bell was the first blacksmith. William Starkey kept tavern in 1830. Liquor was always sold in the store until 1837, when J. D. Barnsley became the proprietor and refused to sell liquors, since which time none has been retailed in the place.

William B. Barnsley devoted his life to hard work as a mechanic in the village of Mechanicsville, and not only achieved an enviable record as the author of his own fortunes, but amassed in his business a handsome competence. He was born Dec. 19, 1814, in Mechanicsville, Montgomery Co., whither his father, Moses (born Feb. 22, 1759), moved from Bucks County, Pa., in 1806, when he was but seventeen years of age, for the purpose of taking service with his brother-in-law, William Kelly, a wheelwright in Mechanicsville. Moses followed the business of blacksmithing and wheelwrighting in Mechanicsville from 1806 to 1840. Then he retired to his farm, and there died, Dec. 22, 1844. John, father to Moses Barnsley, came from England to America upon a promise from his uncle (living in Bucks County) that he (the latter) would adopt John as his son and heir if he would come over and live with him. John grew to be one of the wealthy farmers of Bucks County, and was an ardent patriot during the Revolution, and gave largely of his wealth to assist the cause of his adopted country. Moses Barnsley married Elizabeth, daughter of Jonathan Dooley, of Montgomery County, Pa., where Mr. Dooley's ancestors, the De Lacourts (French Huguenots), were among the earliest settlers. The first of the name (De Lacour) in Montgomery County lived within twelve miles of Tridelphia, and bequeathed a farm to each of his ten children. Moses Barnsley's living children are James F., John J., Margaret A. R., and Elizabeth C. William B. died July 13, 1878. He was bred to the business of wheelwrighting and blacksmithing, just as was his father before him, and for thirty years he followed it assiduously.

Mr. Barnsley never married. He resided with his sister Margaret, to whom he left the bulk of his possessions. His life was uneventful, but, better, it was useful. He found his satisfaction in pursuing in a successful way the duties concerned with the progress of his business, and in doing well whatever he set his hand to do. He was a valued member of the community in which he lived, a counselor whose wise and experienced judgment was often sought, and a spirited advocate of the theory of public progress.

William McPherson was the first school-teacher, and was succeeded by Amos Farquhar, Phineas Paxton, Richard and Mary Kirk. The town is built on a small tract of forty-seven acres, granted to Richard Brooke, July 28, 1763, and called after George III.

St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church.—This church was erected prior to 1844, and was built during the rectorship of Rev. Levin J. Gillis, of St. Bartholomew's Parish. He was succeeded by Rev. O. Hutton, D.D., in 1844, who was succeeded by Revs. Tinsley and Pinder, and they by Rev. Thomas Duncan, in 1868, who remained till Easter Sunday in 1877, when the present incumbent, Rev. Dr. Laird, was called. In the cemetery are the graves of George Hinkey, born Dec. 20, 1826, died March 4, 1866.

Nathan Childs, born Nov. 17, 1799, died June 16, 1871.
Elizabeth A. Hutton, born June 5, 1815, died Jan. 29, 1874.
Emily Umstead, born May 1, 1819, died May 1, 1876.
Alfred B. Griffith, died July 8, 1862, aged 41 years.
Jeffrey P. T. Magruder, died July 14, 1880, aged 40 years.
Elizabeth Singleton Griffith, born April 28, 1838, died April 16, 1876.
Dr. J. Wilson Magruder, died July 14, 1880, aged 40 years.
Harriet Griffith, born May 17, 1800, died Aug. 12, 1874.
Dr. William B. Magruder, born Nov. 2, 1802, died Jan. 21, 1873.
Mary A. Magruder, died Dec. 23, 1852, aged 46 years, 26 days.
Grafton Holland, born April 16, 1806, died March 24, 1855.
Ellen, his wife, born Dec. 24, 1809, died March 5, 1877.
Matthew Hannah, died Dec. 12, 1857, aged 97.
Elizabeth Hannah, died April 19, 1857, aged 94.

The church is on the survey of Charles and Benjamin, granted to Charles Beall July 2, 1718, which contained two thousand two hundred and eighty acres.

Olney Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, No. 141, was instituted several years ago, and it and Mizpah, No. 144, are the only two Masonic lodges in the county.

Olney Grange, No. 7, of Patrons of Husbandry, of which Joseph T. Moore is Master, and Mrs. C. H. Farquhar, Secretary, is one of the oldest in the county. The store is kept by Williams & Boyer, and R. S. Kirk is postmaster. Dr. William E. Magruder is the physician, and Dr. F. H. Manakee, dentist.

Dr. William B. Magruder, who resided in Mechanicsville District, Montgomery County, for a number of years, was one of the most active and influential citizens of that section of the State. He was born Nov. 2, 1802, and died on the 21st of January, 1873, aged about seventy years. Dr. Magruder was one of the best-known men in the county, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of the entire community. He was a member of the famous Magruder family of Southern Maryland, which emigrated to this country nearly two hundred years ago. Near Washington City was a settlement known as "New Scotland," from the fact that it was settled largely by emigrants from Scotland. It afterwards became a hundred of Prince George's County. Of the Scotch families which located themselves in this vicinity, the Magruders and the Beales were among the most conspicuous. The Magruders settled on the Patuxent, and their descendants are now scattered over various portions of Maryland and Virginia. Among the prominent members of the family have been Judge Alexander Contee Hanson Magruder, Gen. J. B. Magruder, the distinguished Confederate officer, and Judge Daniel.
R. Magruder; Dr. William B. Magruder's son, Dr. William E. Magruder, who resides near Olney, or Mechanicsville, and who enjoys a large and lucrative practice. Another son, Bowie Magruder, is a successful farmer. Besides Dr. William E. Magruder, there are two other physicians named Magruder who have lived in Montgomery County,—Dr. Wilson Magruder, who resides at "Reildans," and Dr. Julian Magruder, who formerly lived near Rockville, but who recently removed to Ohio. Both these gentlemen are distant relatives of Dr. William E. and Bowie Magruder.

Mount Zion is in the northwestern part of the district, on the Cracklin District line. It contains a small frame Catholic church, and Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal church, colored. Near the latter is buried Rev. L. D. Snowden, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who died Dec. 5, 1875, aged forty-nine years.

Triadelphia.—This place is ten miles from Hood's Mills, fourteen from Rockville, twenty-five from Baltimore, and near the Patuxent River. A. H. Brown is the merchant, and Thomas F. Lansdale, postmaster. The town was laid out on "Benjamin's Lot," surveyed for Benjamin Gaither, April 8, 1725, and containing five hundred and sixteen acres. It is located on the Patuxent River, and includes the farms of Robert Brown and others. The Triadelphia Cotton-mill was established in 1809 by three brothers-in-law, Isaac Briggs, Caleb Bentley, and Thomas Moore, but ceased operations after the war of 1812.

Brighton is fifteen miles from Laurel, fourteen from Rockville, and twenty-six from Baltimore. Of Brighton Grange, No. 60, Isaac Harshorne is Master, and Ella M. Lansdale, Secretary. The merchants are Edward Peirce & Co., the senior member of the firm being the postmaster. Dr. Jeremiah Nichols is the physician.

For an account of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, see St. Bartholomew's Parish, under this district.

Brookville.—This town is ten miles from Rockville, and was created by an act of the Legislature in 1808. The land on which it is situated was the property of Richard Thomas, Thomas Moore, and Henry Howard. It took its name from the Brooke family, who settled in the neighborhood in 1728. Richard Thomas built the mill in 1794, and in 1801 erected his house, the first in the town, and which is now the rectory of the Protestant Episcopal church. Caleb Bentley kept the first store. Dr. Henry Howard was the first physician. Mr. Murphy was the first blacksmith, and John McCauley the second. A Dr. Lucas practiced there before Dr. Howard, but did not reside in the place. Richard Thomas, the first settler and founder of the town, married Deborah Brooke. Among other early settlers were Breece and George Gussaway, the latter of whom kept store. The first teacher was Robert Stuart. The oldest native of the place is Roger Thomas, born in 1803. The present physicians are Drs. J. S. Martin and Artemus Riggs. In the beginning of the century, David Newlin had a grist, saw, clover-seed, and flaxseed-mill, and before that a fulling-mill on the Hawling's River. Thomas Moore, at whose instance the town was created by the Assembly in 1808, married Mary Brooke, and built the house now occupied by Hon. E. J. Hall.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This edifice was built about 1838. Among its pastors have been Revs. Richard Browne, Paynter, and Harris.

Methodist Protestant Church.—This congregation was formed under the care of Rev. Thomas McCormick, one of the seceding ministers from the old Methodist Episcopal Church. About 1830 he, with his family, removed to this place, and in 1833 the church edifice was erected, it being the first church built in the town. Hanson and Henry Brown were the contractors and builders. Among the very few members of the congregation at its organization were Wu. and Henry Brown, Mrs. McCormick, and Hannah McCormick. The church edifice was remodeled in 1871. The present pastor is J. W. Matthews, assisted by Rev. G. F. Berring.

Methodist Episcopal Church South.—This congregation was formed in 1865, and worships in the Methodist Episcopal church. There is a colored congregation of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the town under the charge of Rev. Dr. Laird.

Brookville Circulating Library Association was instituted at a meeting held Feb. 17, 1849, at which Rev. Orlando Hutton was chairman, and J. O. Williamson, secretary. The first permanent officers of the association were A. Bowie Davis, president; E. J. Hall, treasurer; J. C. Williamson, secretary; and Dr. William B. Magruder, F. Gartrell, R. Riggs, Samuel Ellicott, directors. The stock was taken up by private subscription, each stockholder becoming a member and entitled to his share of the property of the association. Elisha Riggs, of New York City, generously purchased a very large amount of the stock and presented it to his relatives in the county. John A. Riggs is the president, John W. Whiteside the secretary and treasurer, and Rev. Orlando Hutton, B. W. Howard, E. W. Owen, and R. W. Gartrell the directors.

Brookville Academy.—This institution was chartered by the Legislature in 1815, by act of January 24 of that year. The first trustees were Thane Davis, John H. Riggs, Caleb Bentley, William H. Dorsey, Ignatius Waters, Thomas Riggs, and David Newline. The first principal was Robert Stuart, succeeded in 1822, by Samuel O. Burmstead; in 1827, by Moses Woodward; in 1828, by Thomas Haggerty; in 1829, by George T. Bigelow; and in 1831, by William Hill.

Since then the principals have been: 1834, N. C. Brooks; 1836-51, Elisha J. Hall; 1851, D. L. House; 1851-63, E. B. Prettyman; 1863-65, Professor Burns; 1865-69, J. Duncan Parkinson, J. Llewellyn Massey; 1869-79, Samuel H. Coleman; 1879-80, Edwin M. Magruder; 1880-81, William H. Thomas; 1881, present incumbent, Rev. C. K. Nelson, D.D., for many years a learned professor of St. John's College, Annapolis. The officers and trustees for 1881 were: President, E. J. Hall; Treasurer, Z. D. Waters; Secretaries, Dr. James S. Martin, Thomas J. Holland, John A. Riggs, Capt. J. Strain, Rev. Orlando Hutton, D.D. Hon. Allen Bowie Davis was twenty-six years president of the board. The first academy building, a brick structure and now occupied by the I. O. O. F. lodge, was relinquished in 1869 for the new and large edifice near the town, on the road to Unity. The academy is situated one-half mile north of Brookville. Its location is a remarkable healthy and beautiful region, seven hundred feet above tide-water.

In 1833 the trustees, at the suggestion of Professor Henry Howard, petitioned the Legislature to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the vicinity of the academy, and the request was granted, but coupled with the condition that the continuance of the prohibition should depend upon the wishes of the people in the immediate neighborhood. The condition was cheerfully accepted by the board, and from that time to the present no one has ever asked for the repeal of the law. Allen Bowie Davis, who was a member of the board of trustees of the academy, says, "The signing of that petition was among the first public acts of my life, and I now proudly look back on it as the best." For a long time this law stood solitary and alone in its glory. It was the first permanent and continuous law of its kind in Maryland, and probably in the United States. Its benefit to the academy and surrounding neighborhood was so marked and advantageous that other schools and neighborhoods in many sections of the State have followed the example of Brookville and obtained similar laws. Thus quietly but surely has the work progressed, until now some six or eight entire counties have adopted the same principle. In 1862 the prohibitory laws were extended to Cracklin District, Emory Chapel, and Sandy Spring, nearly one-fifth of the county.

Brookville Lodge, No. 50, I. O. O. F.—"Triadelphia Lodge," No. 50, I. O. O. F., was chartered by the Right Worshipful Lodge of Maryland, Oct. 22, 1846, with the following charter members: John L. Heckrote, William Lee, B. Burton, Owen Dorsey, Thomas Lucy, and George Kussey. In accordance with a deputation of the R. W. Grand Master of Maryland, Archer Ropes, Past Grand John Wollen of Patuxent Lodge, No. 46, opened in Triadelphia the Grand Lodge of Maryland by proclamation, assisted by Past Grand J. A. McNew and others, on Dec. 25, 1846. At this meeting the above charter members deposited their cards, and Triadelphia Lodge was regularly instituted. The first officers were: N. G., John S. Heckrote; V. G., Owen Dorsey; Secretary, Thomas Lucy; and Treasurer, John Cook. The lodge then elected Hiram Warrell, Rufus H. Speake, Thomas C. Miller, and Elisha Riggs to take the degrees, of whom Miller, Riggs, and Warrell were initiated at that meeting. The first trustees were Elisha Riggs, Hiram Warrell, and B. Burton. The hall occupied by the lodge was the property of the Montgomery Manufacturing Company, and was used for the meetings until Jan. 23, 1864, when the lodge was removed to Brookville, four miles from Triadelphia. Here the lodge held its first meeting, Jan. 30, 1864, with the following officers: N. G., Z. Waters; V. G., John Whiteside; Secretary, John C. Colliflower; Treasurer, E. J. Hill. On March 26th, J. W. Whiteside was elected secretary, vice Colliflower, resigned, and has held that position, with brief intermissions, ever since. The hall now occupied by the lodge was purchased Nov. 6, 1869, of the trustees of the academy. The number of members initiated by Triadelphia Lodge up to the time of its removal to Brookville was one hundred and forty. The name of Triadelphia Lodge was changed to that of Brookville, May 7, 1864. The number of members initiated since the removal to Brookville has been eighty-six, and the present membership is fifty. The officers for second term of 1881 were: N. G., Andrew Shafer; V. G., Thos. Lisheer; Sec., J. W. Whiteside; Treas., E. A. Parsley; D. D. Grand Master, Z. D. Waters.
Phil John R. Riley

The oldest member is John Whiteside, who has belonged to the order thirty-five years; the next oldest, R. W. Gartrell; the third, James Townsend; the fourth, H. N. Harris; and the fifth, J. C. Colliflower. From this lodge sprang Rainbow, No. 16, of Lisbon, Howard Co.; Charlesburg, No. 88; Montgomery, No. 100; and Concord (now defunct), located in Rockville. This lodge was the first instituted in the county. During the existence of Triadelphia Lodge it had several large and pleasant celebrations, which were participated in by its sister lodges; but the most important and largest was held by Brookville Lodge, Aug. 29, 1866, the year after the close of the war, in which the Grand Lodge took part, as well as all the subordinate and sister lodges of this and adjoining counties. The speakers were Josiah L. Baucher, G. M.; Henry T. Garey, P. G. M.; and Joseph B. Escaville, Grand Secretary of Maryland; and Grand Representative Havener J. Sweet, of Washington. Six hundred Odd-Fellows marched in the procession. This was the last public appearance of Grand Master Baucher, whose death occurred shortly afterwards.

Ashton.—This village lies one mile southeast of Sandy Spring, and is located on the historical survey of “Addition to Charley Forest,” surveyed for Maj. John Bradford, Sept. 16, 1720. The first store was kept by Porter & Stable, and is now conducted by R. C. Thomas. Bernard Gilpin, father of Joshua C. Gilpin, owned part of the land on which the village stands. He settled here in 1790. William Thomas owned most of the other land in the vicinity. He was the son of Richard Thomas, Jr., born in this county, but whose father, Richard Thomas, Sr., removed from St. Mary’s County. For an account of the Ashton Methodist Episcopal Church, see Spencerville Circuit, under Berry District.

Norbeck.—This place is five miles from Rockville. James Rannie is the merchant; John A. Bennett, postmaster and store-keeper; C. P. Cashell, carriage-maker; Charles W. Nicholls and W. Burris, carpenters; and James G. Gill, blacksmith.

Philander Chase Riley, residing upon a fine farm near Norbeck, is a native of the city of Washington, where he was born Feb. 26, 1832. His ancestry in America is allied to the history of Accomac County, Va., where his grandfather, John, was born, and where also his father, Thomas Robinson Riley, had his birth,—1785. The latter removed from Accomac County to Washington about 1825. His wife was Elizabeth Cropper, daughter of John Blackstone and Elizabeth Wise, of Accomac County. Seven of their ten children are living. Thomas Robinson Riley, like his father before him, was a landed proprietor in Virginia. When he made Washington his home he became identified with the business of steamboating,—an interest that was in those days one of considerable importance and value as a busy industry. After a career of active usefulness he died in Washington in 1846. At the age of seventeen Philander C. Riley (having been educated at Rittenhouse Academy, Washington) embarked in business in Washington with his brother Thomas, and as a business partner was concerned with him and his brother William from 1850 to 1870. In the last named year he determined to retire from trade, for he had grown weary of it, and desiring, moreover, to spend the residue of his days as a landholder and agriculturist in perpetuation and recognition of the examples of his ancestors, he purchased the farm property he now owns and at once made it his home. The place contains about six hundred acres, and when he bought it was but little more than a barren common. Lending himself with earnest will to the task of embellishing and improving his estate, he created the present highly-cultivated and finely-improved farm, than which few are to be found of more pronounced excellence or more finished appointment. Mr. Riley’s ambition has been and is to foster with all his capacity the best interests of agriculture, and to make his farm a model. To that end he has given himself most diligently to the task, and enjoys the present satisfaction of knowing that his efforts have been neither misdirected nor unrewarded. A lifelong Democrat, he has ever kept a place among progressive citizens in observing with solicitude and watchful interest the progress of political history, while he has at no time been wanting in the emphatic expression of his political faith, but beyond that and into the field of political honors his desires have never led him, nor indeed would the allegiance he owes to his private affairs permit him that indulgence. Nov. 10, 1868, Mr. Riley married Virginia Covington, daughter of Benjamin Frank Smith and Matilda Rebecca Price, of the District of Columbia. The Smiths were early settlers in Mary-or Clarkeburg, Fourth, or Rockville, and Sixth, or Darnestown, Districts. Its metes and bounds are as follows:

"Beginning for the same at the cross-roads in the village of Germantown, and running thence with the Neelsville road to the Georgetown and Frederick road; thence across said Georgetown and Frederick road to the road leading from the Neelsville Presbyterian church to the old Baltimore road; thence with the said road to its intersection with the old Baltimore road; thence with the said old Baltimore road to Seneca bridge; thence with the road leading from said Seneca bridge to Rockville via the Village of Redland to where the said road is crossed by Mill Branch, near the farm of William O. Householder; thence with a straight line to the intersection of the Georgetown and Frederick road with what is known as the Gaither road, between the residences of George M. Griff and Lernard Clements; thence with said Gaither road to its intersection with the Rockville and Darnestown, near the residence of Thomas W. Stonestreet; thence with said Rockville and Darnestown road, in the direction of Darnestown, to its intersection with what is known as the Quince Orchard road, near the Quince Orchard Schoolhouse; thence with the said Quince Orchard road to its intersection with the Gaithersburg and Barnesville road, near the St. Rose's Catholic church; thence with the said Gaithersburg and Barnesville road, in the direction of Barnesville, to the place of beginning."

The district is bounded on the north by Clarkeburg and Darnestown Districts, east by Clarkeburg and Cracklin Districts, south by Cracklin and Rockville Districts, and west by Rockville and Darnestown Districts. Flowing westward through it are Great Seneca Creek and Gunner's Run and Long Draught Creek, the two latter emptying into the former.

The first two settlers in the district were Ralph Crabb and George Buchanan, who were soon followed by the Gaithers, Caggerott, Selbys, Suters, Walkers, Thompsons, Reeds, Bensons, Gassaways, Glyods, Waters, Williams, Bennets, Briggs, Cooks, Smalls, Days, Codwises, Mills, and Clappers.

Francis Cassatt Clapper, a prominent representative of the last-named family, was born in Baltimore on the 26th of July, 1786. His early life was passed in York, Pa., but while yet a boy he went to Philadelphia to begin his business career. When only eighteen he was sent by his employers to New Orleans to collect moneys due them there and at intermediate points. The trip was made on horseback, through a wild frontier country, alone, or with such chance companions as he might meet upon the road, but his mission was successful, and he brought back the money quilted in his vest. This was but the first of many like it. On July 8, 1811, he was married to Ann Jane Byrne, of Philadelphia, and in the following year he purchased the farm in Montgomery County upon which he resided until his death, the family having moved there in the same year, making a continuous residence of fifty-seven years.
NATHAN COOKE.
The original grants of the tracts of land comprised in the purchase date back to 1748, and formed part of their manor of Coneococheague, or, as one of them has it, of "Calverton." The lands are described as lying upon "Sinicar" Creek, near the ford known as the "Indian Ford," and it is said that the old Indian road from Washington to Frederick crossed Seneca a few yards above the present county road crossing.

The land at one time belonged to the Benson family, but about 1804 was sold to Zachariah McCubbin, from whom Mr. Clopper purchased it. Other tracts were bought from parties at a later date. The original foundation of the mill is not known. One was standing in 1812 upon the site of the present sawmill. His public spirit was a prominent feature of Mr. Clopper's character, as he was always interested in some project for the advancement of the county. The last twenty years of his life were expended almost entirely in efforts to procure the construction of a railroad through the county. He was connected with the organization of the original Metropolitan Railroad Company, and when that failed in the business depression of 1857, he called the attention of the president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to the advantages of the route to his company, and procured a reconnoissance to be made and a report, which later were followed up by the construction of the road. He died in 1868, after a married life of fifty-seven years.

The Cook family is also among the oldest in this district. Nathan Cook, Sr., was born in Montgomery County, near Gaithersburg, June 21, 1803, and died Sept. 18, 1869, after a life of usefulness in a sphere wherein he found much honor and respect. His father died while Nathan was but a lad, and his mother (Rachel, daughter of Col. Magruder) married for her second husband Henry Dorsey. By the first marriage there were four children, and by the second six. Young Nathan was trained in book-learning by Rev. Mr. Reed, an Englishman of considerable capacity as a tutor, and thereafter studied at Rockville, but the spirit of industrious ambition was too strong within him to lend his attention long to the school-desk, and so at an early age he set himself earnestly to the business of farming, to which he had determined to devote his life.

It was well that he did so, for at the age of twenty-one he found himself, by inheritance, the possessor of a farm known as "Gray Rock," near Gaithersburg, where he continued thereafter to reside until his death. Thanks to his rugged experience he was well fitted to assume his new responsibilities, and easily managed his property, so that it improved in value and yielded him a handsome revenue. Nov. 17, 1825, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. Zaddock Magruder, of Montgomery County, of which he was a native, and in which he was for many years a leading physician. Mrs. Cook survives her husband, and still resides at "Gray Rock." Of their four children two are living, Nathan P. and Rachel D. Nathan Cook, Sr., never sought public distinction, and ever studiously avoided participation in political strife or race for office, although more than once besought to stand as a candidate. His interests were turned to pleasanter and quieter paths. His philanthropy and his large-hearted sympathy for the poor were known and revered far and near, and to the practical illustration of those virtues he gave himself with conspicuous devotion. His ear was always attuned to listen to the distressed, his energies quick to find the abode of deserving poverty, and his hand ever ready to succor the needy. Not only did he exert himself privately as the dispenser of aid and comfort to suffering humanity, but for twenty years he was one of the almshouse trustees, the president of the board at the time of his death, and steadily an earnest laborer on behalf of the beneficent purposes embodied in the institution. In his death the poor lost indeed a watchful friend. He stood high in the confidence of his neighbors, and was frequently called upon to settle estates, in the performance of which duty he gained much approval for his wise judgment and careful management.

Germantown is eleven miles from Rockville, sixty-seven from Baltimore, and one from Germantown Station, on the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The post-office is at the station, of which Thomas N. Henderson is postmaster, and John H. Gassaway is railroad and express agent. Germantown takes its name from the fact of its first settlement having been made by German families, notably by Frederick Snyder, Frederick Richter, and Peter Hogan. H. D. Waters is the village merchant. The Methodist Episcopal church is a commodious two-story frame structure. In the burial-ground at its side are interred Mary E. Metz, born Sept. 16, 1814, died July 20, 1879; Martha J., daughter of G. T. and M. W. Leaman, died July 17, 1876, aged three years and nine months. The place was formerly in Clarkesburg and Darnestown Districts. Joseph A. Taney, for the past eighteen years clerk to the county commissioners, resides on the Rockville road near the village. Germantown Station is part of survey Chestnut Ridge, granted to George Buchanan in 1732.

Gaithersburg.—This town lies partly in the survey of "Deer Park," surveyed for Ralph Crabb, April 19, 1722, which contained four hundred and twenty acres. It takes its name (as does also the district) from Benjamin Gaither, who built the first house in its limits in 1802. This house stood on the site of the residence of Mrs. Rebecca Ann Gloyd, and on the lot is a large oak-tree over two centuries old. Mr. Gaither was born near Anity in 1764, was magistrate for a long term of years, and died in 1838, aged seventy-four years. He had six children, of whom one is Col. James B. Gaither, for a long time one of the best-known magistrates of the country. In 1826 there were only three or four houses in the town. Robert Crawford kept the first hotel, and the first three storekeepers were, respectively, Benjamin Thompson, John Lowe, and Samuel Gloyd. The village was called Gaithersburg up to 1856, when its name was changed to Forest Oak, by which it was known until the completion of the Metropolitan Branch Railroad, in 1873, when the old name was restored. A new public school building, a fine frame structure, has just been completed, which is two stories high, and forty by twenty-four feet.

1 "Centennial Celebration of Montgomery County."

The Methodist Episcopal church, a two-story frame edifice, was built in 1846 and '47. Its pastor is Rev. Mr. Cross. The Methodist Episcopal Church South was erected in 1867, and is called "Forest Chapel." It is a beautiful frame structure. In its rear is "Forest Oak Cemetery," established in 1879, in which are the following interments:

Mary, wife of J. N. Benton, born June 28, 1840, died March 25, 1869.
Anthony Ricketts, born Nov. 10, 1823, died May 6, 1877.
Walter Montgomery, son of William E. and Sarah A. Selby, born July 13, 1825, died March 25, 1879.
Margaret A., daughter of David and Margaret Carlisle, died July 31, 1886, aged 4 years and 4 months.

This church belongs to the Rockville Circuit, and its pastors for 1881 were Revs. G. T. Tyler and F. M. Strother.

The Protestant Episcopal church, a handsome Gothic structure, was completed in 1881, and is supplied by the rector of the Rockville church, Rev. Mr. Brown. The town contains an excellent hotel, a large frame building, erected in 1881 by Juan Boyle, its proprietor. It is three stories high, near the Protestant Episcopal church, and in a beautiful grove. It has already become a popular resort for summer boarders. Over a thousand tons of fertilizers are sold and delivered in Gaithersburg annually to the neighboring farmers. J. Sprigg Pool has a large grain warehouse, and his shipments of wheat have reached a hundred thousand bushels annually. The well-known Darby mill is only a mile distant. C. F. Hogan has lately erected an extensive building, in which he carries on carriage-making, and employs some dozen hands. John Nicholls has a large harness, saddle, and trunk-making establishment in the lower story of "Diamond Hall," a large hall owned by John A. Diamond, the upper story of which is used for public meetings and entertainments.

Gaithersburg Grange is a flourishing lodge, of which John T. De Sellian is secretary. Henry Ward is postmaster, Dr. E. C. Echolson, physician, and J. Sprigg Poole, railroad and express agent. The merchants are John A. Belt, T. J. Owen, Ward & Fulks, and Gloyd & Amiss.

Gaithersburg is increasing in trade and population faster than any other place in the county, and is attracting many business men from other parts.

St. Rose Catholic Church is situated on the Rockville road, midway between Gaithersburg and Germantown, and is attended by a large congregation. It is an outgrowth of the Rockville Mission.

Gaithersburg is situated about midway between the Point of Rocks and Washington City. Six public roads converged at this point, of which one is the Great Western road, from the District of Columbia to Frederick City. Near the town will be the junction of the projected cross railroad to Baltimore City. A large number of new buildings have lately been erected, and building lots are in active demand.

Among the former well-known residents in the vicinity of Gaithersburg was Dr. Thomas Patterson. He was born in Franklin County, Pa., and married Jane Clarke, sister of the late Matthew St. Clair Clarke, clerk of the National House of Representatives three terms. Dr. Patterson practiced medicine a short time in Martinsburg, Va., and then removed to Washington, D. C., where he became librarian of the Congressional Library. He remained there in this position twenty-seven years, residing part of the time in Hagerstown, Md. In 1831 he removed to this county, near Gaithersburg, where he died in 1847, at an advanced age. He left a large family, some of whom are still residents of the State.

Corporation and Officers.—The town was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly passed April 5, 1878, with the following metes and bounds: Beginning at a stone planted on the west side of the Goshen road, a little east of Diamond Hall, and run thence with said road to the southern limits of the Metropolitan Branch Railroad; thence with said railroad, on the south side thereof, to a lot of land belonging to the late Charles Saffell; thence across said lot and the Georgetown and Frederick road to a stone on Remus G. Dorsey's land; thence with the outlines of said Dorsey's land to the new cut road, known as the Fitzgerald road; thence to a stone on Chestnut Street; thence by a straight line to a stone on the dividing line between Wade and Lanahan; thence with said line to the Frederick and Georgetown road; thence across said road to a stone on a line between the lands of Giles Eastern and Ignatius Thomas Fulks; thence with said line to a stone; thence with a straight line to the beginning. The first election after the act of incorporation was held on the first Monday in May, 1878, and resulted in the selection of the following officers:

Commissioners, Henry Ward (president), James B. Gaither, William Gloyd, Reuben Burris; Bailiff, John Burris.

The corporation officers since that period have been:

1879.—Commissioners, Dr. E. C. Etchison (president), Henry Ward, Reuben Burris, S. S. Gloyd, James B. Gaither; Bailiff, John Burris.

1889.—Commissioners, H. C. Ward (president), M. M. Beaton, James B. Gaither, Reuben Burris, Dr. E. C. Etchison; Bailiff, Leonard Buxton.

1881.—Commissioners, S. S. Gloyd (president), Giles Eastern, C. H. Duvall, Ignatius T. Fulks, Remus G. Dorsey; Bailiff, William E. English.

E. L. Amiss has been the corporation clerk since 1878.

The school trustees and teachers of Gaithersburg District for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, E. S. Amiss, Gaithersburg P. O.; No. 2, R. J. Green, Germantown P. O.; No. 3, Dorsey Peter, Darnestown P. O.

There are two colored schools in the district. J. B. Gaither is the magistrate.

The Washington Grove Camp-Meeting Association of the District of Columbia and Maryland was chartered March 30, 1874, with the following incorporators:

It is a stock association, with the capital stock fixed at twenty thousand dollars, divided into one thousand shares at twenty dollars a share. One share entitles the owner to the privilege of a tent site, and five shares to a cottage site.

The tract consists of two hundred and sixty-eight acres, and is located on what is known as Parr's Ridge, on the line of the Metropolitan Railroad, twenty and one-half miles from Washington. The first camp was held Aug. 13, 1873. Among the first officers were

Dr. Flodando Howard, president; W. R. Woodward, vice-president; E. F. Simpson, secretary; J. A. Ruff, treasurer. The present officers are Thomas P. Morgan, president; W. R. Woodward; E. F. Simpson; B. H. Steinmetz, treasurer.

The organization is under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but persons of all denominations unite with them, and are heartily welcomed.

GREAT FALLS DISTRICT, No. 10.

This district was created by act of April 10, 1880, and was formed out of a portion of Rockville, or Fourth District. Its metes and bounds are as follows:

"Beginning at the mouth of Cabin John Creek; thence up and with said Cabin John Creek to the mouth of Thomas' Run; thence up and with said Thomas' Run until the same is crossed by the Gumshere mill road; thence with a straight line to where Pinkey Branch is crossed by the public road near the residence of Mrs. Upton West; thence down and with said Pinkey Branch until it empties into Watts' Branch; thence down and with said Watts' Branch until it empties into the Potomac River; thence down and with said Potomac River to the place of beginning."

This district is bounded on the north by Darnestown District, northwest, west, and southwest by the Potomac River, dividing it from Virginia, south by Bethesda District, and east by Rockville District.

Rock Run flows southwest into the Potomac, as does also Cabin John Creek, which divides it from Bethesda on the southwest; Thomas' Run, separating it from Bethesda District on the south, flows west into Cabin John Creek; Watts' Branch, flowing northwest, empties into the Potomac, and into Watts' Branch empties Pinkey Branch, which, on the north, divides the district from Darnestown District.

The first settlers were John Thompson, the Moores, Claggetts, Perries, Offutts, Trundlcs, McCormicks, Padgetts, Peaches, Stones, Woodbridges, Hintons, Hardestys, Harrisons, Connells, some of whom settled prior to the year 1700.

Offutt's Cross-roads.—This place is six miles from Rockville, and two and a half from Great Falls. It derives its name from the Offutt family, one of the first to settle in the district. The physicians are Drs. B. Offutt and C. F. Willett; the postmistress is Phoebe E. Walsh. Near the village is Potomac chapel (Methodist Episcopal Church), of which G. T. Tyler and F. M. Strother are the pastors. Near this church are the graves of Rev. James Hunt and his wife. Their tombstones bear the following inscriptions:

"In memory of Rev. James Hunt, who departed this life the 2d of June, 1793, aged sixty-two years. He was set apart to the work of the ministry early in life. He continued till death laboring for the good of souls and for the glory of his heavenly Master.

Be ye followers of me,
As I was of Christ Jesus.
By grace are ye saved,
But strive to enter in at the straight gate."

Mr. Hunt was preceptor of "Tusculum Academy," the first institution of learning in the county, and one of his pupils was William Wirt.

"In memory of Mrs. Ruth Hunt, who departed this life the 17th of May, 1793, aged 67 years. Devoted herself to the service of religion, and continued through a long life a bright example of Christian piety. She was a woman of sorrows and acquainted with grief, being the greater part of her days the subject of affliction, which refined her as fire for dwelling in the mansion of the Holy and Blessed.

I've tried the strength of death at last,
And here I lie under a cloud;
But I shall rise above the skies
When the last trumpet shall sound."

Near the grave of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are those of Edith W., daughter of J. W. and Alberta A. Claggett, born Sept. 29, 1869, died Dec. 16, 1878. William Alexander, died July 14, 1876, aged 59.

Between Rock Run and Cabin John Creek, and near Seven Locks on the Potomac River, is Herman Presbyterian church, a neat frame edifice with a tall steeple.

Great Falls is on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and Potomac River. It is nine miles from Rockville, forty-nine from Baltimore, and derives its name from the falls of the Potomac River at this place. It is a part of "Bear Den," surveyed for Wm. Offutt, April 4, 1729. Dr. J. W. Carahe is the resident physician, J. W. Carroll, the hotel-keeper, and Howard A. Garrett, merchant.

The officers for 1881 are:

The lodge has $713.42 of accumulated funds, and meets on Saturday evening from October to April, and the remainder of the year on Thursday evenings.

The school trustees and teachers for 1881 and 1882 are as follows:

Teachers.—No. 1, E. C. Crockett, Potomac P. O.; No. 2, C. E. Higgins, Potomac P. O.; No. 3, S. E. Kilgour.

The magistrat is R. G. Davidson.

Great Falls Division, No. 50, Sons of Temperance, was chartered April 5, 1873, and continued in active operation some four years.

The gold-mines of Montgomery County, of which a full account is given elsewhere, are in the vicinity of Great Falls.